"As their stories are read," she writes, "the close-in hazards of individual households fall into recurring patterns of low wages, broken work, broken health, broken homes; handicaps in education and skills; shortcomings in food and shelter."

The summary showed a need for improvement in some of the things for which the CIO has waged a long fight—unemployment compensation, federal aid to dependent children, minimum wage laws, housing and health protection.

"Health remains the highest point of vulnerability," according to the summary.

"The defenses of low-income families are really down when sickness strikes and our common barriers against its onslaughts on health and livelihood are as yet painfully inadequate."

Federal aid to dependent children is so small in some parts of the country as to give little help, or so restricted that sometimes those who most need it can't get it. Minimum wage laws fail to give adequate protection—in two instances wages were so low despite employment that public aid had to be given to the children.

"Could anything be more destructive to the incentive toward self-support than to work six days and at the end of the week still need outside help?" the summary asks.

Some observations from the report:

Low wages: "Approximately one-third of our urban family breadwinners had worked a full year before the date they were interviewed—without earning as much as $2000."

Broken work: "Almost half of the urban breadwinners had kept the same job throughout the 12 months preceding, but irregular work or bad weather or illness prevented their earning a full year's pay.

"Unemployment compensation is looked to as the modern method to protect livelihood and sustain purchasing power in such exigencies. Unfortunately, most of the breadwinners in the families studied depended on jobs not covered by this form of social security.

"The 10 families who reported that they had received unemployment compensation said it enabled them to squeeze by with careful management if workless periods did not last too long."

Broken homes: ". . . well toward one-fourth of all households with incomes of $2000 or less fell in the category of 'broken families'."

Education and skills: "Over one-half of the breadwinners . . . whether men or women, had never completed the eighth grade in school . . . Only six had business or trade-school education . . .

Food, clothing, shelter: "According to nutritionists, in 1948 an American family could . . . provide an adequate diet with expenditures averaging $5 per week per person. Those of our families who had only two or three members and whose incomes ranged between $1500 and $2000 spent approximately this average . . . Families with more than three members could manage only if their rents were extremely low and their incomes over $1500."

"A new suit, dress or overcoat we found mentioned as a rarity for grown-ups. Most clothing purchases were made on a credit plan or second-hand, and there were many families who depended entirely upon gifts of clothing from relatives or charitable agencies."

"You can cut down on food, buy less clothing, but shelter against the elements you must have . . . In these postwar years, such families have had difficulty even in wedging into the slums . . . The only real lift in the situation since World War II has been the rise of public housing developments."

Recreation and community life: "We must face the fact that in this field there is no equality of opportunity whatever . . . One of the reasons why some form of living room is yearned for so ardently in cramped households is that this not only means friends coming in, means a step forward in human intercourse and social status, but in truth will make it easier to 'keep the children off the streets'."

"Of all the social forces in the community, churches and synagogues, from store fronts to chapels and fine buildings, best bring their services to people where they are.

"And it must be remembered that often this may mean to their participants not only spiritual sustenance, but social reinforcement as well."

Inflation Fear Boosts Savings

The American public is protecting itself against inflation by boosting its long-term savings, according to a survey recently made by the Institute of Life Insurance.

At the beginning of 1951, these accumulated savings amounted to $176 billion, or about $4000 per family. They have been growing faster chan consumer expenditures, the insitute maintains, and stand nearly 2.5 times the $1700 per family average at the start of World War II.

Practically none of the savings bonds, savings deposits, postal savings, savings and loan accounts and net interest in life insurance policies that make up the total are held by families which had incomes of less than $2000 in 1948.

Millionaires, Babies, Jobless Counted In Figuring 'Average' Income In U. S.

THE U. S. DEPT. of Commerce reported last week that the "average income" for everybody in the United States was $1436 in 1950, but the figure doesn't mean much.

It doesn't mean much because to get it, the department lumped together all the money that everybody in the country got from wages, salaries, interest, dividends on stock, income from bonds, rents, the owners' profits in unincorporated business, farm income, pensions, etc.

Then it divided that figure by the total number of people in the country — workers, millionaires, babies, unemployables, financiers and everybody else. The result of the arithmetic was $1436.

The average American industrial worker earned an average of $59.33 a week in 1950, or $3085.16 if he worked a full 52 weeks, according to the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

If there was such an "average" worker, his income was $212.84 more during the year than the "average income" of two "average" Americans. Thus he did a little better than average as reported by the Dept. of Commerce if he had only himself and one other person to support—a wife, for instance.

But if he had a couple of kids, he fell far short of the $5744 the Dept. of Commerce says was the "average income" of four persons in 1950.

The $1436 was $116, or 9%, more than the "average income" reported by the Department for 1949. The boost doesn't mean much, either. The BLS says the cost of living increased 6.5% during the year, thus eating up more than two-thirds of the gain. But taxes went up and took more than the rest of the increase.

It is obvious, of course, that the "average" was pushed sharply upward by the fantastic incomes of the wealthy.

The highest average income was found in the District of Columbia, with $1986. Delaware was in second place with $1909.

At the bottom of the list was Mississippi, where union organizers are frequently run out of town, with $698. Just above it stood Arkansas, with $825.

OTHER STATES where the average was less than $1000 also were in the South. They were South Carolina, $831; Alabama, $836; Kentucky, $911; North Carolina, $951; Tennessee, $962; and Georgia, $969.

In order behind Delaware were Nevada, $1875; New York, $1864, and Connecticut, $1766.

The increase in total income was less than the gain in population. Individuals received income totaling $217 billion during the year, or 11% more than in 1949. The increase in the average income per individual was less because of the greater number of people.

Some Members Can't Wait

House On Vacation; Its Business Waits

The 435 members of the House of Representatives last week voted themselves a recess from Aug. 23 to Sept. 12. Despite much unfinished business before the body, there were no nay votes heard.

Although the vacation officially was to be for 19 days, from the close of business Aug. 23, droves of the members decided to make it 21. They began hurrying home happily as soon as the action had been voted Aug. 21.

By weekend, only 96 unhappy Senators officially remained behind.

Senators Slay Father Time

The Senate last week got a first-hand lesson in how not to get work done.

Sen. Langer (R. N.D.) took the floor Aug. 21 to observe that at the 1948 Democratic convention, President Truman said Congress could pass civil rights, aid-to-education and health bills and others in 15 days.

Sen. Case (R. S.D.) commented that most of the bills still haven't been passed, and he and other Senators gathered about Langer in the center of the floor while he pointed out that it said, right there in the record, 15 days.

The legislation which the Senate supposedly was considering was a long-range shipping bill. Its sponsor, Sen. Magnusson (D. Wash.), at this point suggested that if everybody would sit down, the Senate might "make some progress."

But Sen. Kem (R. Mo.) noted that the Senate had no quorum.

The Senators were fretting because hope was rapidly fading that they would be able to complete their work in time for an Oct. 1 adjournment of Congress.

They still faced a pile of "must" legislation, on which they were moving so slowly that Democratic Leader McFarland (Ariz.) warned them that they might have to stay in Washington "until Christmas."

McFARLAND, despite this plight, actually had to push aside proposals from two Republicans that the Senate recess with the House. He urged the Senators to get down to work, stop demanding quorum calls, and quit making so many speeches unrelated to the subject at hand.

The majority leader estimated that quorum calls take up about an hour a day and about a day out of each working week. He wouldn't even try to guess how much time is taken up by speeches unrelated to current business.

Before the House set off, it eased its conscience somewhat by passing a resolution permitting the government to go on spending money through September at last year's rate. The Senate promptly approved it and sent it on to the White House.

This was the third admission by Congress that it wasn't getting its work done on time, and the second time that it had to admit that it hadn't managed to administer its affairs according to its own announced schedule.

The resolution was necessary because most federal agencies and departments still have not received their annual appropriations. They are usually through Congress well in advance of the start of the new fiscal year on July 1.

In setting Oct. 1 as the target date for adjournment, McFarland has necessarily limited the number of measures on which the Senate must act. His list of "must" legislation omits such vital legislation as civil rights bills, aid-to-education, a health program and similar measures.

Since there is no chance at all that the lobby-dominated 82nd Congress would adopt them, his action is perhaps justified.

Before the Senate can adjourn, however, it must take action on the foreign aid bill, which is still in committee and far from final action; the tax bill, also still in committee; and several appropriations measures. After all of these are passed by the Senate, differences must be compromised with the House.

DURING discussion of adjournment plans, McFarland was asked if the Hawaiian and Alaskan statehood bills were "must legislation."

"If they are," he replied, "we will not be able to adjourn by Oct. 1."

Legislation by the calendar rather than the need probably is no worse than legislation by politics, which has been the chief characteristic of the 82nd Congress to date. It at least won't put the people of the country in danger, as the purely political actions of the Dixiegop coalition have actually done.

Take, for example, the matter of civil defense. Ignoring the warnings of military and civil defense leaders that a "grand slam" atomic attack could hit this country "any minute now," the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition in control of the House last week voted to cut 90% off the Civil Defense Administration budget.

"I still say my brand tastes better."

Why Don't The Monopolies Move Into U.S. Treasury?

By MILTON PLUMB

NEARLY all Americans are agreed that the word "monopoly" has just about the most evil meaning in all the economic vocabulary.

Despite this fact, under Big Business administration of a Big-Business-written Defense Production Act, the American people are being made to pay fabulous sums in many hidden ways to promote monopolistic strangleholds upon the economy.

Last week, The CIO News revealed how the big monopolies, after milking the American public for nearly $9 billion through special tax amortization certificates, succeeded in denying similar benefits to the little business man. It also showed how the monopolies were using those benefits, secured at the public's expense, actually to take business away from small subcontractors.

This article points out some of the additional ways in which the public is being made to pay many additional billions of dollars to make monopolies stronger.

As a small business man, wanting to get into the defense manufacturing business, you would need capital either in the form of a plant or money with which to build one.

You would have difficulty getting raw materials—and most likely would not be able to get them at all. You also would expect to pay your share of emergency taxes, and you would enter the market on a competitive basis, setting your price accordingly.

Different Rules

However, if you are a monopoly, different rules apply.

In the first place, if you haven't capital, you could borrow it—at special interest rates — from the government. You could get top priorities for the raw materials needed for construction of your plant or manufactured items. You could also write off most of the money you borrowed to invest within five years time, out of the excess profits you otherwise would have to pay the government.

In certain kinds of business, you could make millions of dollars and not pay the government a penny in taxes, through the many loopholes such as depreciation allowances which Big Business lobbyists have written into our tax laws.

But to make sure that you would be in the excess profits brackets in any case, if you know the right people and the right strings to pull, you could even get the government to give you advance orders. Those orders could be gotten, not at present market prices, but the government could be—and has been—persuaded to guarantee prices several times the current level.

All of these things have actually happened within the last year.

With the exception of the tax amortization certificates program —now closed so that the little fellows can't use it to compete with the big producers—all are still going on right now.

In theory, since the nation gravely needs the defense materials which these special benefits are intended to make possible, there is at least some justification for their having been written into law.

If properly administered, they could break the stranglehold of the monopolies over supplies of critical materials which has placed the country in its present emergency.

Instead, Big Business has used these special defense benefits in the Defense Production Act to make its monopolistic control of a vital segment of the economy more secure. Big Business representatives were placed in the key posts administering these aspects of the program.

The Big Business agents are taking care of Big Business requests. The small man who comes in to apply for the same benefits finds, when he sits down at a desk to file his application, that the man opposite him is his competitor.

Much Stalling

Technicalities and delays—unheard of in connection with Big Business applications—for some reason cause the small man's request to be rejected or shelved.

Up to last May 17, nearly $2 billion of loans had been made to corporations under two provisions of the Defense Production Act. Since these defense projects are in the high-risk category, nobody expects that the full amount will be repaid. The public will hold the bag for the difference.

But is the money made available under these provisions going to big or small operators? The answer seems obvious from figures filed with Congress last May:

- Guarantees of loans had been approved in 327 cases for a total of $422 million, and 29 direct loans, totalling $60 million, had been made.
- But 57 requests for a total of $11 million in guaranteed loans and 159 requests for $154 million in direct loans had been denied.

In other words, big operators wanting loans of a million dollars or more got what they wanted.

Smaller firms wanting much smaller loans found their requests denied.

The big monopolies, however, found still another gimmick in the law their lobbyists had written which enabled many of them to engage in business—at the government's expense—without any risk whatever and with higher-than-normal prices guaranteed.

Gravy Train

Another section of the defense statute provides for government purchases of metals, minerals and other raw materials, without regard to limitations of other laws.

The big shortages of critical defense metals, on which the very life of the nation may depend, are due in many cases to failure of the monopolies to expand their capacity to meet even peacetime needs. As long as a shortage exists, prices remain high. The producers of steel, aluminum, copper, tungsten and other critical metals have long fought government efforts to expand their productive capacity.

Steel today is so short that many badly-needed defense plants cannot be built because there is not enough of it to go around. Our needs for school and other facilities, as well as for civilian goods, just cannot be met.

Similar situations exist in the other critical metals industries. Only five major companies produce aluminum; three companies have the monopoly on tungsten.

To get these monopolies to expand facilities, the government guaranteed the purchase of 60% of the aluminum output for the next five years at a price of 19½ cents a pound. That automatically made the price of the other 40% reach this level, since the competition for this amount of aluminum in the open market is so keen.

Almost Everybody Got Into The Act, Chapman Complains At Hearing

As the scandal of how the monopolies are controlling the defense production program came to light at hearings before the Senate Banking Committee, Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) exclaimed to Secy. of the Interior Oscar Chapman:

"You are guaranteeing them the price, you are guaranteeing them a volume, or guaranteeing to pay a specific price for everything they turn out. Then you are giving an amortization certificate to amortize it over a five-year period. How do I get in on some of those?"

Chapman, who is not responsible for what is happening but who has been critical of the way small business is being frozen out, replied:

"Well, Senator, I do not know how you missed. Everybody else seemed to be in on it."

Later, Chapman said that he really didn't want his facetious statement to go uncorrected, because he realized that "certain segments" of business had been left out completely.

What, Again?

Dispatches from Washington indicate the true nature of the tax bill being worked out by the conservative-tinted Senate Finance Committee.

Treasury Dept. experts estimate that the Senate's proposed income tax bill will net Uncle Sam about $523 million less than the bill already passed by the House.

And, according to the news stories, the Treasury estimates that over $400 million of that $523 million tax cut will be saved by families with incomes of over $25,000 a year.

The Republicans get angry each time the CIO refers to a "spare the wealthy" tax program. Yet each time the conservative GOPs and the equally conservative southern Democrats produce a tax bill, it's the rich who are spared and the lower income groups who pay and pay.

It's time for a change in tax policy.

Some Action, Please

President Truman has asked Congress to approve a $400 million appropriation to provide emergency grants to small farmers and wage earners in the Missouri River flood area, to provide loans for small business, and to set up a "flood insurance" program like the bank deposit insurance instituted by President Roosevelt.

Before the Congressional die-hards say "no," they should remember that every observer of the Missouri flood has been appalled by the tremendous human suffering produced by the raging waters of the river.

Private insurance companies, fearful of the risk involved, have not offered flood protection policies. Loans won't do any good for people who have lost all their possessions.

Congress, in voting to pay back some of their losses, would be atoning, in some small way, for its refusal to adopt long-overdue programs for the Missouri and other rivers.

In common decency, the new $400 million program for help and insurance should be quickly adopted by the legislators.

Hammy Comments

The majestic Wall Street Journal views with alarm the "demands" of a CIO Packinghouse Workers local that the Morrell meat packing company give its employes a free ham at Easter and at Christmas every year.

The Journal, always quick to worry about the approach of the "welfare state" (it doesn't seem to be approaching very fast), worries that companies may soon be asked to give free breakfasts and free dinners and free transportation to and from the shop.

There was a time, not so long ago, when certain types of "employes" did get free hams, free meals and free transportation. In the days of the professional strikebreakers—an era now happily gone from most sections of industry—the finks and stooges were always treated to free transport and free food—as well as free whisky and free cigars.

The Wall Street Journal never complained about the practice then, for strikebreakers were an essential part of the big business concept of free enterprise.

We suggest that the big business paper would now do well to leave the matter of free hams at Morrell to the free collective bargaining process.

All This And Taxes, Too!

Unions Have A Long History

(Excerpts from a new Dept. of Labor publication, "A Brief History of the American Labor Movement".)

UNIONS HAVE a long history in the United States. Even before the Declaration of Independence, skilled artisans in handicraft and domestic industry joined together in benevolent societies, primarily to provide members and their families with financial assistance in case of serious illness, debt, or death of the wage earner.

Although these early associations had few of the characteristics of present-day labor unions, they did bring workers together to consider problems of mutual concern and to devise ways and means for their solution.

Crafts such as those of carpenters, shoemakers, and printers formed separate organizations in Philadelphia, New York and Boston as early as 1791, largely to resist wage reductions. These unions were confined to local areas and were usually weak because they seldom included all the workers of a craft. Generally, they continued in existence for only a short time.

MANY CHARACTERISTIC union techniques were first developed in this period. For example, by the beginning of the nineteenth century the principle of collective bargaining was already well understood in labor and employing circles and was frequently applied in disputes.

The first recorded meeting of worker and employer representatives for discussion of labor demands occurred between the Philadelphia shoemakers and their employers in 1799. The printing crafts of Philadelphia and New York rapidly followed suit.

Strikes, during which workmen quit their employment in a body, paralleled the development of organization and collective bargaining.

The first authenticated strike was called in 1786 by the Philadelphia printers, who provided benefits for their striking members. A sympathetic strike of shoe workers in support of fellow bootmakers occurred in 1799 in the same city.

In 1805, the shoemakers of New York created a "permanent" strike benefit fund, and in 1809, these same workers participated in what was perhaps the first "general" strike when they extended strike action against one employer to include several others who had come to his aid.

As unions became stronger the wage question increased in importance and employers formed organizations to resist wage demands. Where circumstances appeared favorable, employers attempted to destroy the effectiveness of a union by hiring non-union workers and by appealing to the courts to declare the labor organization illegal.

THE LEGAL fight against unions was carried through courts in Philadelphia, New York and Pittsburgh between 1806 and 1814. Unions were prosecuted as "conspiracies in restraint of trade" under an old English common law doctrine that combinations of workmen to raise wages could be regarded as conspiracies against the public.

The attempt of courts to apply this doctrine of conspiracy aroused a controversy which lasted throughout most of the nineteenth century.

The early conspiracy cases, combined with a business recession following the Napoleonic wars in Europe, seriously affected the trade-unions, many of which passed out of existence.

After a low point in membership in 1820, however, worker organizations again sprang up in the larger cities among hatters, tailors, weavers, nailers, and cabinetmakers. Organizations of factory workers also appeared for the first time during this period.

BETWEEN 1827 and 1832 workers' organizations gradually turned to independent political activity.

The movement among workers seeking to improve their status by political action spread to many leading industrial communities. In Philadelphia, a number of craft unions formed the Mechanics' Union of Trade Associations in 1827.

This city-wide group soon began to nominate and elect candidates to "represent the interests of the working classes" in the Philadelphia City Council and the Pennsylvania State Legislature. Local labor parties organized by workers also sprang up in many states.

Appeal For Funds In Ad

McCormick, Other Publishers Aid Rumely

A GROUP of self-styled guardians of the free press have banded together to give Dr. Edward A. Rumley, executive secretary of the anti-labor, pro-big business Committee for Constitutional Government, a hand in ducking another jail term.

Numbering some of the ripest tories in the printing business, they are plugging the Doc's frantic efforts to raise $100,000 he claims he needs to carry to the Supreme Court an appeal from his conviction on a charge of contempt of Congress.

The charge grew out of his refusal last year to tell the House Lobby Investigating Committee, headed by the late Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), the names of those who paid for all the high-powered, ultra-right wing propaganda the CCG sold in bulk lots. The CCG used the stuff to deluge members of Congress and other "opinion-molding leaders."

Rumley in effect claimed the committee was in the publishing business, not the lobbying game, and that under the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press, it was not required to give the committee the information it sought.

Reactionary Republicans in the House had a field day crying about freedom of the press, free enterprise, etc., when the committee's contempt citation came up for a vote.

However, the citation was approved, and Rumely later was found guilty in a U. S. District Court in Washington. An appeal was filed in the Court of Appeals on Aug. 10 by Donald Richberg, a New Dealer who went sour.

The publishers who have fallen in with Rumley took a double-page advertisement in the Aug. 19 issue of Editor & Publisher, trade magazine of the newspaper industry. In it they advised other publishers that they "can express your sympathy with this appeal by sending a bulk order for Spotlight subscriptions."

Spotlight is one of the numerous CCG publications. It sells at $10 a year. The publishers and the CCG don't want much—merely 100 subscriptions ranging from $250 to $2500 each and averaging $500, and 1000 subscriptions ranging from $10 to $100 each and averaging $50.

On the handy order blank included in the ad is the notation:

"I send herewith—or will supply—list of names and addresses for SPOTLIGHT subscriptions. All not so used to be allocated to your lists of national opinion-molding leaders."

The advertisement also says:

"As a result of this fight the Committee for Constitutional Government is burdened with a heavy debt load.

"This load must be lifted quickly and the Committee's financial position restored. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars are needed to accomplish this.

"It seems to the undersigned that it should be the privilege of the American press to supply 10,000 subscriptions to Spotlight for the Nation, the Committee's weekly publication. We, the undersigned, urge all in the publishing field and all others wishing to uphold constitutional freedom to join in building Spotlight circulation."

Shortly after World War II, Rumely was convicted of violating the Trading With the Enemy Act as a result of his purchase of the old New York Mail with money that included German funds.

Additional signers were Charles A. Beal, editor, La Porte (Ind.) Herald-Argus; Frank E. Gannett, publisher of the Gannett Newspapers and organizer of the CCG; Helen Hart Hurlbert, president-publisher, Warren, O., Tribune-Chronicle; William H. Cowles, publisher, Sopkane, Wash., Spokesman-Review; Norman Chandler, president-publisher, Los Angeles Times-Mirror, and Col. Robert R. McCormick, publisher, Chicago Tribune.

The last signer, not a publisher, was John T. Flynn, whose book attacking the New Deal, "The Road Ahead," was widely distributed by the CCG.

McCarthy Pops Off Again On Four Major Radio Networks

WISCONSIN'S scandalmongering Sen. McCarthy (R.) took to the airways last week over the four major networks to continue his smear campaign against the State Dept.

He got free time on each network by admitting that President Truman's remarks about the "scandalmongers" who "have attacked our basic principles of fair play that underlies our Constitution" applied to him particularly.

The President named no names, but McCarthy told his radio audience that he regarded the attack as clearly indicating himself. McCarthy began his radio "reply" to the President by promising that he would take the opportunity to "prove" two of his cases.

In his first broadcast, over the American Broadcasting Co. on Aug. 22, McCarthy again attacked Ambassador-at-large Philip C. Jessup, whom he referred to as "not good for America" and a man who should be taken out of the government.

As "proof" he again made a number of charges against Jessup, which if true, would, at the most, indicate that Jessup had belonged to five organizations which have been called "Communist fronts," and had associated with 13 persons whom McCarthy called Communists and three others whom he called espionage agents. He didn't call Jessup a Communist.

Behind his muck-raking was a fact that many Americans were apt to forget: "Guilt by association" is in itself a principle of Communist—not American—law.

But perhaps even more significant was the fact that in "proving" his charges, McCarthy used his usual tactic of having his case rest on additional charges. He named no names other than Jessup's, and the public had no way of knowing if the 16 in question whom he blamed Jessup for associating with were, in fact, Communists and espionage agents as McCarthy called them.

MEANWHILE, Deputy Under-Secy. of State Carlisle H. Humelsine accused McCarthy of untrue statements and "riding piggy back" on old and completely disproved charges. He said that the repeated charges are disrupting the work of the State Dept.

At the same time, a woman Congressman, a clergyman and a former assistant secretary of state joined in charging that "villainous character assassination" for political purposes was contributing to the immorality of American youth. Rep. Bosone (D. Utah), the Rev. Paul C. Payne, of the Board of Christian Education, and George H. Shaw, in a radio panel discussion, named the methods McCarthy used in the Maryland election last November as "the most degrading type."

Niagara Plan Seen Cutting Defense Costs

JOHN W. EDELMAN, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, last week told the Senate Committee on Public Works that the Niagara power project bill should be approved to cut the cost of defense production.

Edelman, who spoke for the CIO at the committee's hearing, said that government statistics show that aluminum companies pay only 2 to 3c per kilowatt hour for power purchased by federal electric power projects.

On the other hand, the Aluminum Co. of America plant at Massena, N. Y., pays private power concerns 7.5 to 8c per kilowatt hour.

Edelman said that "in most instances CIO would oppose the operation of any important interstate resource by a single state."

"In this particular situation CIO will support the proposals in S. 517 (the Niagara power project bill) provided, however, that the New York State Power Authority completely accepts the social policy directives which are implicit in Sen. Lehman's bill," he said.

Solomon Barkin To Accountants:

Financial Statement Should Show ALL Of A Company's Income

UNION financial experts are taking an increasingly dim view of the way employers keep their books, according to Solomon Barkin, research director for the CIO Textile Workers.

Barkin explains in an article, "A Trade Unionist Views Net Income Determination," in the Bulletin of the National Association of Cost Accountants.

Boiled down, his stand amounts to this: A lot of bookkeeping entries carried under operating costs should really be entered under net income.

The reason: They go to management as an entrepreneur, or one who assumes risks and who manages, and therefore are a form of profits. The result is that the books show an inflated cost of production and cut down the pool of money from which wages and other operating expenses have to come.

Barkin points out that management accountants traditionally put production cost items high and income items low.

"THE TRADE union cannot be satisfied with current financial reporting," he writes, "because it wants first to know what have been and what are likely to be the earnings available for distribution to all parties, whether the amounts be determined by contract or allocation of residual income.

"Its first objective is, therefore, to obtain an income statement supplemented by balance sheet and supporting schedules, which will first match costs and revenue for the period. The net return should be calculated before the benefits are allocated to any entrepreneurial interest, whether it be management, directors, owning or capital supplying interests.

"If any financial gains are made by these interests through direct or indirect business relations with the enterprise, the trade union wants these also to be accounted for and included in the full income statement.

"The second objective of the trade union is to be able to project these results into the future and also, if necessary, to apply its judgment concerning the price and product, and production policy to determine how these are affecting the level of earnings of the business and therefore labor's ability to advance its economic position.

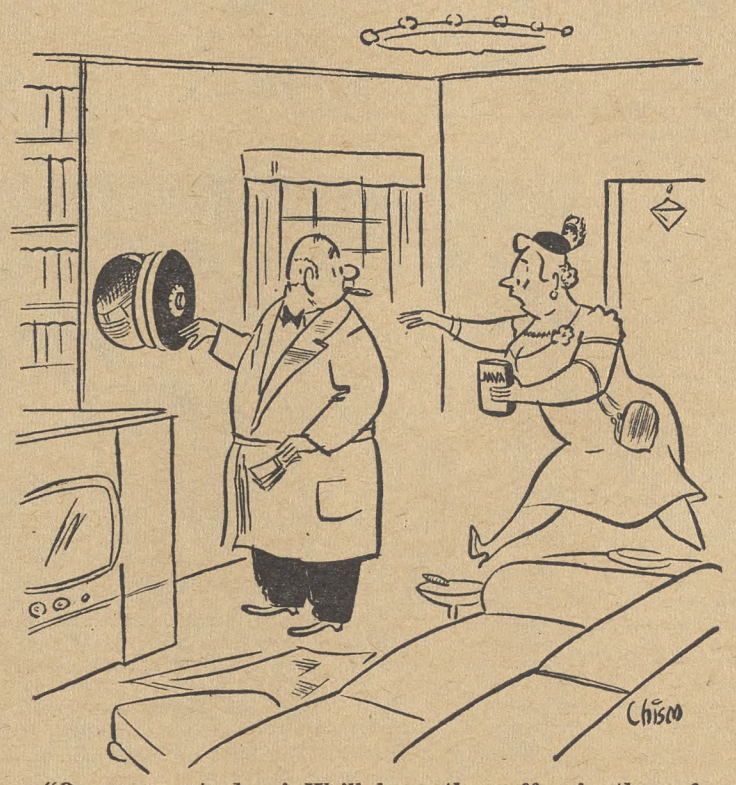
"For this purpose, various types of supplementary production and financial data are necessary.

"UNIONS are also concerned with the soundness of business policies from the public point of view, particularly in the case of companies with publicly regulated price structures and during periods of public control of prices."

He also writes:

"The first basic principle which unions will consider important in the reconstruction of financial reporting is the inclusion in the business' net icome of all income enjoyed by the executive management, directors, creditors and ownership groups. These are not proper charges on operating income."

In the "entrepreneurial group" whose gain from an enterprise is not a proper charge to income, Barkin lists stockholders, bondholders, lenders of borrowed capital, directors and executive management.



"One moment, dear! We'll keep the coffee in there from now on."

Labor Dept. History Lauds

LABOR unions have a long history in the United States, but the Dept. of Labor has undertaken to tell their story in a new pocket-sized publication of 66 pages.

The work is generously illustrated with many historically significant pictures of labor matters. The CIO News, in observance of Labor Day, presents herewith a selection of some of the illustrations appearing in this work.

Entitled "A Brief History of the American Labor Movement," the publication describes organizations of labor in this country from colonial times to the present. It highlights the story of the Knights of Labor and today's growth of the CIO and the AFL. Approximately half of the work is devoted to events since the formation of the Committee for Industrial Organization in 1935.

Of particular interest is the discussion of the internal struggle in the AFL over the issue of industrial versus craft unionism and the reasons behind the CIO's birth and growth. After reporting the CIO's rejection in 1936 of the AFL's executive committee order to disband, the history continues:

CIO 'Ancient' History

"The CIO held its first constitutional convention in November 1938. At this convention the Committee for Industrial Organization was reorganized as a federation of national and international unions under the name 'Congress of Industrial Organizations.'

"The new federation included 9 of the 10 unions suspended from the AFL and some 32 other groups or 'organizing committees' established to recruit workers in various industries."

The booklet points out that the formation of the CIO did not retard the growth of unionism, but in fact stimulated organization.

"By the end of 1941," it says, "estimated total union membership had climbed to between 10 and 11 million. This was more than double the membership at the time the CIO began its campaigns in the large steel, automobile, and textile industries."

The study estimates that present union membership has risen to between 14 and 16 million, including 675,000 Canadian members.

"In relation to the nation's total labor force," the booklet reports, "about one out of every four workers now belongs to a union. Union members, however, comprise more than 40% of that portion of the labor force in which unions have concentrated their organizing efforts.

"This portion excludes agricultural and domestic workers, the self-employed, and other smaller segments of the labor force which, at least until recently, were not susceptible to trade-union activities."

As is to be expected, the discussion of developments of the last two decades abounds with many references to the accomplishments of the CIO.

Much About CIO

One such mention calls "particularly significant as a pattern" the pension and health benefits negotiated in 1949 by the CIO Steelworkers with all the major steel companies and by the CIO Auto Workers with the Ford Motor Co.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray is one of the five American labor leaders pictured in individual portraits.

"A Brief History of the American Labor Movement" may be purchased from the Superintendent Documents, Washington 25, D. C., for 25c. Since the booklet may prove of special value to students, workers' education classes, it should be noted that on orders for 100 or more copies, there is a discount of 25 percent.

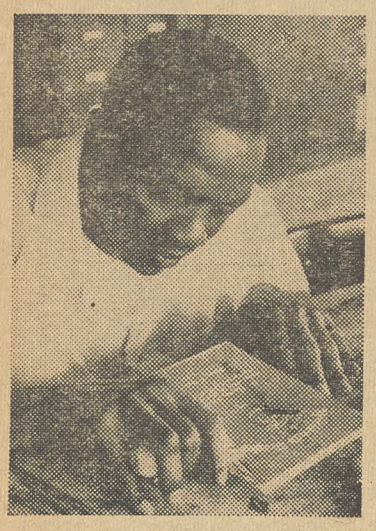
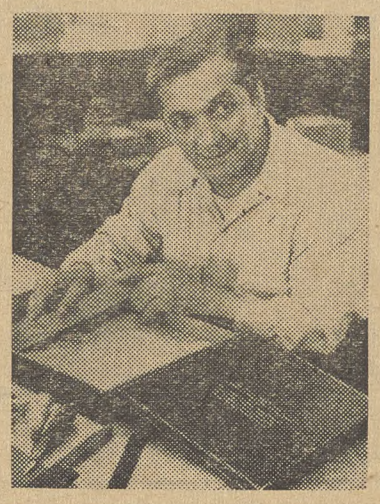
Full Use Of Handicapped Is Vital To Defense Production, Truman Says





THE 1951 POSTER of the President's Committee on National Employ the Handicapped Week (above) carries a vital message. Other photos show handicapped workers who made the Committee's trophy. Top left, Art Smith, Bronx, N.Y., who designed it. Bottom left, James Nunn, New York City, ex-GI crippled by a land mine in Germany, who carved the Presidential seal on the trophy and engraved the silver plate on which it is mounted. Top right, Guy Carnavale, Brooklyn, N.Y., who made the mahogany base. Bottom right, Salvatore Chiaramonte, who made the pin seal leather case for the trophy. They are all students at the Institute for the Crippled and Disabled, New York City.

THE DEMAND of the armed services for "able-bodied young people"—who ordinarily would be going to work—"means that in our national interest it is urgent for us to make full use of the skills and abilities of all our handicapped citizens," President Truman said Aug. 17.

He spoke at a meeting of the President's Committee on National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week, which this year will be observed Oct. 7-13. Frank Fernbach of the CIO Research and Education Dept. is a committee member.

"We need to use their (the handicapped) skills and energies on our great program of defense production, to help us win the struggle for a just and lasting peace," the President said.

". . . Those who have been trained should be employed at their highest level of skill. Those who have not been trained should be given rehabilitation and vocational training.

"Your 1951 poster puts the problem very clearly when it says—'America needs all of us'."

President Truman said that during last year public employment services found jobs for 100,000 more handicapped people than the preceding year, a gain of more than 50%.

"Our goal should be to see that every physically handicapped person who wants to work and who is able to work gets a job that he can do," he added.

ON behalf of the committee, the President presented George Barr the annual trophy for the "best performance" in furthering employment opportunities for the physically handicapped.

Barr, a Chicago manufacturer, is the first handicapped person to receive the trophy. Unable to find employment following the loss of his leg in an auto accident, he developed a new formula for a hair wave set. As his sales increased, he hired physically handicapped workers. At present 90% of his employes have severe physical limitations.

Like President Truman, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin stressed the importance of the unfinished task of placing handicapped workers in jobs.

"Some 80% of today's disabled veterans from Korea are under 20 years of age," Tobin said.

"Naturally, this means that we must work closely with the Veterans Administration in finding job opportunities for many of these young men who are now entering the labor market with no previous work experience."

Tobin said that his department also was working closely with other governmental agencies to find jobs for the civilian handicapped. He said that the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and the Bureau of the Census estimated after a national sample survey that some three million persons between 14 and 64 years old were unable to work or could work only occasionally because of a disability that lasted seven months or longer.

"I am happy to agree," Tobin said, "with the Census people who conservatively estimate that more than two million handicapped people in America can be added to our labor force if provided with selective placement and rehabilitation."

He added that the estimate "is still not definitive."

Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security administrator, said that during the last war there was too much emphasis on the employment of women in industry.

"OUR mobilization program today may go on for many years," he said, "and we cannot afford to take the risks of broken homes, family separations, and childhood insecurities that the unlimited employment of married women might bring about.

"That is one reason why we must place greater emphasis upon the use of handicapped citizens. Their numbers are considerable and their capacity for work is enormous.

"If they are put to work, they will not create new social problems; on the contrary, they will be solving the very social problems which so often arise out of their disablement."

Reuther Asks U. S. To Give Aid Wisely

PRES. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers called on the United States to use its material wealth and freedom wisely to help the rest of the world.

"If the war in Korea should end tomorrow, as we hope it may," he said, "it will not have solved the problem the free world faces. For until we have changed the economic environment in which this conflict in ideologies is taking place, we shall not have solved that problem."

We must make it plain, he stressed, that a better world for all is our goal. Without that aim, he added, communism will continue to thrive because of its promised "remedies" for poverty and social and economic inequality.

"In World War II, we learned that freedom is indivisible, that we cannot have part of the world enslaved and the other part free.

"We must learn the third lesson—that economic security is just as indivisible as peace and freedom. Communism must be fought at the level at which it gained its power."

After his speech, Reuther was presented with the Tau Kappa Alpha "Speaker of the Year" award in the field of labor for 1950. The presentation was made by Dr. P. E. Lull, president of Tau Kappa Alpha, a national honor society in speech, who also is Purdue director of forensics. James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and president of the CIO Electrical Workers, won the 1949 award.

The UAW institute was under the direction of Reg. Dir. Raymond H. Berndt of UAW Region 3, and Carroll M. Hutton, regional education director.

NLRB Vote Sept. 14 In Big GE Plant

The National Labor Relations Board will conduct a representation election among the 19,000 production employes of the General Electric Co. at Schenectady, N.Y., on Sept. 14, with the CIO Electrical Workers and the Communist-dominated United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers on the ballot.

Pres. James B. Carey said the election has been sought for months by the IUE-CIO because of the workers' clamor for a chance to get rid of the UE, which won bargaining rights a year ago. The UE finally consented.

The IUE-CIO already represents employes at Knolls 11, the GE atomic energy installation at Schenectady. It recently won an NLRB election in the GE plant at Lynn, Mass., where the UE had challenged its bargaining rights. The UE also had petitioned for an election at the West Lynn plant, where the IUE-CIO is the bargaining agent, but pulled out last week.

Packinghouse Union Requests Ham On Christmas, Easter

LOCAL 1 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers is willing to take some of the wage increase it is demanding from John Morrell & Co., Ottumwa, Ia., in "kind."

The local is asking that each employe, at Christmas and Easter, be given free a 15-lb. ham or its equivalent in choice meat—"not ground, nor cooked, nor offal products."

The demand was made under a wage reopening clause in the two-year contract signed last fall.

The union also is asking two hours travel time for each employe to be paid by the company; a paid eight-hour holiday on each employe's birthday; lunches at no cost to the worker, or a payment of $1 in lieu thereof, with a 30-minute lunch period to be included in work time; establishment of a method of selling meat to employes at wholesale, and seats for each employe who can do his work sitting.

In addition to these proposals, which originated in the local, the union is asking for the international bargaining program. This includes a guaranteed annual wage with a minimum of $3000, the guidance of social workers to be paid by the company, extended recreation programs, and a company-financed service providing expert advice on housekeeping, buying and other domestic problems.

Rev. Merchant Gets Religion-Labor Post

Rev. Joseph W. Merchant, executive secretary of the Interchurch Council of New Bedford, Mass., has been elected executive secretary of the National Religion and Labor Foundation.

He succeeds Dr. Willard Uphaus. A Congregational minister, Rev. Merchant was a member of a union while working his way through Springfield (Mass.) College and Bangor (Me.) Theological Seminary.

CIO To Help ECA'S Program For Better Wages

VICTOR REUTHER, CIO representative in Europe, returned to his Paris headquarters last week prepared to help European unions and their members take full advantage of the Economic Cooperation Administration's "bold new program" of raising living standards by boosting production.

His plans were announced by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who at the same time pledged CIO aid to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the democratic unions of the continent "to help them develop the strength and skills that will make the ECA productivity program perform the greatest good for the greatest number."

Murray also pledged CIO support to the ECA in "its stirring campaign" to aid European workers and their families "through increasing production levels under conditions that will assure an equitable distribution of the benefits."

Murray's statement came as the climax of two weeks of conferences of CIO leaders and Reuther, who had been in this country on a visit.

"There is no hope for continued existence of the free world unless and until living conditions of the masses of the people are bettered," said Murray. "The ECA's bold new program promises great help in accomplishing that end.

"THERE ARE limits, however, to the effectiveness of direct intervention in the internal affairs of another country and its economy by an American government agency.

"On the basis of the past record of most European employers, the CIO believes the only way to make certain that workers get their fair share of improvements resulting from increased productivity lies through the operation of strong, democratic trade unions. These unions, functioning freely and bargaining collectively and militantly, as equals with employers, can insure a just distribution of profits.

"The CIO as an affiliate of the ICFTU will do all in its power to help develop such powerful, free trade unions, and through them to help make this program truly successful for the working people of Europe.

"The ECA is showing economic statesmanship in its announced program of helping the people of Europe by extending the means by which Europe can broaden its familiarity with the techniques, processes and know-how of productivity that have done so much to strengthen our economy—and by insisting that this assistance be conditioned on assurance that all the people will benefit.

"The CIO believes that such a program, if accompanied by a vast expansion of free trade unions which can implement the ECA's conditions, offers the most inspiring hope the workers of Europe have had since the turn of the century. We pledge it our fullest support."

At Luncheon For Germans

International Union Cooperation Urged

TRADE UNION cooperation on an international basis was called for by speakers from both sides of the Atlantic at a luncheon in Washington last week at which the CIO was host to eight German labor leaders visiting this country.

The Germans' trip was sponsored by the U. S. Dept. of Labor and HICOG, military government in Germany. The group is spending a month in this country touring major industrial centers.

The call to international labor cooperation was sounded by Theodor Ankermann, vice president of the Leather Workers Union, an affiliate of the German Federation of Labor (DGB), and by John Brophy, former CIO director of councils now representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations.

Ankermann's brief talk was translated by Ludwig Diederich, a union newspaper editor and a member of the DBG Berlin executive council.

He asked that organized labor throughout the world cooperate to avoid repeating the errors of the past and to make a better future.

"THERE MUST be unity of all workers," he said, "all over the world to create a new world with social security and peace."

He also noted the split in the American labor movement and humorously remarked that despite the rupture "you are united in one way—all your knives are not sharp." The DBG has learned from the mistakes of the past, he said, that unity is important, and hence is organized strictly as a union and not as an adjunct to a political party.

"The ICFTU has the powerful support of free labor in helping the UN to attain its objectives," said Brophy, "and is a powerful means to assist in attaining economic and social justice.

"Also, free labor is helping as it can with its own governments to master poverty and to improve living conditions for all the people. And it must cooperate in every way, including technical aid, if economic and social justice are to be established."

Brophy asked the visitors to take back with them assurances of the peaceful intentions of the American labor movement and the American people in behalf of freedom, peace and justice.

The other German guests were Wilhelm Biedorf, editor of the DBG employes magazine; Paul Goosmann, president of the Bremen Teachers' Union; Hermann Grote, a member of the trade union executive council for Lower Saxony; Kurt Keitzel, secretary of the White Collar Workers Union in the Nordmark region; Kritz Krumkamp, a member of the DBG executive council for Nordrhein-Westfalen, and Adolf Mueller, of Stuttgart, executive secretary of the German Union of Printing and Paper Workers.

DIEDERICH was jailed in 1937 for opposing Hitler. He was drafted into the German Army in 1940 and spent 21 months in prison camps in this country after capture by U. S. troops. At the same time, it developed at the luncheon, Harry Pollock, of the CIO International Dept., was a prisoner of the Germans.

CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Beirne, who also is president of the Communications Workers, was toastmaster.

Others attending included Pres. Harry Sayre and Secy.-Treas. Frank Grasso of the Paper Workers; John Gibson, head of the Displaced Persons Commission and former U. S. assistant secretary of labor; Adolph Germer, organization director of the CIO Woodworkers, who is accompanying the Germans about the country; Reg. Dir. Delmond Garst of the Auto Workers; Thomas Owens, Washington representative of the Rubber Workers; William Hanscomb, Washington representative of the Oil Workers, and members of the CIO national office staff.

Big Bonuses For Executives Okayed By Salary Board

THERE were three developments along the wage stabilization front last week:

1. The Salary Stabilization Board issued a formula which virtually guarantees that corporation executives will continue to receive bonuses which are in some cases four and five times the amounts of their salaries.

2. Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston approved the Wage Stabilization Board's cost-of-living wage policy. The policy permits a rise of 2% in wages, or more in exceptional cases, above the 10% increase levels of January, 1950, which the old formula provided.

The 2% is to cover the rise in the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer's price index from Jan. 15 to June 15 of this year. Application of the new policy is limited to Mar. 1, 1952.

Applying the policy, the board approved a 6.5% pay increase negotiated by the CIO Textile Workers with Northern cotton and rayon mills. About 90,000 workers will get 8.5c per hour more, retroactive to last March when the contract was signed.

The WSB refused to grant the full 7.5% negotiated by the union on the grounds that such an increase would exceed the cost-of-living formula.

3. A six-man WSB panel issued a 60-page report on lifting wage controls for 10 million workers in industries exempt from price control, but was unable to reach an agreement.

All six agreed on one-point—the Defense Production Act is vague and legal advice should be sought. WSB Chairman George W. Taylor said that the board will make its own recommendations to Johnston.

Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research director, a member of the panel, maintained there should be no wage controls in industries exempt from price control. The other labor member of the panel, Pres. Woodruff Randolph of the AFL Typographical Union, said that Congress intended to stabilize wages only where price ceilings were set.

THE TWO public members held separate views, but the two industry members, Fred R. Rauch and Irvin D. Shapiro, saw eye to eye. They said wages in price-exempt industries should be controlled until it can be proved restraints are not necessary to the whole stabilization program.

Theodore W. Kheel, public member and panel chairman, said newspapers, radio and television, insurance and other industries completely exempt from price or rate control should not be subject to wage control. Richard A. Lester, other public member, said the board should exempt such industries from wage controls "only where such action would not be unstabilizing."

Weiss, McGrath Named To WSB In N.Y.-N.J

Two CIO members were appointed to the New York—Northern New Jersey Wage Stabilization Board, Reg. Dir. Arthur J. White, Regional Director, announced Aug. 23.

Benjamin Weiss, of the Clothing Workers, and Patrick McGrath, of the Utility Workers, both of New York, were the men named.

Intl. Food, Drink Union Plans Parley

A FOUR-DAY international conference of food unions wil be held at Innsbruck, Austria, opening Sept. 1.

The agenda includes plans for cooperation among affiliated unions, food requirements for undeveloped countries and the role of food unions in foreign affairs.

The conference — which was called by the Intl. Union of Food and Drink Workers—will be attended by CIO and AFL food unions, and by labor organizations of Europe and Asia affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

IUFD does not belong to ICFTU, but cooperates with it.

Secy.-Treas. Lewis J. Clark of the CIO Packinghouse Workers left last week to attend. He will represent UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, who is a member of the IUFD executive committee.

Jos. Janecek, Pioneer Of ACWA, Succumbs

Joseph Janecek, a leader of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers for many years in Chicago, Denver, San Francisco and Oakland, Cal., died at the age of 60 at Chicago.

He was a pioneer in the union as a member of the Bohemian Coatmakers local affiliated with the Chicago Joint Board. He was business agent for the board from 1920 to 1924, when, because of ill health, he went into farming, but returned to the Amalgamated a few years later.

New Steel Local Wins First Pact

Workers in the Phelps-Dodge Refining Corp. plant at Laurel Hill, L. I., who recently took a walk from the red-tainted Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers into the CIO Steelworkers, won an agreement which broke through the Wage Stabilization Board's 10% formula in the non-ferrous metal industry for the first time.

The agreement was based on a 15% pay increase formula and calls for correction of inequities in jobs and classifications, better vacations, and other improvements. It was the first contract negotiated by the new local union.

More than 180 CIO members attended the school, which consolidated schools previously held by the steel and auto unions in the State and the California CIO Council.

Teachers included Stanley Ruttenberg and George Guernsey, Director and associate director respectively of the CIO Research and Education Dept., and two members of their staff, Stewart Brock and Ben Segal.

Staff members of the steel, auto and telephone unions and of the Univ. of California Institute of Industrial Relations, Berkeley and Los Angeles, also taught classes.

The school was enlivened by spirited discussions at the evening programs when there were guest speakers.

One of the guest speakers, John Brophy, representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations, attacked the Communists for "playing fast and loose with lives and the welfare of people in the underdeveloped nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America."

"Military preparedness against Soviet imperialism is not enough," Brophy said. "We must deal with this problem of poverty. There is no security for us in America unless there is security for all of the world. That is the price of survival.

"Unless we meet that challenge of poverty—which we can—this world can be expected to remain in a continuous cycle of revolution which is the history of this century."

The world's underdeveloped areas were also the theme of a panel discussion in which participants were Dr. Rommanhar Lohi, a union leader of India; Afolabi Adenekan Adio-Moses, Nigerian labor leader, and Dewey Anderson, director of the Public Affairs Institute, Washington, D. C.

ON ANOTHER evening Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers turned to the domestic political scene in a speech critical of the Truman Administration. He said that because of Administration failures "the labor movement faces extremely difficult political decisions in 1952."

Whatever those decisions may be, he added, American labor must correct its weaknesses, build its political action strength and continue its efforts to win political support among non-labor groups.

Puerto Rican Workers' Convention Is Told CIO Will Always Aid Their Struggle

PUERTO RICAN workers hold the key to their own economic salvation, R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant organization director, told the eighth annual convention of the Puerto Rican General Confederation of Labor (CGT) at its meeting in Manati, P. R.

"The CIO has fought battles in behalf of its Puerto Rican brothers in the halls of Congress, in continental United States and on this island," said Thomas.

"CIO will continue this battle, for it believes that there is no rest when a large body of American citizens, the workers of Puerto Rico, are denied the privileges of the American way of life and have to live under substandard conditions and work for substandard pay.

"However, the winning of this battle depends on you. It is you who must organize all the workers of Puerto Rico and then march to victory under the banner of the CIO."

Thomas and David Sternback, CIO representative in Puerto Rico, were given a five-minute ovation when they entered the hall. Thomas' speech was translated into Spanish for the delegates by Fernando Sierra, Puerto Rican commissioner of labor.

STERNBACK called on the convention to forget all minor differences and name officers they consider best fitted to do this job—and then to give the officers their whole-hearted support.

The first resolution passed thanked the national CIO for the help it has given the CGT, and pledged help to accomplish the aims and purpose of the CIO.

Acting Pres. Vega Berrios was elected president. He and other members of the executive board were named without opposition. They were Vice Pres. Carlos Rabassa, Gen. Secy. Alberto Sanchez, Gen. Organizer Armando Sanchez, Treas. Francisco Munoz Dieppa and Educational Dir. Alfonso Bujosa.

Canal Zone Organizing Campaign Supported

The new executive board of Panama Canal Zone Local 900, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, at its first meeting passed a resolution pledging it to continue relentlessly its campaign for 100% organization of Zone workers.

Another resolution paid high tribute to the CIO and the CIO-GCEOC for their efforts to help local rate workers in the Zone, who are paid far less than employes brought there from the United States.

Truman Asks Congress For Sound Price Law

PRESIDENT Truman last week kept his word to the American people that he would not give up the fight for sound anti-inflation legislation.

In a special message to Congress on Aug. 23, he said he had signed the new Defense Production Act only because "the dangers in the international situation made it unsafe to permit any interruption in our mobilization program."

HE SAID THE new law was not strong enough to stop inflation, and called upon Congress to repeal three sections which he said had created "an economic booby trap."

The President warned that "the greatest danger of high prices is ahead and we need stronger, not weaker laws to control it."

The three controversial provisions which Congress was asked to knock out of the new law are:

1. The amendment sponsored by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) which permits individual sellers to pass on to consumers all cost increases since the Korean war began. The effect of this provision, the President said, is to saddle the consumer with "a promissory note of higher prices payable to business on demand."

2. The amendment of Rep. Herlong (D. Fla.) which guarantees wholesalers and retailers pre-Korean percentage mark-ups on their prices. This, the President said, was nothing more than "a full-blown cost-plus system applied to everything that the consumer buys."

3. The amendment by Sen. Butler (R. Neb.) and Rep. Hope (R. Kans.) prohibiting livestock slaughter quotas which, the President said, "puts the black marketeer back in the meat business."

Truman called the price increases brought on by these Dixiegop-sponsored provisions "needless", and added:

"Our people have demonstrated that they are ready to make every sacrifice necessary to defend our freedom and our way of life. But no one has a right to force them to make sacrifices that are unnecessary."

Sen. Bricker (R. O.) bitterly denounced the President's message as a "pure demogogic gesture of the worst political color." He was promptly reprimanded by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) and Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) for questioning the President's sincerity. Moody branded his remarks uncalled for and charged that the Ohio Republican "misrepresented the facts."

THREE other Republicans, however, in a surprise move, promptly introduced legislation to repeal the Capehart, Herlong and Hope-Butler amendments. They are Sens. Ferguson (Mich.), Nixon (Calif.) and Welker (Ida.). Ferguson said that the three sponsors believed enforcement of the law was "so vital" that they were willing to give the President what he wants.

While they indicated that they were acting only because they thought that the President did not intend to enforce the new law, observers noted that many Republicans have been uneasy over the effects of inflation upon their chances in the 1952 elections. They point out that some GOP members will be only too happy to take this way out of the mess in which their earlier actions has placed them.

Reuther Asks Rent Control In 200 More Communities

WALTER REUTHER, Chairman of the CIO's National Housing Committee, last week urged federal defense mobilization and military officials to extend rent control immediately to 200 additional communities throughout the country.

These officials are empowered to control rents in camp and defense plant areas under the new Defense Production Act.

Reuther mentioned specifically all areas affected by the Kansas-Missouri flood and existing and newly established installations of the Atomic Energy Commission.

He called on Eric Johnston, Economic Stabilizer, to place controls on reactivated military camps and all sections designated "critical defense areas."

Such newly established and expanding steel production centers as Morrisville, Pa., East Chicago, Ind., Milwaukee, Wis., and Lone Star, Tex., must have the same control protection, he said.

Aircraft production centers in Los Angeles, Tulsa, Dallas, and Stratford, Conn., whose rents have skyrocketed, must also be covered, he added. Suburbs of Washington, D. C., now jammed with people employed in expanding mobilization agencies are in immediate need of similar protection, he added.

On the housing front a joint Senate-House committee began ironing out differences in two housing bills, each calling for construction of 50,000 public housing units.

This figure is far short of the minimum housing needs estimated by both the CIO and the Administration. So far this year, according to the Labor Dept., construction of new housing units is running about 20% behind that of last year.

Wis. CIO Fights Phone Rate Hikes

An all-out fight is being waged by the Wisconsin CIO Council against rate increases of 22 to 71% sought by the telephone company. Council Secy. John M. Sorenson pointed out that profits over the past few years "appeared more than adequate." He said the new boost in rates would add $13 million to the present more than $51 million annual revenue.

Calling the company's claim of increased labor costs "a phony excuse," Sorenson said "the telephone industry pays some of the lowest wages existing today and offers some of the least desirable working conditions."

Boss Accused Of Hitting 3 With Truck

ARTHUR Hutchinson, Philadelphia textile manufacturer, apparently believes that because his employes were on strike he had the right to mow down the pickets with a truck, according to the CIO Textile Workers.

The union claims that three women strikers were injured, one so seriously she may never again work.

Magistrate Jacob Dogole last week held Hutchinson in $1200 bail for the grand jury on charges of willful and aggravated assault and battery by truck, and failure to render assistance.

HUTCHINSON also owns two other mills, the Crescent Narrow Fabrics Co., Charlotte, N. C., and the Sullivan Southern Co., York, S. C., both unorganized, TWUA reports.

In addition to the criminal action Hutchinson faces $150,000 damage suits brought against him by three injured members of Local 161 of the Philadelphia Textile Workers Joint Board.

About a dozen women pickets were peacefully walking up and down in front of the Hutchinson plant several days ago. Hutchinson appeared riding in the cab of a large van that proceeded to pull up to the driveway entrance of the plant, according to TWUA. The pickets pleaded with the driver not to enter, explaining that they were on strike—and the driver refused to budge.

Hutchinson became enraged — swore at the driver, urging him to drive ahead if he had to run over all the picketers.

THE driver refused to move the truck. Swearing that he'd get through if "he had to kill them all," Hutchinson climbed out of the cab of the truck, walked around it and jumped into the driver's seat, pushing the driver out of the way.

He seized the steering wheel, asking the driver "how the hell do you operate this thing?"

Before the driver could reply he shoved the truck in gear and lurched forward. The truck struck three women, who were taken by police to the hospital.

Hutchinson, meanwhile, drove into an alley alongside the plant where he unloaded the truck without returning to inquire how badly the women were injured.

The most seriously injured woman is Mrs. Anna Yakobezyk, 62, who suffered a fractured spine and may never be able to work again.

Mrs. Iva Eyerman suffered a concussion of the right foot, and Mrs. Edna McDevitt's knee was sprained.

The strike has been in progress five weeks, with the company refusing to bargain.

Utility Workers Win 9 to 11c Increase

Retroactive pay increases ranging from $93 to $113 will be paid to 4000 CIO Utility Workers employed by Consumers Power Corp., Flint, Mich. Wage boosts of 9 to 11c an hour retroactive to Jan. 29, pending since Mar. 30, have been approved by the Wage Stabilization Board. The firm is eighth largest of its kind in the U. S.

A PRECEDENT-SETTING contract between the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee-CIO and the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. was ratified last week by the general membership. The negotiating committee is to be congratulated for this fine agreement which sets a mark to shoot at in other companies. In addition to many improvements in working conditions, the Hancock agents get a $7.14 a week increase and lifetime continuing commissions on policies sold. The IAWOC-CIO, now slightly more than a year old, has eight insurance companies under contract and organizing drives under way in six more companies.

Big Tax Break Proposed For The Wealthy

THE Senate Finance Committee has come up with a new proposal on increasing individual income taxes that would mean:

Upper bracket taxpayers get a big break. The Senate proposal calls for a boost in income taxes of $2.435 billion a year compared with an increase of $2.855 billion voted by the House. Most of the difference would be kept by upper bracket taxpayers.

Those in the "middle brackets" would get socked with an increase of about 14% instead of the 12½% under the House plan.

TOTAL yield would be around $6 billion, compared with the $7.2 billion the House measure would raise, and the $10 billion the Administration has asked.

The House tax increase calls for 12½% more clear across the board. The Administration had proposed an increase of 4% in each bracket (those now taxed at 20%, and so on up). The Senate tax-writers have a new plan —a special "defense tax."

Here's the way the new plan would work: You'd compute your income tax on the present basis. You would subtract the amount of that tax from your taxable income. The "defense tax" would apply to what remained. On the first $2000 that remained, the tax would be 3%; on anything over $2000, the tax would be 4%. (LPA)

Senate Passes New 'T-H' Bill On Security

THE Taft-Humphrey bill legalizing more than 4000 union shop contracts legally endangered by Supreme Court decisions and eliminating the necessity of union shop elections in the future was passed unanimously last week by the Senate.

Eearlier the CIO, in a letter to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) had called for legislation to protect union-shop conditions won for workers in thousands of factories.

Although remaining "unalterably opposed to the Taft-Hartley Act and all its provisions," Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, told Humphrey the CIO supported the new bill as a solution to a situation threatening the stability of industrial relations.

The Senate bill, the first attempt in the 82nd Congress to change the shape of T-H, now goes to the House. Congressional observers believe it will pass there and be signed by President Truman.

Major Blow Dealt Fight For Freedom

Senate Unit Cuts $22 Million From 'Voice'

THE SENATE Appropriations Committee last week dealt a major blow to U. S. efforts to win the cold war.

By a 14 to 9 vote, the committee approved the proposal of Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) trimming an additional $22 million from funds for the Voice of America and other State Dept. international information programs.

The House had previously hacked $30 million from the Voice's $115 million budget, but it had beaten back Republican efforts to slice off another $15 million.

McCarran, who enjoys the dubious distinction of having been named by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) as the kind of Democrat he likes in Congress, thus not only has succeeded in pushing through the additional cut sought by House Republicans, but he has hacked off an additional $7 million on his own.

The committee's action came a day after President Truman had warned:

"A slash in funds for the Voice of America, coming at this time, would have the effect of severely damaging our efforts to reach the hearts and minds of other peoples. It would mean retreat in the face of the mounting world-wide pressures of Communist propaganda."

The President added that adequate appropriations were "essential" in view of the new intensification of the Soviet propaganda theme of hate for the U. S. and other members of the United Nations. He asked the Senate to restore the $30 million cut by the House.

One of the few Republicans with enough broad vision to oppose the GOP party leadership in its openly political move against President Truman no matter what the cost to the country is Sen. Mundt (R. S. D.).

Urging the Senate not to cripple the Voice by cutting its funds too drastically, Mundt told his colleagues that Voice of America broadcasts were behind the recent flight of Polish youths to Sweden and that this proved the effectiveness of the program.

As debate on the measure began, Mundt and six other Republican Senators introduced an amendment to restore the $22 million cut by the committee. Sens. Nixon (Calif.), Saltonstall (Mass.), Smith (Me.), Smith (N.J.), Hendrickson (N.J.) and Case (S.D.) joined Mundt in the move.

The six largest American corporations spend more each year in advertising than the total $115 million requested by the State Dept. to run the entire foreign information program of the richest nation on earth.

Independent surveys made by such organizations as the American Institute of Public Opinion (Gallup Polls) and its overseas affiliates indicate that, in the nations of the free world, the influence of the Voice has been growing steadily.

Over 24% of the population of France are at least occasional listeners, and over half of the population have heard the Voice at some time or another. On any weekday at least one million Frenchmen listen to its broadcasts, and more than three million hear it on any Sunday.

In Germany, the Voice now has a regular audience of more than six million in the U. S. Zone alone, and recent progress has also been made in building up its activities in Asia and Latin America. The Voice operates around the clock, sending out more than 80 programs in nearly half that many different languages every 24 hours.

Behind the Iron Curtain, reliable information indicates that the Voice is heard by about 80% of the radio owners every day, and that, with the help of a well-developed grapevine, it can deliver an important message to nearly the entire population of the satellite states within a matter of hours. There has been a sharpened interest in the Voice in China since the Communists took over.

Before April, 1949, when the Kremlin began its frantic efforts to quiet the Voice through jamming the airways, it was known that more than 10 million Russians listened to the Voice regularly.

Scores of persons escaping from the Soviet Union have been questioned about the Voice and nearly all of them refer to its influence in shaping their decision to leave. One striking example is the two aviators who flew their plane out of the Soviet Union last year after one of the broadcasts.

An even better indication of the Voice's effectiveness is the massive effort being made by the Soviet government to keep its program from being heard.

Despite constant jamming, it is known that the Voice is able to "creep through" to listeners at least 25% of the time in Moscow, where the jamming is concentrated, and about 80% of the time outside the capital.

McCarran, Meet McCarran

This country must adopt "a fighting policy, aiming at the soonest possible collapse of the red hierarchy, and we need techniques of psychological warfare to match such a policy," Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) said on Aug. 6.

On that date he told the Senate that the free world should engage in an all-out propaganda "offensive" to enlist the aid of the enslaved peoples in the fight against Communism.

On Aug. 21, however, when his words were put to a test, McCarran led the successful fight in the Senate Appropriations Committee to cut $22 million additional from funds for the Voice of America, which would have made such a program possible.

Senate Economy Bloc Axes Foreign Aid Bill

THE SENATE Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees, meeting jointly to draft legislation on the President's request for $8.5 billion in foreign aid, last week sharply knifed American security in the name of "economy."

The group voted Aug. 22 to trim more than $1 billion from the program. The cut would be made by slicing military aid funds by 5% and economic aid money by 30%. This would amount to about $659 million in economic aid and $315 million in military assistance.

In one sense, the decision was a victory for the administration, in that it thwarted announced plans of a Republican-Dixiecrat coalition to chop a total of $2 billion to $3 billion from the measure.

Prior to the decision, which was adopted by a one-vote majority—13 to 12—Southern Democrats had again begun to gang up with GOP isolationists in a move to lop more than the $1 billion cut by the House. The action finally taken would leave the measure in virtually the same state as it came from the lower chamber.

Sen. Connally (D. Tex.), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, proposed chopping $1 billion from the economic assistance program alone. This was defeated by several votes.

Sen. George (D. Ga.) had previously indicated he would fight to chop twice that amount and Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) was reported ready to support George's move. Sen. Taft (R. O.) earlier had demanded that economic aid be cut in half.

GEORGE'S proposal would have virtually wrecked economic aid activities, since it would have chopped off more than four-fifths of the total amount requested for this purpose. Hanging under the ax were such vital—and successful—administration programs as continuation of the Marshall Plan, Point Four and the work of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

The House cut $711.25 million from the administration's $2.1 billion request for economic aid programs. After studying the effect of such a cut, the Economic Cooperation Administration told the Senate that it would set back Western Europe's rearmament program by the equivalent of $2.5 billion in manpower, equipment and capacity to produce arms.

"One dollar of American economic aid," the ECA said, "produces $4 worth of the essential strength needed to meet defense targets and to insure that the U. S. will not be indefinitely required to maintain this strength."

This same viewpoint was expressed by the Committee for Economic Development, an organization of businessmen, which, after several months of study, reported that armed strength did not mean military strength alone, but involved also a strong economy and greater productivity. The CED said that economic aid is essential and referred to the Marshall Plan as "the most successful element in our postwar foreign policy."

Isthmian Line In Backdoor Pact With AFL

MANAGEMENT of the Isthmian Steamship Co. slipped out the back door last week—striking CIO Marine Engineers were picketing in front—and signed a "sweetheart" agreement with the AFL Brotherhood of Marine Engineers.

The CIO affiliate had been on strike since June 16 in a fight to win for Isthmian employes the same benefits won from more than a score of competing lines.

The company balked at the same union hiring hall provision the other firms had signed, and the strike resulted. The "settlement" with the BME gave Isthmian control over hiring.

The MEBA strike is continuing, however, and Isthmian ships will continue to be picketed. In California the union won an important legal victory when Judge Stanley Barnes in Superior Court at Los Angeles dissolved a temporary injunction restraining picketing.

The company had seized on the hiring hall demand and obtained the temporary injunction with the claim that the strike was to obtain a closed shop. Judge Barnes dissolved the restraining order in keeping with the union's contention that the strike was to win the full contract—and that besides, the union's goal is perfectly legal.

A year ago Isthmian attempted to push the engineers into the AFL union in a rigged election in which the ballots had to be signed. Despite the intimidation, the MEBA won.

A Program Of Progress

By CIO Pres. Philip Murray

On Labor Day 1951, American workers are determined to carry on the fight for democracy throughout the world and for equality of sacrifice at home.

In a world beset by the constant threat of aggression from the Soviet Union and its satellites, the labor unions of the United States recognize their responsibility to work at all times to strengthen the free world.

We know well that the claims and the promises of the Kremlin's propagandists are a flimsy cover for a policy of oppression, imperialism and world conquest.

But we also know that military power alone is not enough. Liberty, security, full employment, constantly rising standards of living, and broad-scale social progress are essential to provide fundamental strength for the democratic system.

Throughout this past year, the Congress of Industrial Organizations has worked untiringly to win acceptance by the Congress of the principle of equality of sacrifice, which is so essential to the long range success of our defense program.

We have lost many battles to control inflation, but we shall not give up the fight. The men and women of organized labor have demonstrated time and again that they are willing to accept a fair wage stabilization program—if the other major elements in our economy are also stabilized.

We will keep on insisting that profiteering, chiseling and exploitation have no place in our national emergency program.

We in the CIO stand flatly opposed to those shortsighted interests which proclaim that reaction must rule in time of crisis. It is clear that the defense program and our nation's role of leadership throughout the free world will best be improved by constant social and economic progress.

Now, more than ever before, we must seek enactment of a long-needed civil rights program. We must guard and strengthen our fundamental civil liberties. We must not lag in the task of improving our social security and health standards. We must insist that Americans—all Americans—have decent homes at rents they can afford.

The Taft-Hartley Act, that evil law which symbolizes an outworn philosophy of "master and slave," must be repealed and replaced by a decent and workable labor-management relations law that will bring forth cooperative relationships between industry and labor unions.

American workers can help achieve these worthwhile objectives by registering and voting for those candidates for public office who represent our aspirations for a better, more wholesome America.

The CIO Political Action Committee, during the coming year, will continue its education program to help insure that the nation's voters have a complete understanding of the issues in the elections of 1952.

The program of the CIO—economic, social, legislative, political—is a program conceived solely in the interests of our democratic nation.

It is a program based on the needs of our people; it is designed to preserve our traditional democratic values and to adapt them to the changing needs of our mid-century.

Toward this program of progress the CIO once again dedicates itself on this Labor Day.

In Labor Day Speech

Murray Says Hate Peddlers Aim To Kill Liberal Bills

CIO PRES. Philip Murray, in his annual Labor Day speech, sounded a warning against "vociferous orators" who are using hate and hysteria "to smear every program for human betterment."

"Sometimes their slogans are anti-Semitic, or anti-Negro or anti-Catholic," he said. "Sometimes they malign organized labor, or the aims of the Fair Deal.

"Whatever device the demagogues use, it is aimed to spread fear and suspicion and distrust.

"We must not heed this call to division and despair. We must reaffirm our belief in the fundamental freedoms and liberties which have made America great. America has benefitted because our people have always practiced freedom of speech, freedom of thought, freedom of religious worship, freedom of assembly.

"But today, the demagogues and the peddlers of hate are endangering those basic freedoms. For their own selfish, reactionary purposes, they are seeking to launch a tidal wave of abnormal fear—fear of ourselves, fear of the liberties that have made America both strong and democratic."

MURRAY'S speech was broadcast over the ABC network. In a reference to "McCarthyism," he said:

"You can find some of these demagogues in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. It is no accident that their records show a consistent opposition to progressive, forward-looking legislation. They have no programs for bettering the lives of human beings.

"Rather, the demagogues hope that the excitement and suspicion which they sow will cloak their do-nothing records. They oppose the Fair Deal program because that program is aimed at promoting economic security, strengthening civil rights, and helping the general good and welfare of all the people.

"Labor in America has always fought for the strengthening of civil liberties and the expansion of the protection we offer to the rights of minorities. We know that the guarantees of the Bill of Rights cannot be neglected, or they will crumble away.

"Each case of discrimination against our citizens because of race, color or religious belief is grist for the Kremlin propaganda machine. We have a duty to ourselves and to our friends overseas to keep our house in order."

THE CIO president also renewed labor's demand for equality of sacrifice in the defense effort. The working people are prepared to do their share, he asserted.

"But the defense of democracy is not labor's task alone," he said. "It must enlist the support of every element in the population. Our defense effort must be wholehearted, and it must not place an undue burden on any group. That is the way democracy should work.

"Nevertheless, there are influential spokesmen for powerful interests in this country who scorn the wholesome philosophy of equality of sacrifice.

"They would like to take all the benefits of our economic system—and they would leave the workers and the plain people of this country to carry on all the burdens and responsibilities.

"When the workers and the plain people complain about inequities, those spokesmen for special interests would have you believe that our arguments for economic democracy are somehow arguments for socialism."

Murray blamed corporate greed for the higher prices and taxes the American consumer is being forced to pay, and accused the special interest lobbies of preventing an effective anti-inflation law.

Defense Bond Drive Opens On Labor Day

Labor Day was picked by the Treasury Dept. as the time for a nationwide rally kicking off the Defense Bond sales campaign.

Grand Rapids, Mich. took the spotlight as the scene of the bond drive. It was an elaborate Labor Day celebration co-sponsored by the CIO, AFL and railroad unions of that area. The drive was to be launched, according to Secy. of the Treasury John W. Snyder, with a civic program and a "power for peace" military demonstration. The labor and defense parade was to be held in the morning, in advance of the bond rally, with a picnic scheduled for the afternoon.

IUE Offered 2½% Hike In G.E. Talks

THE General Electric Co. last week offered CIO Electrical Workers a 2½% wage increase, plus a cost-of-living escalator. Union spokesmen termed the offer "partly acceptable."

IUE Pres. James B. Carey said the union might be willing to accept the company's proposal on the two points after "certain refinements," provided GE would agree to seven other points in the IUE bargaining "package."

"We are not too far apart," Carey said after meeting with the union's GE conference board in New York City. "But what we are far apart on is awfully important."

He proposed that the plan to increase wages by 2½% across the board contain a provision that no increases should be less than 4c an hour. This amendment, he said, was aimed at improving hourly rates of lower rated employes, chiefly women.

Secondly, Carey proposed that cost-of-living rises be computed every four months beginning Sept. 14 instead of every six months as offered by the company.

The board also instructed the negotiating committee to continue its talks with the company on the following points and to report back on Sept. 12:

1. Company absorbtion of the 2% pension contribution now paid by employes.

2. Three weeks vacation after 15 years instead of after 20.

3. A clause barring discrimination in employment, especially because of sex.

4. A modified union shop.

5. An adequate progression schedule of automatic increases.

6. An improved seniority clause.

7. Reopening next March of all questions not included in the contract signed Sept. 15.

Dixiegop 'Economies' Will Cost Us Plenty

By MILTON PLUMB

ECONOMY? It's wonderful. But economy is supposed to save you money, not squander it. The so-called "economy" bloc—meaning the conservative Southern Democrat-Republican coalition running things in the 82nd Congress—obviously hasn't learned this simple economic principle.

For the fact, is that "economy bloc economies" are actually costing the taxpayers a good deal of money.

President Truman last week charitably branded as a bad example of "misplaced economy" the cut of $1 billion in his request for $8.5 billion for foreign military and economic aid. It was pushed through by Dixiegops on the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees.

He said that the original Marshall plan proposed in 1947 looked forward to a four-year program costing less than $17 billion, and that his present requests to complete the program successfully would only bring the total to about $14½ billion.

With success in sight, he added, supporters of the cuts are now preparing to upset the whole apple cart.

Then he came right out and said it:

Why, you may wonder, isn't $1 billion saved when it isn't going to be appropriated?

The answer is simple: Many billions more will have to be appropriated in other ways to get what that $1 billion in this instance would have bought.

The House has just passed a bill appropriating $56 billion to support U.S. military forces during the current fiscal year. That is nearly seven times the whole amount of foreign aid asked by the President.

With that $56 billion, the military hopes to build up the total of all our armed forces to 3½-million men during the current year. But the $8.5 billion in foreign aid would enable Atlantic Pact countries to support an army of three million men in Europe alone.

The foreign aid measure also includes funds for Asia and South America.

Since the Atlantic Pact armies are part of our mutual security set-up, the foreign aid program is an investment that pays off in terms of sheer dollars and cents returns, 7-to-1.

This limited consideration, of course, leaves out of the picture the many additional benefits that the U.S. will obtain from a sound world economy.

BUT the real joker in the $1 billion "economy" on foreign aid is this:

If Europe doesn't get the foreign aid funds promised to enable it to build up its strength, our own military needs will increase considerably.

To offset the loss of armed might in Europe, our military leaders will demand—and get—additional funds to build our own armies at a higher overall cost. That $1 billion in Dixiegop "economy" thus will cost many billions more.

In all the talking about saving that has been going on in Congress, no one has said a word about the real economies represented by the administration's ability to keep the total Marshall Plan costs, despite inflation, to $2½ billion less than the original estimates.

CIO Officers Support MEBA Strike Against Isthmian

FULL SUPPORT of the executive officers and vice presidents of the CIO was voted last week to the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association in its strike for a new contract with the Isthmian Steamship Co.

Pres. Philip Murray issued a statement—endorsed by the other officers at a meeting Aug. 29—accusing the shipping company of refusing the same wage and working standards in effect in approximately 120 other firms operating under contracts with the MEBA.

"The refusal of the company to agree to these fair demands has been followed by intimidation, threats of violence against striking MEBA members, active recruiting of strikebreakers, and collusion with an AFL union which has been seeking for a long time to raid and destroy the MEBA," said the statement.

"There are confirmed reports that strikebreakers have been recruited with the active aid of the Seafarers Intl. Union, AFL, and sent to various American ports.

"In the port of New York known racketeers, accompanied by company officials, have threatened the use of physical violence against MEBA pickets. In Texas the company has obtained injunctions designed to smash the MEBA strike. On the West Coast the company is reported to have signed a back door strike-breaking agreement with an affiliate of the Seafarers Intl. Union, AFL.

"It seems clear that the company is using every possible device to smash the justified strike of the MEBA, an organization 75 years old with a long record of responsible collective bargaining and observance of its contracts . . .

"WE DECRY the efforts of the company to break this strike rather than engage in genuine collective bargaining to reach an agreement along the lines of those in effect on competing lines. We condemn the actions of the leaders of the Seafarers Intl. Union, AFL, in letting that union be used as a strike-breaking instrument by the Isthmian company, and call upon its members to resist this effort to destroy decent wage and working standards on the Isthmian Lines.

"We call upon all affiliates of the CIO to give full support to this strike of the MEBA in order that the strike may be most speedily won."

WSB Approves 6.5% Raise For TWUA Wool Workers

THE WAGE Stabilization Board last week approved a 6.5% wage increase for more than 60,000 CIO Textile Workers members in 111 woolen and worsted mills.

The WSB action constituted "partial approval" of wage adjustments negotiated last March 15 by TWUA with the American Woolen Co. and other textile concerns.

The increase was given under the WSB regulation providing for cost-of-living raises. The 6.5% approximates the rise in the cost of living between Aug. 15, 1950, and Feb. 15, 1951.

Under the regulation the board may measure the increase in living costs from the date of the last contract rather than from Jan. 15, 1950, the base date for the cost-of-living raises. A similar policy was followed in passing on wage hikes for cotton-rayon workers in the north.

The WSB voted to nold in abeyance another part of the American Woolen contract which calls for certain "fringe" benefits on the grounds that board policy on these matters has not yet been formulated.

IN THE SOUTH, meanwhile, TWUA set the stage for the reopening of its contracts with cotton-rayon mills for pay increases in line with the new policy adopted by the WSB.

Approximately 90,000 Southern cotton-rayon workers will be affected by the move, according to TWUA Southern Director James W. Bamford.

The union will seek increases for cotton-rayon workers who have not yet received the full 10% raise above the wage levels of Jan. 15, 1950.

U.S. Contracts Urged For Flood Area

Channeling of defense contracts to Missouri's flood-stricken areas to relieve unemployment has been urged by the State Flood Advisory Committee.

Initiated by Harold Edwards, president of the Missouri CIO Industrial Union Council, the recommendation was sent to the Office of Defense Mobilization and the National Production Authority.

AFL's Action Formally Dissolves ULPC

THE UNITED Labor Policy Committee, the strongest voice of the organized worker during the emergency period, was formally dissolved last week.

The end came at a meeting in Washington on Aug. 28, at which AFL Pres. William Green handed CIO representatives a formal notice of withdrawal.

The notice also gave what the AFL said were its reasons for ending nearly nine months of successful cooperation — high-marked by the successful fight to give the country's working men and women a greater role in defense mobilization.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a statement after the meeting, called the AFL action "regrettable." The text of his statement appears elsewhere on this page.

Basically, the AFL position was that cooperation with the CIO on specific issues is not a substitute for organic unity, or merger of the two groups.

But CIO Pres. Murray said in his statement:

"We reject the idea that the United Labor Policy Committee was in any way incompatible with the development of organic unity.

"We firmly believe that through the ULPC the chance for achievement of such unity was substantially and progressively improving. It is unfortunate that the representatives of the AFL now see fit to break up this useful instrument of labor unity."

He told the AFL—and the public—that under the circumstances, the entire subject would have to be reviewed by the CIO Executive Board and the forthcoming convention, which will be held Nov. 5-9 in New York.

Murray also pointed out that the problems which led to formation of the ULPC are not "completely solved," and that a host of critical issues face the country and the labor movement now and in the foreseeable future.

The ULPC had given the majority of the labor movement in the United States, he said, "a working method of extending their areas of agreement and of enjoying the benefits of united action."

"We in the CIO," he added, "can visualize no advantage—to labor or the nation—in destroying the successes of the present for the theoretical advantages of an uncertain future.

"We have been unable to understand why discussions on the question of eventual merger of the CIO and AFL might not have proceeded in the ULPC itself; or through separate unity committees of the two organizations, while the ULPC continued its effective work on important matters related to the defense program."

The AFL statement conceded that the ULPC "has undoubtedly served a good purpose," but claimed that to a large extent, it "has accomplished its purpose."

"We emphasize that the ULPC was established on a temporary basis. Its operations never were and never could be regarded as a satisfactory substitute for organic unity of the free American trade union movement.

"To the American Federation of Labor there is no substitute for organic unity. Only through a united labor movement, merged into a single organization, can the workers of America attain the power, the status and the consideration which is their due.

"IN furtherance of that objective, and to assure that the goodwill and fraternity engendered by our associations with the Congress of Industrial Organizations on this ULPC, the representatives of the American Federation of Labor hereby propose that the standing committees of both organizations resume at the earliest opportunity their negotiations to bring about labor peace through organic unity."

Attending the two-hour meeting—90 minutes of which was in executive session—on behalf of the CIO were Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers; and Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

Present for the AFL in addition to Green were Secy.-Treas. George Meany; Pres. William C. Doherty of the Letter Carriers; Secy.-Treas. Eric Peterson of the Machinists, and A. E. Lyon, of the Railway Labor Executives Association.

Murray Hails ULPC's Past Record; Calls AFL Move 'Unfortunate'

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week issued the following statement on behalf of the CIO members of the United Labor Policy Committee:

THE decision of the American Federation of Labor to withdraw from the United Labor Policy Committee is regrettable.

Philip Murray

In bringing about the downfall of the ULPC, the American Federation of Labor has scuttled a method of inter-union cooperation that has won the acclaim not only of union members but of the general public.

It is, of course, completely erroneous to visualize the problems—both national and international—that led to the creation of the ULPC, as now completely solved and belonging only to the pages of history.

Everyone knows that our nation and our labor movement must now and in the years ahead, deal with a host of critical issues.

Through the United Labor Policy Committee, the overwhelming majority of American labor had found a working method of extending their areas of agreement and of enjoying the benefits of united action.

At no previous time have the AFL members of the committee indicated dissatisfaction with the committee's progress or with the overwhelming need for joint consideration of the great and complex problems arising from the national emergency.

Indeed, the AFL and the CIO have been in substantial agreement that practical benefits had resulted—and would continue to result in the future—from the operations of the United Labor Policy Committee.

We in the CIO can visualize no advantage—to labor or the nation—in destroying the successes of the present for the theoretical advantages of an uncertain future.

We have been unable to understand why discussions on the question of eventual merger of the CIO and AFL might not have proceeded in the ULPC itself; or through separate unity committees of the two organizations, while the ULPC continued its effective work on important matters related to the defense program.

We reject the idea that the United Labor Policy Committee was in any way incompatible with the development of organic unity. We firmly believe that through the ULPC the chance for achievement of such unity was substantially and progressively improving.

It is unfortunate that the representatives of the AFL have now seen fit to break up this useful instrument for labor unity.

Under the circumstances of the disruption of the United Labor Policy Committee the entire subject must necessarily be reviewed by the competent agencies of the CIO—namely, its Executive Board and its Convention.

In the meantime, the CIO pledges to the members of the American Federation of Labor and to the American people that it will continue—as it has in the past—to exert all its efforts to support the struggle of the democratic world against Soviet-inspired totalitarian aggression, and to assure a defense mobilization program here at home that will be based squarely on the need for equality of sacrifice by every group in the nation.

N.J. CIO Again Asks Boost In Jobless Aid

New Jersey's state unemployment fund will make a $30 million "profit" this year, the State CIO has charged in repeating its plea to Gov. Alfred Driscoll for a special session of the Legislature to boost unemployment and disability benefits.

Boss' Promises Fail To Fool Workers Twice; They Go CIO

THE TRICK worked the first time, but when the Art Clements Lumber Co. of Springfield, Ore., tried it again—it bounced.

Something more than a year ago Local 5-246 of the CIO Woodworkers conducted an organizing campaign among the firm's workers. Just before a National Labor Relations Board election, the employes were told they'd get the same raises the union negotiated.

"A majority of the crew took his word for it and decided they didn't need a union to get the increases," said Max Gardner, business agent for Local 5-246.

"Following the vote Clements gave them the 10c raise, but no health and welfare plan. And when fall came, he failed to grant them the 5c granted to the IWA members through negotiations.

"When it came to this election he made the same promise . . . but this time it didn't work.

"He even went so far as to put out the word the evening before the election that back wage checks were being made up. However, the majority was not mislead by such maneuvering."

The IWA won the election by a 22 to 15 vote.

Telephone Union Wins 10% Hike

A five-day strike recently paid off for the CIO Communications Workers in Washington State and Northern Idaho when the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. agreed to a 10% wage increase.

The company provoked the strike by stalling negotiations. "Hit and run" picket lines bewildered the management which signed a contract providing wage increases of from $3 to $9, reclassification of work schedules, job upgrading, arbitration of dismissals and a seniority clause.

Union Film Adviser Gets ECA Position

Albert E. Hemsing, film division director for both the CIO Textile Workets and the CIO Clothing Workers since 1948, has left for Paris where he will become film adviser for the Labor Information Division of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Hemsing set up the TWUA and ACW film divisions and headed an extensive film distribution program for local unions and the public.

Marie Newby, of the Columbia Univ. Communications Service, will replace Hemsing as film librarian for both unions.

Rieve Backs Parley To Aid Massachusetts

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has endorsed a call issued by a group of Massachusetts mayors for a conference to revitalize industry and employment in the state.

In a letter to Gov. Paul A. Dever, Rieve applauded the move to "attack this problem at its source." He said TWUA was particularly interested because the state's textile workers are hard hit by employment at the present time.

End Of A Committee

There is little that can be added to the CIO's statement about the break-up of the United Labor Policy Committee (the text of that statment is printed elsewhere in this paper).

As CIO President Murray pointed out, the AFL's decision to withdraw from the ULPC was "regrettable"—for the Committee had been a method of extending the areas of agreement among the various wings of the labor movement, and of enjoying the benefits of united action.

The statement of AFL President William Green sheds little light on the federation's decision to withdraw from the united committee.

Coming as it does when economic and legislative problems connected with the defense effort are, if anything, increasing, the AFL statement curiously suggests that the ULPC "to a large extent has accomplished its purpose."

We wish it were true that all our problems were solved—but reality reminds us that our problems are far, far away from solution.

The AFL statement maintains that "there is no substitute for organic unity." But under cover of this slogan, the AFL has killed any reasonable hope for obtaining unity in the near future. If organic unity is to come about, it will be the climax of joint cooperation and friendly relationships between leaders and members of the two organizations.

The United Labor Policy Committee provided an atmosphere for cooperation and friendship. Either directly or indirectly, it could have served as a medium for hastening the day when the CIO and AFL might work out the details of a merger.

The leaders of the AFL, through their sudden decision to end the ULPC, must certainly have been aware that they were in fact retarding—not hastening—the day of organic unity.

With that background, the AFL decision to end the effective working unity of CIO and AFL certainly raises more questions than it answers about the federation's scuttling of the United Labor Policy Committee.

Sanforized Dollars?

The dollar—as well as your shirt—is in urgent need of sanforizing!

A recent survey shows how much the 1951 dollar has shrunk from its pre-war value in 1940.

As far as the cost-of-living is concerned, laundering by the inflation profiteers has pulled the dollar in by 46%. It's now rated generally as being worth on 54c on a comparative basis.

But if you buy food—and who doesn't—it's worth only 43c.

And the dollar buys only 44c worth of a home and 48c of material with which to equip it. A house, in other words, that you could build in 1940 for $4400 now costs about $10,000.

The value for clothing, too, is below the cost-of-living average. Today, the clothing dollar covers exactly half—it's rated at 50c.

If it keeps on shrinking, you may have no suit to send to the cleaners. But you'll certainly have been cleaned yourself.

Careful, Charlie!

Charles E. Wilson—the one who is head of General Motors—suggests that the "most inflationary" step taken by GM this year was to vote an extra dividend for its stockholders. He's surprised that it caused scarcely a ripple of public criticism.

Careful, Mr. Wilson. Next thing you know, the reactionary columnists will be calling you a "socialist."

Labor Day, 1951!

Rep. Vail & The Newspaper Guild

(Excerpts from an article in IUE-CIO News by its editor)

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

Our union was born of necessity just like so many other unions in CIO. Back in the 20s and 30s newspaper business was sold to you as a glamour "game." A few outstanding writers received good salaries for the day. The rest of us took scraps from the business office table, an occasional "by-line" (that is, your name signed to an article), a lot of pay cuts and a lot of abuse.

Oh, it was fun at times. You would get free drinks at a speak because you were a reporter. And the cops'd slip you a bottle of the dozens they'd grab in the periodic raids they had to go through to kid the public that Prohibition was being enforced.

But, we didn't make any money. We didn't make any money and we didn't have any security. And—this really happened—there were constant firings, like the one where the publisher staggered into the newsroom, drunk, looked it over, pointed to the right of the aisle and cried "everybody on this side of the room is fired." So, we formed a union.

And it wasn't only the underpaid and pushed-around that joined and fostered this movement. No, the higher paid were, generally, good joes. There was Heywood Broun, for instance. Perhaps more than anyone else he could be called the Founder of the Guild. And he never made one extra cent out of it, never got a penny of overtime, never got an extra holiday, never collected a cent in salary from the ANG, just was motivated by a love of his fellow men. Pretty much of a saint.

All this indignation on my part leads up to a stupid piece of business which has been offered by a "representative of the people" in the 82nd Congress. Up to the House well last week paraded Rep. Richard B. Vail (R. Ill.). He deposited in the legislative hopper a bill. This bill would force newspapers to have all articles, editorials, columns, etc., written by Guild members to be labelled by the man's—or woman's—name and identified at the end with the symbol "American Newspaper Guild, CIO."

Rep. Vail is the chairman of the board of a steel manufacturing firm. Now, that doesn't make him an expert on steel. Nor does it indicate he knows a tinker's dam at all about steel. But Vail's statements in the House do make it evident that he doesn't know a thing about the CIO and the Guild and the newspaper business.

Take the CIO and the Guild, for instance, which in my mind are inseparable—which I know is the feeling of the vast bulk of ANG members. Vail says editorial work is under control of "CIO radicals."

Everyone on Capitol Hill must or should be aware that the Guild, away back in 1941, solved its Communist problem. And that the CIO expelled every last CIO union where the Commies controlled. IUE-CIO is a perfect example of what CIO has done to rescue workers from Commie control.

REP. VAIL, AS AN employer, must know that there is plenty of slanting of news in newspapers—but always at the behest of the publisher, his fellow employer, most of whom believe that there is no right except on management's side.

I sat on the city desk and telegraph desk for some 12 or so years in my newspaper career. Many a time I slanted stories. But never once did I slant a story of my own initiative. Always I slanted the stories on the publisher's initiative siphoned down to me through the straw bosses.

So, I get indignant over such idiocy as Rep. Vail's. I get indignant, I am sure, in my own name and that of the thousands of Guild members.

And I get indignant in the name of the several hundred former employes of the Philadelphia Record, of which I was one, who struck for principle, only to have the publisher use his "freedom of press rights" to sell the paper for handsome profits, thereby scrapping our jobs.

You will note that Vail doesn't say in his bill that the publisher must sign an editorial he writes as "Joseph Willoughby, American Newspaper Publishers Association, National Manufacturers' Association."

Pot (NAM) Calls Kettle (Forbes Mag) Black

The organized labor movement isn't the only phase of American life where the various elements occasionally work out on each other with verbal baseball bats. Even the tories have their disagreements, too, as the savory exchange below attests. It starts off with what Malcolm Forbes, editor of Forbes, the Magazine of Business, wrote about the National Association of Manufacturers. It ends with what the NAM thinks of Forbes. Both, in all probability, are right.

Forbes Hits NAM

THE National Association of Manufacturers would greatly further the causes it believes in if the NAM itself ceased to exist.

The organization's latest bumptious bumbling was its blast at Charlie Wilson for his support of price controls. Now Director of our Defense Mobilization, the former president of General Electric and his aide, Eric Johnston (four times president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce) were described by the NAM as "the prisoners of their subordinates, the bright slide rule and figure boys who get up the charts, interpret the statistics, write the speeches and feed them the data on which their thinking is based."

Because they agree with many of the best business brains in the country on the need for temporary controls in the present crisis, and disagree with the small hierarchy determining NAM policies, these men have lost their power to think properly. They're now prisoners of the New Deal. What malarky!

Unfortunately a lot of people think NAM speaks for American business, that their policies and pronouncements reflect the opinions of most of management and the owners of business. Fortunately, in fact, they don't. Time and again able, foresighted business leaders have gone on NAM Boards and Committees with high hopes of broadening the Association's perspective, but such attempts have thus far proven for the most part unsuccessful.

The NAM has done such an effective job that all it takes is their endorsement of a measure or a viewpoint to damn it in the eyes of legislators, large numbers of businessmen, and influential groups everywhere—and I'm not referring to the CIO or the professional left-wingers. As one who believes a national sales tax is necessary, I was discouraged at its prospects when the NAM came out in its favor. That'll make it tough to sell, no matter how logical.

It is harder to imagine a group rendering less service to things it believes in than when the NAM gathers annually at the Waldorf-Astoria to pontificate on the issues of the day. The climax comes when an immense dais of white-tie-and-tailed executives is pictured throughout the nation's press looking down toward a ballroom filled with hundreds more in white-tie-and-tails, listening to speeches about What This Country Needs.

The Association actually consists of hundreds of companies and executives with deep conviction and sound thinking as individual entities. But by the time their resolutions percolate into mass adoption the heavy hand of the so-called "hard-headed school" leaves them in the Just-What-You'd-Expect-From-Reactionaries category.

Maybe the fault lies with the "permanent secretariat" at headquarters, who must yes-sir some of the heavy dues-paying group that think the way to sell their viewpoint is to hit 'em again harder. If the National Association would content itself with a useful job of fact-finding, if it had done what today the Committee for Economic Development does, a real service of value to free enterprise advocates would be performed.

But today those who believe in free enterprise would be far better off if the NAM would jump into one of the holes it is constantly digging.

NAM Hits Forbes

THE accompanying editorial from the current issue of Forbes Magazine is reproduced herewith so that members of NAM may judge for themselves the validity of this effort to assassinate the character of their Association.

From the depths of his profound ignorance of NAM and its methods of operation, Malcolm Forbes has dredged up all the ancient cliches which even the most ardent enemies of free enterprise have abandoned as illogical and ludicrous per se.

To say that more than 16,000 manufacturers pay dues to an association which does not reflect their opinions is too ridiculous a statement to be given credence by a child of five. It would not be made by anyone who is familiar with the way in which NAM policy positions are formulated. It is a bit of wishful left-wing thinking which only the economically and emotionally immature still entertain.

If the "kiss of death" charge had any validity the nation long since would have succumbed to the persuasive ideas of the planners and socialists who have itched for decades to take the economic destiny of this nation out of the people's hands and into their own. NAM has opposed them at every step and as a result America is still a land where the individual has a large measure of freedom and opportunity to develop economically according to his abilities.

"White-tie-and-tails" are produced and sold for men to wear on formal occasions. It is no more ridiculous for NAM members to so attire themselves for their annual dinner than it is for those who attend the gala promotional dinners Forbes stages to honor "fifty foremost business leaders." In any case the argument is plainly one for the simple-minded and can have no bearing on the rightness or wrongness of the policies NAM advocates.

The manufacturers of this country, associated together in NAM, have fought for American traditions and principles and economic freedom for all men everywhere since 1895. They have not been dissuaded by the vituperation, villification and malignment which has been concentrated on their Association. While this struggle has been going on, Forbes has made its living by glorifying individual businessmen—possibly to their gratification, but assuredly to the magazine's profit.

Perhaps this is the basis for the publication's claim that it is a "magazine of business," although it has earned no wound stripes as a front-line fighter for the principles in which most businessmen believe; it has shed no blood in the battle against political encroachment on the rights of free Americans.

In the opinion of Forbes, "the NAM would do better dead," but the fact is that if NAM did not exist it would have to be invented. An organization with the understanding, the determination and the guts to carry on this fight to vindicate and preserve the political and economic principles which made America the greatest nation on earth is a vital necessity. This responsibility cannot be entrusted to jelly-kneed, self-styled "spokesmen" for business.

Perhaps Forbes Magazine has come to feel, as do many business haters, that NAM is a convenient punching bag which may be assaulted to impress the grandstand without fear of retaliation.

However, as long as Forbes' writers have not gone to NAM members for the truth, perhaps members will let the magazine know in precise terms what they really think.

An Unhappy Shop Steward Sheds A Tear For Himself!

The following tale of the woes that beset a shop steward is reprinted from The Union Picket, the official publication of CIO Auto Workers Local 78, Detroit:

Dear Sir and Brother:

I AM TAKING a few minutes from my diet of ulcer pills and nerve tonic to set my problems down on paper, hoping someone may offer a solution.

Once I lived a normal life, at peace with my fellow men. Kind to children and stray dogs. I was respected by my neighbors and a friend to all.

Then several years ago I was nominated for steward and after a hectic and confusing campaign, I had the fortune, or perhaps it was a misfortune, to be elected.

Like Lochinvar riding into the west, I set forth to better the lot of my fellowmen, armed with a copy of the contract. Now I am the ignorant hulk of my former self, undecided between the gas pipe and a short step from a long building.

If the department works beyond eight hours, half my workers call me a bum because they have to work overtime. If we quit in eight hours or less, the other half of my workers call me a bigger bum, because we are getting the schedule, while others are getting "gravy."

When I shout, curse and wave my arms at a foreman, some spectators sourly shake their heads, state I blow my top too easily and louse up the grievance with my operation, I'm informed that with facts, figures and cold logic, others sadly shake their heads and say I have no fight or militancy and am selling out.

Should I work overtime, I'm hungry. When I don't work I'm guilty of not properly representing my people. While I'm working on my job, I'm told I'm scared of the foreman. When I am off my operation, I'm informed that I'm the foreman's buddy and that's why I get away with it.

WEARING A dirty shirt, I'm too sloppy to hold office, a clean shirt makes me a company tool.

Last month I drew a husky $4.17 lost time and am now accused of robbing the union. Thus it goes day by day.

When I please Joe, Dick gets mad. When I please Dick, Bill gets mad and so on.

Now my problem is this. Mr. Anthony, how do I please everybody? If I could only do it, just once, I would gladly hang up the old track shoes and call it a day. Then once again I could learn to like children and stray dogs and be a friend to all.

Thanking you (please send some ulcer pills) I remain,

Fraternally yours,

A STEWARD

House Unit Told:

Food Containing Harmful Drugs Is Americans' Daily Fare

By WILLIAM WELSH

FOOD and drinks containing harmful chemicals are consumed each day by most Americans, according to testimony heard by a House committee.

Enough testimony to support this grim fact has been gathered by the House Select Committee to Investigate the Use of Chemicals in Food to fill 878 printed pages. The hearings began last year and are by no means over.

A Food and Drug Administration spokesman testified that under the law, the producers of most chemically treated foods need not bother to prove that their products are even harmless.

On the other hand, FDA must prove in court that the suspected food, drinks and cosmetics are harmful before they can be banned from store shelves.

James O. Clarke, an FDA director, told the committee that of the 704 chemicals thought to be in use today for food processing, "428 are probably safe as normally used."

That means 276 ingredients in our daily bread, cereals, fruits and vegetables are useless at the best and probably highly dangerous to man.

Clive M. McCay, professor of nutrition at Cornell Univ., told the congressmen the reason behind such practices was ". . . to introduce chemicals into foods in order to make a cheaper product appear like a better one."

The official magazine of the CIO Auto Workers' Education Dept., Ammunition, took a look at McCay's testimony concerning cola drinks.

"At the Naval Medical Research Institute we put human teeth in cola beverage and found they softened and started to dissolve within a short period," McCay testified. "They became very soft within a few days."

The pause that refreshes must also be the pause that erodes, Ammunition concluded.

Dr. Francis E. Ray, Director of the Cancer Research Laboratory of the Univ. of Florida, told the committee of scientists' concern over something even more serious.

"Perhaps a thousand chemicals have been adequately tested (experimentally) and about a hundred have shown more or less cancer-producing properties" he said. "Substances that cause cancer are known as carcinogens.

"That is why it is of vital importance that the harmlessness of all chemicals be determined before they are permitted in food.

"I would suggest to the committee that we have not adequately tested our so-called certified pure-food colors for carcinogenic properties."

A chemical used in a vitamin preparation, the congressmen were told by Dr. Franklin Bing of the American Public Health Association, was considered responsible for a disease causing blindness in premature infants.

When use of the emulsifier—a chemical softener—was discontinued by the manufacturer, he said, incidence of blindness among the babies being treated with the vitamin dropped from a high of near 40% to less than 1%.

OTHER emulsifiers and sugar extenders now used in the baking industry were reported harmful in another way. Food values in bread became less as more chemicals were used to replace eggs, milk, sugar and shortening, witnesses said.

The committee will hold more public hearings in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, New York, and Washington.

Meanwhile, in an interim report, the committee stated:

"The evidence so far presented indicates that the existing federal laws dealing with the use of chemicals in food are not adequate to protect the public against the addition of unsafe chemicals."

FPC Tells Natural Gas Firms It's OK To Gouge Public

FLOUTING THE President, the Supreme Court and the recommendations of its own staff—as well as the law of the land—the Federal Power Commission last week told a big producer of natural gas it's O.K. to continue gouging American consumers.

The FPC, overlooking completely the fact that it was created to protect consumer interests, released a long-delayed decision declaring that it has no jurisdiction over the biggest of the big gas producers, Phillips Petroleum Co.

In doing so, the commission made clear that it, too, has suffered the sorry fate of so many other regulatory agencies in a lobby-dominated Washington.

A majority of the commission apparently represents the thinking now of the special interests that the FPC was originally set up to regulate.

Although Wisconsin officials, which brought the Phillips case before the FPC, have made clear that they will appeal the decision to the courts, it will be at least three years before a final ruling can be obtained.

Six-Year Gyp

Meanwhile, oil companies will reap close to $1 billion in higher profits—all of which, of course will come from the pockets of consumers.

Despite the fact that the courts probably will again reverse the commission, there is nothing that the consumers will be able to do about the situation in the years immediately ahead.

Unnoticed in the daily press is the fact that the FPC sat on the Phillips case for three years before arriving at a decision.

With at least three years of court action ahead, this means that the commission, by legal technicalities, has succeeded in preventing regulation of a large portion of natural gas rates for a total period of at least six years.

One result:

Phillips Petroleum Co. profits for the first six months of 1951 were 45% over the like period in 1950. The 1951 profits after taxes were $32 million; in the first half of 1950 they were $22 million.

Buchanan Dissents

The natural gas industry as a whole did 27% better in 1950 than in 1949. FPC statistics disclose that 139 natural gas companies made nearly $1½ billion in 1950, against $1,147,057,000 the previous year.

The case for the consumers was argued by Thomas C. Buchanan, the lone member of the FPC to dissent in the Phillips case.

Commission Chairman Mon C. Wallgren was joined by Commissioners Claude L. Draper, Nelson Lee Smith and Harrington Wimberly in giving the natural gas gathering the green light to boost rates.

In a strongly-worded disagreement, Buchanan declared that the majority decision had done what Congress in passing the Kerr natural gas bill had tried to do and failed. That bill, passed by the 81st Congress, was vetoed by President Truman.

The President made clear in his veto message that there was no doubt of the commission's power to regulate sales of natural gas to interstate pipeline companies which the Kerr bill sought to prevent it from doing.

"The continuance of that authority," the President said, "will adequately protect the public interest by permitting the commission to prevent unreasonable and excessive prices which would give large windfall profits to gas producers at the expense of the consumers."

By their decision, four commissioners—supposed to enforce "that authority"—have completely nullified the President's words.

Phillips sells gas in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico to five interstate pipeline companies for ultimate public consumption in California, Arizona, New Mexico, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, Minnesota, Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan.

On Dec. 31, 1949, the company owned or controlled by contract 15.22 trillion cubic feet of proved gas reserves and 1.25 billion barrels of reserves of crude oil, gasoline and other natural gas liquids located within the United States.

Buchanan pointed out that Phillips' sales are not, and never have been, subject to regulation by the states.

The Natural Gas Act, which the FPC has just ruled does not apply to Phillips, was actually passed—in the words of the Committee which drafted it—"to fill the gap in regulation that now exists by reason of lack of authority of the state commisions."

Despite this clear intent of the law, the FPC announced in August, 1947, that it would construe the act as exempting the "production and gathering" of natural gas. This order was rescinded in 1950 after the President had vetoed the Kerr bill.

Several Supreme Court decisions have reversed earlier interpretations by the FPC that it lacked the power to regulate interstate sales of natural gas.

Staff Disagreed

In one of these decisions, in 1946, the Supreme Court declared bluntly that "the primary aim of this legislation was to protect consumers against exploitation at the hands of the natural gas companies."

The evidence in the Phillips case, Commissioner Buchanan said, "shows that the majority opinion would permit the very exploitation which the Natural Gas Act was designed to prevent."

He made it clear that his colleagues had taken a position entirely different from experts on the FPC staff, who had argued that the commission did have jurisdiction over the Phillips Co.

Many FPC Aides Quit In Disgust

The decision of the Federal Power Commission in the Phillips case does not come as a complete surprise to Washington observers.

The disintegration of the Federal Power Commission, once a strong and effective agency, has been made known by the resignation in disgust of many of its able lawyers and technical experts.

It is entirely in keeping with the trend of recent FPC decisions. For example, the commission this year reduced its requirement that pipeline companies proposing to bring natural gas into a city must have gas reserves for a 20-year supply. This was cut to a 14-year supply, thus opening the doors to the monopolies a little wider.

CIO Aide Hits Cut In Cuba Sugar Quota

The United States' cut in Cuba's sugar quota was described as "not necessary under present conditions" by Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Committee on Latin American Affairs, at a protest meeting of Cuban sugar workers in Havana on Aug. 21.

The CIO representative spoke on the invitation of the powerful Confederation of Cuban Sugar Workers.

Rumely Plots Knifing Fair Tax Measure

THE COMMITTEE for Constitutional Government, which claims to be in the publishing business, has been promoting an organized conspiracy among reactionaries to knife the House version of the new income tax bill.

The charge was made by Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.), a member of the House Ways and Means Committee. Tax legislation originates in this committee. Eberharter was the first and principal proponent of a flat percentage increase in the income tax to help pay for the cost of re-arming.

Such an increase, he demonstrated, divided the cost fairly, with those of large incomes paying more than people of small or medium incomes, but at the same percentage rate. The House agreed that his stand was fair, and adopted a law boosting the rates 12½% all along the line.

EBERHARTER based his charge against the CCG on a telegram he said was sent to many Pennsylvania businessmen, one of whom forwarded it to him. The wire read:

"Will you help save surplus capital of your business, yourself and entire nation from British-type Socialism threatened by crushing 12½% income tax increase? Already passed by House. Senate action early September.

"Minority factions pushing this measure would cripple profit incentives and middle class individual incomes, foundation of private enterprise. Unless people speak up disastrous provisions may pass.

"Committee for Constitutional Government mobilizing mass protest to Congress. Over 14 years it has used this method successfully against many Socialist schemes. With immediate support can awaken country.

"Quick $200,000 needed. Industrialists and others elsewhere helping.

"You are asked to send $50 to $1000 for block subscriptions to weekly publication, "Spotlight for the Nation" at $10 each. Will go to list you submit or Committee's list screened thought-molders. This medium, press radio, direct mail will be used to inform nation.

THE WIRE was signed by Willard F. Rockwell, Charles R. Hook, E. L. Wiegand, Paul Hardy and Kenneth Seaver. Hook is a former president of the National Association of Manufacturers. Seaver is identified on the CCG letterhead as a member of its Pittsburgh Committee.

Eberharter recalled that Dr. Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the CCG, is at liberty in bail on appeal from his conviction of contempt of Congress. He was given a suspended sentence of six months and fined $1000 for refusing last year to give the House Lobby Investigating Committee, headed by the late Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), the names of bulk purchaser of the CCG's propaganda publications.

Rumely was convicted shortly after World War I on a charge of violating the Trading-With the Enemy Act by accepting German money to buy the old New York Mail, reportedly for use as a German propaganda organ. He was later pardoned by President Coolidge.

"It is my conviction," Eberharter said, "that everyone should share in the additional burden for defense in the same proportion that the existing individual income tax burdens are levied.

"IN ANY event, persons in the higher income tax brackets whose investment and capital gains enable them to escape the crushing load of inflation should not pay any less share of the increased tax burden during the emergency period than the low income groups who already are hard-pressed by higher prices and higher taxes. . .

Homer Dodge, the CCG's Washington agent, called a press conference a few days later so the public could hear Rumely's reply. Six reporters showed up.

Rumely held the conference despite a telephone call from his attorney advising against it, in view of his pending appeal.

"I can't let Eberharter crucify me!" he cried.

He released a copy of a telegram to the Pennsylvania Congressman admitting the CCG has been carrying on the campaign to exact the cost of rearmament from those least able to pay it.

His wire quoted at length from the CCG Spotlight For the Nation, a weekly publication. It contains the usual CCG drivel about Socialism and what he apparently thinks is the sad, sad state of the wealthy tories who keep him in funds.

THIS PHOTO of Attorney Thomas W. Johnson, Macon Ga., was taken shortly after he was beaten up in the office of Sheriff Carlus Gay of Lauren County, Ga. He blames the Sheriff.

Aftermath Of Hearing

Georgia 'Peonage' Witness Accuses Sheriff of Attack

A LAWYER who testified three weeks ago before a Senate Committee charged last week that he was severely beaten by a sheriff who accused him of "telling lies" in Washington.

The injured man is Thomas W. Johnson, Macon, Ga., who suffered possible fractures of a hand and several ribs, a sprained jaw and a cut ear. His alleged assailant is Sheriff Carlus Gay of Lauren County, Ga.

Johnson had told the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations about a Lauren County employer who held a Negro in virtually a state of peonage.

Sheriff Gay had also appeared before the Senate group to answer charges that he had broken up a CIO meeting in Dublin, Ga., last February, and had thrown two organizers into jail because "I thought they were holding a Communist meeting."

Johnson is not a CIO attorney but he does handle a lot of so-called peonage cases. In his testimony, he related the case of a Lauren County Negro, who, he said, was arrested on a trumped-up charge and whose four children were held by his former employer for an alleged debt he owed.

Last week, the blood spattered attorney accused Sheriff Gay of "beating me because of my testimony in Washington."

Johnson told how he had gone to Gay's office in Dublin on some legal matters.

"I went to the sheriff's office and met a deputy there by the name of Tom Coker," said Johnson. "I introduced myself and told him what I wanted. He was undertaking to find it for me when Sheriff Gay came in."

Johnson said he asked Gay about the warrants. The sheriff sat for a moment or two without saying anything. Then, according to the attorney, he cursed him and said:

"You go up to Washington and tell lies about me." After further profanity, Gay ordered Johnson out of the office.

"As I was getting up to leave," the attorney said, "he hit me on the side of the head and knocked my glasses across the room. Then he hit me several more times on the head."

Johnson related a blow-by-blow description of the one-sided battle. "I did not at any time strike him or attempt to strike him," he contended.

(Ed. Note: Johnson is five feet, six inches tall and weighs about 140 pounds. Gay is over 6 feet and weighs about 250 pounds.)

Johnson said he then stooped over to pick up his glasses when he "thought Sheriff Gay's anger was spent."

Johnson said Gay kicked him in the stomach, knocked him down again, and then beat him while he was lying on the floor.

The attorney said he planned to make an immediate report to the Senate subcommittee "and see if they want to take any action."

"People in Lauren County are just scared to death. That goes for both white and colored," he said.

IN WASHINGTON, it was understood the Senate group sent two investigators to Dublin to learn the facts. The subcommittee was not expected to recommend any action until a thorough investigation of Johnson's charges is made.

Subcommittee members were said to be concerned that the attack by Gay may have been an attempt to "intimidate" its witnesses.

"This committee will not tolerate intimidation of its witnesses," a spokesman for Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), the sub-committee chairman, declared. "However, we do not wish to prejudge the facts in this case."

If Johnson's charge is substantiated, the subcommittee could recommend a citation for contempt of Congress against Gay or recommend action by the Justice Dept.

Stark Quits Labor Reporting To Write N.Y. Times Editorials

LOUIS STARK of the New York Times—dean of labor reporters on the American daily press—is leaving Washington to take an editorial position with his paper.

He will report to his new post in New York on October 1. During his final week in Washington, he was honored by colleagues on the capital's busy "labor beat"; by information and public relation men from labor, industry and government; and by leaders of the CIO.

Stark was hailed for his thorough understanding of American unionism; for a scrupulous sense of honesty and integrity; and, by no means least, for a steady stream of "exclusive" stories about labor, that frequently dismayed his competition.

An old friend of hundreds of union officials, Stark rounded out more than 30 years of reporting with a major scoop—the story of the AFL's decision to scuttle the United Labor Policy Committee.

Born in Hungary 63 years ago, Stark abandoned a teaching job in New York after a six-month try and started on his journalistic career. A member of the New York Times staff for more than 30 years, he started to specialize in labor news in 1923.

At a dinner tendered by his colleagues, Stark reminisced that he had a 10-year advantage over "newcomers" to labor reporting who entered the field with the growth of unionism in the early days of President Roosevelt's New Deal.

Stark was praised, in turn, by some of those "newcomers", for setting a pattern of honest, understanding reporting about labor —and for having helped scores of other reporters to understand the issues and the problems of organized labor.

He was also the guest of honor at a luncheon last week tendered by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the vice-presidents of the organization.

Murray and others present praised Stark's interpretation of labor activities through the years, and wished him well in his new position.

"McCarthyism" and its harmful effects on American college campuses were denounced last week by the U. S. National Student Association convention at Minneapolis, Minn.

Mississippi's Action Spotlights Oil Steal

OVER 800,000 acres of the richest oil deposits in the world were literally stolen from the American people last week.

But the "theft"—revealed when the State of Mississippi announced it had leased that acreage of tidelands to two oil companies—only served to spotlight an even greater amount of similar stealing that is going on.

The Supreme Court has made it clear on several occasions that the federal government — meaning the people of all 48 states — owns and controls the rich tidelands oil deposits and other natural resources under the waters off the shores of the 24 coastal states.

However, approximately half of the state governments involved have failed to recognize this fact. It has been a simple matter for the special interests involved to persuade state officials that they have nothing to lose by giving away (to the various special interests, of course) what the states don't own.

Oil deposits alone are estimated to be worth more than $40 billion. No accurate estimate has been made how many additional billions in natural wealth lurk there in the form of natural gas, kelp, minerals, sponges and other products.

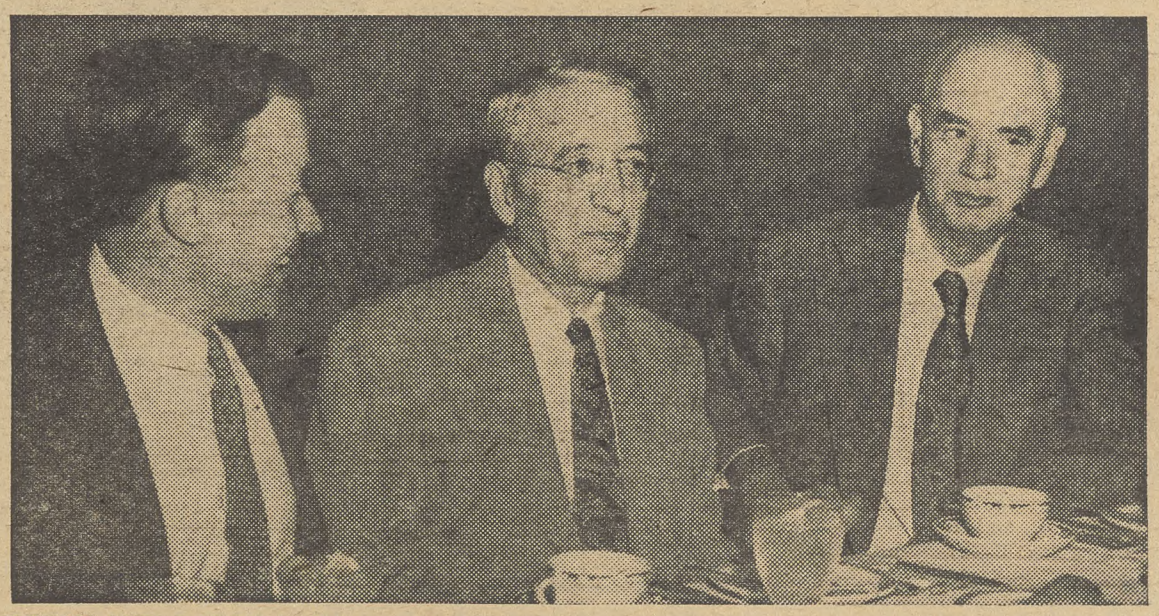
Oil and other lobbies have persuaded Congress to make several attempts to turn the title to this land over to the States, so that they could exploit it more easily than under Federal control. A bill doing this recently passed the House and is now before the Senate.

IF THE measure passes, and Congress over-rides President Truman's promised veto, constitutional lawyers point out it is probable that such a gift would be declared unconstitutional. They say that the offshore lands are involved in international law and, therefore, there is reason to doubt that Congress has the power to give them away.

Because California, Texas and Louisiana led in exploiting oil resources off their coasts, they have been sued separately by the federal government. The Supreme Court ruled against them and they are now prevented from further robbing all the people for their own limited benefit. Millions of dollars a year in royalties from the lands off these three states are now pouring into the federal treasury.

While the Supreme Court decisions clearly apply to all the other coastal states, they have not been sued. They cannot be prevented from managing their marginal tidelands—if they choose to ignore the law—until they are sued by the federal government, and a court enjoins them.

This is the loophole that Mississippi used in "leasing" to the Gulf Refining Co. and the Mebben Oil Co. of Pittsburgh the 800,000 acres of tidelands off its coast.



PRESS AND LABOR in Washington honored Louis Stark, veteran New York Times labor reporter, when he went off the beat last week to go to the home office as an editorial writer. He is shown (center) at a luncheon given in his honor by the CIO, with Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers (at left) and CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

French Shoe Workers' Pay Is Low, Thornton Finds

PRES. William Thornton of the CIO Shoe Workers doesn't think much of the way French shoe factory owners operate their plants.

He recently returned from visiting factories in a half-dozen French shoe producing centers.

"The workers work hard," he said, "and they produce good shoes, but they have old machinery and out-of-date techniques. Production—and wages—are much lower than in the United States."

One of the things holding down production, he said, is the manufacture of too many kinds of shoes in a single factory.

"Too many methods in one factory," he explained, "cause confusion. There isn't a good, uninterrupted flow of work through the plant."

Thornton found the prices of shoes high.

The average wage in the industry in France is 120 francs, or 35c an hour, he said. A French worker has to save up about 23 hours' pay to buy a pair of shoes at $8. An American shoeworker, making $1.45 an hour, could buy the same shoes in about 5½ hours, he explained.

What the French industry really needs, he claimed, is "real U. S.-style competition." Selling prices are based on the production costs of the smallest and least efficient factories, he said.

Thornton warned that any benefits management gets from the increased productivity of the employes should be shared with the work force.

He told members of the Force Ouvriere (FO) and the Confederation Francaise des Travailleurs Chretiens (CFTC)—the French free unions—that there is no substitute for militancy in building a union and making it strong.

Anti-Communism Not Enough For Building ICFTU—Tewson

SIR VINCENT TEWSON, new president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, doesn't think that a world-wide democratic labor movement can be established by anti-communism alone.

Also needed, he believes, is a constructive program designed to raise living standards and increase union membership, particularly in the undeveloped areas.

"The future of free trade unions," he said, "depends upon the concerted action of the unions associated together in the confederation. The confederation was not called into existence merely to combat communism or to resist the dictation of trade union policy by the Cominform.

"More important work of a constructive character has to be done by the ICFTU and its affiliated national centers than just to counteract the dangerous subversive activities of the World Federation of Trade Unions."

Tewson is general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress. He was long an official of the WFTU, and after World War II was one of the first to recognize it as nothing but a mouthpiece for Soviet propaganda.

He led the British unions out of the organization, and was one of the guiding spirits in setting up the ICFTU.

Carey Endorses Freedom Crusade

The campaign of the Crusade for Freedom for funds to finance anti-Communist propaganda beyond the Iron Curtain was endorsed last week by CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"In our opinion the voice of the American people, directed over the air through a voluntary program, will carry more conviction beyond the Iron Curtain than any other medium of communication," he said.

"The Crusade is appealing to the American people for 25 million members and a fund of $3.5 million to carry on this all-important work. This appeal represents just a few nickels from each of the contributors."

Franco Is Urged To Free Unions

The Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions last week again brought pressure to bear on Dictator Franco to re-establish freedom for labor unions in Spain.

The federation is composed of church-sponsored unions, with Catholic groups in the majority. It has made several previous protests to Franco about the plight of trade unionism and the workers in Spain.

"We are strongly convinced," said its message to the dictator, "that such a step would meet a favorable response in all countries, especially in trade union circles; therefore, it would greatly facilitate the integration of Spain into the community of free nations with all its obligations, it is true, but also with all the honor and all the advantages which this implies."

Book Review

Slavery Behind Iron Curtain Is Recounted Graphically

ANY American who thinks he'll get by if the Communists should take over this country owes it to himself to read The Soviet Slave Empire, by Albert Konrad Herling.

The author is research director for the Commission of Inquiry Into Forced Labor, and a consultant to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations.

He has interviewed hundreds of men and women who in some incredible fashion managed to survive the unbelievable brutalities of the Soviet slave labor system.

He has had access to what passes for law under Soviet rule, both in Russia and some of her satellites, and he shows photostats of top secret documents from the supposedly impenetrable files of the Russian secret police.

The stories of some of the people to whom he has talked, given verbatim, bring to life the stilted language of the Soviet legal code and the formal papers filched from the secret police.

But it is a life with death not far behind—a terrible and brutal sort of death, bitterly cruel in the time it takes to separate soul from body by starvation, freezing or overwork.

It is life without the scant dignity men are entitled to.

This book is the first full-scale expose of the slave labor system the Communists have imposed on the Russians and the people of the nations they cynically claim to have "liberated."

It shows how slavery is as firmly entrenched in Soviet law as the principle that a man is innocent until proven guilty is entrenched in American law.

It shows how as many as 20 million beings—and never less than eight million—have been slave laborers at the one time.

It shows how Russians and Latvians, Lithuanians and Poles, Rumanians and Bulgarians, Hungarians and even Czechs and Germans have been snatched from their families, clamped into cattle cars and sent thousands of miles into Siberia or some other far place.

THAT WAS their fate not so much because they were guilty of any crime, real or imaginary, but because their masters were insatiable.

The author relates what he thinks might happen to the average American—the average patriotic American—should the Communists ever get control of the United States. It's not a pretty thing to contemplate, even on the cold pages of a book.

Read in the light of what has happened in other countries, it's pretty horrible. But it's something every American should read and think about—especially those active in their unions.

For slave labor camps, it seems, have a special place for the active members and leaders of free trade unions. It's a place, the author makes clear, where they don't last long.

Carey Refuses To Help Pegler Off Limb

Last week CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey firmly declined to help him climb down.

In a column published last Aug. 8, Pegler's mudslinging was aimed at Carey, Bishop Francis J. Haas of Grand Rapids and Charles E. Wilson former president of General Electric and now Director of Defense Mobilization.

Carey

Pegler attacked President Truman's 1947 Committee on Civil Rights in that column and singled out Carey, one of the members, for particular attention.

Pegler said the committee operated on the quiet, and never gave a straight-forward statement of its origin, activities, methods, debates, and the political character of its personnel and the manner of their selection.

"And now, upon studious examination, the report proves to be a partisan, dishonest, propaganda book which flagrantly ignores the terrible violence by which unions wage their war of conquest against the people and the institution of government under law."

On Aug. 13, five days after the column appeared, Pegler wrote Carey asking for information on the composition of the committee, the number of meetings held, and the names of organizations which helped the group gather information.

Pegler

Carey told Pegler he had "neither the time nor the inclination to . . . help you out of an embarrassing situation."

The CIO official said that "quite frankly I am somewhat astonished that you should write such a letter admitting that your recent diatribes were written without any knowledge whatsoever on your part of the subject matter.

"It does not surprise me that you lack journalistic ethics. I am merely surprised that you admit it over your signature."

Kroll Reports On Europe:

Exchange Of Union Officials Aids Europe And America

MEMBERS OF CIO unions working in Europe "in any capacity whatsoever" are doing outstanding jobs, according to Jack Kroll, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Kroll has just returned to the United States after an eight-week trip that took him to Great Britain, France, Italy, Greece, Israel, Western Germany and Sweden.

His aim was to observe political techniques. He returned with many valuable pointers on vote-getting, he said—and a number of other observations.

The labor movement in the United States has contributed much to the stability and welfare of continental European unions since the end of the war, he found, with CIO people playing an outstanding role.

Unemployment High

"The continental labor movement is distressed by unemployment and by the fact that not enough of the Marshall Plan assistance has got to the average worker in recognizable form," Kroll said.

"Under the circumstances, they need the continued advice and assistance of the U. S. labor movement—and they want it and are grateful for it.

"The new productivity drive of the Economic Cooperation Administration, with its emphasis on a proper share for the workers of the benefits of higher production, has been received by the free labor movement with great enthusiasm.

"A similar reception by the employers would do a great deal to improve the standards of living and the general well-being of all the countries.

"The threat of communism is still great. Any worsening of the standard of living — of which there are indications—will heighten that danger."

Kroll stoutly maintained that international relations have become something more than negotiations between top-hated, stripe-pants diplomats. Some of the best diplomacy now being practiced, he claimed, lies in the interchange of union officials and members.

"Actually more mutual understanding and more mutual aid are achieved that way," he said, "than in following formal protocol. It's a two-way deal: they learn from us and we learn from them.

"Workers who come here from Europe or who go to European countries from here have to have a full and complete picture of the country they visit, or they go home with an incomplete understanding.

"Some European union leaders have thought our contracts were reached simply by sitting down and talking, without realizing that often they are the result of long, bitter struggle."

Kroll said he found the influence of the labor movement greatest in Sweden, Great Britain and Israel.

"There's something significant in this," he said, "for these are the countries with the greatest stability—with no unemployment and budgets balanced they are farthest along the road to recovery. It's an illustration of the concrete effect of the contribution the labor movement can make to any country."

The crying need of both the United States and Europe, he said, is "more labor men to make themselves familiar with the situations in the different countries."

"The American labor movement," he declared, "should be given the chance to be of even greater service in Europe."

Union Shop Bill Will Get Bi-Partisan Support In House

A BI-PARTISAN move in the House to go along with the Senate in amending the Taft-Hartley Act to legalize more than 4000 union shop contracts recently questioned by the National Labor Relations Board, was announced last week.

Bills, containing substantially the same provisions as the Taft-Humphrey measure which unanimously passed the Senate, have been introduced in the House by Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.) and Rep. McConnell (R. Pa.).

This means that in the House, as in the Senate, the amendment will have the backing of both liberal opponents of the Taft-Hartley Act, as well as supporters of the law.

McConnell is ranking Republican member of the House Labor Committee. Early passage by the House is expected.

The new bill would validate union shop elections and contracts dating from the 1947-49 period in which CIO national officers declined to sign Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits, pending a test of their constitutionality.

At the time, the NLRB had ruled that signing of the affidavits by officers of the parent federation was unnecessary. Recently, however, the Supreme Court held that a union was not fully in compliance with T.H unless the central body's officers also were in compliance.

The NLRB decisions in the Ford Canton case, which for a time threatened all CIO union shop agreements made during the 1947-49 period, was based on that decision. CIO attorneys criticized the ruling, however, as going far beyond the limits required by the court.

The new bill would also eliminate the need for holding any future elections to obtain the right to ask for union security in contracts.

Thousands of these elections have been held since Taft-Hartley was passed, at considerable expense to the government, and the unions have won all but a small handful by tremendous majorities.

In introducing his measure, Rabaut said that "This bill has been made necessary by the legal confusion resulting from self-reversing decisions by the National Labor Relations Board." The second NLRB decision held that the disputed elections were legal.

He added that experience has shown that union-shop elections have proven to be "mere formalities with the workers voting in favor of the union-shop in thousands of elections."

The practice is a needless drain on the limited resources of the NLRB, he pointed out.

Feinsinger New Head Of WSB

Nathan P. Feinsinger, one of the country's leading experts on labor-management problems, was sworn in last week as chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board. He has been a public member of the 18-man group. The Wisconsin Univ. professor succeeds George W. Taylor, the board's first chairman. Taylor, also an outstanding figure in the field, took the WSB post with the understanding that after the board had been organized he would return to his teaching post at the Univ. of Pennsylvania.

In another shift of WSB personnel, Tom Coman—a star reporter for the Bureau of National Affairs — was named as a public member to fill the vacancy created by Taylor's departure.

Coman has covered labor for the Associated Press and for the Daily Labor Reporter.

Knight Asks Unions To Aid Steel Scrap Drive

THE 16 MILLION members of organized labor have a "vital contribution" to make in the Iron and Steel Scrap Salvage Program, O. A. Knight, Deputy Administrator of the National Production Authority, has informed unions throughout the nation.

Knight, who is president of the CIO Oil Workers, last week addressed a letter to union presidents asking them to bring the urgent need for iron and steel scrap to the attention of the entire membership of the 70,000 local unions throughout the country.

"The support of the program by organized labor would be of the greatest value," Knight pointed out.

Knight said that the consumption of iron and steel scrap by mills and foundries in connection with the defense program has exceeded expectations, and unless new supplies are found immediately vital defense production may have to be curtailed.

He warned that the nation "cannot afford" any loss in production because of a lack of scrap.

NPA is conducting a special program to discover and recover the unused quantities of iron and steel scrap.

Knight said that the railroad, steel and petroleum industries have set up industry salvage committees, and that in-plant salvage committees have also been established in a number of firms. Scrap mobilization committees have also been organized in industrial communities.

"It is in this connection that the cooperation of local union members can be so helpful," Knight wrote.

"The cooperation of the local union members with any request for their individual assistance from community scrap mobilization committees and from in-plant salvage committees in the firms where they are employed is of the greatest importance."

Miss Lenroot Given FSA's Highest Honor

Katherine F. Lenroot, retiring chief of the Children's Bureau of the Federal Security Agency, last week received the agency's highest honor, the distinguished service award.

Miss Lenroot was chief for 17 of the 36 years she served in the bureau. From 1948 to her retirement she administered the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. In 1945 she was adviser to U. S. delegates at the International Labor Conference.

Action Asked Of Truman On Joblessness

THE Philadelphia CIO Council last week complained to President Truman that the promise of defense and manpower officials to take steps to end unemployment in that city and the surrounding area have not been kept.

Fifteen thousand of a total of 80,000 CIO members in the City of Brotherly Love are without jobs, Council Pres. Henry Shipherd wrote President Truman. Unemployment is growing in radio and television, the textile, auto and men's clothing industries.

The letter requested that Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson's office call a conference of government, industry and labor leaders of the affected industries in the Philadelphia area.

"Our people are confused, discouraged, and angry because of the continued stories which they read about defense contracts, shortage of labor, and full employment," Shipherd wrote.

"They are faced with the steadily rising cost of living which, coupled with their lack of jobs, makes them feel that nobody in Washington is thinking or planning for their future and the future of their country.

"When we were in Washington we were told by your top defense and mobilization officials that they would arrange for a meeting in Philadelphia of the leaders of business, industry and labor who are most affected by this unemployment, and that they would personally come to this meeting and help us work out a solution to our problems.

"That was nearly three months ago, and in spite of repeated follow-ups on our part no one in Washington seems to care about what happens in Philadelphia."

Taft Law Firm's Strategy & Strings Fail To Lick TWUA

By GERVASE N. LOVE

OLD-TIMERS in the CIO Textile Workers in Indiana are doing a lot of wondering these days. They can't believe that what they've just gone through actually happened, even though it's all there in the records, down in black and white.

Seems the TWUA started to organize the Sperry Rubber & Plastics Co. in Brookville, Ind., a few miles from Cincinnati, O., early this year. The company didn't like the idea.

At any rate, it consulted its lawyers. It buys its legal advice from the firm of Taft, Stettinus & Hollister, of Cincinnati. In it are members of the family of a certain Republican U. S. Senator who sired a bill in Congress designed to let employers squeeze out of situations like this. The name is Taft.

They found that a lot of bosses got rid of unions by demanding elections before organizing campaigns had gone far enough to produce results. So on June 5, they filed on behalf of the company a petition with the National Labor Relations Board asking for an election.

They must have greased the petition with jet plane fuel. At any rate the NLRB broke all records for Franklin County, Ind., by calling a conference of the parties on June 26—just 16 days later.

Then somebody—it couldn't have been Sen. Taft, of course—must have touched a match to the jet fuel. Zip-pp—just like that—and an election was held on July 13, just 38 days after the petition was filed.

That broke all records not only for Franklin County, but, so far as is known, for the universe.

The technique sort of slapped back in the faces of Messrs. Sperry, Taft, Stettinus & Hollister. The TWUA won the election.

"The union can't help wondering," observed Ralph Cline, TWUA regional director, "if there is any connection between the fact that a majority voted for TWUA and the fact that it took 32 days for the NLRB to issue a certification after an election held 38 days from the date of filing."

One of the things that makes the union wonder is the status of its petition for an election at the Bemis Bros. Bag Co. plant in Indianapolis, Ind. The TWUA represents the employes of most other plants of this nationwide company.

AFTER an organizing campaign in Indianapolis, it filed a petition for an election on Apr. 7, practically two months before the company filed the Sperry petition.

The first conference was held July 26. This was 110 days after the petition filed. The company wouldn't consent to an election. Now, more than a month later, the NLRB hasn't even set a date for a formal hearing.

Rubber Wins 13c At Goodyear

The CIO Rubber Workers have signed a new contract with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., providing a 13c an hour wage increase for 30,000 workers in 10 plants of the company.

The agreement provides for the same pay boost negotiated by the union with the other members of the Big Four in the rubber industry—Goodrich, U. S. Rubber and Firestone. Eight cents of the raise must be approved by the Wage Stabilization Board.

About 16,000 Akron, O., Goodyear workers are covered, plus others in plants in St. Mary's, O.; Topeka, Kan.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Windsor, Vt.; Jackson, Mich.; Gadsden, Ala.; Lincoln, Neb.; New Bedford, Mass., and Muncie, Ind.

West German Papers May Get U. S. Aid

West German newspapers may get financial assistance from a special Marshall Plan fund, the U. S. High Commissioner announced. The fund, set up to "promote the independence of democratic newspapers" in the western zone, was built from German marks received from the sale of Marshall Plan goods.

New Court Action Asked In Cicero

Contempt proceedings against Cicero, Ill., officials for allegedly "failing and refusing" to protect the family of Harvey E. Clark, Jr., Chicago Negro, when they moved into a Cicero apartment last July 10, have been started.

Charging the officials "aided or abetted a mob" to destroy all furniture and personal belongings of the Clark family, attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have filed a petition with Federal Judge William J. Campbell, Chicago.

A court order last June enjoined the police chief and other Cicero officials from depriving the Clark family of their rights as citizens. Police allegedly interfered June 8 when the family first tried to move into the apartment.

Off, On; Then Off, On Again Off Again, Finally On Again

On the previous voyage the wiper had considerable trouble with the chief engineer. When the vessel docked in Philadelphia, the case was called to the attention of the Coast Guard and the offending chief was removed, according to the Pilot, official NMU organ.

Then the captain fired the wiper. The NMU port patrolman went to work and had him reinstated the next day. The day after that, the skipper fired the man again. And the day after THAT, the port patrolman won his reinstatement.

Hard as it is to believe, the wiper was fired for the third time on the next day. The patrolman went into his routine again and once more had him reinstated a day later.

He also rather pointedly reminded the captain that his ship might be held up in port. That worked, and the Westchester, which is operated by the Three Oceans Steamship Co., finally sailed with the wiper on the job.

"We are happy here," wrote Acting Agent John Kadash to the Pilot, "that the ship did not spend a week longer in port. We are certain that if it had, the wiper would have been fired three times more!"

More Taxes Likely On Low Incomes

AFTER giving favored treatment to individuals with big incomes and paring sharply the corporation taxes proposed by the House, the Senate Finance Committee last week began frantically to try to make up for these cuts in tax revenue.

Its first move was an open effort to shift more of the burden upon the lower and middle income segments of the population.

It also voted to bring mutual savings, and building and loan associations under the corporation tax provisions for the first time, and to tax hundreds of cooperatives which also have been exempt.

He said that it would impose "discriminatory" taxes on cooperatives and treat as business profits the savings which members achieve through "group action."

Brannan said that the committee's action, as it affected farm cooperatives, would reverse a 30-year government policy of "encouraging business cooperation among farmers."

He added that the decision was a victory for the National Tax Equality Association, which has long pressed Congress to tax co-ops.

An estimated 6000 building and loan associations and more than 600 mutual savings banks would be affected, as well as about half of the farm and consumer cooperatives.

Committee staff experts estimated that the total of taxes that co-ops would have to pay would amount to between $15 and $20 million. They set the tax yield from mutual savings banks at about $63 million and that from building and loan associations at about $65 million.

The total raised by imposing this additional tax burden upon the more moderate income families which make up the bulk of the membership of the three kinds of organizations affected might amount to as much as $145 million.

Why Sen. Frear Was Absent

Sen. Frear (D. Del.), who was listed by The CIO News on July 23 as one of 10 members of the Senate Finance Committee who did not appear when CIO tax testimony was presented, definitely must be excused, it was learned last week.

Lacey G. Wilson, the Senator's legislative assistant, said that conflicting duties as a member of the Senate Banking Committee, which was meeting at the same time, prevented Frear's appearance.

He added that Frear had personally instructed him to attend the hearing as an observer, to obtain copies of the CIO statement submitted, and to report any remarks or questions by the Senators during or following the presentation. This he did.

No word of protest has been received from any of the nine other Senators reported absent.

Foe Of Drive To Organize Cops Quits

NEW YORK City's Corporation Counsel John P. McGrath—outspoken opponent of the city's policemens' efforts to join the CIO Transport Workers—resigned last week.

Announcement of the resignation by Mayor Vincent Impellitteri followed TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill's demand is that McGrath quit because he is a director of a large New York banking institution.

Quill pointed out that the City Charter forbids city department heads to engage in "any other occupation, profession or employment."

Despite some fancy footwork by McGrath and the Mayor, designed to convey the impression that the former had considered resigning his $25,000-a-year post for some time previous, the move was looked upon as a victory for Quill in his efforts to organize the city's 19,000 policemen.

McGrath, whose resignation will be effective Sept. 15, said he had never intended to stay on his job for four years anyway and that "with four growing daughters to provide for," he felt he should not prolong his stay.

Earlier this month, on the same day TWU issued a charter to a policemen's local, Police Commissioner George P. Monaghan issued an order prohibiting police officers from joining labor unions.

The men were ordered to withdraw applications for membership in any union "now in existence or hereafter to be formed." Violators of the order were threatened with disciplinary action.

McGrath subsequently argued in court against an attempt by TWU to restrain Monaghan from disciplining policemen who joined the union.

After the Mayor announced McGrath's resignation, Quill issued a statement congratulating him "on his great public service in so promptly purging your administration of this agent of banks and big real estate interests."

"Now that he has gone, we can hope for the restoration of the excellent labor relations policies of the O'Dwyer Administration which Mayor Impellitteri himself helped to create back in 1947," Quill declared.

NMU, ARA Ask 'Inequity' Raise

Two CIO unions—the National Maritime Union and the American Radio Association, last week asked the Wage Stabilization Board to use its "inequity regulation" to approve wage increases over the board's 10% wage formula.

Spokesmen for the unions, with members on the East, West and Gulf Coasts, said the regulations applied because wages in the maritime industry have lagged behind those in other industries.

With the CIO Marine Engineers, they negotiated a contract last December with the major shipping companies for an 8% wage boost which, on top of a 6% increase in December 1950, would yield a 15% raise since January 1950.

The board has attempted to keep increases since that date at 10% except in unusual circumstances such as inequities.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE WRITER'S assistant, Brother R. J. Thomas, is now in Schenectady, N. Y., assisting the IUE-CIO in its campaign in the General Electric plant there. I wish the IUE every success in this campaign, and I want everyone to render every possible support to bring the workers of GE an improvement in their working conditions and a higher standard of living. I am calling upon all our regional directors, field representative, councils and CIO members everywhere now, more than ever, to get out and build our great CIO by bringing into the "fold" more and more new members. The CIO was born out of a great need and necessity. It has and is meeting the needs of the American workers.

Allan Haywood

There are those people who would like to destroy the CIO. The recent action of certain people in breaking up labor's unity has put us back. Despite the forces working against the CIO, we must continue on and build an even greater organization, an organization that will continue toward its goal of human betterment.

Sub-Reg. Dir. John Strobel reports that the CIO won two representation elections in Rochester, N. Y. At Carhart Service, Inc., the vote was 9 CIO, 4 against; At Camera Art Co., Inc., the vote was 79 CIO, 6 against.

Director William F. Donovan of Dist. 28, CIO Steelworkers, announces two more union shop elections in Akron, O., which have been won recently as follows: Adamson United Co., eligible 161, for 100, against 11; Enterprise Manufacturing Co., eligible 455, for 242, against 46. Rep. Oliver Lee was in charge of the campaigns.

Reg. Dir. John Easton reports that the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers have been recognized by the Dummy Manufacturing Co., Midkiff, W. Va., without an election. Intl. Rep. Lou Koletka handled the organizing.

REG. DIR. Michael Mann reports that in a representation election at the Sterling Bolt Co., Chicago, Ill., the workers voted in favor of the Steelworkers by a count of 89 to 9 for IAM, 14 no union, with 128 eligible.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports a union shop election at the Gates Rubber Mfg. Co., Denver, Colo., with CIO Rubber Workers Local 154, 2788 votes for the union shop and 102 against.

Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a clean sweep victory in a representation election at the Douglas Aircraft Co., Tulsa, Okla. The results were as follows: Maintenance and Production Unit UAW 415, IAM-AFL 271, no union 61; Power Unit Operating Engineers UAW 15, AFL 1; Electrical Unit, UAW 19, IBEW 8, IAM 3. Intl. Rep. H. A. Moon was in charge of the campaign.

A. F. Hartung, vice president of the CIO Woodworkers, reports the following representation election victories: American Excelsior Corp., Donaldson, Ark., eligible 41, IWA 32, no union 7; Hill-Clarke-Francis, Ltd., New Liskeard, Ont., eligible 160, IWA 77, no union 61; Canadian Wirebound Boxes, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., eligible 320, IWA 170, AFL 124, spoiled 4. Dir. H. Landon Ladd and Organizers Charles Morton and J. M. Bedard worked on this latter plant, which had been under contract with the AFL for six years.

The Ontario Labour Relations Board granted certification to the IWA-CIO on behalf of the employes of the John C. Mundel Co., Elora, Ont., and Hespeler-St. Mary's Wood Specialties, Ltd. Hespeler, Ont. Organizer Jack Horan was in charge of organization in both plants. The results of two union authorization elections are as follows: Western Wood Products, Lebanon, Ore., eligible 20, for 16, against 4; McCallie Brother Logging, Sweet Home, Ore., for 27, against 4.

Martin Wagner, president of the Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, reports winning overwhelming victories in three units of Warner-Hudnut, Inc., New York, N. Y. Employes in the largest unit voted 613 for Gas, Coke, to 12 for no union. The UGCCW won the smaller units by votes of 6-0 and 7-0. Jack Curran, director, Dist. 3, was in charge of the campaign. The union has also been certified as bargaining agent for the Canadian Canners, Ltd., Strathroy, Ont., and Parke, Davis & Co., Ltd., Walkersville, Ont.

REG. DIR. James Leary reports that Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers won a run-off representation election at the Carthage Marble Works, Carthage, Mo., by a vote of eligible 254, UGCCW 121, AFL 96, Intl. Rep. Ira Williams was in charge of the organizational work.

Reg. Dir. Ed McCrone reports that the CIO Paperworkers won a representation election at the Hemingway Corp., Waterbury, Conn., by a vote of eligible 162, UPA 101, no union 44, void 2.

Martin Grayson, Secretary-treasurer of the CIO Lithographers, reports that in a representation election at the Gregory Co., Buffalo, N. Y., the vote was unanimous in favor of the Lithographers.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports a victory for the Steelworkers at the Sporall Manufacturing Co. Inglewood, Calif. The ballot count showed 31 votes for the USA and 6 against.

Charles J. Smith, district director, reports another win for the Steelworkers in California. In a representation election at the Quality Foundry, Los Angeles, the USA was victorious by more than a 2 to 1 margin.

Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten reports a smashing victory for LIU 1747 in Portland, Org. Winning by a 14 to 1 margin in a union shop election at the Astoria Canneries, the final vote showed 846 in favor of union security, 59 against and 9 challenged.

Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports two CIO victories, one in Orgeon and the other in Seattle, Wash. The win in Oregon was in Astoria, where the CIO defeated the ILWU in a representation election. The results showed 789 votes for the CIO, 291 for the ILWU, 2 for no union, 4 void and 74 challenged out of 1648 eligible.

In another representation election, at the Keller Packing Company, in Washington, LIU Local No. 1765 won a unanimous decision with all 36 eligible voters casting their ballots for the CIO.

Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports a representation victory for the CIO Packinghouse Workers at the Breakstone Cheese Co., Syracuse, N. Y. The ballot count showed a 36 to 8 victory over the AFL. The campaign was conducted by George Bouchard of the UPW.

The CIO Communications Workers report a representation win at the New Jersey Telephone Co. an independent company in northern New Jersey. The vote showed 64 ballots for CWA and 51 for no union. The election was only for the traffic department employes.

Reg. Dir. W. B. Taylor reports a victory for the Rubber Workers at the Synthetic Rubber Co. in Louisville, Ky. In a representation election, the Rubber Workers polled 101, an independent union 56 and the AFL, the petitioners, only one vote. Andrew Thorpe, URW field representative, was in charge.

Hearing Aid Called 'Invisible' Isn't

The hearing aid that Telex, Inc., of Minneapolis, advertised as not visible when worn actually is.

So the Federal Trade Commission announced last week that the firm had agreed to discontinue advertising in such terms as "hear secretly," "hidden hearing," and "invisible hearing."

It also agreed not to advertise that the gold or silver in its hearing devices is greater than it actually is.

IUE Wins 7c More At Philco

The 12,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers at the Philco plant in Philadelphia will receive a 7c an hour increase as the result of an arbitration award.

The new increase, retroactive to June 18, added to the 2c won in April, gives Philco workers the same 9c package won from General Electric last March.

The arbitrator was William Simkin. Both IUE and Philco agreed to accept his decision.

Press Agents Pledge Health Insurance Aid

The National Assembly for the Advancement of Public Relations pledged an all-out campaign "to educate public opinion and mobilize public support for national health insurance," at at a meeting in Washington.

The Assembly said the American Medical Association was guilty of "deliberate falsification" when it describes President Truman's health insurance proposals as "socialistic."

CIO Members On Regional Wage Boards

NAMES of the CIO members of the 14 regional boards of the Wage Stabilization Board were made public last week. Alternate members will be named later. The CIO members:

Boston—Felix Damore, Textile Workers Union of America, Worcester, Mass., and Martin J. Walsh, United Steelworkers of America, Boston.

New York — Benjamin Weiss Clothing Workers, and Patrick McGrath, Utility Workers, both of New York.

Richmond — Harold Marthenke, TWUA, Atlanta, Ga., and David Neish, IUE, Richmond.

Detroit—Earl Reynolds, UAW, and William J. Fagan, USA, both of Detroit.

Minneapolis — Glen Chinander, United Packinghouse Workers, St. Paul, and Robert I. Wishart, IUE, Minneapolis.

UOPWA Defeat Seen At Boston

The CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee has its sights set on Boston, Mass., where an election is scheduled this month at the Boston Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Boston Mutual is the last stronghold of the United Office and Professional Workers, expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination.

IAWOC spokesmen predict an overwhelming defeat for UOPWA which will appear on the ballot under the name of the Distributive, Processing and Office Workers. The expected defeat will practically wipe the DPO out of the insurance field, formerly its major territory, they say.

IAWOC recently negotiated a contract with the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. covering 6100 insurance agents in 24 states and the District of Columbia. DPO was defeated in a National Labor Relations Board election last May.

Truman Spurned

Congress Deaf To Better Controls Plea

DESPITE new signs that another inflationary spiral has already begun under the weakened Defense Production Act, Congress seems bored by the President's plea for repeal of three of the worst "booby trap" provisions in the new law.

Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.), author of one of the sections bitterly attacked by the President, and other members of his party launched a political attack as their answer to Truman's request.

Chairman Maybank (D. S. C.) of the Senate Banking Committee said flatly that Congress will not repeal the ban on livestock slaughter quotas — one of the President's main requests.

Maybank, who had sponsored an amendment to repeal the ban, referred to the issue as "just a row between the big and little packers." The lower House was away on vacation.

In reversing his earlier stand, Maybank did not point out—as he had done before—that the ban was leading to a rapid growth in black market operations.

Nor did he mention that the little packers involved in "just a row" have reported that they are being forced out of business because of their inability to obtain cattle in competition with the big operators.

The facts in the case, however, were brought to the attention of the public by statements from two widely different sources:

1. FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover warned that cattle rustling was rampant and probably would pick up as the result of the new controls law.

He said that his agents had rounded up 27 rustlers and recovered $13,000 worth of cattle, despite the fact that the FBI could operate only in cases crossing state lines. This was but a portion of the thieving detected.

2. The American Meat Institute in Chicago said that, for the 12th straight week, the nation's "normal beef business registered severe dislocation."

The AMI said that 95 leading beef producing plants were able to buy only 68% of the cattle they did in the same week last year, despite this year's record production.

Hoover said that it was likely that the black market would increase cattle rustling.

Meanwhile, the Office of Price Stabilization, helpless to hold the line on the cost of beef under the new act, last week told the meat industry that it could increase wholesale price ceilings to absorb higher freight charges which went into effect Aug. 28.

OPS officials predicted that they would have to raise retail prices 1 or 2c a pound within the next few weeks.

While beef was the first major commodity to increase in price because of the new freight charges, similar increases are expected to come soon right down the line on all other products sold in interstate commerce.

Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston last week warned consumers that they must prepare for a new inflationary spiral this winter, which will push the cost-of-living above the extra $350 paid so far this year by the average family.

Forecasts of a coming shortage of consumer goods which will contribute to inflationary pressures in the months ahead were underscored by a report of the Federal Reserve Board last week. The board said industrial production in the U. S. during July had slumped to the lowest point since last September.

The OPS also reported last week that its enforcement agents had discovered many violations by retail stores, restaurants and other eating places of its regulations requiring the filing of statements of base period prices.

Prices Reach All-Time High Second Time In 3 Months

THE CONSUMER PRICE INDEX of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics hit an all-time high on July 15 for the second time in three months.

It reached a peak of 185.5 of 1935-39 average prices of the articles and services which are purchased by workers. This was three-tenths of a point higher than on June 15, and one-tenth of a point higher than the previous top on May 15.

The increase meant a 1c an hour wage increase for approximately one million CIO Auto Workers. UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said they would be "far better off with a real roll back in prices." See how the prices climbed:

Democracy At Stake, PAC Rally Told

REV. VINCENT J. O'CONNELL, labor mediator and professor at Notre Dame Seminary, New Orleans, La., told a recent CIO Political Action Committee rally at Shreveport, La., that "Americans must fight to preserve their representative form of government against the onslaughts of dictatorial powers."

"The two things human beings will resist because they are human beings are dictatorship and economic suppression," he declared.

He drew on his experience as a student in Europe during the 1930's in stating that Europeans followed Hitler and Mussolini because they were dissatisfied with their economic status.

"The thing I fear most," he said, "is the mass, which is different from the people in that it can be controlled with little effort. People learn to think for themselves and to make their own decisions."

Americans must fight in Korea to "guard against a Communist set-up in this country," he declared.

Victor Bussie, vice president of the State AFL and chairman of the Shreveport United Labor Policy Committee, called for unity among labor factions on the local and state levels, stating that such organization "will be accomplished in the near future."

$7 Million Gets Firm $46 Million

INSTEAD of a three-way split, there may soon be a four-way "take" by the monopolies controlling the aluminum industry.

The Defense Production Administration last week announced that it would approve a special loan of $46 million to the Harvey Machine Co., Inc., of Los Angeles, to help it build two big aluminum plants in the states of Montana and Washington.

In theory, the government help is being rendered to break a monopoly and help step up aluminum production, which is far from adequate since only three big producers exist.

The present producers have succeeded in holding back productive capacity to make their monopoly secure and keep prices high. The government has long wanted a fourth firm in the field.

The firm allotted $46 million in government aid, however, is, as was to be expected, one of the biggest of big business.

Harvey's has several divisions, working in brass, steel and aluminum building parts and supplies.

Moreover, to get the loan Harvey will put up a mere $3½ million of its own, and sell another $3½ million worth of stock to some 1500 independent aluminum fabricators across the nation. In other words, $7 million in capital will get it $46 additional from the government.

ONE GOOD feature of the plan is that Harvey's stockholders would have first call on aluminum ingots produced by the new plants.

The DPA also announced last week that 109 additional firms had been granted special tax amortization concessions totalling nearly $137 million. These grants —again averaging more than $1 million each—were said to have been processed "just prior" to the 60-day freeze on the tax write-off program.

The biggest concession on the list went to Alleghany Ludlum Steel Corp., which was allowed to a 70% write-off on $15½ million.

Another last-minute action by DPA revised previous certificates permitting General Motors to write off 50% to 60% of more than $68½ million on a new plant at Flint. The revision was upward in GM's favor, of course. Now it can write off 75%.

The American taxpayers will foot the bill.

Union Singer To Give Another Radio Show

Joe Glazer—the union song man—will offer another program of worker and folk songs during the CIO broadcast over ABC network on Saturday night, Sept. 8. The program is heard at 6:45 P.M. Eastern Daylight Time.

It will be Glazer's third and final appearance on the CIO series. Glazer's guitar and informal singing have made the program highly popular throughout the country.

Controls Law Stymies Efforts To Hold Back New Price Spiral

IUE Is Set To Wallop UE Again

This was the second IUE victory in Lynn, the workers having chosen IUE over the UE in May, 1950, at Lynn plants.

Prospects are bright for an IUE victory at Schenectady. An IUE-sponsored Labor Day rally was attended by 15,000 persons; 19,000 workers will vote in the election.

Brewery Workers Win $102,600 In Back Pay

It was a long time coming, but 739 members of the Brewery Workers Local 9 have now collected from the Pabst Brewing Co. of Milwaukee the back pay they have been fighting for since October, 1949—$102,600 worth of it.

The dispute started when the company violated the seniority clause of the contract by cutting down the length of the work week. The victory was won in arbitration, and payment followed weeks of joint calculating by union and company.

Local 9 members were glad to get the money, but felt the fact that the company was forced to live up to the contract was more important. Story on Page 2.

Proposed T-H Change Boon For Unfair Boss

A proposed amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act which would permit union shop contracts in the building industry without the need of representation elections would play into the hands of unfair employers, the CIO warned last week.

The measure would prevent bosses who enter into "back-door" and "sweetheart" deals from being challenged by legitimate organizations representing the majority.

Testifying before the Senate Labor-Management Subcommittee, Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers said that the bill would do this by eliminating any requirement that the union be adequately representative of the workers involved. Story on Page 2.

CIO Fights Proposed Device To Aid 'Sweetheart' Pacts

THE CIO LAST week opposed a proposed amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act which would permit union shop contracts in the building and construction industry without the need of representation elections.

The measure also provided that non-union workers employed by a contractor with a union shop contract be required to join the union within seven days, instead of the 30 days required in other industries.

The CIO's opposition was registered before the Senate Labor-Management Relations Sub-committee by Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, and David Feller, assistant CIO general counsel. Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn) is the sub-committee chairman.

It was directed not so much against the principle of the measure as it was against the bill in its present form, McDonald made clear.

"In its present form," he said, "it will not accomplish fully the objectives which the testimony in support of the bill indicate are desired. On the other hand, it may have some results which are far beyond the intentions of those who support the bill, results which, I may add, we believe to be highly undesirable."

He explained:

"The effect of the bill as it is now would be to protect 'backdoor' and 'sweetheart' deals against challenges from employes and from organizations which legitimately desire to represent the employes.

"The bill accomplishes this by eliminating any requirement of any nature that the union which enters into such an arrangement with an employer be adequately representative of the men involved."

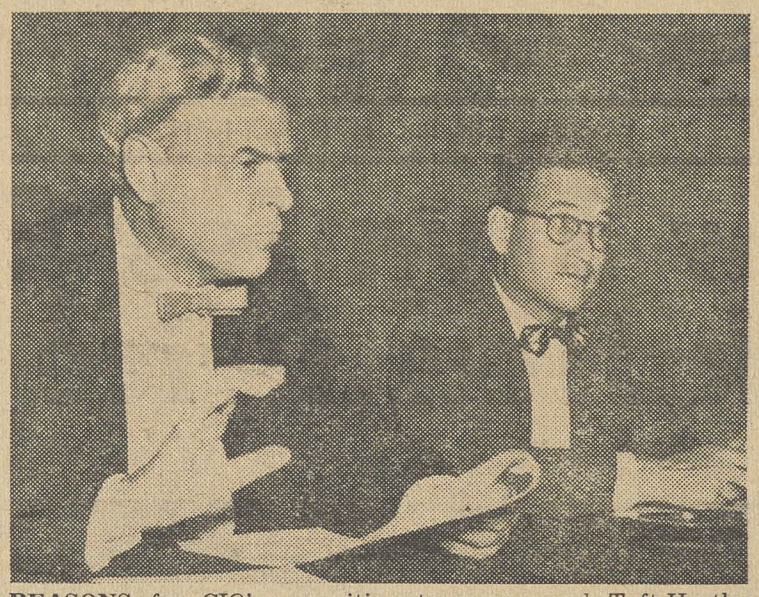
AS AN EXAMPLE of the abuse which can occur as a result of a total exemption from the requirement that the union actually represent the workers, McDonald cited the difficulties of the CIO Marine Engineers, currently striking against the Isthmian Steamship Co.

He told the subcommittee that the MEBA has been bargaining agent for the line's engineers for 15 years, "and there never has been any serious doubt that it is the union which the men desire to represent them." They are excluded from coverage by the Wagner Act because they are regarded as supervisors under T-H.

He recalled that the union, unable to win for Isthmian employes the same wage and working standards agreed to by other companies under MEBA contract, was forced to strike.

Among other devices "both legal and illegal," the company used to break the strike, he said, was the signing of a backdoor agreement with an affiliate of the AFL Seafarers Union, which does not represent the marine engineers employed by the firm, and "which has repeatedly lost elections conducted among the employes."

Problems of the maritime and construction industries are similar, McDonald maintained, with the workers holding successive short term jobs under a variety of particular employers.



REASONS for CIO's opposition to a proposed Taft-Hartley amendment are voiced to the Senate Labor-Management Subcommittee by Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers and David Feller, assistant CIO general counsel.

"The necessity for relief from the unworkable restrictions of the Taft-Hartley Act exists in the same measure in both industries," he said.

"In both cases, care must be taken that we do not, in removing the Taft-Hartley restrictions, also eliminate the salutary and wholesome standards of the Wagner Act."

MCDONALD, as a Steelworker, expressed concern because the bill now would permit contracts covering types of work which while technically building work, normally do not come under the jurisdiction of building trades unions, and with respect to which such unions have no membership.

"I am referring," he explained, "to construction work which often takes place in industrial plants and which may be and often is performed by the permanent employes of those plants."

Humphrey broke in to recall that AFL witnesses, when testifying, said they had no intention of the bill applying to maintenance and repair work.

"That testimony was given before dissolution of the United Labor Policy Committee," McDonald rejoined.

He explained that in some industrial plants, including steel, CIO unions represent both production and maintenance employes. In some instances the steel company itself does even major maintenance jobs, such as relining of blast furnaces, with its own employes.

In others it lets out the work to an outside contractor. But in such cases, McDonald said, the union tries—and usually succeeds—in getting the steel company to employ its own maintenance men on the project, paying them itself, though they work beside the contractor's employes who may be AFL members.

Under the proposed amendment, he went on, "it might be possible for the building trades unions to insist that an outside contractor refuse to accept a job unless all the work is to be performed by his employes."

The principle difficulty in getting the proposed amendment into workable form, he and Feller said, is one of determining the proper bargaining unit. They recommended that it be determined on a labor area basis.

"What is desired," said McDonald, "is that in industries where there is intermittent employment by a tremendous number of large and small contractors and in which there is a constant interchange of labor between the various employers, the determination of whether a particular union is the proper representative to enter into a collective bargaining relationship with respect to a particular project should depend not on the desires of the employes on the job—who are not yet hired—but on the desires of the employes in the area generally or in the area from which working men are to be recruited . . .

"ALL THAT may be required, is a direction to the National Labor Relations Board to consider, as the appropriate unit, the labor area in which the contract is to be performed or from which the employes are to be recruited.

"If such a directive were accompanied by a provision permitting hiring exclusively through the union or through a union hiring hall, I think the purposes of the parties would be adequately served, the door would not be open to possible abuses and an unfortunate precedent in dealing with problems in other industries where similar problems exist would not be created."

Feller pleaded with the subcommittee to proceed with caution, in view of the fact that whatever law is passed—if any—will be regarded as a precedent.

Job Applicants Few; Firm Offers Pie

The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co. for some time has been advertising in the newspapers for file clerks, typists and stenographers to work in its Los Angeles, Cal., office.

Apparently there has been no great rush of applicants—because the company is now offering cocoanut cream pies as an added inducement.

The ad states that "the best cocoanut cream pie in town is served at our lunchroom." In smaller type, is added: "Some of the best jobs are at Pacific Mutual too."

Brewery Union Wins $102,600 In Back Pay

BACK PAY totalling $102,600 has been won from the Pabst Brewery at Milwaukee, Wis., by 739 members of Local 9 of the CIO Brewery Workers.

The case arose in October, 1949, when Pabst cut its work week from five to four days. This was in violation of the seniority clause of its contract with the Brewery Workers which directed that low-seniority men must be laid off instead of cutting below 40 hours the work week of high seniority men.

Controversy over the choice of an arbitrator delayed the case until the middle of last year when Prof. Charles Gregory of the Univ. of Virginia was named.

He issued a preliminary report on July 6, 1950, upholding the union's position. His formal decision finding for the union came on Sept. 11, 1950.

Pabst accepted the decision and issued a back-pay formula of its own. This was unsatisfactory to the union and the case was once more placed before Gregory. He ruled in April of this year that computations must be made jointly by the union and the company.

Payment was finally made on Aug. 28.

Island Groups Exempt From WSB Wage Rules

The Wage Stabilization Board has exempted wages, salaries and other compensation of workers in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands from wage stabilization regulations.

Senate Meets For 8 Seconds, Sets New Mark For Inertia

The Senate Sept. 4 added another record to the 82nd Congress scoresheet for do-nothingness.

It met and recessed in eight seconds, the shortest short session in history.

The Constitution required the Senate to meet, but, in order to give the Senators an extra day after the Labor Day holiday, it was previously agreed that no business would be transacted.

Vice President Barkley called the Senate to order and immediately announced that it was in recess. Only a handful of members were present.

But, actually, the Senate adjourned before it met. The clock Barkley was looking at was running fast.

In the press gallery, where the clocks are checked by Western Union, the time was still several minutes before noon.

And the clock behind Barkley's desk, which he didn't notice in rapping the session to a close, said four minutes to 12 M.

Texas Loyalty Oath Ruled Partly Invalid

He declared Univ. of Texas employes do not have to swear they have not belonged to any Communist group in the last 10 years.

They must sign an oath saying they are not now members of the Communist Party or any Communist front group.

"And, by the way, Huntly, we've decided to take you off the Bourbon account and put you on the new mineral water campaign!"

Big Biz Scores Victory?

Johnston To Quit; Rift With Wilson Reported

ECONOMIC Stabilizer Eric Johnston has asked President Truman for permission to resign his job in the near future.

Unless the President makes so strong a plea for his continued service that he cannot turn it down, only the date of Johnston's departure remains to be decided.

There can be no doubt that Johnston's departure from the economic stabilization office will be a real blow to American consumers.

Although he is a former head of the Chamber of Commerce, Johnston has made an earnest effort to keep prices in check. He has strongly differed with the policies of the Chamber in his support of firm anti-inflation legislation.

When Johnston accepted the post of Economic Stabilizer, he was granted a leave of nine months from his regular job as head of the Motion Picture Producers Association. The fact that the period will be up Oct. 24 and no extension of his leave has been granted, led some reporters to set this date as the time of his departure.

JOHNSTON subsequently denied that any date, which he says must be at the President's rather than his own convenience, has been considered. He has not denied, however, that he plans to leave the government service as soon as possible.

The announcement of Johnston's plans has brought with it considerable speculation about the reasons. The most likely one seems to be his increasing difficulty in administering an effective price and wage control program under the supervision of the Office of Defense Mobilization, headed by Charles E. Wilson.

Although Johnston's aides deny that there is any personal rift between the two men, it is thought that Wilson's failure to delegate full powers to Johnston for the stabilization program may have been a factor in his decision.

Wilson appears to have been unwilling to delegate to a subordinate full stabilization powers, since they are now among the factors which condition his overall policy on defense mobilization.

Those who hold this viewpoint find confirmation of their belief in a report that, following Johnston's departure, Wilson plans to reorganize defense mobilization agencies to bring stabilization authority more completely within his own office.

SUCH a step, some believe, would represent another victory for big business. They point out that, unless prices are stabilized firmly and independently of materials controls, some smaller business operators could be frozen out without an actual denial of an allotment of material.

By simply permitting prices on such items to rise to a level where the big businesses could still buy them, but the little ones could not, the agents of the monopolies running the defense program would have still another way to freeze out small business from defense contracts.

Grave Vault Firm May Force Strike

The CIO Auto Workers say that the adamant attitude of the Clark Grave Vault Co. of Columbus, O., may force a strike.

Workers authorized a strike when the company refused to agree to a cost of living clause authorized by the Wage Stabilization Board. Union spokesmen also charged the company refused to count pay increases already granted in piece workers' basic pay.

UAW's demand for a clause in the contract which would permit the union to have a safety committee has also been refused by the company.

Clinkers In Controls Law Start Prices On New Spurt

By MILTON PLUMB

AS MILITARY production begins to go into high gear, material shortages are developing which will soon cut sharply into the output of civilian goods, the Defense Production Administration announced last week.

When the number of these consumer goods falls below the demand, the pressure for still higher prices will increase greatly.

Effective Oct. 1, the amount of steel allotted for refrigerators, washing machines, household appliances, television and radio sets, furniture and other products will be reduced from the present 78% to 58% of the pre-Korean use. Copper supplies will be cut to 54% and aluminum to 46%.

In announcing the cuts, Defense Production Administrator Manly Fleischmann said that the last quarter of 1951 and perhaps all of 1952 "will be a serious time of shortages." He referred to the copper situation as "desperate" and said it is "quite possible" that some plants in the auto and other industries might have to shut down for the lack of copper.

THE Office of Price Stabilization last week was rushing through an order to permit general price increases ranging from about $80 to $250 at the retail level on new automobiles. Because of a provision in the new controls law guaranteeing retailers their pre-Korea markups, automobile dealers will be permitted to charge their customers the full factory increase plus 25%.

Automobiles will be the first major commodity to rise in price under what President Truman has called one of the "economic booby traps" of the price control law. However, Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle said Sept. 6 in a speech at New Orleans that prices on numerous other items will have to be changed as the result of the new legislation.

"We just haven't been able to devise a program under the new act, which is an administrative monstrosity," DiSalle said.

'Sniff—sniff—anybody smell smoke?'

What he had in mind was obviously the red tape created by the inflationary provisions which Congress wrote into the new Defense Production Act.

The President has asked for repeal of the ban against slaughter quotas, of the provision guaranteedistributors their customary percentage margins over costs, of the Capehart amendment permitting manufacturers to include all direct and indirect costs in computing ceiling prices on individual items.

Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson told Congress that the Capehart requirement was "unworkable" and "impossible to equitably administer." He said that the OPS would never be able to get from Congress enough money to hire the huge number of accountants to permit it to administer the law fairly.

The Capehart amendment has stalled OPS plans to write dollars-and-cents ceiling prices for commodities to replace the formula price control system it temporarily adopted at the start of the program. This in itself has placed consumers at a real disadvantage.

Dollars-and-cents ceilings are much easier to enforce and the buyer does not have to have the seller's business data at hand and figure out a complex formula, as he now must, if he wishes to determine whether he is being charged the legal ceiling.

IN AN effort to let small slaughterers who have been unable to get sufficient cattle since the ban on slaughter quotas went into effect to remain in business, the OPS on Sept. 5 temporarily lifted the ceiling prices they can pay for cattle. Slaughterers unable to get 50% of the supply of cattle they handled in 1950 are exempted from compliance with the price regulation.

It was hoped that this exception might bring some of the cattle now going into the black market into the hands of the smaller dealers.

CWA Defeats AFL Union In Fifth Consecutive Election

THE CIO Communications Workers last week handed the AFL Electrical Workers their fifth consecutive licking in a National Labor Relations Board representation election.

The latest victory beat back an attempt of the IBEW to raid the CWA in the traffic department of the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. The vote: CWA-CIO 5948, IBEW-AFL 4001, no union 142, void 65, not voting 105.

The IBEW was beaten back although it had the strong support of the company, as it had in other recent contests among Bell subsidiaries.

The workers, most of whom are operators, were called into individual "captive audience" sessions with chief operators who told them the company preferred the AFL unit because it is more "sympathetic."

Illinois is regarded as the IBEW's most powerful stronghold. Its attempt to raid the CWA touched off a bitter campaign during which it made comparatively little headway.

The four previous elections in which the CWA beat the IBEW were:

Northwest Bell Telephone Co., operating in North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska and Iowa, where the CWA beat back another company-aided raid by a vote of 8236 to 5908.

Associated Telephone Co., in Southern California, CWA 2280, IBEW 769.

Texas Telephone Co., where the workers turned to the CWA from the IBEW and the tally was CWA 143, IBEW 6.

'Imposing' Confusion

Out at the recent Rocky Mountain CIO Summer School, CIO "students" complained that it's pretty difficult to figure out what's going on in Washington.

From our perch, here in the nation's capital, we can sympathize with the Rocky Mountain people.

Every time it seems that things are getting straightened out in our mind about what's going on in government, Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio opens his mouth—and then all is confusion, again.

On Aug. 31, for example, the Senate was considering a proposal by liberal Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) that our aid to Europe under the ECA program be used in such fashion as to help competitive business enterprises, and to help the free labor unions of each country.

This is an eminently sound position. Monopoly cartels have strangled much of the European economy, and frozen practices of low output, high price and high profits. As a result, standards of living don't rise very high.

In France and Italy, in particular, the Communists gained control in the early post-war period of the largest labor federation in each country. With their policies dictated by the Kremlin, they menace the efforts of the free world to resist aggression and infiltration.

It was these conditions that Sen. Benton obviously had in mind. But to Taft, these are merely efforts to "reform" the world. So he opposed the Benton amendment—on grounds that it is a proposal for "imposing a Sherman anti-trust law in every country in Europe, and also a Taft-Hartley law."

Just what does Taft have in mind?

Does he feel we should do nothing to help competitive free enterprise and democratic free unions? Apparently so.

Does he feel that his Taft-Hartley law would hurt the unions of Europe (which indeed it would)—or does he feel somehow that a Taft-Hartley Act would help the unions of Europe—so he's against it?

Does Taft object to "imposing" a Taft-Hartley law on Europe, but favor imposing such a law on American workers? It looks that way.

Fortunately, despite the objections of the Ohio "statesman," Sen. Benton's amendment was passed by a good majority.

And, since Sen. Taft admits Taft-Hartley shouldn't be "imposed" on Europe, he should now take steps to stop "imposing" that law on American workers. In other words, repeal Taft-Hartley.

Time To Pass It

Those Congressmen who talk so frequently about "cutting government waste and expenditures" can practise what they preach by passing a bill to do away with the cumbersome union-security election machinery of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The law provides that before a union can even ask for maintenance-of-membership or the union shop, it must win a special election by an absolute majority. Thousands of these polls have been held, with millions of votes cast. Most of them have shown totals ranging upward of 90% in support of union security demands.

Uncle Sam can save himself a few million dollars if Congress will repeal the union shop election provision. A bill to do just that has already been passed by the Senate.

As yet the House Labor Committee—chairmanned by Rep. Barden (D. N.C.)—has not yet been called together to consider the bill. There can be no excuse for delay in acting on this bill—supported as it is by labor and wide sections of industry.

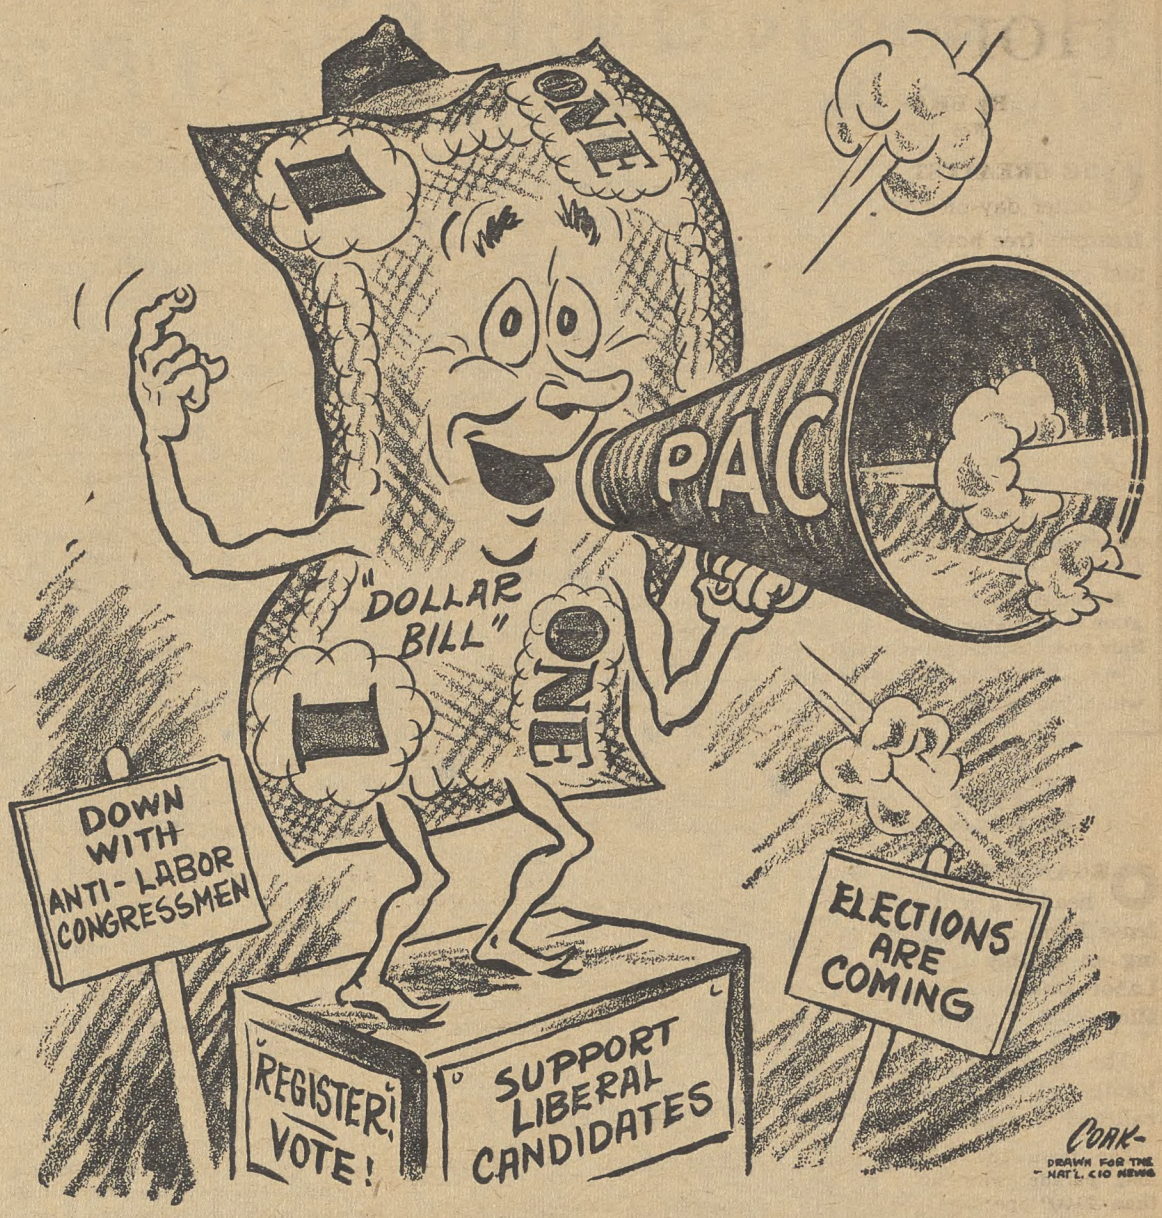
Let 'Dollar Bill' Speak For You!



15 Months In Korea

(Excerpts from a State Department pamphlet entitled "Guide to the UN in Korea").

THE FIRST year of the Korea conflict is now at an end. What has the U.N. accomplished during this year? Has this collective action been worth the sacrifice? What is gained by the policy of meeting the aggressor firmly, while at the same time trying to localize the conflict?

On April 11, 1951, President Truman once again voiced U. S. and UN objectives with these words:

"The question we have had to face is whether the Communist plan of conquest can be stopped without general war. Our Government and the United Nations believe that the best chance of stopping it without general war is to meet the attack in Korea and defeat it there . . .

"So far, by fighting a limited war in Korea, we have prevented aggression from succeeding and bringing on a general war. And the ability of the whole free world to resist Communist aggression has been greatly improved . . .

"In the meantime, I want to be clear about our military objective. We are fighting to resist an outrageous aggression in Korea. We are trying to keep the Korean conflict from spreading to other areas . . .

"That is our military objective—to repel attack and restore peace."

In some ways the limited-war concept is a new one. Its newness may account for the fact that many people have been honestly baffled by it. It becomes plain, however, if one remembers that the United Nations went into Korea to protect a free, independent nation from aggression. The UN idea was to stop that aggression and restore peace.

This is the heart of the UN policy.

For over a year the United Nations has struggled to put down an aggression, to keep it from spreading into a disastrous world war. If despite this effort war comes, it will be because the Communist rulers, as President Truman said, "want it to come."

"But this Nation and its allies," the President has said, "will not be responsible for its coming. We do not want to widen the conflict. We will use every effort to prevent that disaster. And in so doing we know that we are following the great principles of peace, freedom, and justice."

When its objectives in Korea have been achieved, the United Nations believes a monumental example will have been set to deter any other would-be aggressor. An extension of the Korean conflict would take the United Nations far afield of its objectives and might make all efforts to achieve a just settlement of the conflict, as it now stands, all but impossible. Worse, an extension of the conflict might bring on World War III.

Ambassador Austin, in a speech on April 30, 1951, summed up UN aims in Korea with these two sentences:

"Militarily, the objective is to repel the aggression and restore international peace and security in the area.

"Politically, the objective is to establish a unified, independent and democratic government in the sovereign state of Korea."

THE UNITED NATIONS is determined that these objectives must and will be achieved. This fateful year of the Korean conflict has already brought forth a notable list of accomplishments. In the same April 30 speech, Ambassador Austin outlined them thus:

"The Korean conflict has unmasked the Soviet's phony world-wide 'peace' offensive.

"The Korean conflict has rallied the first collective force and action behind United Nations principles.

"It has stimulated the United Nations to develop new machinery and better methods for meeting future threats.

"It has brought the free world to a new peak of unity in the United Nations.

"But, most important of all:
"The Korean conflict has alerted people all over the world to the imminent dangers of Soviet aggression.

"It has strengthened the will of nations to stand together and resist aggression.

"It has aroused the free peoples to the necessity of mobilizing their strength for defense, and may thus have saved civilization . . ."

Mr. Hoover Please Note

Honor Not Exclusive Property Of Business

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

OUR GREATEST living ex-president teed off the other day on "five percenters, mink coats, deep freezers, free hotels, favoritism in government loans and government contracts."

He was bemoaning the "flight from honor" in public life, and although he noted that "honor is not the exclusive property of any political party," he spoke of the years since he left the White House—all Democratic administration years.

What about the flight from honor in business life, Mr. Hoover?

How about the cynical advice given in business magazines on "How Business Is Able To Avoid the Excess Profits Tax?" The scheme was spelled out.

Business advisers said right out loud that any corporation that paid an excess profits tax was poorly managed. Said one business expert on the subject:

"Find yourself some good, useful business projects on which you can spend that part of your profits which, if not spent, would be subject to the excess profits tax. It's as simple as that."

What that expert was advising was how to do Uncle Sam out of taxes. And, of course, if business doesn't pay those taxes, the ordinary man, the consumer, will.

What of the business magazine that advised executives on how to double or triple their incomes without paying taxes? That cute trick was to draw added salary disguised as loans.

That's a double bit of hypocrisy, for if the loan is not repaid, the firm deducts it as a loss when making out its income tax—so the consumer pays that, too, in the end.

How about the business magazine that told executives how to make money by borrowing money? Here's the way Business Week put it:

"If your income is subject to excess profits tax, you can actually make money by borrowing money. You save more in taxes than you pay out in interest on the loan . . ." And Business Week proceeded to spell out just how it could be done.

How about the argument Mr. Hoover, put up before the Wage Stabilization Board on executives' salaries? There business argued that there should be no control over stock options for executives.

"Good men are hard to find," and have to be bribed with bonuses, stock options, etc., it was argued. Inflationary? That's for wages, not executives' salaries.

How about the argument, Mr. Hoover, put up before the WSB about wage curbs on industries exempt from price control? With a straight face, business insisted that wages in those industries must be controlled. That's what made inflation, not uncontrolled prices, they said.

How about the advertising campaign for "cold cures" that brought in millions of dollars for manufacturers of antihistamine drugs, until the Federal Trade Commission made them stop?

A business magazine, reporting on the FTC ruling, said cynically that manufacturers had known they could not get away with that claim very long. In short, the magazine was admitting that the manufacturers had lied, knowingly, and had duped millions of sufferers, to coin million of dollars.

And finally, how about the advice given to big corporations just the other day to go into the public benefactor business on a giant scale? Why just now? Well, because for a firm in the excess profits bracket, every dollar given away in such big-hearted fashion means that the firm itself is putting out only 22c. Uncle Sam is putting out the other 78c.

CIO Aids Labor Day Kickoff Of Defense Bond Drive

ORGANIZED labor spearheaded a nationwide Defense Bond campaign by staging an all-day celebration on Labor Day in Grand Rapids, Mich.

The event was sponsored jointly by the CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods.

The main theme of an hour long parade, witnessed by more than 40,000 spectators, was unity for defense—labor sharing the spotlight with a display of military might by the armed forces.

CIO leaders who addressed the rally included Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers and Adolph Germer, organizational director of the Woodworkers.

Following and afternoon program at Ramona Park, the official opening of the Defense Bond drive was held in the evening. The biggest bond campaign since World War II was kicked off by President Truman in a radio address from San Francisco, which was received over amplifier by the rally.

The President warned that not even an armistice in Korea must be allowed to slow our efforts to strengthen the free world against an outbreak of Communist aggression somewhere else.

"Right now our defense effort is beginning to roll," President Truman said. "We have been tooling up for large scale production of new airplanes, tanks and weapons of all types.

"We have a lot of new developments that we are putting into production—ranging from faster jet planes to lighter equipment for our foot soldiers.

"That is where the defense bond campaign comes in. All of you, I know, want to help in the defense of our country. Tonight I am telling you about something everybody can do. You can help defend your country by buying defense bonds.

"Buying Defense Bonds is a way each of us can play a part in the defense of our country and in bringing peace to the world."

President Truman was introduced by Secy. of the Treasury John W. Snyder. Other speakers included Gov. G. Mennen Williams and George Leighty, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives Association.

Defense bonds were presented to a Labor Day bond rally queen, Mrs. Frances Mondry, UAW member, and her court of four.

Asks Labor Unity In Rockford, Ill.

Pres. Emmet C. Poyer of the Rockford, Ill., CIO Council, has called on all unions in the area to form a United Labor League.

He cited Salem, Mt. Vernon and Centralia, Ill., as well as Kenosha, Wis. "All around us," he said, "we have instances of solidarity among working people.

"The unions in southern Illinois, fed up with anti-labor actions of both employers and elected officials, decided on joint action and cooperation."

In Kenosha, Poyer pointed out, "we find CIO and AFL operating like one organization. They are together in all things, operate a union club together, own the Union Cooperative Publishing Co. together, publish a weekly newspaper together.

"When elections come, they are united against the enemies of the people; when jurisdictional disputes arise, they settle them in the common-sense manner — around the negotiating table, amicably and in good faith with each other."

'Whodunit' With CIO Angle Is A Good Union Story, Too

This latest addition to the detective story field is "The Beautiful Stranger" by Bernice Carey—presumably no relation to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"The Beautiful Stranger" is not a story of penthouses, limousines and emerald necklaces. No foreign spies haunt its pages. There's only one—not the usual half-dozen murders.

All these features make the story unusual, as any detective story fan can tell you. What makes it even more unusual—and more entertaining—is a skillfully handled story of CIO organizing activities in the small mill town of "Conway, California."

Lester Coleman, lady's man and company stoolpigeon, is found dead in an alley. Who did him in? A jealous husband, or an enraged union man due to be fired because of Coleman's finger job on the CIO men in the plant?

Bernice Carey tells a good story, which doesn't have to be taken too seriously. But she knows something about unions; she knows her smalltown folks, among whom gossip is a highly-developed art; and she has a solid understanding of why men join CIO unions.

You'll enjoy "The Beautiful Stranger"—and there ought to be a place for it, along with the heavier tomes, on union bookshelves.

Boston Library Has Labor Exhibition

MARKING nine years of unusual service to labor unions, Boston Public Library is presenting an exhibition of Labor's Role in the Community until Sept. 30.

By means of books, pamphlets, posters and photographs supplied by the CIO, AFL and the library various phases of union activities in the Boston area are illustrated.

Of particular interest to union members is the section entitled The Union Program and the Boston Public Library. It shows the growth and use of the special lending service which was begun in 1942 when books were first taken to union meetings and plants for use of union members.

According to Mrs. Helen Hirson, who has been in charge of the library's union service for two years, about 4000 volumes are now in annual circulation in this way.

"Taking care of the books on their arrival at a plant is all done by a union member who volunteers," Mrs. Hirson said. "This is quite a responsibility. They keep accurate records and notify their members of overdue books. The loss is negligible."

Technical and labor books are not the only ones asked for, Mrs. Hirson noted. She said it was "amazing" the differences in reading tastes in a single factory.

Hillman Center At Maximum Use

The Sidney Hillman Health Center in New York, since opening in April, has provided more than 45,000 separate medical services for New York members of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Established in memory of Sidney Hillman, late president of the ACWA, the center's facilities are already at maximum use. Dr. Morris A. Brand, medical director, said it will expand to care for the 40,000 ACWA members in the New York area.

"The health center services," said Louis Hollander, co-manager of the union's New York Joint Board, "are a revelation of what can be done for thousands of men and women in an industry where labor and management put forward their best efforts for the social good."

It is hoped now, he added, that the staff at the center will be able to "make our contribution to the prevention and cure of those diseases which still challenge our medical knowledge."

Some Benefits, But

GI Bill Of Rights Fails To Cover Korean Veterans

By WILLIAM WELSH

VETERANS NOW leaving the armed forces do not qualify for GI Bill of Rights benefits. An outstanding feature of that bill was government-financed GI education.

Those whose jobs are not guaranteed by union contracts get job protection under the Draft Act of 1950.

Other benefits to men and women entering the services after June 27, 1950—outbreak of the Battle for Korea — have been spelled out by the Veterans Administration.

1. A veteran who satisfactorily completes his service is entitled to reemployment and should apply to his employer for re-instatement within 90 days after discharge from the service.

2. Most benefits to World War II veterans—except the G. I. Bill of Rights—have been extended to include persons entering service since June 27, 1950. They do not, however, receive mustering-out pay.

3. Vocational training for disabled veterans—originally a benefit for World War II veterans—was extended in 1950 to include many veterans disabled on or after the Korean war started.

Such veterans must show a need for training to overcome their disabilities. They must also show the disability resulted from armed conflict or extra-hazardous service.

4. Hospital care for veterans of the Korean fighting with non-service connected disabilities is now offered. As in the past, all veterans with service disabilities are entitled to hospitalization.

Compensation, pensions, indemnity payments, G.I. insurance, aid for the blinded, grants for housing for wheelchair patients and death compensations and death pensions remain much as when they were first written for World War II veterans.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

The sun streamed in the row of windows on one side of the knotty-pine walls and Mrs. Cora Lee, Amalgamated Clothing Worker from Denver, Colo., moved her chair over to let the sun fall on her back.

It was early in the morning—only 8:30—and the sun rising from behind the mountains hadn't had time yet to warm the whole room.

Some two dozen students grouped in a semi-circle around the fireplace buttoned up their sweaters and coats but all were listening too intently to George Guernsey, CIO associate education director, to think of getting up and poking the big smoking log which was giving out only an illusion of warmth.

The branches of a fine old pine tree scraped insistently at the windows to the right of the fireplace, and two stuffed deer heads stared glassily at each other from opposite walls.

The windows and door across the front of the room looked down the slope toward the Estes Camp buildings sprawled out in the giant gray-green bowl of a valley completely surrounded by mountains.

Checked curtains pushed to the side hung at all the windows, and the view from any of them was worth a good look, but the group around the fireplace kept their eyes on George, who stood leaning on his crutches, scribbling now and then on a blackboard beside him.

Only the posters tacked on the pine walls told at a quick glance that this was a CIO affair. "Your PAC Dollar Works for you," said a bright green one. CIO Pres. Philip Murray looked out from another urging the reader to "Subscribe to The CIO News."

Then there was the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' bright red and blue 'Union Label" poster.

One for a Fair Employment Practice Commission showed white and colored workers, with some words of warning: "If his right to work is taken away, you're next."

A CIO poster quoting Franklin Roosevelt was prominently displayed: "If I went to work in a factory, the first thing I'd do would be to join a union." Every available space on the walls had been used for these and other posters illustrating CIO policies.

It was in this big one-room rustic cabin at Estes Park, 80 miles north of Denver, Colo., that morning, afternoon and evening sessions of the CIO's Rocky Mountain Summer School were held during the weeks of Aug. 16-31.

Meals Are Good

Students slept in "The Lodge," a short walk away. A bit dingy and worn, but clean and comfortable. Bountiful and good meals were served in the big screened-in dining hall.

The "Association Camp" where the CIO school was held is maintained by the Young Men's Christian Association. The camp is about three miles from Estes Park, adjoining the Rocky Mountain National Park.

A flock of brown cabins and lodges with rust red roofs lies at the bottom of a great valley rumpled here and there by pine-studded hills.

CIO students at the Rocky Mountain School came from the states of Colorado, Wyoming, Montana and Arizona and represented four international unions—Rubber, Oil, Clothing and Communications Workers.

All were active union members—shop stewards, local union officials and executive board members who took their duties seriously. One—William Butler of the Rubber Workers—is secretary-treasurer of the Colorado State CIO Council.

Attendance at classes, workshops and evening panel discussions was 100%. From right after breakfast until nine or later at night—with only an hour or two free here and there—you'd find the student unionists in the one-room cabin school room, listening intently to the remarks of one of the three staff teachers, or taking part in discussions.

It might be Guernsey explaining labor's role in the new defense agencies, and doing a beautiful job of simplifying complex matters.

Or his assistant, Stuart Brock, helping them prepare for a workshop session. (Stuart's voice was the first one the students heard in the morning, as he went around banging on doors and shouting, "Wake up! Breakfast in half an hour!"

Or it might be Herman Schnurer, who was kept busy explaining how labor could function more effectively in political activity. Herman is a part-time member on the staff of PAC Director Jack Kroll in Ohio.

He also teaches history and French at Antioch College, though he doesn't mention this unless pressed. (He doesn't want anybody to think he's just a "dumb professor" who hasn't any real understanding of the importance of unions.)

A friendly, warm-hearted fellow whose heart is wrapped up in the labor movement, Herman has a pleasant and guileless face. But he showed he was keenly aware of how democracy has been betrayed by cynical politicians who slyly devise legislative tricks and booby traps for the American people.

'One . . . Can Do A Lot'

Herman told the students that they could look for a new low in gutter politics in 1952. He had words of hope and inspiration for them too. In encouraging them to take an active part in PAC activities, he said:

"One determined man can do a lot . . . That's the heart of political action."

Mike Livoda, CIO regional director from Denver, and a warm supporter of the Rocky Mountain School, was given a big hand when he gave a welcoming address to the students at the opening session Sunday night.

He and his wife drove up the 80 miles from Denver to bring Director Guernsey to the school, but important union business forced him to return the same night.

The CIO workers at the school were mighty interesting people to meet. Sometimes, quite casually, they'd tell fascinating stories about their jobs.

After all they got around, and often knew more about what's going on at the grass roots than a lot of government officials in Washington who make policy and feel very important.

One of the outstanding things about the CIO'ers at the Rocky Mountain school was their modesty. In fact, they were inclined to have too low an opinion of themselves.

Often Confused

Some of them thought that because they were confused by all the complex legislation and the intertwining network of government agencies that have been set up, they weren't as smart as they should be.

If you told them that some of the people appointed to these agencies many times don't know what it is all about either, the CIO'ers looked quite startled. As for themselves, they made it plain that they wanted to understand the legislation they were asked to support or to fight.

Once when Guernsey asked those who had written letters to their congressmen or senators to raise their hands, the CIO students looked around the room a little shamefacedly. No hands went up.

"How can we write such letters when we don't know what we're talking about?" protested a rubber worker. "We're told to write that we're for this, we're against that, and most of the time we don't even know what it's all about."

Six Foreign Guests Interested In Unions

THE SECLUDED mountain camp where the CIO Rocky Mountain School was held seemed a strange place for CIO members to meet trade unionists from Asia, Europe and Africa. And yet they did.

Six foreign labor visitors from six far scattered countries attended the school. They were there as part of a two-to-four-month study tour in the United States, made possible under a State Dept. grant provided by Congress.

A limited number of foreign leaders in educational, scientific, govermental and other fields are eligible for these trips.

The main interest of the six who came to the CIO Rocky Mountain school was trade unionism. They came from Great Britain, Finland, Belgium, the Netherlands, Nigeria and Singapore.

● There was Benjamin C. Roberts of England, now a professor of industrial relations at the London School of Economics, who got his academic start through a scholarship from the British Trades Union Congress.

A graduate of Oxford, Roberts is proud of his trade union background and told the CIO'ers that he wanted them to know he wasn't a "long-hair" or a high-brow.

● Mrs. Tynne Leivo-Larsson of Helsinki, Finland, the one woman in the foreign group, is a trade union leader who was elected to Parliament. She said there are 29 women members, out of a total of 200 members in the Finnish parliament, the largest number in the legislative body of any country.

Mrs. Larsson is vice-president of the Women's Section of the Central Federation of Trade Unions in Finland and is director of the State Social Museum in Helsinki, which features exhibits of social welfare and safety.

Law Student-Worker

● Laurent L. Janssens from Brussels, Belgium, a slim black-haired young fellow of 21 with a thin, serious but rosy face and horn-rimmed glasses, is a staff member of the Metal Workers Union in that country.

He is an executive board member of the Socialist Youth Confederation in Brussels and is especially interested in social and labor conditions as they affect young people. Janssens is also studying law.

● Franz Pieter Fuykschot of Utrecht, Holland—a good-looking, well-built man of middle age—is vice-president of the Protestant National Trade Unions of the Netherlands, and an officer of several other labor organizations, including a white collar union of which he is secretary.

Fuykschot said he'd belonged to the trade union movement for 40 years.

● Although he did not wear the native dress he had on when he was in Washington recently, Afolabi Adenekan Adio-Moses from Nigeria, attracted the most attention of all the foreigners at the CIO school, with his dark face, dazzling smile and British accent.

He received his education in Nigeria, at Oxford Univ. in England, and at the British Trades Union Congress College.

Adio-Moses—which was all of his name CIO students at the school could remember—is organizer and secretary of the Clerical and Allied Workers of his country and a member of the general council of the Nigerian Trades Union Congress.

He said the largest union in his country was, strangely enough, the teachers' union, and that the railroad workers came next. A good part of the 30 million people of Nigeria live in such abject poverty that it would shock Americans, Adio-Moses told the CIO students.

● The small-figured, self-assured Lim Yew Hock of Singapore, smoking his long, curved pipe, made a prominent member of the CIO schools with his comments and questions.

He is one of the nine members of the Legislative Council for the colony of Singapore. Lim said that there are two labor members in the Council, of whom he is one; six liberals and one independent.

He was particularly interested in living in the home of an American union official to compare costs and standards of living here to those in his own country. He planned to meet labor leaders throughout the U. S.

Students Learn Facts Of Life On European Unions

MEMBERS at the Rocky Mountain
chool learned from foreign visitors uropean unions are markedly different those in this country. For instance:

Great Britain, Belgium and Holland, are no union shop or closed agree-

ish unions are not plagued with jurisal disputes, in spite of overlapping ctions. Eight or more different unions lant may get together and agree upon to present to management.

Holland, there are three labor federations—the Socialist (membership about 400,000); Catholic (300,000) and Protestant (170,000). Belgium has two—Socialist and Christian. In both countries practically all unions are organized along industrial rather than craft lines.

Workers with families in Holland get extra pay amounting to about $1 a week for each child. A man with four children would get $4 extra.

One of the things that most impressed the American unionists was the low rents the foreign visitors reported. Franz Pieter Fuykschot of Holland said, for example, that workers paid the equivalent of about $16 a month for a pleasant, comfortable house with three or four bedrooms, less for a smaller place.

Food costs less too, he said—milk 6c a quart, eggs 48c a dozen. Laurent Q. Janssens, on the other hand, believed that the cost of living in Belgium was perhaps the highest of any country in Europe.

Food costs in Britain are held down by price control. Only four food items are still rationed—meat, butter, tea and coffee.

Europe's Non-CP Papers

Generally Approve ECA Production Plan

THE NEW Productivity Assistance Drive of the Economic Cooperation Administration has won a generally favorable reaction from non-Communist labor papers in Europe, according to word reaching this country.

The ECA's program is aimed at helping Europeans to modernize their industries, improve production techniques and increase output, while at the same time assuring the workers of a fair share in the benefits.

As it would deprive the Communists of one of their main talking points, the Red press in Europe has been unanimously against it.

OF THE free French union papers, that of the Confederation des Travailleurs Chretiens (CFTC) approved the program "provided it is carefully watched."

Approval on principle was also expressed by a spokesman for the Confederation Generale des Cadres, foremen's and supervisors' union, in its official journal, Le Creuset des Cadres. In a leading article, Andre Malterre, union general secretary said:

Labor-oriented dailies, such as Combat, le Populaire and Franc-Tireur, wrote articles generally in favor of the need of the program, taking hefty swings at industrial management in the process for a "mentality of low wages and high profits."

Labor leaders in Germany gave similar approval of the plan, indicating both interest and support. Ludwig Rosenberg, vice-president of the German trade union federation, said he was preparing an overall economic and public relations program to assist in achieving its objectives.

In a productivity pamphlet put out by the union. George Reuter, DGB vice-president in charge of publications, also stated sympathy for the drive and added:

"The essence of trade union aims is that the national production be divided among the population as fairly as possible and that the national production shall increase continually in order to raise the standard of living.

"The productivity of a national economy, therefore, is a matter of concern not only to management but equally, and possibly primarily, of concern to employes."

In the Netherlands, while there has not been any comment from trade union official organs so far, comment did come from two large labor-oriented dailies. Vrije Volk, Socialist Labor, in a cautious tone, declared:

"There is a danger that ECA might take tasks upon itself for which it is not equipped and for which it is not the most suitable institution, either. There is a danger that Marshall Aid will become an aid to industries and not to countries."

The Catholic Labor daily, Volkskrant, called the new drive the "Hoffman Plan," and emphasized the governmental enterprises.

In Denmark, the Social Demokraten, which speaks for labor, headlined first releases of the announcement of the drive.

THE LARGE nationally-circulated daily high-lighted the importance of the plan as an instrument in raising wages and lowering consumer prices.

The Swiss Socialist organ Volksrecht, published in Zurich, commented on how the plan would affect French labor unions:

"We can say that this new plan opens up wide perspectives for free French labor organizations. If it is true that Communist influence in France is to a consider-

"It is too early to form an opinion of the new ECA plan of direct aid. But the principle of a substantial technical aid should be extremely useful for the development of French productivity, which we believe is of primary importance."

Commies Will Try Comeback In Europe, Committee Warns

THE Communist-controlled unions of Western Europe are planning on a comeback putsch this fall, the Vigilance Committee of the Intl. Transportation Federation announced at its recent meeting in London.

The committee was organized nearly two years ago by the ITF, a trade body affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The maritime and waterfront industries of western Europe were being kept at that time in a turmoil by the Reds, who were trying to block implementation of the Atlantic Defense Pact.

The committee was built on a regional basis from the Baltic area to the eastern end of the Mediterranean, with the aim of blocking the Communists at every turn.

It will be waiting for the Reds when they try their comeback attempt in the next couple of months.

It knows what the Communists have in mind. In London it drew up its own counter-plans, confident in the knowledge that "the free and democratic trade unions of the dockers and seafarers of Western Europe would stand together again in repulsing any fresh outbreak of Communist disturbances."

"While the trade departments of the World Federation of Trade Unions (Communist - dominated) pretends to hold out the hand of friendship to bona fide trade unions," it said in a statement, "it is known from inside information that another vicious attack on the waterfronts of Western Europe is planned for the coming autumn.

"The committee therefore decided to continue its vigilance with all the energy necessary. It appeals to dockers and seafarers who stand for the principle of freedom and democracy to be ready to repel all moves on the part of the Dictators of the Cominform and WFTU and their agents."

Dixiegop Politics Caused Cuts In Foreign-Aid Bill

THE ISOLATIONIST Republican Dixiecrat coalition in control of the Senate has denied even "the carefully calculated minimum" of funds necessary to equip Gen. Dwight Eisenhower's European defense army to stop the thrust of an enemy's first attack.

In fact, when the showdown came, the Senate coalition showed even less concern than the House, which had previously cut $1 billion from President Truman's request for $8½ billion for military and economic aid to friendly nations abroad.

The Senate not only sustained this reduction, but voted a further cut of $250 million in utter disregard of pleas that the action would seriously weaken U. S. security.

Only 17 members of the Senate thought enough of the national welfare to vote to appropriate the full amount requested by the President. An amendment to restore the $1 billion cut by the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committee was voted down 56 to 17.

Then the Senate, by a 36-to-34 vote, approved an amendment introduced by Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) cutting $250 million more from the economic aid funds. The slash followed a warning to Congress from Secy. of Defense George C. Marshall that the full amount was necessary to give U. S. allies the strength to stop the "forward sweep" of an enemy attack and provide a "threshold" with which to fight back.

Marshall said that the nation's military planners had asked for only "the carefully calculated minimum" in the $8½ billion total.

THE ACTION followed an appeal for the full amount from Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.), chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. McMahon said that the Soviet Union has a stockpile of atomic weapons which, used by surprise, could strike millions dead in American cities.

"The Congress will fail to discharge its duty to the people of the country," he said, "if it does not seek to bring about the kind of strength, not only here, but all over the world, which will deter the men in the Kremlin from trying to strike that blow."

But the Senate considered politics more important than the advice of experts. The Republican Policy Committee on Aug. 29 had agreed to oppose all efforts to restore the $1 billion in committee cuts and had left the way open for further cuts on the floor.

As debate proceeded, some GOP members tried to pull so many political tricks out of the bag that Majority Leader McFarland (D. Ariz.) found it necessary to take the floor to say:

"I regret very much that reference has been made to political elections when we are considering a measure of such real importance to the mutual defense of the free nations of the world."

MCFARLAND said he wished it were true that no more than politics were involved in connection with the bill. Actually, he pointed out, the very survival of the American political system was dependent upon the measure's passage.

The fallaciousness of the Republican-endorsed "economy" was hammered home by Sens. McMahon, Green (D. R.I.), Sparkman (D. Ala.), and Fulbright (D. Ark). In a joint statement they pointed out that "it is more important to balance the Kremlin's power and win than to balance the 1952 budget and lose."

The four Democrats said that it would cost over $50 billion to support three million troops in the U.S., but that it would cost only $8½ billion "to create the same number of troops along the front lines of freedom overseas."

"If you slash the funds needed for this joint venture," they predicted, "then you run the risk of having to spend in the U.S. not $50 billion per year, but $100 billion or more, and you also run the risk of a disaster overtaking not only Europe but America as well."

The mutual aid bill was so badly botched by Senate amendments before its passage that it is certain to be rewritten in many places when House and Senate conferees meet to iron out differences.

While there is still a slight chance to save the $250 million in economic aid cut by the Senate, it is unlikely that the conferees will make any effort to restore the $1 billion cut.

Annual Wage Hike Rejected By France

Demands of the Socialist and Catholic trade unions in France for increases of more than 30% in the guaranteed annual wage were rejected as "inflationary" last week by Premier Pleven.

Spokesmen for the labor groups, in an interview with Pleven, asked for a guaranteed wage of 23,600 francs a month. This is about $68.45, or a little more than the average U. S. industrial worker earns in a week.

Forced Labor Expert:

No Major Continent Free Of Bondage

PRACTICALLY every nation in the world has on its statute books laws against slavery—but "no major continent is entirely free from the barbarous practice of human bondage," Albert Konrad Herling writes in the September number of the magazine Survey.

Herling is research director for the Commission of Inquiry Into Forced Labor and assistant national secretary of the Workers Defense League. He is author of "Soviet Slave Empire," which was reviewed last week in the CIO News.

The Soviet Union and its satellites, he finds, are far from the only countries where some of the people are forced to work—for nothing—for others.

"Here in the United States," he writes, "bondage exists in the form of illegal peonage, or debt slavery. The Workers Defense League has found it in diminishing measure among the sharecroppers of the Deep South . . .

"It is also practiced . . . in the lumber and turpentine areas of Florida and Georgia, and 'with variations' in the truck and beet sugar fields . . .

"THE RECENT exposure of sordid conditions among the Mexican 'wetbacks,' intimidated by threats of imprisonment and deportation, rounds out the picture of illegal peonage in the United States . . .

"Difficulties of arranging a census of anything of an illegal and bootleg nature are apparent. They make it almost impossible to arrive at any clear picture of the prevalance of debt slavery in this country. Persons who have studied the problem, however, estimate the number of families held in peonage at not more than 20,000."

Involuntary servitude can be found even more extensively in Latin America, Herling points out, the forms varying with the country and most of the systems "a combination of debt slavery and serfdom."

In Africa, he continues, great strides have been made in the Belgian Congo, which in the last century "stood for the extremity of white man's depravity in dealing with the native African."

BELGIUM, Great Britain and France "can be proud of the progress they have made," he says. But in Portuguese Angola, "the status of the native population today can be compared to the Belgian Congo of 1895."

"Current efforts at the formation of trade unions and the development of self-rule in many colonial areas," Herling comments, "indicates that a new era is dawning for Africa, though the progress may be regarded by many as too slow."

In South Africa, the Hitler-like racial policies of the government indicates no short-range chance for improvement, he adds.

Frank and open human slavery still exists in the Moslem countries along the Persian Gulf, he finds. In the Far East, the practice of selling children has spread from China and Japan into Malaya, Hongkong and Singapore, while other forms of "forced and compulsory labor, peonage and chattel slavery still exists."

To correct this worldwide injustice, Herling advocates a combination of education, enforced international and national laws, economic reforms, and support of legitimate organizations working against human exploitation.

GETS HERO'S BURIAL: Six horses draw the flag-draped casket of Sgt. John R. Rice—Winnebago Indian who was killed in action in Korea—to the Arlington (Va.) National Cemetery. Burial of Sgt. Rice in an Iowa cemetery was halted because the GI was "not Caucasian."

Cemetery's Refusal To Bury Indian GI Hit By CIO

THE DENIAL of burial in a cemetery near Sioux City, Ia., to Sgt. John R. Rice, Winnebago Indian killed in action in Korea, drew fire from the CIO last week.

At the direction of President Truman, Rice was buried with military honors in Arlington Cemetery within a stone's throw of the grave of Gen. Walton H. Walker, Eighth Army Commander, who was killed in a jeep accident in Korea.

As chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey told Gov. Beardsley of Iowa that the American people were "shocked and appalled" by the incident.

"Without analyzing or challenging the principles of the various individuals involved," Carey wrote, "it seems to me that it should not be possible for any person or any group to cloak their actions behind a corporate charter issued under the authority of the state legislature."

The affair, Carey said, provided the Communist Party with ready-made propaganda to defame America. He was not concerned with the lies the Communists told, he added, but did object to giving them opportunities to tell the truth.

Secy.Treas Al Hartnett of CIO Electrical Workers said that "it is hard to find words to condemn this despicable brand of provincial bigotry." Hartnett is also chairman of the union's Anti-Discrimination Committee.

A public apology to Rice's widow would not right a wrong that never could be corrected, he insisted.

A CHANGE OF outlook by "people who indulge their ego with the belief that somehow they are better than their neighbor" will help in the future, he concluded.

Writing to Gov. Beardsley as a citizen of Iowa and vice president of CIO Packinghouse Workers, Russell R. Lasley said:

"I write you to recommend that a permanent state-wide committee of civic, religious and labor organizations be established to promote better interracial understanding which will prevent further embarrassment such as that imposed on the family of Sergeant Rice and the State of Iowa."

ECA Fears 'Labor Unrest' In Europe

WESTERN Europe will experience "a great wave of labor unrest" in the immediate future which will slow down rearmament, according to a secret Economic Cooperation Administration memorandum brought to light last week by the New York Times.

"In many countries it will be the Communist labor organizations which will gain by these events," the Times quoted the memo as saying.

"The danger is immediate. The continuation of economic aid, its distribution in such a way that its benefits reach to a greater extent than before the low income groups, workers and consumers, is of extreme urgency for the security of the United States."

The memo was prepared before the Senate completed congressional action on the foreign aid program by cutting economic assistance to Europe to $880.5 million and setting rearmament assistance at $5,006,350,000.

The Senate also knocked out of the bill a clause giving the President discretion to transfer up to 10% of earmarked funds from one section to another. The ECA figured that $673 million would be needed to wind up the Marshall Plan.

"Many countries have made it quite clear," the Times quoted from the memo, "that if United States aid is not granted at least at the same level as the previous period, they will have to reduce their commitments in the North Atlantic Pact."

The newspaper said the memo attributed Western Europe's economic difficulties to a shortage of raw materials resulting in lower industrial production, fewer consumer goods and higher prices.

The cartels, which keep production and wages down and prices up, and the tax system, which virtually exempts the wealthy in most continental countries, apparently will mean the greatest lowering of living standards for city dwellers working in industry, the Times says the memo asserts.

The ECA did not make the memo public. A spokesman said it was prepared for policy-making officials and represented the views of one economist "which will be considered along with the views of others."

Despite Warning

TUC Backs Leaders On Armament Program

DELEGATES to the annual British Trades Union Congress, held last week in Blackpool, England, voted solidy support to Great Britain's rearmament program in the face of a blunt warning that prices will go higher and a plea that they go on wage demands.

The 900 delegates, representing about eight million organized workers, handed Labor Party rebels led by Aneurin Bevan a resounding defeat when they voted to approve the TUC General Council's report on rearmament. The report supported the government arms production program, even at the risk of lowering living standards.

Sir Vincent Tewson, TUC general secretary, and Arthur Deakin, head of the Transport & General Workers, bore the brunt of the defense of the General Council's position. The opposition was a mixture of neutralists, Bevan supporters, Communists and pacifists, the N. Y. Times said.

The vote in favor of endorsing the council's position was so overwhelming when a show of hands was called for that a roll call was not necessary.

A series of other resolutions critical of the government also went to defeat.

A motion calling on the government to abandon its support of the rearming of Germany and Japan was beaten by two to one. Another demanding a resumption of trade with Soviet Russia and her satellites as well as an "end to American interference" with such trade, was killed by a tally of 5,213,000 to 1,795,000 votes.

Delegates vote on the basis of the number of union members they represent, with each union delegation voting as a unit.

The United States was roundly abused during the debates by the Labor Party rebels, the neutralists and the Communists. Typical was the attack of J. Gardner, of the Amalgamated Union of Foundry Workers, who proposed the resolution to resume trade with the Soviet Zone.

"American dollars," he said, "have been used to restore European cartels and to help Germans and Japanese to compete against Britain."

The Communists also lost out on another front when they advanced three candidates for the General Council. They were easily defeated, and the 33 incumbents were re-elected.

Gaitskell's speech was delivered before the delegates began to consider their weighty problems. He spoke against a background of recent wage increases which this year are running at about seven times those granted in 1950, according to the Wall Street Journal's correspondent. Additional demands have been served.

THE CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer told the convention that price increases are in sight which will add two or three more points to cost of living index. There are a few signs that world inflation is "tailing off," he said, but new wage increases in Britain could touch off a new internal upward spiral.

The increase that has taken place in the cost of living, and that to come, is not the fault of the government, he maintained. The free world's rearmament plan and the Korean war have sent up prices all over the world, he explained, so that Britain is now paying a billion pounds more this year than a year ago for the same amount of imports.

The only alternative to drastic cuts in imports, he said, is increased production. Upon completing his speech Gaitskell flew to Washington, where he was conferring later last week with Secy. of the Treasury John W. Snyder and attending meetings of the Intl. Monetary Fund.

In his opening address, Pres. Alfred Roberts accused Bevan and his followers of "playing right into the hands of the Soviet propagandists" by trying to have the rearmament program scaled down. The sole purpose of western rearmament, he stressed, is the defense of freedom and democratic institutions.

Free False Teeth For All Defeated

A resolution calling for restoration of free false teeth and eyeglasses to the British government's health program was narrowly defeated at the Blackpool meeting of the British Trades Union Congress last week.

The services are now available only on a fee basis. The motion to restore false teeth to the health program at first appeared to have been passed by a voice vote, but was beaten by 3,775,000 to 3,272,000 votes on a roll call.

ICFTU Asks Democracy Guarantee In Japan

A DEMAND that the Japanese be required to guarantee maintenance of basic human rights in the San Francisco peace treaty was served on the participating governments last week by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The notice went out in the form of a memorandum signed by Gen. Secy. J. H. Oldenbroek. It recalled that when the ICFTU was established in London two years ago, the representatives of four million organized Japanese workers participated on a basis of full equality with delegates from the labor organizations of other countries.

"We regret that the draft treaty does not contain more precise provisions guaranteeing the maintenance of democracy in Japan," the memorandum said.

"The workers of the free world can never forget the destruction and terrible suffering caused by the policies and actions of an authoritarian Japan dominated by militarists, and the suppression of freedom and democracy by these same elements.

"We are convinced that a repetition of the past can only be avoided if democratic practices and a democratic spirit pervade every aspect of Japanese life."

The ICFTU specifically asked:

"That trade union rights, including the right of collective bargaining for workers in private industry and in the services of the government, shall be preserved and that nothing shall be done to weaken or undermine the free trade union movement which has been built up since the end of the war;

"THAT THE forces of concentrated economic power shall never again be permitted to reign unchecked; and

"That the militarists, and the imperialist spirit engendered by them, shall never again be permitted to rise.

"A Japan fully dedicated to democracy and to a program of ever-rising living standards for the Japanese people can make a tremendous contribution to the economic development of Asia and the Far East. This kind of Japan will thus become a strong bulwark of peace and freedom throughout the world."

Indiana CIO To Hold Civil Defense Meet

A two-day conference on civil defense and community services has been called for Sept. 29-30 in Indianapolis by the Indiana CIO Council.

'Worst Anti-Labor Relations' Described To Senate Group

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

A MEMBER OF A Senate committee recently termed the labor relations policy of the Reed & Prince Manufacturing Co., Worcester, Mass., "disgraceful."

It is an example of the "worst anti-labor relations" he had ever encountered, he said.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), a member of the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations, made the remark. He also told Vice-President Ernest Boyd of the firm that "it is obvious that you have been determined from the beginning to 'bust' the union in your plant."

"You ought to go to a school on industrial relations and learn the elementary principles of collective bargaining," Morse said.

The Senate committee had listened for two days to the testimony of a dozen witnesses, including clergymen, union representatives and Worcester city officials. They related how they had unsuccessfully attempted to get the company to reach agreement with the CIO Steelworkers, which had won a National Labor Relations Board election at the plant last year.

Rev. Thaddius Clapp, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, related how he and a group of other clergymen formed an informal committee to attempt to effect a settlement after a strike had been in progress three weeks. It was called in January and is still on.

HE SAID he and another minister had met with officials of the State Conciliation Service after the company had turned down the union's offer to submit the issues to arbitration.

"They told us they thought the union was being very conciliatory and reasonable," he testified, "but they pointed out there were certain principles involved that the union could not surrender."

When the ministers called upon Alden Reed, treasurer of the company, and proposed that the parties arbitrate, Reed refused, according to the clergyman.

"We talked to him about the effect of the strike on the community and upon our parishioners—the things we had seen ourselves—but I do not feel we accomplished anything by going to see him," he declared.

Roy H. Stevens, representative of the Steelworkers, cited in detail the anti-labor history of the company since the Steelworkers Organizing Committee was forced to strike the plant back in 1937.

He said the firm, which manufactures screws and bolts, successfully broke that strike with the aid of an injunction and police. The National Labor Relations Board subsequently found the company guilty of refusing to bargain in good faith and interfering with the rights of its employes to organize.

Stevens said the Steelworkers won an election last year and after being certified by the NLRB, began negotiations Sept. 15.

"The company showed little desire to meet with us and when it did it was only for a few hours," he said. A total of 21 "bargaining sessions" was held before negotiations broke down and the union called the walkout, he said.

Morse asked Stevens if he knew that "any company attorney, who wanted to fight the union under the Taft-Hartley Act, could keep the union tied up in court for several years?"

He also asked if Stevens was testifying on the case, or "are you trying to tell the American people what an outrageous legalism the Taft-Hartley Act really is?"

Stevens replied that he was testifying "in the hope that the Senate, when it considers labor legislation, will be aware that this problem exists."

"You had better do something at the ballot boxes first," Morse declared. "It is very obvious what we have here, a case stuck with the Taft-Hartley Act. Unions are going to be wrecked by it."

George A. Wells, a member of the Worcester City Council, was asked by Chairman Humphrey (D. Minn.) about the attitude of the community in reference to the strike.

"The feelings of industrialists, owners of other industrial plants which are not unionized, and working people in the city are almost unanimous that the fault here lies very definitely with management," Wells replied.

"But, you would get much further appealing to one of these granite pillars in this room that you would get appealing to the management in this case."

Humphrey asked if he thought the company had "bargained in good faith, or in bad faith?"

"At no time has this company bargained in good faith," Wells declared.

"We like to preach that there is equal justice under the law, but there isn't equal justice under the law in this case when you have on one hand a bunch of people who work too hard to make not too good a living, and on the other hand an industry with a selfish, archaic outlook and with wealth saying:

"'We can break this strike because we'll break their backs. We will use every possible weapon the law permits us to use to drag this out.'

"Reed & Prince are going to exhaust every possibility to try and prevent the law of the land from being the law of the land."

MORSE TERMED the case "the kind that has taught American labor that it has to fight and strike in order to protect workers from this kind of arbitrary discretion."

"It is a rather shocking thing," he added.

He delivered a scathing denunciation of the Taft-Hartley law and declared that "as long as it is on the books, I think we have to find out why all the power of the law has not been used to produce a collective bargaining agreement that ends a strike."

He said he thought the attitude displayed by Reed & Prince "is the attitude that plays right into the hands of the Communist forces in this country that want to worm and termite their way into labor organizations and spread their poisonous venom to the effect that workers in mass production industries can not look to the employing classes to protect the general welfare."

Company Official Insults Clergy

"What's the matter, boys, are your collections falling off?"

The question was asked a group of clergymen in Worcester, Mass., by Alden Reed, treasurer of the Reed and Prince Manufacturing Co.

The clergymen had formed a committee to attempt to work out a peace formula between the company and striking CIO Steelworkers.

The clergymen's efforts were fruitless when the company refused to agree to arbitration.

On WSB Panel

Fred C. Piper, an international representative of the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee, has been appointed a labor member of a tripartite panel of the Wage Stabilization Board. The seven-man committee will study the special problems of applying the stabilization program objectives to commission earnings.

Carey Tells Urban League

Dixiegops Use 'Rights' As Political Football

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey charged in an address last week to the National Conference of the Urban League at Minneapolis, Minn., that both Democratic and Republican parties have betrayed their official platforms.

Carey, who is chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, declared that "neither political party has redeemed its pledge, or even made a sincere effort to do so."

The Urban League seeks to improve the conditions of industrial Negro workers.

"We looked for the 81st Congress to do something to carry out the solemn pledges made to the people of this country," he said. "We looked in vain.

"Again last January we looked to the 82nd Congress to carry out those pledges, but once again we are looking in vain."

The CIO leader chastised the Dixiecrats and Republicans for their "reactionary coalition" which he said, "has killed every attempt to enact civil rights legislation."

"They use the sacred human rights of men, women and children to jockey for political position. In some cases they are motivated by their own prejudices. In other cases they accept the prejudices of those who influence them in the hope of realizing their own selfish political objectives."

This is not merely a moral issue, Carey said, it is also an economic one.

"These men are on extremely unsound ground in the economic sense," he declared. "Prejudice and discrimination cost money."

He pointed out the tremendous loss to the country as a whole through the failure to utilize the skills of thousands of men and women because of racial or religious reasons.

He reminded his listeners that the first CIO convention in 1938 saw fit to recognize the attainment of human rights as the CIO's first great objective.

"We in the CIO do not believe that bargaining can be really collective unless we ourselves constitute an American collectivity that recognizes no difference among our members based on race, creed, color or nationality," Carey said.

"We believe that the problem of human rights is the number one problem of our country today. The domestic side of that problem is important in itself. It is important, first of all, on the basis of human dignity; secondly, it is tremendously important because of its economic aspects.

"In addition, it has international aspects that carry it far beyond our national borders, all over the world. I find it impossible to deal separately with these apparent various phases. To me it's all one problem, and it must be dealt with as one problem."

CAREY LISTED the ultimate objectives of the country's reactionaries.

"White supremacy, economic supremacy and political advantage of the minority are some of the false goals at which they aim," he said. "They will do everything to attain their unholy ambition."

He claimed the reactionaries were making common cause with our major enemy, the Kremlin.

"The vicious coalition is doing the work of the Communist Party, carrying out the work of the Kremlin. There is no question about that," he said.

"Every little incident that occurs in this country is used by Communist propagandists throughout the world to prove there is no liberty, no freedom, no self-determination at all in America."

N.J. CIO Council Raps Resolution By Cox

Defeat of a resolution by Rep. Cox (D. Ga.) to investigate alleged un-American activity in foundations such as the Rosenwald Fund was urged last week by the New Jersey State CIO Council.

Arthur Chapin, State CIO Civil Rights director, said that "the chief purpose of this resolution seems to be an attack on colored and white people alike who wish to eliminate racial and religious prejudices in the United States."

Beatty Will Direct UNESCO Centers

Willard W. Beatty, chief of the educational program of the U. S. Bureau of Indian Affairs, has been named deputy director of the Dept. of Education in charge of fundamental education training centers for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

The UNESCO is establishing the training centers on a regional basis for instructing teachers and preparing materials for a worldwide attack on illiteracy and low living standards in the undeveloped nations. The first center was opened in July at Patzcuaro, Mex.

FTC Finds 'Glyoxylide' Is Virtually All Water

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission says people suffering from heart ailments could have derived as much benefit from drinking plain water as they got from a preparation called Glyoxylide.

The commission has forbidden the manufacturers, Koch Laboratories, Inc., Detroit, to claim the product possesses any therapuetic value or that its use will be of benefit in treating any disease of the human body.

FTC found among other things that Glyoxylide, to which the makers ascribed the impressive formula C-C-C-O in promotional matter, was an "aqueous solution of one part Glyoxylide to one trillion parts of water.

"The relationship proportionately between one part C-C-C-O and one trillion parts of water can be said to approximate mathematically that which one second bears in point of time to the total seconds which have elapsed since the year 29,738 B.C. down to the date on which this case was orally argued before the commission."

Steel District, Locals Erect Building In Lackawanna, N. Y.

WORK HAS been started on the $150,000 CIO Steelworkers' office and recreation building at Lackawanna, N. Y. At adjacent Buffalo, the CIO Auto Workers will probably take over the Elks building for offices, recreation center and meeting place.

The Steelworkers building will house the offices of District Four and four locals at the Bethlehem Steel plant. Present at the ceremony was Major John Janiga, a member of Local 2603.

The structure will have two stories and a basement and will include an auditorium, a large meeting room, bowling alleys and a bar.

The UAW is polling 25,000 members of 20 locals. It is proposed that each local subscribe $5 a member and that a mortgage be sought for the remainder of the purchase price above $125,000. Eight other sites have been considered.

Florida CIO Steps Up Drive For Members

THE YOUNG but lusty Florida State Industrial Union Council held its second annual convention in Miami Beach over the Labor Day week-end.

The delegates welcomed home Charles L. Cowl, state director, who has been on special assignment with the CIO Steelworkers for the past 11 months, laid plans for more effective political action and intensified organizational efforts, and pledged themselves toward closer cooperation as a council.

They heard former Sen. Claude Pepper commend the CIO for the "valuable and selfless contribution it is making toward mobilization and the defense efforts of the nation." He pointed out that labor has consistently supported national legislation designed to help all—not just members of organized labor.

Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, speaking for the national CIO, decried the withdrawal of the AFL from the United Labor Policy Committee.

"Withdrawal of the AFL had given comfort and solace to the big industrialists and those who would personally profit from mobilization of our defense," he declared.

Other speakers included Philip Clowes, assistant director of the CIO Southern drive; Walter E. Keyes, director of the Florida State Improvement Commission, and Ed Stone, public relations representative, who brought greetings from Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization and councils.

Roy Armstrong, Jacksonville, of the CWA, was re-elected president. William Grogan, Miami, of the Shipworkers, was named vice-president, and Bernard Bayless, Tampa, USA, secretary-treasurer.

AMONG resolutions adopted was one increasing the per capital tax to 5c with 2c earmarked for political action.

Others called on the Governor to appoint labor representatives on various state commissions and agencies; sought amendment of the Florida constitution, which prohibits the closed shop; Endorsed CIO Pres. Philip Murray's plan for establishment of a Missouri Valley Authority; reiterated support of the CIO Executive Board in the Communist fight.

Also supported the Union Record, an independent labor publication; supported the 6000 members of the CIO Transport Workers at Pan American World Airways in their coming negotiations; pledged aid to organizational efforts of the Shipbuilding Workers, and setting up an Advisory Committee on Organization to increase the tempo of organizing the unorganized.

UAW, Willys Co. Sign Agreement

The CIO Auto Workers and the Willys-Overland Co., Toledo, O., last week announced the signing of a cost-of-living contract to run until June 1, 1955.

The contract, calling for an immediate 9c hourly pay increase and annual 4c hourly "improvement" increases, becomes effective Oct. 1, upon ratification by rank-and-file members.

Pay Freeze Could Hurt Rearming, Taylor Says

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has declared that a complete freeze on wages would hurt the nation's vital defense production and lead to more inflation.

Dr. George W. Taylor, retiring WSB chairman, said in his final report to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston that a "flexible" wage policy was essential to full production.

In reviewing the four months' work of the board—reconstituted early in May after labor's walkout from the original wage board—Taylor noted that the board had four primary objectives:

Wage stabilization, preservation of industrial relations stability, preservation of industrial bargaining to the fullest possible extent, and fostering of maximum defense production.

Taylor, who is returning to his teaching post at the Univ. of Pennsylvania, declared that it is not sufficient for the board simply to hold the wage line.

"If wages are kept rigid and we don't get the guns which are needed, or airplanes which are needed, the cost in holding the wage line might be too great in terms of impediments to the arms program," he said.

He said the board has, for the most part, managed to meet its current problems and has made some progress on long-range problems, such as manpower, merit and length of service adjustments and cost of living raises.

Still to be worked out by the board, he declared, are policies on pensions, health and welfare programs, inter-plant adjustments, productivity or annual improvement factors, commission earnings, price-exempt industries, job evaluation and incentive plans.

The former WSB chairman declared that the WSB is not primarily designed as a punitive undertaking "but as a program to insure that those who comply with wage regulations are not put at a disadvantage."

CIO Auto Worker Wins 'Fishingest Dad' Title

The title of "Fishingest Dad" was won for the second consecutive year by Frank Shuskey of the CIO Auto Workers at Cleveland, O. He was one of the "Fathers for a Day" to children from two orphan homes at an annual fishing party.

Govt. Workers Bilked Out Of Overtime

GOVERNMENT employes in various agencies, are cheated by abuse of overtime regulations, Richard E. Shoemaker, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee legislative representative, testified last week before the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

The option of receiving extra leave instead of overtime pay has in practice ceased to exist for federal workers he said. Agency heads claim there is no money for leave or overtime, and pressure the workers with threats of being labeled "uncooperative" when they demand their rights, he added.

A straight time and half for overtime, with a penalty for evasion of the rule, would end the practice, he declared.

Oil Workers' Meet To Stress Organizing

THE PROBLEM of organizing the remainder of the rich and powerful oil industry is expected to be the main topic of discussion as the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union convenes its 21st international convention in Denver Sept. 10.

Delegates from 30 states and six Canadian provinces from coast-to-coast will hear a report from the officers that the union has gained several thousand members in the past year.

But the officers also will say that a large segment of the industry remains unorganized or organized by small independent unions.

Administrative officers of the union plan to ask the convention for a 25c increase in per capita payments to the international, part of which would be used for an expanded organizing drive.

An organizing drive — concentrated on the East Coast—is being conducted by the union with the assistance of the national CIO.

WHILE the OWIU has quadrupled in size since 1940 and has shown a substantial membership increase in the past year, small independent unions represent a substantial portion of the industry's workers.

More than 300 voting delegates already have sent in credentials. In addition, there will be approximately 200 fraternal delegates, visitors and staff members present.

Featured speakers will include Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, Director Jack Kroll of CIO-PAC, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Archie Gordon, labor attache of the British Embassy; M. I. Zein el Din, president of the General Union of Motor Drivers, Cairo, Egypt; Robert Oliver, labor adviser to ECA.

ANOTHER ATTEMPTED raid by the IBEW against our Communications Workers has been defeated. CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne and his crew, supported by Reg. Dir. Michael Mann and CIO organizers, blocked the company-supported IBEW-AFL effort to gain representation rights at the Bell Telephone Co. The vote: CWA-CIO 5948, IBEW-AFL 4001, no union 142, void 65, abstaining 165. This is a great victory for CWA against the raiding IBEW.

President Truman paid the Nation's tribute to a hero—a native Indian, who died in the cause of world democracy. Sergt. John R. Rice was denied burial in Sioux City, Ia., because he was not of the Caucasian race. He will now rest at Arlington Cemetery among other heroes who died in the service of their country. May this be an example and a lesson to bigotry everywhere.

Pres. Harry Sayre, of the United Paperworkers, reports two victories in representation elections. The first, in Memphis, Tenn., at the Cleveland Container Co., gave the UPA better than a 3 to 1 decision. The ballots cast showed: UPA 96, AFL 28, and no union 53. This win was achieved with the assistance of Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland and UPA Rep. Joseph Rinaldi.

The other representation win was at the Heminway Box Co., Waterbury, Conn. The vote was UPA 101, company union 44, 2 void, 1 challenged. The campaign was handled by UPA Dir. Anthony Adamo and Staff Members Steve Mrowka and George Pescatore.

Reg. Dir. Ernest Pugh reports a representation election win for the CIO at the Standard Lime and Stone Co., Kimbalton, Va. The ballot count showed 57 CIO votes, 3 for the AFL and 40 for no union.

Reg. Dir. George De Nucci reports a 2 to 1 victory for the United Railroad Workers over the AFL Railway Clerks in a representation election conducted by the Railway Mediation Board among employees of the Union Depot in Columbus, O. The CIO polled 209 votes against the 117 votes for the AFL. Intl. Vice Pres. Gene Attreed, of the Railroad Workers, assisted in the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Bob McVay reports two Oklahoma representation wins for the CIO. The first victory, at the Sylvania Electric Co., Shawnee, gave the IUE a lopsided win over the IBEW-AFL. The tally showed 229 for the IUE-CIO as against 15 for the AFL union.

THE OTHER was at the American Body Trailer Co., Oklahoma City. The Auto Workers won bargaining rights by gaining 69 votes against 31 for no union.

Reg. Dir. David Sternback reports winning three representation and one union shop victories in Puerto Rico during the past week. The representation elections were at the Puerto Rico Sand & Gravel Corp., CIO 31, against 3, challenged 3; at Clinica Antillas, CIO 31, against 1, challenged 1; the Jem Manufacturing Corp., CIO 104, against 54, challenged 9. The union shop election, at Andreu, Figueroa & Rodriguez, resulted in 17 for, 2 against and 2 challenged.

Philip Clowes, acting director of the Southern Organizing Committee, reports four recent representation victories. The wins were at the Calloway Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., Gadsden, Ala., Retail, Wholesale and Dept. Store-CIO 15, against 4; Virginia Railway, Norfolk, Va., CIO United Railroad Workers 21, against 1; Fly Ash Arrestor Co., Birmingham, Ala., Steelworkers 27, against 13; and the Republic Steel Corp., Gadsden, Steelworkers 47, against 37.

CIO Asks Public Safeguard In Television

THE CIO last week endorsed a pending bill to establish a National Citizens Advisory Board for the purpose of safeguarding the public interest in television.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, testified before the Subcommittee on Radio, Television and Telecommunication of the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

The CIO supports the bill, he explained, because it represents a majority of the men and women who make television receivers and because its membership also constitutes one of the largest organized consumer groups.

"The degree to which television programming not only entertains the public but also elevates its cultural standards, provides useful educational and informational services and generally advances the cause of good citizenship is of tremendous importance to our six million members and their families," he said.

The CIO is concerned not only with the educational value of television for children, Ruttenberg stressed, but likewise with its importance in adult education. Working people, he said, want more than the best in TV entertainment, and "their educational needs can be tremendously enhanced by effective educational television programming."

"It should be apparent to all," he said, "that the public interest in the development of our fast growing television broadcasting industry must be protected."

"A large part of television time should rightly belong to the entertainment field . . . but much of television time must be reserved for more serious purposes and it is the responsibility of Congress, which represents the interests of all the American people, to make this possible."

Buffalo CIO Requests Developed Water Front

The CIO Council has unanimously demanded that the Common Council provide funds for the purchase of land for proposed facilities.

The resolution charged that "political maneuvering and dillydallying" by elected officials has deprived resident of proposed facilities.

Reuther Hails RFC Stand On Housing Loan

PRES. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers said the change in policy of the Reconstruction Finance Corp. on mortgage loans, authorized Aug. 30, shows the government "will not appease greed."

Reuther spoke as chairman of the CIO Housing Committee.

Mortgage bankers and life insurance companies, he charged, caused collapse of the building construction industry by refusing to make loans at the lawful rate of interest.

Their demand for an added 2% interest would increase the cost of a $10,000 home by $2500 for the average purchaser. A credit log-jam resulted.

Prior to the policy change, the RFC financed construction only where private investors had promised to take up the mortgage after it was guaranteed by the government.

It will now make direct loans for housing construction to defense workers and families of servicemen when such loans cannot be had from private sources. The legal rate of interest—4% to veterans and 4¾% to non-veterans—remains in force.

"So long as the large investors withhold their mortgage purchase commitments, these loans will be made by the government," Reuther said. "There seems to be no reason now for the mortgage bankers to continue their sit-down strike for higher interest rates."

Senate Unit May Report Seaway Bill

THE SENATE Foreign Relations Committee has promised to consider legislation on the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project "at the earliest opportunity," it was learned last week.

Supporters of the seaway nearly got it put to a vote Aug. 31 when they offered the measure as a "rider" to the Foreign Aid Bill. This was the first time in 3½ years that seaway legislation had gotten to the floor of the Senate. Opponents have kept it bottled up in committee throughout that period.

Sen. Aiken (R. Vt.) offered the amendment, which was co-sponsored by Sen. Moody (D. Mich.). After 40 minutes of debate, the "rider" was withdrawn.

But, meanwhile, its supporters obtained assurances from the Foreign Relations Committee that it will take action on the project. Moody charged that the committee previously had been "blocking" consideration and preventing the measure from reaching the floor.

A similar situation exists in the House, where several seaway bills have been killed by the Public Works Committee. The Senate's last previous action on the seaway proposal was in February, 1948, when the Senate voted, 57 to 30, to send it back to committee.

During the Senate debate on the "rider" Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), who has been the chief critic of other public works appropriations on the grounds that they are "pork barrel" projects, made a strong plea for the St. Lawrence project.

"It is the best public works project to come before the Senate," he said.

Douglas complained that the Great Lakes states are treated as "provinces" by the Senate when it comes to public works. He pointed out that the committees which decide such matters are run by Senators from the Mississippi River Valley, the mountain states and the Pacific Northwest.

Murray Backs Plea For Blood Donors

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has asked all CIO national unions, councils and regional directors to cooperate in a nation-wide blood donor program.

Murray acted in response to an urgent plea from the Dept. of Defense for blood contributions to help save the lives of members of the armed forces serving in Korea.

The program is conducted by the Dept. of Defense with the cooperation of the Red Cross. It seeks to obtain donations totalling 2.8 million pints of whole blood in the next 10 months.

Murray said it is essential "that not only every local, but every individual member of the CIO be encouraged to participate."

Full details of the program may be obtained from the Industrial Services Branch, Office of Public Information, Office of the Secy. of Defense, Room 2A-858, The Pentagon, Washington 25, D. C.

Senate Tax Bill Easy On Rich In Spite Of All The Red Ink

THE U. S. government went more than $3.6 billion in the red in July and August.

It didn't seem to matter to the Senate Finance Committee, which is supposed to be finding a way to overcome this deficit.

Sen. George (D. Ga.), chairman of the committee which is winding up its hatchet job on President Truman's request for a $10.7 billion tax increase, announced last week that he will oppose any increase above $6 billion.

George said that his committee would report a bill next week "in the neighborhood of" $6 billion and he will oppose all efforts to expand it.

This means that the Senate committee, meeting behind closed doors, has chopped more than $1.2 billion from the inadequate measure voted by the House. It has cut the President's request by about $5 billion.

Most of the Senate cuts were made at the expense of the low and middle income groups, since they will carry a higher portion of the total tax burden than they would have under the House proposals.

The Senate measure will go much easier on corporations and individuals earning high incomes, but it will leave the tax on low and middle incomes at almost the same increased levels voted by the House.

Meanwhile, three Democratic Senators have announced that they will launch a drive to increase the tax program to at least the House level when the Senate bill comes to the floor. They are Sens. Humphrey (Minn.), Douglas (Ill.) and Lehman (N. Y.).

SENATOR HUMPHREY pointed out that the long Congressional delay in enacting the new tax measure has already cut sharply into the tax revenue for this year. He said that even the $7.2 billion House increase would bring in only about $4.8 billion this fiscal year, since tax increases cannot be made retroactive.

The government is now spending at nearly twice the rate of a year ago, due to the stepping up of the rearmament program, and defense expenditures will continue to increase over the next two years.

The announcement that the government had spent more than $3.6 billion more than it received in the first two months of this fiscal year was made by the Treasury Dept. on Sept. 4.

Senate Tax Bill Rankles Taft

The meat-ax job his colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee has done to the President's request for $10.7 billion in increased taxes is too much for even Sen. Taft (R. O.).

Taft believes the committee bill won't balance the budget and that a tax boost of $7.2 billion, as voted by the House, would be "about right" to cover it he said last week.

"Perhaps the most dubious" of the committee changes, Taft suggested, were those reducing the estimated yield from personal income taxes. Ignoring the fact that the biggest cut in revenue was made by reducing excess profits taxes, Taft said that a general sales tax, endorsed by big business groups, seems to him to be "the only solution" to the still higher taxes needed to pay for the mobilization program.

Bill Would Admit 500,000 To U.S.

Rep. Javits, Liberal-Republican from New York City, introduced a bill on Sept. 12 authorizing the admission of 500,000 foreign workers, "possessing skills needed in the U. S.," into this country in the next five years.

The measure would give priority to the surplus workers of European nations cooperating in the Economic Recovery Plan and the Mutual Security Program.

The Intl. Labor Organization, Javits pointed out, estimates there are between three and four million such workers in Austria, Western Germany, The Netherlands, Italy and Greece, and has announced plans for a migration of 1.75 million of them in the next five years.

The U. S. should provide the leadership by taking a fair share, he added, and at the same time relieve the strain on manpower here caused by the defense mobilization program.

After 2 Years' Delay

Slugging Gets Lawyer Penalty From NLRB

AFTER NEARLY two years of thinking about it, the National Labor Relations Board finally took action last week against an oil company attorney who tried a case by slugging the board attorney.

By a three to two vote, it decided to suspend his practicing before the board or its agents, directly or indirectly, for a period of two years.

The offending attorney is John L. Camp, Houston, Tex., who formerly was a county judge at Abilene, Tex., and once was a football star at Hardin-Simmons College.

Camp was representing the Ohio Oil Co. on Oct. 26, 1949, at a hearing before Trial Examiner Henry J. Kent at Rankin, Tex., into charges by the CIO Oil Workers that the firm had fired two of their members because of union activity. The company also was represented by two additional attorneys.

Wilson was attacking the credibility of a company witness, according to the testimony and Camp's own admission, when the company lawyer stepped up behind him, swung him around, shoved him back several feet and then knocked him down with a blow to the jaw.

Then he jumped on the prone NLRB lawyer, straddled his body and hit him in the eye.

By this time one of his own colleagues pulled Camp away. He made no further effort to attack Wilson.

". . . This Board has the authority and the duty," said the NLRB order suspending Camp, "to protect its proceedings and the public interest against conduct of the character here found.

"While we have determined not to impose the penalty of permanent disbarment from practice before this agency, the Board cannot condone Camp's shocking behavior.

"Although Camp was angered by Wilson's trial technique and the assault was the result of a sudden loss of temper rather than a premeditated act, Camp's misconduct nevertheless was wholly unbecoming to an attorney and showed a lack of respect for the Board's agents and its processes."

CHAIRMAN Paul H. Herzog and Board Members Abe Murdock and Paul L. Styles constituted the majority which voted the punishment. Board Member John M. Houston thought Camp should have been suspended for five years instead of two. Board Member James J. Reynolds said Camp's exclusion from further participation in the Ohio Oil case, which had been decreed by the trial examiner, was "a sufficiently corrective remedy."

WSB Limit Held No Firing Alibi

Strikers can't be fired on the excuse that the union demands exceed Wage Stabilization Board ceilings.

So ruled George Bott, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, in issuing a formal complaint of unfair labor practice against an unnamed arc products firm.

The workers struck two weeks after the general wage order was issued, and the company argued that the strikers were trying to compel it to grant an illegal increase.

Bott ruled the strikers were merely trying to force the firm to negotiate the increase, since payment would have to wait on WSB approval. The firm fired three workers, and Bott's ruling followed.

WSB wage limits on increases are no barrier to collective bargaining, Bott declared, since any above-ceiling agreements must be submitted to the WSB for an okay.

13th Constitutional Convention Of CIO Is Summoned To Meet In New York Nov. 5

ONLY A STRONG America can defeat Communism, Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey said last week in issuing the call for the 13th constitutional convention of the CIO.

"We must use that strength not only to build, extend and defend our own way of life but also to strengthen all other free peoples who stand with us in the fight for freedom and security."

Powerful factions in the country that place their own self-interest ahead of the national welfare were hit.

"Through their manipulations they would inflict upon the American people unprecedented inflation," the call stated.

Congress has been "impotent" under assaults of profit seekers, and an "unholy alliance" in Congress has actually lent itself to undermining the confidence of the American people in their own government, the call said.

"We realize that a real military defense program can be carried out only through the toil of working people," Murray and Carey said. "We have demonstrated over the years our willingness to accept our just share of the sacrifices that must be made to build such a defense, and to aid the peoples of other free lands in doing likewise.

"We insist that with equality of sacrifice our economy can be maintained side by side with an adequate defense program and an adequate standard of living for all our people."

The call asked for full cooperation of free workers everywhere through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

AIDS CONVENTION: Anna Balaban, office secretary at the New York City headquarters of the CIO Amalgamated Lithographers of America, is holding a statistical book which will be distributed to the delegates to the union's convention to be held this week in Dallas, Tex. P. S.: Too bad she won't be at the convention.

GOP Tories Make Bow Toward Civil Rights

By MILTON PLUMB

WITH AN eye on the 1952 elections, but with an almost 100% certainty that Congress will adjourn before it takes any action on their proposal, a number of Republican Senators last week went through the gestures of moving to make it easier to stop Senate filibusters.

The real issue, of course, is civil rights legislation. Dixiecrat Senators always filibuster President Truman's proposal, strongly endorsed in the platforms of both major parties, to death whenever it comes to the Senate floor.

Although the Republican move at least broke the silence which has surrounded civil rights legislation throughout the entire life of the 82nd Congress, not one Capitol Hill observer could be found who believed there was any chance for adopting the proposal before adjournment.

Proposal Doomed

Legislative experts point out that the tardiness of the move foredooms it to almost certain neglect. Many also question the sincerity of GOP sponsorship.

These observers point out that the Republicans have really managed to control the 82nd Congress because of the tacit understanding on this matter between the GOP leadership and Southern Democrats.

In return for shelving civil rights legislation, and the necessary preliminary of changing the Senate rules so that it might come to a vote, the GOP has obtained Dixiecrat support for its anti-administration program.

The nominal Democratic majority was thus destroyed and the control of Congress fell into the hands of a Dixiegop coalition strong enough to shelve or wreck most of the liberal, forward-looking legislation called for in the President's program.

Moreover, the new legislation, introduced Sept. 10 by Republican Leader Wherry (Neb.), actually is much weaker than both of two resolutions sponsored by liberal GOP and Dixiecrat Senators which have been pending since last spring.

Wherry's move came just three days after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People announced that Sen. Hayden (D. Ariz.) had informed it that the Senate Rules Committee will open hearings on the more liberal measures Oct. 1.

Another Proposal

The other, sponsored by 11 Democrats, would permit the shutting off of debate by either a two-thirds or majority vote, the latter being sufficient 14 days after the action had been requested.

Wherry's resolution, on the other hand, would require a straight two-thirds majority of members present to shut off discussion. Present rules, in effect since 1949, require the vote of 64 Senators, or a constitutional two-thirds of the entire membership. Thus any Senator in effect votes against closing debate merely by being absent.

Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) and Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.) commended Wherry on his resolution. Ives said that it was a "definite step in the right direction." Neither referred to the other, more effective measures, which the Wherry proposal would replace.

GOP Political Gesture

The clinching argument in support of the contention that the GOP move was merely a political gesture by which the Republicans hope to recapture part of the Negro vote they have lost by stalling on civil rights matters in this session of Congress was the indifference with which it was received by the Southern Democrats.

Several Dixiecrat senators on the floor when Wherry introduced his measures merely sat back and said nothing.

Congress is still scheduled to adjourn on October 1.

Murray Prize To Be Given At CSC Banquet

THE TENTH anniversary of the CIO Community Services Committee will be marked by a banquet in Detroit on Tuesday, October 2.

The banquet will also serve to highlight the presentation of the committee's "Philip Murray Award" to a leader in American life for outstanding public service.

CIO Pres. Murray will address the gathering.

The banquet will be held at the Masonic Temple in Detroit. Banquet reservations can be made through the national CIO-CSC offices or through the Wayne County CIO Council in Detroit.

Earlier on the same day, CIO's executive officers and vice presidents will meet in the motor city. Site of their session will be the Auto Workers' handsome new headquarters, "Solidarity House."

Holland Named To MGA Board

PENNSYLVANIA State Sen. Elmer J. Holland has been elected to serve on the board of directors of the Military Government Association, which is comprised of former Army and civilian personnel in AMG capacities during World War II.

Holland is a CIO representative, working out of the Pittsburgh regional office. He was first elected to the Pennsylvania Senate in 1942 and has served continuously since that time.

The Military Government Association was formed after the last war to keep former personnel abreast of current developments in that field.

National in scope, it now has chapters in most of the large cities in this country, in Germany and Japan.

Holland is a veteran of two World Wars, serving in the AEF in World War I and as a major in the Allied Military Government in Europe during the last war.

Senate Unit Warns

Too Many Defense Contracts Held By Too Few Firms

A FAR greater concentration of defense contracts than any government figures previously indicated has been disclosed by the Senate Small Business Committee.

Unless this trend is reversed, it may "entrench monopoly beyond hope of dislodgement in our time," the committee warned.

In a report on its findings submitted by Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.), the committee said:

- Ten large firms have been handed 40% of the total dollar volume of defense contracts awarded since the beginning of the Battle for Korea in June, 1950.
- Fifty companies received almost two-thirds of the dollar volume of such contracts.
- The top firms have not cut back civilian production to make up for the defense contracts. As a result they "have been increasing backlogs of unfilled defense orders."
- Many small firms already have facilities available to handle the work which is piling up while the big companies wait for new plant facilities, being built at the public's expense through rapid tax amortization, to be completed.

THE REPORT noted that the present concentration is much greater than during World War II, when the top ten firms handled 30% of the dollar value of contracts, and 100 firms handled two-thirds of the volume.

It warned that the present situation could force many smaller firms out of business and thus leave the country without a substantial part of our industrial strength if the need for all-out mobilization should arise.

"The long-range effect of such concentration of defense contracts," the report points out, "will be equally as disastrous to our free-enterprise system as the short-range harm to the mobilization effort."

50 Corporations Are Given 64% Of Defense Contracts

Improve Our Schools

Close to 30 million kids are trooping back to school this month.

What sort of an education will they get? By and large, it will be a good one—better, perhaps, than in almost any other nation throughout the world.

But "by and large" does not help the millions of American kids who are not getting the education they deserve as junior citizens of a great democracy. In some sections of the country, the amount spent on each pupil would scarcely be enough to teach a bright puppy a bag full of tricks. Decrepit schoolhouses, underpaid teachers, insufficient and outworn textbooks don't combine to provide the sort of schooling we want in this country.

As CIO Pres. Murray points out in the article on this page, many states simply "cannot afford the money to bring their schools up to modern standards. A federal program to help them build new classrooms is desperately needed."

Unfortunately, the federal aid-to-education proposal has been in the deep-freeze for more than two years. And so long as a majority in Congress continues to regard every program for social improvement as "waste" or "extravagance," action is unlikely. School children don't have votes—but their parents do, and they ought to be clamoring for help for the nation's school system.

That system is working under the heaviest burden in decades, and there is every indication that the school population will continue to grow for many years. We should be doing something now to meet not only our present education problems but those that will come inevitably in the next few years.

A Great Public Servant

General George C. Marshall, who has just resigned as Secretary of Defense, has earned the deep respect of the great mass of American citizens and a solid place in our history.

As the man who was most responsible for building up the strength of the American army in World War II; as Secretary of State during a difficult post-war period; and as Secretary of Defense during the latest international crisis, George Marshall worked in a spirit of modesty, humility and cooperation.

A professional soldier, he has a lively understanding of the relationship between the military and the civilian government in our democracy—a relationship not so clearly appreciated by another five-star general.

The pea-shooter propaganda attacks of the McCarthys and the fanatical "China lobby" group made no dent in the reputation of General Marshall. On the contrary, a man is sometimes known by the enemies he keeps.

So, in his well-deserved retirement, General Marshall has the best wishes and the thanks of the American public.

What'll You Have?

General MacArthur, in his most recent speech at Cleveland, went out of his way to praise Senator Taft, the Ohio isolationist.

But just a few paragraphs further on, the general criticized the United Nations structure as too weak—though it is the Taft crowd which resents the limited powers given to the UN and which now bemoans the loss of American "sovereignty" to the international body.

Still a few paragraphs later in that same oration, General MacArthur criticized the additional powers granted to the federal government in recent years—and called for "states rights" as vigorously as a 1938-model Republican.

Perhaps, in his next public appearance, the General will explain just what he has in mind.

Our American Schools

By PHILIP MURRAY

(The following article was prepared this summer for the Central Press Association by CIO Pres. Murray.)

THE HIGH standard of American education has always been the glory and the strength of this Republic. The people of the United States, throughout our country's history, have always tried to assure the best possible school training for American youngsters.

We know that a democracy cannot be kept strong if it rests on a foundation of ignorance. We know that adequate school training is imperative if the mature citizens of tomorrow are to handle intelligently the grave problems of our twentieth century world.

So, we can rejoice in what we have accomplished in the building of the American school system, but we cannot afford to be smug.

WE CANNOT gloss over the fact that during the past 15 years, American schools have been afflicted by an increasingly serious financial crisis.

We must take resolute steps to end this situation and to guarantee a second-to-none school system.

The facts show that more money must be spent on our educational system—for new and better schools, for new and better text books, for more adequate teachers' salaries, for more teachers.

School enrollment in 1950 was almost 27 million. By 1958, the experts tell us it will be almost 34 million.

Do we have enough adequate school facilities to meet this increasing enrollment? The answer, unfortunately, is negative. We in the CIO believe that if we are to give a decent education to our school population, we must be prepared to spend billions of dollars to obtain it. Such spending is not "extravagance"—it is sound investment in the future of democracy.

Many of the states cannot afford the money to bring their schools up to modern standards. A Federal program to help them build new classrooms is desperately needed.

In addition, there is a painfully wide fluctuation in the standards of American education throughout the country.

Ten out of every 100 children attend schools where the community spends $220 per year on each child. Another 10 out of every 100 children attend schools in areas where only $25 is spent per child each year. I know that $25 will not purchase decent education for any American boy or girl.

There is another blight that must be removed. Seventeen states and the District of Columbia maintain segregated school systems for white and Negro children. A government report for the years 1945-46 showed that in those 18 school systems, $104.66 was spent for the education of white children—and only $57.57 for the education of colored children. That does not add up to our concept of equal education for every young American.

THE FEDERAL school lunch program also needs improvement. In Charlotte, N. C., for example, authorities report 300 children a day come to school without breakfast and without money for lunch. Obviously, healthy minds do not function in hungry bodies.

If we are to make our schools meet decent standards, we must make the teaching profession more attractive to qualified people. In too many communities, school teachers are vastly underpaid. Young men and women who once regarded the teaching profession as an ideal career are turning to better-paid-work—and as a result, a shortage of teachers is becoming acute. Teachers' salaries must be increased.

There is one other major menace to our free school system—the threat of persecution and recrimination from reactionary pressure groups.

In many communities, their attacks are undermining the school system, and are preventing the teaching of realistic courses about life in our America.

Unless parents and community leaders are alert in other areas, these same malicious groups will spread their campaigns to other cities.

I am proud of the fact that the CIO has always stood in the forefront of the fight for better education, and for adequate funds for education. To do less, would be to betray the hopes of America's school children, today and tomorrow.

Teachers Ask Public To Help Improve Schools

THE COUNTRY'S largest professional organization of teachers, in its annual report to the public, asks the people to help it make the schools better.

"Educators ask the public for impartial evaluation of the school and for aid in continuous adjustment of the educational program to the needs of youth," says the annual report of the National Education Association, prepared by Executive Secy. Willard E. Givens.

"The doors of new worlds of knowledge are opening. Whether the oncoming generation of Americans enters them depends upon our schools.

"The doors to human freedoms are being closed by the ruthless hands of totalitarianism. Whether they are closed here will depend upon the character and ability and vision of those who occupy seats in our classrooms today. The decisions we make in this decade will not be trifling ones."

At the same time the association warned against extremists who use the cry of economy to conceal their efforts to dictate what shall not be taught in the schools. At the same time, the educators "look with some concern upon the criticism that education costs too much."

"Proposals are made to reduce the cost of education by stripping the educational program 'to the fundamentals,'" the report says.

"This is the same proposal made by those who oppose adjustment of the school to our times or who wish to use the school as a medium of propaganda for their own special political or economic theories.

"THOSE WHO advocate 'going back to the fundamentals' usually are referring to the tools of education—the three R's. Even those who would permit the use of these tools for learning purposes would restrict learning subjects, such as history and geography, to the memorizing of facts—often to facts of long ago.

"If these critics oppose the United Nations they would prefer that the story of its organization and activities be omitted from school texts. If they are opposed to the income tax they may brand teaching about the income tax as 'un-American' or 'communistic.'

"If social security is anathema to them, school texts should either condemn it or omit it entirely. If the Tennessee Valley Authority is inconsistent with their economic theories, they may characterize schools that teach about it as 'red' or 'socialistic.'

"THEY WOULD withhold information of which they do not approve and cut back education below the thinking level. To do so would destroy the usefulness of the school in preparing youth for intelligent understanding of what their country has done and is doing.

"The latter of course are extremists. Frequently clamorous, they are few in number.

"Unfortunately they are sometimes joined by those who are taut with the fears and tensions affecting to some degree all who watch with apprehension the threats against the American way of life, but who would never think of destroying that way of life themselves by wrecking the school, which is its cornerstone."

Biz Tax Blues Belied By Dividend Payments

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THE HEAVY earnings of business are "fiction," according to the headlines in the Wall Street Journal, which says, "Most corporate profit reports for 1951 so far have to be refigured."

The argument is, that earnings have been figured on present taxes, without allowing for the higher taxes that business knew were coming. The further argument is that profits will be cut, and therefore dividends will be lower.

The very day before that Wall Street Journal article, the Commerce Dept. reported that cash dividend payments from January through July were 13% or $4.141 billion above the same period a year ago—when taxes were lower.

In July alone, dividend payments were up $5 million from last July, although July is normally a light month for dividend payments.

Nor do investors believe the crying of business, for the very same day the Wall Street Journal article appeared, stock market transactions hit a fourth straight new 1951 high.

Business Week reported that "despite signs of inflation and bad corporate income tax news, industrials are making new highs."

SHARES of Aluminum Co., for instance were up $6.75 from the 1951 low; American Smelting shares were up $7.12; Superior Oil of California $7; Standard Oil of California $4.62.

Oil stocks shattered records right and left. Phillips Petroleum, which earned $2.46 a share the first six months, was estimated to earn $5.50 for 1951 as a whole.

Figures for similar period for Plymouth Oil were $2.03 and $4.25; for Standard Oil of California, $2.96 and $6.00; for Standard of New Jersey, $2.96 and $7.50.

Oil company profits for the first six months of 1951 were 42% above the same period in 1950. Dividends in the same period were up 28%. "Profits in the second half will be another record breaker," according to Business Week.

Profits have been concealed from the public view by the avalanche of stock-splitting. And there has been a profit on the stock-splitting itself. In stock-splitting, a corporation takes your share of stock, worth, say, $10, and gives you instead, two new shares, worth $5 each.

Suppose its dividend was $1 on the old $10 share. On the new shares, the dividend is only 50c. You still collect $1, but it looks better to say that the dividend payment was only 50c per share.

As to profit-making on stock-splitting, when such a plan is announced, investors take it as a sign that the company is in fine shape. The value of the stock goes up.

As Business Week explains, "by the time the operation has been completed, the going price of the new shares normally add up to something considerably better than the value of the old share that sired them."

BUSINESS Week reports that "many stock market investors—as well as Wall Street cynics—have got the idea that a lot of splits have been put through to obscure larger earnings per share on the old capitalization and to deemphasize large dividends."

As to why, Business Week says that these cynics reason that "in the good old days, most companies were proud to report high earnings and dividends per share. It made little difference whether their shares were widely distributed or whether, because of the price, they could be bought only by the wealthy investor.

"It's a different story today. And it's not only because there aren't so many 'wealthy investors.' Most companies simply don't want to see their shares in the high-price bracket or paying high (in point of dollars) dividends.

"The idea now is to get both down to lower levels, without hurting stockholders. This, it's figured, will attract fewer brickbats from labor unions and anti-business politicians."

Plan For Jobs Lauded

Puerto Rico's Operation Bootstrap Endorsed By Stuart Chase

STUART CHASE, the noted American economist, has taken a good look at Puerto Rico's Operation Bootstrap—and likes it.

Operation Bootstrap is the plan Puerto Rico has devised to provide jobs for its teeming population—American citizens—so they can feed, clothe and house themselves on a higher scale than the bare subsistence level that has characterized the fertile island's past.

Its key is industrialization and a shift of a large part of the working force from agriculture to the factory and service trades. It has the support of all branches of organized labor, including the General Confederation of Labor, a CIO affiliate.

The results of Chase's visit to Puerto Rico have been published by the National Planning Association, a non-profit, non-political organization devoted to planning, as a booklet, "Operation Bootstrap in Puerto Rico."

Chase described Puerto Rico as a proving ground for some of the things that must be done in other underdeveloped countries under the Point Four program.

It has demonstrated, he said, the effectiveness of a development program in which business and government forget ideologies and cooperate on the basis of mutual respect.

It also demonstrates, he said, the importance of well-trained government leaders and officials of unquestioned integrity in making an industrial development program work. Chase and everybody else who has had anything to do with the program, he wrote, have found nothing but honesty and competence on the part of the government officials with whom they must deal.

The government, as part of the plan, has erected a number of factories and similar buildings which have been sold or leased to industries now operating at a profit and employing workers who receive, for Puerto Rico, reasonably good wages, Chase found.

Other industries have built their own factories, on a basis of tax exemption for 10 years, to provide goods for island consumption and employment for island citizens.

More industries where the capital investment per worker is high are needed, Chase found, before wages can go up enough to generate the purchasing power the island must have.

CHASE dismisses the role of organized labor in Puerto Rico rather lightly. One does not hear much of unions there, he said, the chief reason seeming to be that "the Governor's program is oriented too sharply toward the goals of workers everywhere—better status, better living standards, housing, education, minimum wages, health services—that it precludes acrimonious labor agitation."

One of the reasons organized labor is behind the plan, he wrote, is that it is careful not to entice industry from continental U. S. on the promise of sweated labor.

"The idea is a steady increase in productivity and wages," he wrote, "to an ultimate maximum which will keep a differential for mild climate and other natural factors.

"Wages will undoubtedly come up in Puerto Rico over the years as they have come up in South Carolina and Georgia."

Alice Calkin, Aided By CWA, Succumbs

Alice Calkin, a member of the CIO Communications Workers in Centralia, Ill., is dead.

The telephone operator, whose fellow workers contributed $1500 to send her to the famed Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., for treatment, died in Fairfield, Ill.

She had been ill since last October when eye trouble developed. Cause of death was listed as "deterioration of the nerves."

Standard Oil Of N. J. Has $3.5 Billion, 332 Affiliates

THE STANDARD Oil Co. of New Jersey has more assets than any American industrial company which publishes a financial statemen — $3,526,043,000 worth, according to the Federal Trade Commission.

FTC last week made public the list of corporations ranged according to size on the basis of their total assets in 1948.

In second spot was General Motors, with total assets of $2,957,770,000. At the bottom of the list stood the Vanadium-Alloys Steel Co., whose assets were a trifling $8,918,000.

Standard of New Jersey, in addition to top ranking, had more affiliates and subsidiaries than any other firm listed—332 of them. On the other hand, 189 companies on the list had no affiliates or subsidiaries.

The 100 largest corporations had an average of 35 each. The 200 largest had a total of 4722 subsidiaries and affiliates, or 62.5% of all. Five hundred firms—50% of those listed—had 6281 of the affiliates and subsidiaries, or 82.1%.

In announcing the listing, the FTC said it will "provide a means of identifying the ramifying interests" of the large business community.

DELEGATES to the 14th constitutional convention of the Minnesota CIO Council, meeting last week in Minneapolis, decided to do something about the cost of living.

They instructed the council's Research and Legislation Dept. to investigate the possibility of establishing and operating a co-operative buying service, and advised local unions to establish functioning co-op committees to provide such service to their members.

The resolution was one of several on co-ops. Another set up a program to break the monopoly hold on foods and to assist co-ops and individual farmers to build rural-dispersed grain storage facilities.

The convention in addition set up a statewide cooperative committee to bring about an even closer relationship between the co-op movement and the labor movement.

The committee, which will include all members of the State CIO executive board, was charged with organizing institutes to improve understanding and promote working relations between the two groups.

Other resolutions:

Commended CIO members of the former United Labor Policy Committee and expressed regret at withdrawal of the AFL from it.

Directed the State executive board to establish a method of determining the jurisdiction of national and international unions within the State.

Condemned enforcement of wage controls until legislation providing true equality of sacrifice is enacted. Attacked State tax legislation on the ground that it has wiped out wage increases and opposed any form of consumption tax.

Proposals to increase the per capita tax to the Council by either 5c or 3c were defeated.

Other resolutions:

ASKED THE State Legislature to amend the unemployment compensation law to provide benefits to striking workers, and to farm workers injured on the job.

Demanded that social security payments be doubled.

Opposed the proposed federal amendment to place a limit on taxes as a device to shift even more of the cost of operating the government from the wealthy to those in low and middle income groups.

Demanded an effective price control program.

Robert E. Hess, St. Paul, of the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, defeated William E. Richter, president of the Duluth CIO Council and a member of the Steelworkers, for the presidency. Hess succeeds Glenn E. Peterson, Duluth, a Steelworker, who was not a candidate for reelection.

RODNEY C. Jacobson, Minneapolis, of the Newspaper Guild, was reelected secretary-treasurer. He defeated Ray Novack, Duluth, of the Steelworkers.

Speakers included Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers; Sam B. Eubanks, executive vice president of the Newspaper Guild; Jack Kroll, director of the National CIO Political Action Committee; Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO industrial union councils; Ted Silvey, CIO special representative on leave with the National Production Authority, and Reps. Eugene J. McCarthy and Roy Wier, both Democrats.

Mrs. Bess McPheeters was reelected president of the Women's Auxiliary. Also named to additional terms were Mrs. Caroline Beaudin, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. Carrie Spotts, PAC director.

$112,000 Given Flood Victims By CIO Unions

CONTRIBUTIONS from CIO unions for the relief of members in the Midwest area devastated by the flood which poured its muddy waters over homes, farms and industrial areas in July, now total more than $112,000, reports Luther M. Slinkard, finance chairman of the CIO Emergency Flood Relief Committee in Kansas City.

Slinkard is area director for the CIO United Auto Workers.

Three of the CIO's big internationals together with their locals, contributed in excess of $20,000 each, Slinkard's report shows. They are: Steelworkers, $26,500; Auto Workers, $25,000 and Packinghouse Workers, $22,700. All had many members who lost everything in the floods.

Help Requested To Speed NLRB Election

THE Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee last week called on all members of CIO to aid in signing up agents in the Prudential Insurance Co.

IAWOC-CIO was formed in April, 1950, after the United Office & Professional Workers Union was expelled from CIO because of the pro-communist activities of its officers.

While the new CIO insurance union is only slightly more than a year old, it already has eight insurance companies under contract including the huge John Hancock Co. where a precedent-setting contract was recently negotiated.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, is chairman of the IAWOC-CIO and will direct its activities while the union is in an "organizing committee" status.

The Prudential agents were originally in the left-wing UOPWA. In 1949, before the new CIO insurance union was formed, they voted to drop UOPWA and affiliated with the AFL.

Now the CIO is seeking an election whereby the Prudential agents may leave the AFL, which has failed to do a job for them, and join the IAWOC.

To the left is an ad containing a blank for Prudential agents to sign authorizing an election. CIO members are asked to mail the signed authorization cards to the National CIO office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

CALLING ALL CIO MEMBERS

Does a Prudential Insurance agent call at your home? If so, you can help him get increased compensation, job security and many other benefits.

The Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, has eight insurance companies under contract—including the huge John Hancock Co.

Prudential is next.

The AFL has done nothing for the Prudential agent. CIO can and will.

Get your Prudential agent to sign this election authorization card and you mail it to us.

Union Counselling Courses At Milwaukee

The Community Services Committee of the Milwaukee (Wis.) County Industrial Union Council will begin a series of classes in union counselling at Milwaukee on Oct. 1, with daytime and evening sessions.

Eight two-hour weekly sessions will be held to train counsellors in making use of the facilities open to help union members solve problems which do not come under regular union procedures. The classes are under the general direction of CIO staff Rep. John P. Nichols and will be taught by experts from Community Chest agencies.

Kansas City GOP Paper Urges Congress To Aid Flood Victims

THE Kansas City (Mo.) Star, a rock-ribbed Republican newspaper with a resounding devotion to rugged individualism, apparently finds the shoe on the other foot as a result of the devastating floods that struck its circulation area in July.

In an editorial on Sept. 11, it bitterly attacked Congress for failure to act on the flood aid program. In the past it has sometimes described Federal help for large segments of the population, especially workers, as "statism," "socialistic," etc.

The editorial reads:

Judging by actions, which count more than nice words, Congress doesn't intend to bother with the flood aid program, at least until next January.

Scores of thousands of people have lost everything they own. The agricultural economy of the Nation's breadbasket is disrupted. Businesses are closed down. Industry is crippled.

Thousands of industrial workers are uprooted. But, if actions mean anything, Congress isn't worried. It is in no hurry to do anything now—if at all.

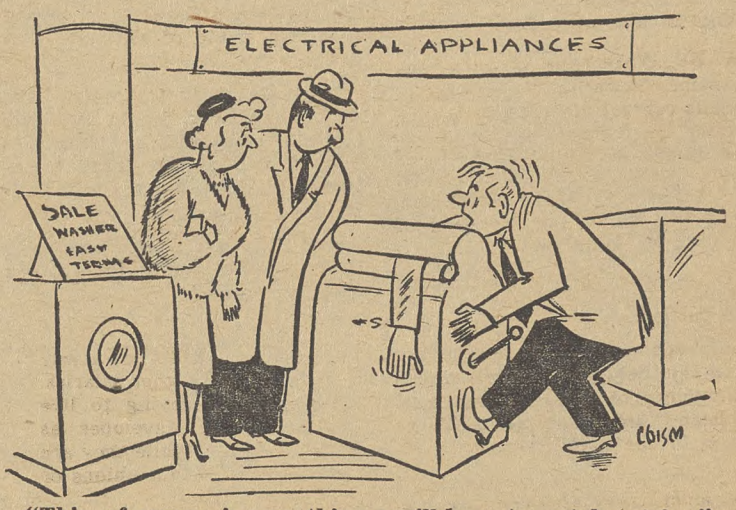
Plainly, an aid program, to mean anything, must come immediately. Get the wheels to turning, re-establish the workers, give the farmers of the rich bottom lands a chance to plan for next year. Restore confidence by a practical flood insurance plan.

Congress doesn't hesitate to spend billions on billions anywhere in the friendly or semi-friendly parts of the world. For years Congress has piled up the tax load by every kind of real or theoretical human service and never blinked an eye.

NOW IT faces a perfectly terrible situation in its own heartland and it is busy with other things, suddenly very conservative and cautious.

The flood damage is so far-reaching that it affects the economy of the whole Nation. But Congress is busy. Family savings and businesses have been wiped out as in no other disaster in American experience, but Congress has no time to fool with little, dinky 400-million-dollar appropriations. It is intent on scores of billions.

What are our own Missouri and Kansas delegations doing? We've had enough kind words. What we need is action.



"This, of course, is something you'll have to watch out for."

N. Y. State CIO Hits Kremlin and Reaction At Home

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE New York State CIO Council held its 12th annual convention at an upstate resort—but its actions were directed at San Francsico, Washington and Albany.

To San Francisco, where a majority of the world's top diplomats were gathered for the signing of the Japanese peace treaty, the council sent its strong statement of encouragement to world democracy in the struggle against dictatorship.

To bring its words before the treaty signers, the council bought a full page advertisement in the New York Times—whose airplane edition was being delivered in large quantities to San Francisco.

Working on a tight schedule, the council placed the ad at the beginning of its three-day session at Lake Placid, then phoned in last-minute minor changes to the Times advertising department.

The ad—signed by Council Pres. Louis Hollander and Secy.-Treas. Harold Garno—carried full text of the Empire State CIO statement, "For World Peace."

"No sudden switch in the Kremlin line can be permitted to sway the free world from the line we have drawn against aggression," the council said in the ad.

"The Kremlin's blackmail and aggression are threatening the very survival of democratic, free civilization . . . The free nations of the world have finally been forced to show Russia the convincing sign: 'They shall not pass.'

"We have learned through long and bitter experience that as long as dictatorships have command of the people and the resources necessary to make war, democracy must be prepared fully and at all times to fight in defense of its existence.

"We must not deviate from this course in response to any sidewindings in Moscow policy."

TOWARD Washington, the convention forwarded a demand for better control of rising prices, for better tax legislation, and improved social welfare laws.

In his keynote speech to the 900 delegates gathered at the lakeside Palace Theater, Hollander declared:

"The responsibility for the retreat in this field lies squarely on the shoulders of the reactionary Republican-Dixiecrat combination which is in the majority in Congress.

"We must carry the campaign into our communities, against those Congressmen who voted against the people on these issues. They must be made to answer for their votes in behalf of inflation."

AND TO THE state capital at Albany—where GOP Gov. Tom Dewey and a GOP-controlled legislature hold sway—the council devoted bitter criticism for the handling of New York State problems.

In a report on Albany activities, Garno commented that the 1951 Legislature "established a record of political irresponsibility which exceeds anything within the recent history of the state."

Noting that none of the objectives outlined by the State CIO a year earlier had been carried forward, Garno said that "on the contrary, the movement was backward.

"Big business was firmly in the saddle and the Legislature was kept with its back turned to its responsibilities."

Most bitter of the CIO complaints was lodged against the Legislature's passage of the Hughes-Brees unemployment insurance bill.

That bill transformed the compensation fund into a bookkeeper's maze—from which the biggest corporations in the state will get sizeable refunds.

In two major organizing resolutions, the council voiced support of the Natl. Association of Broadcasting Engineers and Technicians in its campaign to organize radio, television and film technical workers; and the council went all-out in backing the efforts of the CIO Transport Workers to organize New York City's thousands of under-paid policemen.

TWU Pres. Quill, pointing out that 62 police forces have been organized by AFL unions throughout the country, said New York cops are flocking into the transport union.

Scorning city cries of "poverty," Quill said that when the pressure is on, the city always finds a way to raise money for higher salaries. Cops, he said, are trying to live on take-home pay envelopes as low as $31 a week—while they are denied the right to join unions or to get off-duty jobs.

Charging a scandal in the city's purchase for $8.5 million of a branch of the bankrupt Long Island Railroad, Quill suggested the money could have been better spent to improve conditions for the city's policemen and other public servants.

During the three-day session, delegates heard speeches from Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing and a number of leading CIO officers.

They included Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers; CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood; and Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Rieve, reporting that he had talked with CIO Pres. Murray a few hours earlier, denied newspaper reports of the imminent retirement of the CIO official. The same theme was voiced by other convention guest speakers.

Carey, predicting new victories for the CIO Electrical Union, which he heads, lashed out at sections of big business which do business with Communist unions for a "few additional dollars" profits.

HE CALLED for a forward-looking American foreign policy, and criticized deals with Franco or other reactionary dictators.

Haywood, making his first convention appearance since an operation last summer, hailed the work of the State CIO Council and of CIO unions throughout the nation.

He derided claims that the United Labor Policy Committee had stood in the way of organic unity between CIO and AFL.

Hollander and Garno were reelected without opposition.

Empire State Labor Unity To Continue

DESPITE the break-up of the United Labor Policy Committee through the withdrawal of national AFL leaders, united action will continue between CIO and AFL in New York State.

Delegates applauded a message from Secy.-Treas. Harold C. Hanover of the N. Y. Federation of Labor lauding the "fine cooperative spirit shown in our mutual endeavors of benefit to labor."

The state AFL statement was hailed by state CIO council officers, who said "we are sure this will be carried forward in the coming year."

The break-up of the ULPC was also discussed by Secy.-Treas. David McDonald of the Steelworkers. He charged that the ULPC had met a "premature" death at the hands of the AFL.

But, he predicted, the CIO will continue to fight for the needs of all the people. "I reject—completely — that the United Labor Policy Committee was blocking the way to organic unity.

"We still have old, hard-shell, reactionary leaders in the AFL—still trying to carve out craft unions in industrial plants. These leaders are still powerful. It was their will that prevailed in the AFL to break off the splendid partnership of the United Labor Policy Committee.

"Organic unity can't be done by a mere resolution. It must be an amalgamation. It's not a question of a return to the house of labor, as Pres. Green of the AFL puts it, but the building of a new house."

Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers sounded a warning against "those twin monsters"—fascism and communism.

Because communism is an evil, he said, "there is a double-duty imposed on all of us to avoid the traps set for us by the communist manipulators and propagandists."

Warning against "hysteria, demagogy and suppression of liberties," Rosenblum charged that "thought control" is being instituted in America.

Unionists Don't Talk, Barbers Complain

Union members don't talk enough when they go for a haircut, a CIO Barbers Union delegate to the New York State CIO convention complained.

"People with McCarthy-Taft reactionary ideas come into barber shops and throw their propaganda around," the delegate said.

"But union men, when they come into a barber shop, seem to stay quiet about their unions. It's time they started doing a little talking, too."

TWUA Escorts For Penalized Cops

Even though they sign a no-strike pledge when they join the CIO Transport Workers, New York cops won't be pushed around by their anti-union supervisors.

Pres. Mike Quill of the Transport Workers, addressing the New York State CIO convention, made the pledge of support to any New York policeman who is sent to "Siberia" on unpleasant beats because of membership in the union.

"If that happens," Quill said, "we'll put 10 pickets in front of him and 10 transport worker-pickets in back of him, with placards to tell the story as he walks his beat."

U. S. Court Decision

GOP Assembly Is Blamed For Indiana Relief Cut

JUDGE Alexander Holtzoff of U. S. District Court in Washington, D. C., has ruled that the present welfare crisis in Indiana was solely of its own making.

The opinion places the responsibility squarely upon the shoulders of the Republican-controlled state legislature.

The decision upheld the action of Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing in cutting off some $20 million a year in federal welfare fund payments to the state. Ewing stopped relief payments in July because the Hoosier legislature, over the veto of Gov. Henry F. Schricker, a Democrat, passed a law making state relief rolls open to the public.

Federal law requires such records to be kept secret, and requires the Federal Security Administrator to stop payments when states do not comply.

Indiana filed suit last August to try to force Ewing to release federal payments to the state's welfare fund.

Its brief said that unless the money was forthcoming, it "will result in great and irreparable injury and damage and cause acute suffering and hardship to thousands of blind, aged and infirm persons, and dependent children."

About 75,000 needy persons are affected.

In taking the action, Ewing said that he acted reluctantly, but that he had no other alternative because of the federal law.

Attorney Howard Boyd, representing Indiana, told the court Sept. 7 that the denial of federal funds has "bled the state white" and that some people in Marion County, where Indianapolis is located, will be without benefits as early as next month.

"The state cannot carry on alone," he said.

During the hearing, Judge Holtzoff noted several times that Gov. Schricker had vetoed the measure because he believed that it was inconsistent with Federal law.

"I confess to some difficulty," the judge said, "in understanding why the legislature passed the law over the governor's veto with the full realization of what it was headed for."

U. S. Attorney George Morris Fay said that the Indiana law was a return to the "old poor-law theory of disclosing everything," which was precisely what Congress had intended to get away from in stipulating that names be kept confidential.

The Indiana law, he said, encourages "a gestapo state in which everybody is spying on his neighbor."

The court's decision is certain to intensify a drive in Congress led by Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.) and Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) to repeal the provision in the federal law against disclosure. The Jenner amendment to that effect was actually attached by the Senate to two different appropriations measures this year, but was thrown out in conference.

Bills are now pending before the House Ways and Means Committee to repeal the secrecy provisions, and Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.) has been pressing for their consideration. Supporters of the measure claim that publicity would make it easier to detect persons chiseling the government.

WHILE A FEW cheaters undoubtedly might be exposed if this method is adopted, opponents point out that the vast majority on relief are honest people who are simply the victims of unfortunate circumstances.

Democratic Reps. Madden and Denton, both of Indiana, have called for outright repeal of the Indiana law and urged the governor to call a special session of the legislature for this purpose. They said that the law was depriving needy Indianans of "relief to which they are justly entitled."

Denton also wrote to Sen. Jenner last month urging him to use his influence with the Indiana Republican Party to get the law repealed.

"DISASTER SQUADRON" crew members from CIO Brewery Workers Local 57, Rochester, N. Y., man these trucks. A fully equipped three-truck squadron has been made available to authorities in the Rochester area by the Genesee Brewing Co. Three of the six members of the local specially trained for emergency work are, left to right: Edward Frederick, Gordon Kleisle and Abe De Vey.

Thanks To Steelworkers

Surgical Benefits Now At Bethlehem, J&L

SURGICAL benefits have been extended to another 130,000 CIO Steelworkers and several hundred thousands of their dependents.

Agreements with Bethlehem Steel and Jones & Laughlin Steel worked out by CIO Steelworkers put the program into operation at all plants of both companies Sept. 1.

The union is now arranging conferences with other steel companies with the view of providing surgical benefits for additional CIO Steelworkers.

Similar to an earlier agreement with U. S. Steel, the new pacts provide surgical benefits without additional payments by union members.

The additional services for Bethlehem employes are based on a reserve fund of approximately $2 million in the Blue Shield fund.

At J&L where most of the employes have been paying for surgical coverage, the benefits will be paid out of a reserve of $500,000. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. operates the social insurance program at the latter firm.

Another feature of the J&L agreement provides for automatic hospitalization coverage for dependents of employes. Employes had been paying for such additional protection.

If the reserve funds should fall below the amounts agreed to in the contracts, workers will be asked to contribute to build them up to the minimum, at which point payment by employes will again cease. In no case is it expected that the contributions will exceed 50c per month per worker.

Ohio CIO Unites With Glass Workers To Set Attendance Record At School

IN OHIO, 150 CIO members sent their youngsters off to school with this thought, "We know just how you kids feel."

And they did too.

For the third year, the school had been held at Tar Hollow, Ohio's only state-owned group camp near Chillicothe. This year it had drawn the largest student body in its history, with many coming from neighboring midwest states.

The influx of "foreign students" was the work of the CIO Glass Workers, whose international union headquarters is in Columbus, O. This year the Glass Workers joined the Ohio CIO in sponsoring the school and brought in members from as far away as Louisiana.

Vice Pres. Leland Beard of the Glass Workers, had joined Orville C. Jones, Ohio CIO education director, in planning the school and setting up the curriculum.

During the week, the students had delved into subjects ranging all the way from America's foreign policy and its effect upon workers, to "How to use a mimeograph machine."

Each student took three morning courses, participated in an afternoon workshop and an evening forum discussion.

The courses themselves were proof of the CIO's far-flung interests. While there was no slacking of interests in "wages, hours and working conditions," there was also intense concern for such matters as political and legislative action, community services, labor history and parliamentary procedure.

Emphasis was placed on the workshop courses in which the students put into practice the theories explained by the instructors.

For example, the course in workmen's and unemployment compensation was accompanied by a workshop on "presenting cases to state boards." In this workshop, the students presented mock cases, which included many of the pitfalls outlined during the morning sessions.

DURING THE evening forums, the delegates spent considerable time on the subject of foreign affairs. Jack Kroll, president of the Ohio CIO Council and director of National CIO-PAC, reported on his recent trip to Europe for the European Cooperation Administration.

At two other evening sessions, the delegates heard Michael Ross, director of CIO's Dept. of International Affairs, answer scores of questions on the whole troubled field of foreign affairs.

Outlining the results of the Marshall Plan, which CIO had supported from its inception, Ross said: "Without the Marshall Plan, many of the countries of Western Europe would probably have followed Czechoslovakia behind the Russian Iron Curtain."

Discussing the role education plays in the CIO, Jacob Claymon, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO Council, reminded the students:

"American trade unionism represents the social, economic and political middle road. It is the path between reactionism and entrenched conservatism on the one side, and Communist totalitarianism on the other.

"Both have plagued the Labor middle-road, whose philosophy is based on progress through social reform. In our troubled world, this makes much more sense than the unyielding dogmatism of either the far right or the far left."

Just How Many Strawberries In A Jar Of Jam? If It's Less Than 45%, Tell The FDA About It

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

JUST HOW many strawberries should go into a jar of strawberry jam? The Food & Drug Administration recently concluded thorough research on the subject.

Before a standard was set inspectors had gone into factories, housewives had been questioned and cook books consulted.

It was just routine for the FDA, the government agency which is charged with protecting the health and pocketbook of the consumer and the operations of the country's industries.

It is a fact that most American food, drug, device and cosmetic manufacturers are producing the safest, cleanest and most informative labeled items ever made available to the public, according to the FDA.

Exhaustive Research

A recent FDA booklet, "Read the Label," sets forth in detail the steps taken by FDA to insure that foods, drugs and cosmetics that move from one state to another or are imported are correctly labeled.

Before it was determined how many strawberries should go into a jar of jam, experimental packs of preserves, jams and jellies were made in factories and laboratories by skilled chemists and inspectors.

Hundreds of samples of preserves were examined. Announcement was made to fruit preserve and jelly manufacturers, consumers and all other interested parties, that a public hearing would be held before a standard was set.

At the hearing representatives of the manufacturers, consumers and home economic specialists with FDA experts, gave their views on what the standards should be. All evidence was recorded and made available to the public.

Fair Procedure

Any participant at the hearings who objected to the proposed standards was asked to submit in writing his exceptions and arguments. These were studied and rulings made on them.

After the standard was set, any interested party could, for a period of 90 days, petition a U. S. circuit court for a review of the standards and proceedings.

The standard finally arrived at required that all strawberry jam contain 45 parts by weight of the fruit ingredient to 55 parts by weight of sugar.

Previous to the "strawberry jam" ruling, one enterprising though unethical manufacturer had used the following recipe:

Ten gallons of water; 40 pounds of sugar; pectin; strawberry flavoring and ONE QUART of strawberries.

The new FDA publication tells in simple words, with cartoon-style illustrations, just what to look for on labels to be a better family purchasing agent.

"Labels can help you get your money's worth and guard your family's health," said FDA Commissioner Charles W. Crawford. "They contain the information required by laws which Congress has enacted for your protection—but if you do not read the label you are losing the benefits of that protection."

FDA sets "standards of quality" for some foods. These standards do not grade foods as "fancy," "select," or "medium" or "A," "B," of "C." They set a minimum quality below which the foods must not fall unless properly labeled.

If canned tomatoes are not red enough, if peas are over-ripe, if canned peaches are discolored and broken, they must be so labeled in bold letters.

Many "health foods" or "dietary supplements" are misbranded because their labeling does not tell the truth, according to FDA inspectors.

Most drugs are truthfully labeled, FDA says, but not all.

"It is wise to be skeptical of medicines and curative devices offered to the public for the treatment of serious diseases," it says. "It is foolish to postpone proper treatment by finding out for yourself that the medicine is no good."

Wild claims on labels of worthless medicine are much less frequent than they were years ago, but today's medicine frauds are often more sophisticated and difficult to detect.

"Beware of those who say you can throw off serious diseases or regain lost youth, beauty and pep merely by eating some outlandish food or taking some simple vitamin and mineral mixture," the FDA advises.

"Sometimes the labels are perfectly 'clean,'" FDA says, but in an attempt to dodge the law, the wild claims are made in booklets and advertising matter rather than on the label.

"Remember that the drug label (unless it is on a prescription drug) should tell what the product is for, as well as give directions on how it is to be used."

"Read the Label" is for sale by the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., and is priced at 15c per copy.

3 More Assigned To Welfare Groups

Latest additions to the CIO liaison staff with local welfare organizations include:

Charles Bowers, formerly president, Muskegon, Mich., CIO Council and March Haas, formerly president, Kalamazoo, Mich., CIO Council, who will work with the Michigan Welfare League on a state-wide basis.

Frank Kleva, of the South Bend, Ind., CIO Council, who will work with the South Bend Community Chest and Council of America.

"You don't have to know anything for this job; you just have to 'No' everything!"

In Asia And Africa

Colonial 'Peonage' Has West Behind 8 Ball

THE WESTERN world is now paying for the brand of "civilization" it brought to the under-developed countries of Asia and Africa, according to an article in the Free Labour World, official monthly organ of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"If the colonial powers," it points out, "had better respected the 'civilizing' ideals they claimed as the basis of their intervention in these countries, if they had listened a little sooner to the warnings given by the international labor movement, we might have been spared these tragic bills.

". . . For once, social questions are being considered on the same level as political and strategic questions."

How To Halt Reds

If there are changes made in the systems of exploitation that grind workers—particularly agricultural workers—in these countries, "there is plenty of chance that they will not fall prey to the fascinations of solutions prescribed by Moscow," says the article.

The most painful problem, it continues, is that of the plantation workers.

"It is the one for which a rapid solution could have the most importance for the future," the magazine adds. "Only a fraction of the labor force in under-developed countries works on plantations, but it is an important fraction."

The article described some of the hardships and privations under which plantation workers eke out their existences.

The principal plantation crops are tea, coffee, rubber and sugar cane. These are often in tropical and sub-tropical mountainous areas. The workers, usually from the lowlands, need special clothing and shelter which they do not always get.

Universal Complaint

The Intl. Labor Organization estimates there are 1.15 million plantation workers in India, 800,000 in Indonesia, 650,000 in Ceylon, 300,000 in Malaya and 200,000 in the Philippines.

"The system of recruiting plantation workers is a universal complaint," the article says.

"Until very recently, planters worked through agents who were charged with the responsibility of furnishing manual laborers in exchange for a fee on each worker. These agents did not hesitate to use all means necessary to enrich themselves at the expense of the workers. In many cases the system was equivalent to forced labor."

This system is declining, it was explained, as the labor supply becomes more stable in each area, and hiring is done on an individual basis. Much of the work is seasonal, and necessitates continual migrations.

"Certain countries regulate recruitment," the magazine says. "Others have organized their own employment bureaus. But the weakness of public authorities cannot guarantee that these are more than paper reforms . . .

"Working schedules still may be fixed arbitrarily by the employer. They vary according to the work. These periods may be excessively long, which in an unhealthy climate is particularly exhausting for workers.

"The more advanced countries . . . have legislation which prescribes the maximum length of the work day and work week. But these measures still are not properly applied . . . workers who do not have a contract do not benefit under the law.

"Women comprise 40% of the manual labor on plantations in India, 34% in Pakistan and 40% in Malaya.

"There is no distinction between sexes as far as the working schedule is concerned, but the pay for women is inferior. Some plantations provide maternal care and a nursery system, however crude. Children comprise almost 10% of the total plantation labor force.

"Formerly, only workers employed in industrial establishments connected with plantations were paid regular wages. Now most workers are paid on a piecerate basis for each task performed. Frequently men are hired as a team, notably in India and Indonesia. Their salaries are paid to a foreman or to an intermediary, which, of course, gives rise to abuses.

Tardy Wage Payments

"The system of working for room and board with salary is declining, but still exists in the Philippines and in Borneo. It is, incidentally, forbidden by the law in the more advanced countries. Under this system is provided with the necessities of life but no money.

"The system of pay is a universal complaint among plantation workers. Payment is not prompt and in the meantime, under a system of advanced pay, the worker gets indebted to the planter. The planter, in effect, guarantees that he will have a steady labor force by getting the worker indebted to him."

Completes Mission

Completing a State Dept. assignment in Germany in a little less than half the allotted two months, Michigan CIO Pres. August Scholle has returned to Detroit. Leaving Germany Aug. 29, he stopped in Paris on a mission for the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Labor To Help Study St.LouisTransportation

Labor members were named to three committees of the Metropolitan Mass Transportation Commission in St. Louis last week. The committees will make detailed studies of transportation problems in the area.

James L. Pfaffenback, representating the St. Louis CIO Council, will aid in determining if public ownership of transportation lines should be attempted. Secy.-Treas. Harold J. Gibbons, of Teamsters Local 688, will serve with a group that plans to recommend improvements of existing service. William H. Anderson, of the AFL Building Trades Council, was named to the committee to inquire into the financial structures of the Public Service Co. and the St. Louis County Transit Co.

Senate Committee Refuses To Kill Profit Guarantee

THE SENATE Banking Committee last week went through the motions of conducting hearings on President Truman's request for three immediate changes in the new Defense Production Act.

By a vote of 8 to 5 on Sept. 10, it rejected the President's request for repeal of the amendment sponsored by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.), which requires price ceilings to be boosted to reflect increases in production costs.

Republicans on the committee also blocked immediate consideration of a substitute proposal which committee members said will make the amendment "more workable." The amendment guarantees profits.

Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) promptly charged that there are "signs of a filibuster" to delay revision of the controls law until Congress adjourns.

This was denied by Chairman Maybank (D. S.C.), who said that the committee definitely would send its proposals to the Senate floor before Congress adjourns. However, there was no assurance, as Congressional leaders still tried to rush to adjournment by Oct. 1, that either the Senate or House would vote on them.

Inflation Is Hardest On Small Car Buyers

If you can afford a Lincoln Cosmopolitan, inflation's going to affect you much less than if you buy a Ford.

The Office of Price Stabilization has been forced by the new control law to let auto prices rise.

The increases asked by the Ford Motor Co., as reported by OPS, show clearly that the biggest boost percentage-wise is that affecting the lower-income families who drive Fords.

MEANWHILE, the CIO was preparing testimony supporting the President's call for repeal of the Capehart amendment and the ban on beef slaughter quotas for presentation before the committee Sept. 18 and 19.

While agreeing to appear to oppose these amendments, the CIO emphasized that it believes many other changes in the act must be made before it will provide adequate insurance against inflation.

The CIO viewpoint was underscored by the announcement of Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle that the Office of Price Stabilization will have to authorize still higher ceiling prices on beef at the retail level. The increases are expected to average 2c a pound.

Although spokesmen for the meat industry admitted that there was a "good possibility" that still further consumer buying resistance would result, they also said that cattle prices would stay at their record high.

Rep. Bender (R. O.) on Sept. 11 criticized DiSalle for the time it has taken OPS officials to draft the beef price increase order. OPS has been working on the new regulations for approximately a month.

BENDER called on DiSalle to issue the order increasing prices "immediately," and criticized OPS "red tape." He did not point out, however, that the "red tape" involved was the direct result of the new law, for which conservative Republicans were largely responsible. The law requires OPS to consider all cost factors in establishing ceiling prices.

DiSalle explained that the new beef order was delayed because of the "thousands of computations" that must be made before the new regulations can be issued.

For many meat concerns from coast to coast, however, the OPS regulations apparently have had no effect anyhow. They have simply ignored them. This became clear last week as the government began moving against numerous violators of beef price ceilings.

In the first action against a major meat concern, a suit was filed against the outlet of Wilson & Co. in Washington, D. C., charging it with selling beef at illegal prices. In St. Louis, every meat market visited so far by OPS inspectors has been found to be violating OPS rules.

IUE's 3rd Convention To Hear Mrs. Roosevelt

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week announced the list of speakers for its third annual convention which will be held in Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 17-21.

The list includes Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Special Presidential Assistant W. Averell Harriman, Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, and Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin.

The list of speakers who have made commitments to address the convention is as follows:

Sept. 19—CIO Pres. Philip Murray; Johnston, and Tobin.

IUE Wins Up To 23c At Sylvania, Continues GE Talks

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week signed a contract with the Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., bringing increases of from 14.5 to 23c an hour to 5000 employes in six plants.

The contract covers the plants at the following places where IUE is bargaining agent: Huntingdon and Point Pleasant, W. Va., Salem, Mass., Warren and Williamsport, Pa., and Kew Gardens, N. Y.

IUE's General Electric Conference Board, meanwhile, notified GE that it was willing to continue its contract negotiations beyond Sept. 15, contract expiration date.

IUE Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett in a letter to Sylvania Pres. Donald Mitchell urged that the benefits be extended to the Sylvania workers "still unfortunate enough to be represented by the discredited" United Electrical Workers.

UE, which was expelled from the CIO for Communist domination, represents the workers at Emporium and Mill Hall, Pa., and a small shop at Salem, Mass. IUE represents the employes at the large Salem plant.

The new contract provides 9 to 16c hourly increases, retroactive to July 30; 2.5% cost-of-living increase effective Sept. 11, which averages about 3.5c an hour, and a cost of living adjustment retroactive to March 15, which amounts to about 2c hourly.

GE was told by the union's conference board that "there is still reasonable opportunity for the General Electric Co. to change its stubborn attitude and agree to our reasonable demands.

"WE BELIVE that both the company and the union owe it to the Nation to continue negotiations as long as any prospects for a settlement exists."

The conference board stood behind its nine-point program which included a greater wage increase than the company offered, a union shop, an anti-discrimination clause, an improved progression schedule, better seniority provisions and assumption by GE of the 2% employe contribution to pensions.

American Smelter Hike Approved

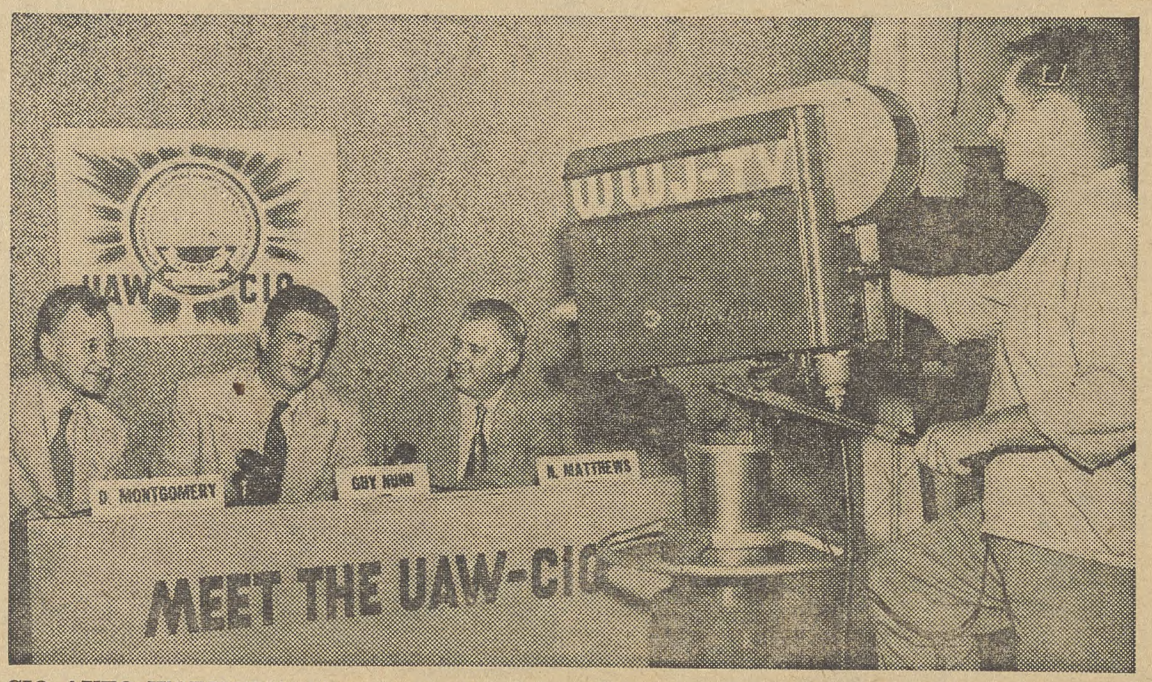
In addition, the board recommended that both parties agree to an objective rather than an arbitrary approach to the settlement of inequities existing between jobs. Steelworker representatives have been pressing this feature in recent negotiations.

No maximum or minimum figure was recommended by WSB for adjustment of the existing inequities, but it was understood that the amount would be at least 7c hourly.

President Truman referred the case to the board on Aug. 2. The ruling affects only the Steelworkers. Other disputes involving the company and the independent Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers which resulted in a nation-wide copper strike, have not yet reached the board for decision.

Municipal Workers Join CIO Union

About 100 city employes of Jonesville, Wis., last week formed a local of the CIO Government and Civil Employes, and immediately opened negotiations for a new contract. They formerly were affiliated with the United Public Workers, kicked out of the CIO for communist domination.



CIO AUTO WORKERS' officers and aides are regular participants on the union's television program every Tuesday on WWJ-TV, Channel 4, Detroit, Mich. Don Montgomery, UAW legislative representative; Guy Nunn, UAW commentator, and Norman Matthews, executive board member, are discussing the fight against lay-offs in the UAW telecast show above.

Ask Control Of Rents Near Plant Site

THE CIO Steelworkers have made representations to federal agencies for the immediate establishment of rent control in the Morrisville, Pa., area, where the U. S. Steel Corp. is putting up a giant new plant.

The union is concerned with protecting workers migrating into the area from rent gouges, forced sales of housing at inflated prices, and segregation, H. Charles Ford, director of the Steelworkers' District 7, with headquarters in Philadelphia, told the federal spokesmen.

Ford acted on behalf of Philip Murray, president of the CIO and of the steel union. He met with representatives of federal housing agencies, the Defense Production Administration and National Production Authority, and congressmen from Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Morrisville is across the Delaware River from Trenton, N. J.

"Our objective," he said, "is to solve the manpower problem in the Morrisville area through the solution of the housing needs of the workers required in this section.

"We will oppose rent gouging by individuals or speculation of housing values by professional promoters.

"We have made clear to the federal housing agencies that housing which must be programmed for this area must not and cannot be allocated to such organizations as Levitt & Son, who are seeking federal assistance for the establishment of a second lily-white Levittown such as was established on Long Island."

The Levitt firm plans a large housing development in the Morrisville section if it can get federal financial aid and materials authorizations.

Steel Locals Give Hospital $10,000

All CIO and AFL unions in lower Bucks County, Pa., are helping to raise $1.5 million to build the first general hospital in the area.

Three CIO Steelworkers locals have donated a total of $10,000 from their treasuries to help the project. The contributing locals are Local 1502 at the U. S. Radiator Corp. and Local 4351 at Superior Zinc, both at Bristol, and Local 2954, Riley Stoker Corp., Cornwall Heights.

The locals also agreed to conduct individual subscription campaigns among their members.

P.R. Rum Industry Minimum At 60c

A minimum wage of 60c an hour for workers engaged in the manufacturer of rum in Puerto Rico has been proposed by the Wage & Hour and Public Contracts Div. of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Special Committee No. 9, which met last month, recommended the new basic rate. Under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the wage orders for Puerto Rico industries may be issued below the statutory 75c minimum. Unless written exceptions to the order are acted on in the meantime, the order becomes effective Sept. 20.

Wisconsin CIO Hits GOP Extravagance

THE WISCONSIN CIO has charged the Republican-dominated State Legislature with "wasteful government spending" and a tax policy that was "asinine and dangerous."

The Republicans were sharply criticized for voting down a bill which would have economically reorganized the State administration.

The CIO demanded that Gov. Kohler release a report made by the Dept. of Research citing the Dept. of Agriculture for "gross waste and inefficiency." The report was suppressed by the Republicans.

The CIO also said that the Legislature turned its back on bills to make the railroads and banks pay their just share of taxation. The Legislature also exempted out-of-State stockholders from paying taxes in 1951.

Wisconsin government spending was the "highest in history" the CIO survey found, and "for the first time, more money is being spent by the State than is coming in through tax revenues."

The State CIO feared that unless liberals were elected to the next Legislature, the wage earner's taxes would be raised instead of those persons and corporations now tax exempt.

"Pardon me, friend, my colleagues here are curious to know if that's genuine chinchilla."

Court Upholds Union Right To Bar Scab

A UNION with a closed shop clause in its contract can demand the firing of a member who crosses a picket line, if the agreement was in effect prior to enactment of the Taft-Hartley law.

The U. S. Court of Appeals in San Francisco so ruled in a precedent-making decision upholding the rights of AFL Cannery Workers in San Jose, Calif. It set aside an order of the National Labor Relations Board and denied three years' back pay to the woman involved.

While the union was picketing the Driscoll Strawberry Co. plant in 1948, Mrs. Nora Stiers, union member employed at Clara-Val Packing Co., would complete her cannery shift, then cross the picket line to work at Driscoll, since completely unionized.

The union fined Mrs. Stiers $250, with all but $25 to be remitted if she would agree not to cross the picket line again. She refused.

The union revoked her membership, asked Clara-Val to discharge her and the firm complied.

Mrs. Stiers took her case to the NLRB, claiming her rights under the then new Taft-Hartley Act had been violated. The board, charging both union and company with unfair labor practices under the act, ordered her reinstated with full back pay.

Contending its contract was valid, as negotiated before Taft-Hartley, the union through its attorney, I. B. Padway, appealed to the court and won.

Small Firms 'Very Heart' Of Economy

SMALL businesses are the "very heart beat" of the National economy and "must be preserved as well as big business," Federal Trade Commission Chairman James M. Mead said in an address last week.

Mead was speaking at the National Electronic Distributors Association convention in Cleveland, O.

Vast mobilization, Mead told his audience, creates by the very size of the program a drift toward concentration of economic power. The FTC has the duty of keeping business free from such concentrations, he said, and is fully aware "of the general concern for small business."

Emergency duties assigned to FTC by the Defense Production Act and Presidential directives, he noted, have brought about a close working relationship between the commission, the Dept. of Justice and the defense agencies when requests for exempting industries from provisions of the antitrust laws are considered.

"Such matters," he said, "are examined by us with the view of minimizing so far as possible, without interference with the defense effort, factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic wealth."

Wherry Trick Spots Economy Bloc Fakery

IT WAS lunchtime in the Senate. Few seats were occupied.

Up leaped Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.), the Republican floor leader, to move that the McClellan Bill to revamp and modernize the system by which Congress spends the people's money be referred to the Senate Rules Committee, of which he is a member.

There were no objections. The bill went to committee.

The maneuver took a matter of seconds. It may cost American taxpayers billions of dollars in unnecessary government expenditures.

The action by Wherry underscored the oft-repeated statement by administration supporters that the so-called "economy bloc" in Congress isn't interested in real economies at all.

When crippling cuts are being made by Congress in any budget request of President Truman, Wherry usually is among those shouting the loudest in their support.

The McClellan Bill, voted out of the Senate Expenditures Committee a few weeks ago with unanimous approval of both Democrats and Republicans, affords Congress an opportunity to make really substantial savings in the cost of government.

It would do this by setting up a Joint Budget Committee, staffed by bipartisan experts, to advise Congress on appropriations bills.

In this way, Congress would have available the actual facts of the matters being voted upon. It could make real economies instead of following its present wasteful meat-ax technique, which injures essential services while unnecessary activities get by with cuts too small.

But Wherry's move was made when the chief sponsor of the reorganization plan, Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.), was out of the Senate. It has now effectively stymied action.

McCLELLAN has promised to fight the trick maneuver by which his bill was shelved by moving to have it considered. He pointed out that a similar bill has lain in the Rules Committee for years without anything being done about it.

Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) last week announced that he would support McClellan's fight.

"The need for real economy is too vital, the load on the taxpayers too heavy, the actual need for tremendous increase in our national strength too pressing, to continue the present haphazard system," he said.

Moody pointed out that on Sept. 10, the Senate was called upon to consider a bill appropriating $61 billion for military strength alone. Vast expenditures unquestionably are necessary to protect the nation, he said, but added:

"It is no time to think first of making an 'economical' impression on the public by making a loud bustle about cross-the-board cuts, without finding out where money can actually be saved, and how."

BY AN ALMOST tragic coincidence, the importance of streamlining the Senate's appropriations procedures was driven home to members of the upper chamber the same day when Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) cracked up during debate on the armed forces appropriations bill.

Taking his responsibility as a Senator with unusual seriousness, Douglas and his staff had worked from 12 to 16 hours a day over the last month making a detailed study of the measure. As a result, he was convinced that up to $1 billion could safely be cut, and he offered amendments for reductions in specific items.

The work that he had done had exhausted his strength, however, and during debate, Douglas screamed, and collapsed.

Had the McClellan Bill which Wherry maneuvered off the floor been in operation, Douglas would not have personally had to undertake the exhausting study. The Budget Committee which it sets up would have done the work for him.

'Censorship' By House Economizers Will Be Expensive To Uncle Sam

The "economy" drive in Congress has taken on the aspects of censorship. And it will actually cost the government money.

Buried in the Legislative Branch Appropriations Bill as approved by the House, is one of the strangest "gimmicks" ever written into any appropriations measure. It is a provision preventing the Library of Congress from continuing to make available to the public copies of non-confidential documents on public affairs which it prepares for Congress.

The Library has been selling multilithed copies of those documents over the last two years at cost plus 10%, and thus has actually made money which it turned over to the Treasury. In 1949 it took in $5347; in 1950 sales amounted to $11,698.

The effect of the House economy bloc move in writing this provision into the Library's appropriation for 1952 thus not only will cost the government this income, but also effectively prevents the public from getting copies of the Library's studies.

Funds Asked To Deport 'Wetbacks'

SEN. HUMPHREY (D. Minn.) last week introduced a resolution calling upon Congress to provide additional funds at once to enable the Justice Dept. to deport an estimated half million Mexican "wetbacks" now in this country illegally.

Humphries pointed out that the integrity of the U. S. Government was at stake.

The "wetbacks" derive their name from the fact that most of them enter this country by wading or swimming across the Rio Grande.

Farmers located near the Mexican border and in California's Imperial Valley prefer to hire them as farm hands because they can get away with paying them as little as 15c an hour. Legal entrants cost 40c an hour up.

Organized labor strongly opposed the failure of Congress to enact legislation to penalize farmers who hire these illegal immigrants. President Truman signed the Ellender-Poage Bill this spring only after Congressional leaders had assured him that supplementary legislation would be forthcoming.

Congress has not only failed to keep its promise to the President, but the House "economy" bloc "wrecking crew" has further weakened the administration's power to enforce even the weak law enacted by chopping off all of a $6½ million appropriation to the Immigration Bureau. Those funds, requested with Budget Bureau approval, would set up machinery for controlling migrant labor from Mexico.

The Senate has not yet acted on the appropriation.

Humphrey said that under the new treaty with Mexico, the U. S. pledged itself to do everything possible to stop the wetback traffic. He said that the Immigration Bureau has devised a means of stopping the mounting "invasion" by establishing an airlift program under which "wetbacks" will be flown into the interior of Mexico.

Since funds have not been forthcoming for its continuance, however, the program is about to be dropped.

LABOR standards in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California are threatened as a result.

Humphrey pointed out that if it failed to act, Congress would force American workers to compete with persons who, as fugitives of the law, would work at wages, and under conditions, far below the minimum acceptable to American workmen.

In contrast with the shabby treatment given to the Justice Dept. in its effort to halt the illegal traffic, Congress lost no time in voting funds to the Farm Placement Service of the Labor Dept., which is charged with bringing Mexican farm hands into this country legally.

"It is only right," Humphrey said, "that we be equally concerned to get a stepped-up program of law enforcement under way."

Farmers Protests Upset Co-op Tax

America's farmers spoke out with righteous indignation over the Senate Finance Committee proposal to tax cooperatives—and last week won a virtually complete victory.

Bags of mail protesting the committee's action descended upon the Senate post office. The committee quickly reversed itself, and adopted a purely face-saving device by which only "unallocated income" of cooperatives will be subject to taxation.

The decision means that a greater bookkeeping and administrative burden will be imposed upon all cooperatives, regardless of size, but it does allow a loophole by which they can escape taxation.

Bitterly assailing the proposed co-op tax, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) also attacked the National Tax Equality Association, chief advocate of the measure.

"We should be investigating this outfit and not considering their tax proposals," he declared.

Tube Strike Peace Offered By UAW

The CIO Auto Workers have offered a two-part formula to the Wolverine Tube Co. to end strikes at the company's plants in Detroit and Decatur, Ala.

The union proposed to end the strike at once, without discrimination to the strikers. Unresolved grievances at Detroit would be subject to continued negotiation, while differences at Decatur either would be subject to arbitration or would be jointly submitted to the Wage Stabilization Board for a decision which would be final.

Douglas Aircraft Workers Strike Long Beach Plant

AIRCRAFT workers at the Douglas Aircraft Co. Inc. plant, Long Beach, Cal., who decided to "hit the bricks" Sept. 5, are still going strong.

Wearied by what CIO Auto Workers officials at Local 148 in Long Beach described as "over two months of futile negotiations with the Douglas company," the workers struck at the end of the swing shift.

Chief demands, the spokesman for the UAW local says, are a retroactive pay increase, a union shop, automatic progression and an escalator clause. Over 8000 members of the local voted on Aug. 12, to back the demands and to strike if necessary to win them.

Most bitterly opposed by the company, according to local 148 Pres. Oval Pierce, is the union demand for a wage increase of 10% retroactive to April of this year and 6% retroactive to last October. On those dates, Pierce says, increases of those amounts were granted to workers in other California plants of the Douglas Co.

An added 10c an hour to the 10% increase is also demanded, making an over-all money value of from 22c to 30c an hour. This, Pierce contends, is a fair adjustment since local 148 workers have not had a wage increase since the autumn of 1949. The retroactive pay would average $250 per worker.

STRIKERS above are on night picket duty at the blacked-out Douglas Aircraft plant in Long Beach, Cal. More than 9000 pickets have been on duty since workers "hit the bricks" on Sept. 5, following collapse of negotiations.

Automatic progression — the union proposal that 5c an hour wage increases be granted workers at pre-determined intervals until they reach the maximum set for their particular jobs—has been agreed to by the company for some of the lower classifications.

This would replace the company "merit system" which the union says allows for too much "boss favoritism." The union points out that automatic progression is the common practice in most of the aircraft industry for all job classifications.

No balance has been found in the escalator clause dispute, the union finds. The company has offered a clause based on a wage floor lower than the present cost-of-living index. UAW insists it should be based on the more realistic modern index figures.

Federal mediators have been searching for common ground where negotiations, broken off when the strike began, can be reopened.

Due largely to the workers' solidarity, Pierce says, not a wheel has turned in the huge plant since the Sept. 5 swing shift downed tools. Over 90% of the eligible workers in the bargaining unit are paid-up members of UAW, he reports.

Picketing has been almost "perfect" according to local 148 headquarters situated across the street from the struck plant.

More than 9000 pickets, supervised by 125 picketline captains and 500 lieutenants, are assigned to four hours daily duty during their usual shift. Each picket carries a card which is punched both when he goes on duty and when he leaves.

Union headquarters remains open around the clock. On the day before the strike was called, Pierce says, over 200 additional Douglas workers voluntarily signed up with local 148. More than 30% of the union members are women, he added, and many of them take regular turns on picket duty.

Pierce noted that the present strike is the first strike against the Douglas Co. since 1937, and the first in the Southern California industry in ten years.

Local 'Goon Hound' Dogs Picket Line

"Skipper" — 100-odd pounds of German shepherd dog—pickets the struck Douglas plant with as much determination as the man on the job.

According to "Skipper's" friend and master, local 148 member Ralph Douglas, his dog is a "goon hound" trained to "sniff out scabs." So far none have tried to cross where "Skipper" is manning—or dogging—the line.

Local 148 Ralph Douglas insists he is no relation to Donald Douglas, head man of the struck plant.

From "Skipper" to date: "No comment."

Six Are Indicted In Cicero Rioting

The police chief of Cicero, Ill., and five other persons have been indicted by a county grand jury investigating rioting when a Negro family attempted to move into an apartment of the Chicago suburb.

Charged with misconduct as an officer in failing to perform sworn duties. Chief Edwin Knoovsky faces a maximum fine of $10,000 and removal from office.

The others are charged with conspiracy to cause a riot, injure property and cause financial loss to owners of the property, a 20-unit apartment building which was badly damaged. Each could be sentenced to jail terms of up to five years and fined as much as $5000.

THE STRIKE of more than 3000 CIO Shipbuilding Workers against two southern companies will go into its ninth week Sept. 24.

IUMSWA members at the Alabama Dry Dock & Shipbuilding Co., in Mobile, Ala., and the Todd-Johnson Docks, Inc., New Orleans looked upon the return of Federal Conciliators into the picture last week as no assurance of an early settlement.

The major point at issue at both yards is the CIO union's demand for a 25c hourly wage increase, with double time for all overtime. The present rate at both companies is $1.55 for first class mechanics. Latest offer from Alabama Dry Dock was 18c hourly with the double time for overtime feature included.

The rate for East Coast Shipyard workers is currently $1.80 for first class mechanics—25c over the rate at both struck yards.

IUMSWA Local 18 Secretary-Treasurer W. M. Williams Jr., said other points at issue at the Mobile yards include guaranteed "call" pay for men who report at the yard but are not placed at work, premium pay for hazardous work, seniority provisions and improved vacations.

The CIO union has filed charges of unfair labor practices with the regional National Labor Relations Board office in New Orleans, accusing Alabama Dry Dock of aiding the Metal Trades Council, AFL in its effort to raid IUMSWA for members.

Give A Buck To PAC

'Best Pact In Canada' Won By CWA Locals

CIO Communication Workers and Saskatchewan Government Telephones last week signed what the union officially described as "the best contract for telephone workers in Canada."

Wage increases of 14% were won for the 1600 workers in the three CWA locals covered by the contract. The gain in the pay envelopes runs from $3.67 to $10 per week—an average, according to CWA, of $7.30.

Fringe benefits, when added to the flat increase, will bring the total money value of the contract to CWA workers to around $600,000 a year, union headquarters estimated.

Other features of the contract include full seniority rights, clearly defined demotion and discharge clauses, workable shift differentials and transfer and travel provisions for workers.

Although the old contract had not expired, CWA reports, the government - owned company agreed to open negotiations with the union several months before the deadline in the face of changing economic conditions.

The political party in power in Saskatchewan charged with running the telephone company is the Canadian Commonwealth Federation. It is based on worker and farmer cooperatives and is often compared in its actions by political writers to the British Labour Party.

Pinch CWA Members On AFL Complaint

Three members of the CIO Communications Workers Local 5008 in Centralia, Ill., were arrested recently on charges of violating a city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of handbills without a license.

The unusual angle is that a representative of the Electrical Workers, AFL, called the cops.

The incident occurred prior to a National Labor Relations Board election at the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. in which IBEW was soundly trounced by CWA.

Copper Group Sets Sept. 24 For Walkout

DELEGATES TO the CIO Auto Workers Copper & Brass Council, meeting in New York City Sept. 15, voted a Sept. 24 strike deadline in all plants where a satisfactory agreement has not been reached by that time.

The Council, representing more than 25,000 workers in copper and brass rolling mills and fabricating plants in the country, took the action following release of the group's policy committee report.

Declaring that the proposals submitted by the union conform to the standards generally recognized and accepted in the industry, the council charged that despite the "highest profits in history and the national emergency, the companies stubbornly refuse to meet the just demands of the workers."

"Up to date, the companies with which we have been negotiating have refused to accept their responsibilities," the council declared. "It is our earnest hope that they will do so during the next week, for if they continue to refuse, they leave us no choice but to resort to our economic power as organized workers."

Companies covered by UAW contracts represent about 55 to 60% of the total capacity in the copper and brass rolling mill and fabricating industry. They are located largely in the Connecticut Valley and the Middle West.

CIO Officer Gets State Labor Post

The president of the CIO Communications Workers Local 3411 in Shreveport, La., has been appointed a member of the Louisiana state labor mediation board by Governor Earl K. Long.

The board, composed of representatives of labor, management and the public, is designed to help settle labor disputes.

Even Scabs Can't Stand Ala. Pickle Plant Wages

The strike called last month by Local 309, CIO Packinghouse Workers, for higher wages and improved working conditions, still holds production of the plant down to 10% of normal.

Ada Lee Howell, Packinghouse Workers' field representative, said not one of the 150 strikers has re-entered the factory since the strike began on Aug. 2.

An attempt to break the union's solid front by working parolees sent to the plant by the Alabama State Parole Board failed when union protests to the board shut off the supply of parolee labor.

Railroad workers refused to cross the picket line. The company moved a few box cars into the plant yard by tractor. But, Miss Howell said, "the militant spirit of our workers has not dimmed one bit."

Efforts to settle the strike through the offices of the Federal Mediation Service and the State Labor Dept. have so far failed, Miss Howell continued. The company has never said it was unable to pay higher wages, she added, but only that it was unwilling to negotiate with the union.

Veterans Leader Praises Work Of CIO

By W. P. WELSH

REPRESENTATIVES of CIO international unions, government agencies, the Red Cross, USO and veterans organizations met in Washington Sept. 13-14 to discuss service to the armed forces and veterans.

The conference was sponsored by the CIO and directed by Julius F. Rothman, assistant director of the CIO Community Services Committee.

Highlighting the sessions was an address by Michael Straight, chairman of the American Veterans Committee.

Straight noted that the CIO Community Services Committee was created only a few weeks before the bombing of Pearl Harbor, yet accomplished its objectives in the face of all the tragedy and dislocation that comes with war.

"You were the pioneers," he said, "extending democracy to the local community life of America. We, in AVC, returned after the war, adopted that idea, and in our own way produced a formula unheard of among veterans—'Citizens First, Veterans Second.' "

THE CIO, Straight said, persuaded welfare workers and others to accept the union man and work with him.

"Time honored prejudices and bias," he continued, "reactionary mores, have in many of our cities and towns, crumpled to dust when exposed to the light of day by your members."

Both the CIO Community Services and the AVC, Straight declared, have placed preparation against any onslaught by "the Lords of the Kremlin" at the head of their agenda.

"Both of us have had experience in the all too recent past, and both of us approach the question of the servicemen's needs with the same basic understanding," he said.

"We look at the veteran not as a pawn for nonsensical hijinks, pompous celebrations and parades, not as an unwitting tool to be used for clubbing 'strikers,' or racial minorities, or for that matter, any minorities seeking their equal rights."

Straight ended his speech with an appeal that the CIO Community Services Committee and the AVC combine in joint action along the following lines:

1. End rent gouging on servicemen in towns surrounding army camps. Insist on adequate housing for both servicemen and factory workers. Demand that the government erect housing projects wherever factories and military camps are in existence.

2. De-emphasize the military factor in "military justice" and stress the justice aspect.

3. Counterattack the propaganda barrage which decends upon the serviceman from the National Association of Manufacturers and other narrow partisan, reactionary interests.

4. Halt discrimination against racial minorities to whom the GI Bill of Rights and other advances of the Veterans' Administration are meaningless, since they have no strong advocates to defend their claims.

5. Have the returning serviceman greeted by friends who are anxious to see his reentry into the community life. This cannot be accomplished by parties, confetti, chorus girls welcomes, or even Mother's Apple Pie.

Indiana Conference Set for Sept. 29-30

The Indiana state CIO Council will sponsor a two-day conference September 29-30 on Civil Defense and Community Services at Indianapolis.

State and national leaders of the CIO Community Services Committee will instruct on setting up community services defense programs in local unions, particularly on a plant basis.

Speakers will include John C. Pierce, national CSC representative, Frank Kleva, labor representative of the South Bend Community Chest, and Walter Johnson, division of social service, Indiana University.

WINS MURRAY AWARD

One of the country's outstanding liberals has been awarded the 1951 Philip Murray Award, presented annually by the CIO Community Services Committee for notable work in the field of health and welfare.

Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.) will receive a plaque and a check for $10,000 at a testimonial dinner in Detroit's Masonic Temple Oct. 2.

The dinner will be held in the same building where the national CSC was set up at the 1941 CIO convention.

The two previous awards were presented to General Omar Bradley and the late Sen. Wagner (D. N.Y.).

Monty Ward Firm Is Raking It In

Montgomery Ward, mail order house, made more money in the first six months of 1951 than in the first half of 1950, despite: (1) a drop in sales; (2) increased taxes.

That isn't all. Despite "ruinous taxes," it increased assets by $60 million; its earned surplus climbed $45 million, and its working capital went from $477,664,343 to $522,939,391.

Net profits (after taxes) for the first half of 1951 were $25,353,178, against $22,887,617 the first half of 1950, although sales dropped 0.7 percent and federal income taxes climbed from $20,100,000 to $23,960,000.

The Electric Boat Co. also fared well, despite "ruinous taxes." Its net profits of $1,200,000 for the first six months of 1951 almost equalled the $1,395,941 profits for the entire year of 1950.

TV Takes UAW Into Homes

A WEEKLY television show called "Meet the UAW" is being sponsored by the CIO United Auto Workers, Sunday afternoons at 3:15 on WWJ-TV, Channel 4, Detroit, Mich.

Guy Nunn, UAW commentator, produces and moderates the telecast which is designed to bring the story of the union's activities and services directly into the homes of UAW members.

The telecast can be seen within a radius of 70 miles of Detroit, which includes Flint, Pontiac, Port Huron, Jackson, Monroe, Toledo, Windsor and other communites where it is estimated that more than half a million CIO members live.

The program started last June under a year's contract with WWJ-TV. The UAW also sponsors a radio program "Labor Views the News" with Guy Nunn as commentator, which has been on the air for more than a year. It is broadcast Monday through Friday at 7:15 p.m. on CKLW and WDET-FM.

Frank Crosswaith Will Be Honored

Frank R. Crosswaith, general organizer for the AFL Ladies Garment Workers and chairman of the Negro Labor Committee, will be honored at a dinner at the Statler Hotel, New York City, Oct. 15, 1951.

Sponsored jointly by CIO and AFL, the dinner is a testimonial to Crosswaith's 30 years of activity in behalf of labor and other humanitarian causes.

CIO members of the committee sponsoring the affair are: Honorary Chairman Philip Murray, Chairman Louis Hollander and Co-Chairmen James B. Carey, Jacob S. Potofsky, Michael J. Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve and Willard S. Townsend.

A CHARTER for the new Mecklenburg County (N.C.) CIO Council is presented to Miss Billie Hunter, council recording secretary, by Franz E. Daniel, CIO director for North Carolina. The presentation was made at a dance.

Halley OK's Police Right To Join Union

RUDOLPH Halley, Liberal-Independent candidate for president of New York City Council, believes that New York City police "should have the right to join a union."

Halley, who gained national fame as the general counsel of the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee, made the statement in answer to a question by a member of the political action commission of the Americans for Democratic Action in New York.

"Every worker should have the right to join a union, but that union should have certain safeguards," he said.

Halley also said he is opposed to the 3% city sales tax and wanted it "eliminated as soon as possible."

"There is no room in the city for sales taxes at all and there is no excuse in the world for a 3% sales tax," he said. "This tax should never have been permitted and should be eliminated as soon as possible."

He told the ADA commission that the people of New York City were "living in a sewer" and characterized himself as a spearheading" a drive to raise the level of "political morality."

WSB Jurisdiction Challenged By NMU

The CIO Maritime Union's executive board has ordered its attorneys to take immediate action to determine whether the Wage Stabilization Board has legal jurisdiction in its contracts with ship owners.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran declared that in his opinion WSB has no such authority because companies in the shipping industry were permitted to set their rates without Federal approval.

He indicated that the union "would proceed immediately" to have put into effect the wage increases and work week provisions of its contracts. WSB has shaved 1.8% from the negotiated increases.

URW Convention Is Photog Homecoming

The official photographer for the CIO Rubber Workers' convention, Terry Hines, turned out to be a former member of the union holding an honorable withdrawal card.

Hines also is official photographer for the Wilton Hotel in Long Beach, convention headquarters. He was a member of Firestone Local 186 in Memphis, Tenn., following his discharge from the service in 1943, and worked as an inspector in the salvage department. He continued as a Local 186 member until the department was closed in 1945 with the greater availability of rubber, leaving then to go to Long Beach.

Honorable Unity

In the name of "unity," the leaders of the American Federation of Labor seem determined to wipe out much of the effective working unity that has developed across the U. S. labor scene.

First, the AFL withdrew from the United Labor Policy Committee.

Now, the AFL's Labor's League for Political Education has strongly hinted that perhaps there has been too much labor unity in the field of political action.

Both these steps, taken in the name of "organic unity"—that is, merger of the CIO and AFL—are steps away from unity. So while the leaders of the AFL seem impelled to break down existing areas of cooperation between the two groups, they keep talking about their desire for organic unity.

Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers suggested to his union's convention that these AFL statements seem to show more desire to take in the CIO than to work out real unity. He speculated whether the AFL leadership's current rash of unity proposals might not be designed to take the CIO into the front door of the "temple of labor," carve its industrial unions into craft units, and throw the remains out the back door of the "temple."

And CIO Pres. Philip Murray, addressing the Electrical Workers made clear that he would not enter into any deal—"backdoor" or front door—"to sell a member short."

The statements of the CIO in the past, and of its leaders during the last few weeks, make clear that the CIO believes in eventual unity of American labor. Through its past actions and through its participation in the United Labor Policy Committee, the CIO showed its good-faith belief in labor unity.

But the unity we have in mind is an honorable unity, with respect for the rights of every union man and woman, whether he or she belongs to an industrial or a craft union.

That spirit of honorable unity cannot be created with a magic wand, with a resolution or with the destruction of the successful steps already taken to bring about joint action between CIO and AFL in Washington and in the states and cities.

The Truth Hurts

The National Association of Manufacturers complains that recent surveys of corporation profits by the U. S. Federal Trade Commission are "inept, superfluous and grossly misleading."

What the NAM means by "inept, superfluous and grossly misleading" is that the government shouldn't have published them at all.

Meat For Korea?

The Army has revealed that it may be unable to purchase sufficient meat supplies for the GIs fighting freedom's battle in Korea.

The reason: big meat corporations are holding out for higher prices and bigger profits.

Have you seen editorials of denunciation in your local paper—as when any small group of workers goes on strike for decent wage standards?

Aw, Come On In!

Indiana GOP Reprints Fantasy

By Bradford V. Carter
For Labor Press Associated

PERHAPS LABOR papers ought to do more reprinting of what the daily press says, to show union men and women that editors of America's "free and responsible press" are way off base—hypocrites, or residents of a never-never land, or both.

A prime example is a Labor Day editorial from the Indianapolis Star, circulated nation-wide by the Indiana State Republican Committee.

That union labor is recognized throughout American industry.

That its bargaining power is protected by law.

That the threat to union labor no longer comes from "greedy employers or big business or monopolies and sweatshops."

That the only demand sought by labor in 1882 (first celebration of Labor Day) which has not been fulfilled is reduction of taxes.

That the real oppressor of workingmen is not the employer, "who recognizes their unions, who pays them the highest wages in the world, who sets up pension systems, cost-of-living formulas and paid vacations."

That the battle against "big business" labor has already won.

"The leaders of union labor still chant the old slogans against 'big business' and the 'reactionaries,' who, they say, wish to 'enslave' them," the Indianapolis Star cries sadly.

There you have it. Pegler couldn't have done a better job.

So "union labor is recognized throughout American industry?" Is that why Southern towns, advertising for new industries, boast they have no unions there? Is that why even textile employers in the North say southern mills must be organized to break down the differential in wages? Is that why southern employers organize "citizens' committees" to run union organizers out of town?

And labor's "bargaining power is protected by law"? Does the Star ever see the NLRB decisions that show cases dragging through legal channels for a year, two or three, while the union is smashed and men and women have to look for other jobs?

Is that why, right now, big business is spending millions supporting anti-union lobbies? Is that why in most state legislatures unemployment compensation and disability laws have been weakened?

Is that why, right now, there's a bill in the House to tighten monopolies? And the Federal Power Commission has just made a gift of billions of dollars to the oil lobby by its decision that it has no power to regulate the price of natural gas?

Is that why most defense contracts have gone to big business?

Is that why the "horsemeat" Congress, heeding the lobbies and not the people, has passed a phony controls law that has upped prices, and balks at any revision?

Is that why the spokesmen for big business insist that the increase in taxes must be shifted from business to the workers?

Is that why spokesmen for big business insist they must have "incentive" (unlimited profits), but carefully avoid worrying about "incentive" for the worker? Why they insist the worker has "too much money" and his "excess purchasing power" must be siphoned off through higher taxes?

Is that why business has introduced in the House the "millionaires's amendment," which would limit taxes to 25 percent (which means shifting the burden from the well-to-do to the lowest brackets, through imposition of sales taxes at levels undreamed of)?

Some labor editors complain union members don't read the labor press. Others say union members doubt what they read in the labor press. Perhaps reprinting the sermons of the dailies might show union members the light.

The Indianapolis Star editorial is a good start.

PAC In N. J. Questions Politicos

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Political Action Committee has prepared a list of 37 questions which candidates for the state Senate and Assembly have been asked to answer before they are endorsed for the November elections.

The annual questionnaire has been sent to all county PAC affiliates for their use in querying local candidates.

The questions cover "caucus rule," taxes, unemployment compensation and temporary disability benefits, public utilities, labor laws, education, workmen's compensation, housing, Supreme Court rule-making powers, public employes and relief.

On the subject of taxes, for example, the CIO wants to know if the candidate is in favor of raising additional money by: (1) increasing state taxes, (2) levying a general sales tax, (3) increasing individual taxation, or, (4) a corporate income tax or gross receipt tax.

Legislative candidates will be asked if they favor a passage of a strong rent control law "that will roll back unjustified rent increases and which will permit rent increases only where landlords can prove hardship."

Other queries include whether grievance machinery should be established for public employes; whether state aid to muncipalities for relief should be granted on the basis of need, and whether relief recipients should be required to sign an agreement requiring reimbursement for the loan.

Candidates have been urged to expand their answers on questions which they feel they cannot answer "yes" or "no."

Tobin Appoints CIO Members

SECY. OF LABOR Maurice J. Tobin has appointed seven more CIO members to serve on defense manpower labor-management committees for the labor market areas of Milwaukee, Wis.; Dayton, Ohio; and Salt Lake City, Utah.

Committee members represent the interests of industry, agriculture, transportation and retail trades in making recommendations for the solution of local manpower problems.

In Milwaukee, Tobin appointed Charles Kieker, CIO Steelworkers Local 1173 recording secretary; Austin Fiedler, CIO Auto Workers Local 756 president, and Fred Erchul, Milwaukee County Council secretary.

James Craft, CIO Electrical Workers Local 755 president; and Thomas H. Hendricks, CIO Auto Workers representative will serve on the Dayton committee.

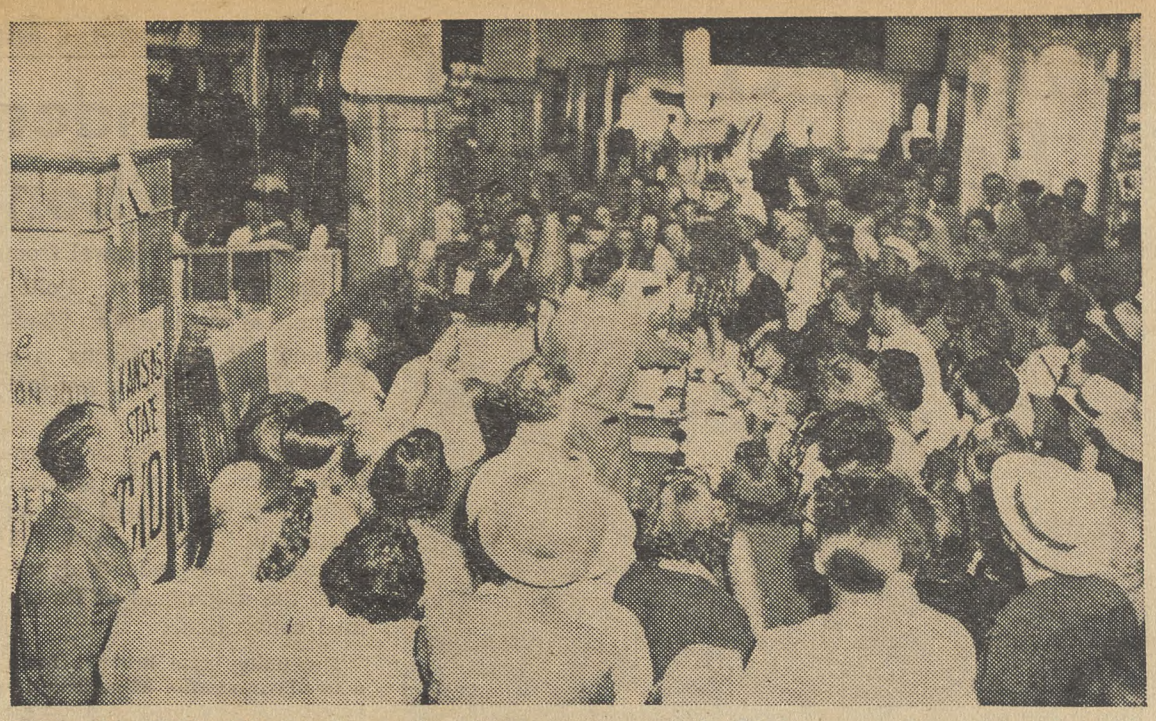
Give A Buck To PAC



THE CIO COUNCIL booth at the Topeka, Kan., State Fair was a busy place as the above picture shows. A ham a day was given away in free drawings. Visitors also picked up 25,000 pieces of CIO literature from Sept. 9 to 15. The state council also maintained booths at two other Fairs the same week. At Coffeyville 3600 bottles of pop were given away.

Plan Religion And Labor Meetings

THE 1951 Inter-Seminary Conference of the National Religion and Labor Foundation will be held in the Hotel Commodore, New York, Nov. 5-7, in conjunction with the national CIO convention, the Rev. Joseph W. Merchant, executive director, said last week.

Another highlight of the convention will be a religion and labor luncheon Nov. 9. The meeting has been called by CIO members of the Foundation's executive board. Other labor leaders, prominent laymen and the clergy are invited.

These and other plans emerged from a meeting of the executive board at Howard University in Washington, D. C. Sept. 13. A number of new board members were elected and it was decided to keep the temporary headquarters of the Foundation at Atlanta, Ga., until Jan. 1.

The board also named Witherspoon Dodge, who has been acting executive secretary since March, to the post of associate executive director.

During the next three months, Dr. Merchant, who has just resigned after seven years as secretary of the New Bedford (Mass.) Inter-Church Council to accept his new post with the Foundation, will work closely with Ohio state CIO leaders.

He said that he plans to cooperate with Ohio state CIO Director Jake Clayman and Orville Jones, head of the Ohio CIO education dept., in encouraging the formation of local religion and labor fellowships.

Buffalo CWA Strike Ends After 8 Days

A spontaneous walkout by 1200 CIO Communications Workers at the Western Electric Co. plant in Buffalo, N. Y., ended after eight days when management agreed to a study of piecework incentive rates, settling of long-standing grievances and reinstatement of 32 suspended workers.

UAW Assails Bill To Aid Monopoly

DON MONTGOMERY, legislative representative of the CIO Auto Workers, last week told the House Judiciary Committee that a proposed bill to legalize price discrimination "would promote the growth of monopoly and permit the exercise of monopoly power by big business."

Montgomery said that the bill of Rep. Walter (D. Pa.) would "make it virtually impossible for the Federal Trade Commission to effectively police monopoly."

Under the Walter and McCarran bills, the latter already passed by the Senate, manufacturers and distributors would be permitted to give preferential prices to favored customers if it was done in "good faith" to meet competition.

The catch is that the government would have to prove the price cut was not made in good faith in order to have a case on a charge of price fixing. Opponents of the measure say proving bad faith is virtually impossible.

FDR Labor Center Mortgage Is Buried

The Labor Center, purchased in 1946 with the approval of the 8th annual Michigan CIO convention, has been used each summer as a site for leadership training courses.

It includes 210 acres of land, a three-quarter mile beach, a number of barracks and cabins, as well as a lodge containing a dining room and many other utility buildings.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Governor G. Mennen Williams and Sen. Blair Moody were among the invited speakers.

Win In Wisconsin

A two-month strike by 1500 CIO Steelworkers at the Pressure Cooker plant at Eau Claire, Wis., won a 15c hourly package retroactive to June 15, as well as all other major demands.

Farmer-Labor Cooperation Ohio CIO Aim

THE WORK of the Ohio CIO Council in promoting mutual understanding of the problems of workers and farmers was featured in the Aug. 25 issue of "America, the National Catholic Weekly Review."

An article written by George M. Barmann declared that "organized labor and farm groups in Ohio are meeting together in an unprecedented attempt to tackle what appears to be a herculean job: to find a basis for mutual understanding and cooperation."

The types of meetings which have been held all over the state are described as "movements to ease farm and factory tensions."

Barmann points out that Ohio is a natural spot for cooperation of the two factions due to the fact that while it is one of the three or four top industrial states, it is also ninth in agricultural importance.

"If labor and agriculture are at odds, this is the natural battleground for their verbal clashes; and if they are ever to act as partners they in fact are, this is the logical place to begin," the author declares.

The education director of the state CIO, Orville C. Jones, is said by Barmann to be leading the move to create interest in developing a simple means of communication between the two groups.

WRITING principally about labor-farm meetings in Clark County, Barmann's story could have applied equally to a number of other spots in the state where similar meetings and discussions have been held.

He pointed out that such a labor-farm discussion highlighted a recent evening at an Ohio CIO summer school where, he said, "both farmers and workers had a chance to broaden their individual horizons and alter misleading concepts which both had developed."

Barmann wound up his article with this observation:

"Perhaps the exchange of ideas at labor-farm meetings will be a check on the sweeping criticisms in which both groups have indulged. Success of the informal 'get-togethers' may even be the harbinger of eventual harmony.

"Recently in one Ohio city there was a long strike which caused losses in pay which the workers can never hope to regain. It came as a surprise, then, when a farmer known for his conservatism observed: Maybe those fellows are thinking of their children, as we think of farm improvements today helping our children tomorrow.'

"He had just attended a labor-farm meeting."

Race Bars Broken At Ohio Music School

The Cincinnati College of Music has accepted the first Negro in the school's history as a student in its department of radio television.

Walter S. Schmidt, president of the college said Herman Griffith of Cincinnati was the first Negro student accepted since the school was founded in 1878.

CIO Oil Workers Act To Get Pay Boosts, Better Congress

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

TWO BUCKS a day for every oil worker and a buck from every oil worker for political action.

That twin theme of economic improvement and more liberal government dominated the 21st annual convention of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union.

Some 400 delegates, meeting in a five-day session in mile-high Denver, Colorado, made clear that they are unhappy about inflation which has cut into living standards—and about reactionary attacks on liberal government—which endangers the Fair Deal program.

Reporting that the oil union is at the strongest point in its history. Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight told the convention that attempts to undermine sound American policies "will succeed unless we exert every effort to build our unions and to use our organized strength effectively and intelligently."

A day after the convention, the OWIU's top national policy committee set up the union's economic goal: a 25c-an-hour, $2-a-day pay raise for every worker in the industry.

But, Secy.-Treas. T. M. McCormick told OWIU delegates:

"The money we have won in wage increases in the past year has been taken away from us by price increases."

And, Pres. Knight pointed out, corporation profits have "gone through the roof" during the past 10 or 12 years.

Few Workers Hired

At the same time that profits have been rising, companies have hired few additional workers into the industry, he said. "They are making more profits while hiring the same amount of labor."

The 25c hourly increase will be a principal demand in all forthcoming OWIU contract talks with major oil producers—along with efforts to improve fringe benefits, pensions and shift differentials.

In addition, the union has filed petitions for union shop elections at the Sinclair Oil properties and will follow through with similar demands from other companies.

The drive for wage benefits and security will be matched by a major organizing drive to vastly increase the size of the oil workers' union.

Major gifts from the Steelworkers and the Auto Workers — together with matching aid from the national CIO—will finance the organizing drive.

A 15c increase in per capita to the OWIU national office — from $1.25 to $1.40 a member a month —was also approved by the convention to place the union on sound footing for its future activities.

After hearing an address by CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll, the convention passed a resolution noting that "gains won at the collective bargaining table are placed in jeopardy by events in the political arena."

Support PAC 100%

A sign that OWIU members want their political action to be effective came in the strengthening of the PAC resolution brought to the convention by the union's officers and executive council.

That resolution had called for a drive to get dollars for PAC from at least 50% of the union's members. The delegates amended that objective to 100%. And, from Secy.-Treas. McCormick, they received a "warning" that they had better meet their dollar-from-every-member goal.

Vice-Pres. A. S. Kinstley, in his report to the OWIU meeting, reminded the Truman Administration that it must follow liberal policies to merit the faith of workers. The Administration's record is not without blemish, he charged, and good speeches must be followed up with good programs of action.

Calling on union members to elect good Congressmen, Kinstley reminded the delegates that it's Congress—not the Administration —that passes the laws.

Pres. Knight—who serves as labor representative in the government's National Production Authority in Washington—promised that labor's spokesman will fight hard to prevent big business control of the defense program.

"The only force in America big enough to stop the power of the rich from controlling the government is the labor movement," he said.

The Union's three top officers were all renominated. Secy-Treas. T. M. McCormick was unopposed; Pres. O. A. Knight will be challenged by H. J. Savage of Long Beach, Cal.; and Vice-Pres. A. S. Kinstley by B. J. Schafer of Chicago. The union elects its officers by referendum election.

The 1952 convention will be held at Philadelphia.

OWIU Delegates Demand FEPC Law

Delegates—a large proportion of them from southern and southwestern states — voted to call on all members of Congress for passage of a Fair Employment Practices law.

The union also called on locals to set up FEPC committees to work against discrimination in their home areas, and to negotiate contract clauses providing equal opportunity for employment, promotion and all other work conditions for all employes —regardless of race, color, religion or sex.

Oil Workers Charge

AFL Ended ULPC For Own Phony Reasons

THE AFL's withdrawal from the United Labor Policy Committee was based on "flimsy and phony" reasons, the CIO Oil Workers charged last week.

And organic unity in American labor will win support only if it is secured on an "honorable" basis, with full protection for industrial unions, the union said at its annual convention.

The unity issue brought forth a two-hour session of serious debate before delegates—at the suggestion of Pres. O. A. Knight—turned down a "unity now" resolution and ordered a new statement based on later developments in the CIO-AFL relationship.

The exchange of views came on a resolution submitted by Pres. Harlan Savage of the union's California district, which proposed an organic unity convention of all branches of U. S. labor before January 1, 1952, to bring about a completely united organization.

Pres. Knight, after reaffirming faith in the hope of eventual merger of the various union groups, said that the AFL had not shown good faith in breaking up the ULPC.

"The AFL wants us to come into their organization, then have the fates of our individual unions decided by the AFL executive council," he charged. "The AFL wants to tear us apart, and parcel us out to the various craft unions.

"I'm against abject surrender to the AFL. I'm unwilling to sell the interest of one industrial union to the AFL. I am for organic unity on an honorable basis, but I strongly oppose our merging with the AFL on the terms presently offered by the AFL."

KNIGHT SAID he "suspected" that Tobin (of the AFL teamsters) and Hutcheson (of the AFL carpenters) are ready to lead labor right back into the Republican party.

"We are not willing to enter into any merger until we are assured that the new organization resulting from such a merger would insure the security of all industrial unions and would provide for democratic representation of all members," the OWIU statement said.

It endorsed the CIO's position on united labor action, and "heartily commended" the efforts of CIO Pres. Murray to win unity on an honorable basis and pledged continued support to the principle of industrial unionism.

PAC Bucks Come From All Directions

After Republican Governor Dan Thornton of Colorado finished his address to welcome to the 400 delegates, he took a dollar from his wallet and got an official PAC receipt.

But the governor's political action donation was more than matched by the OWIU convention delegates.

They passed a special resolution barring any delegate from the convention's banquet unless he could produce a PAC dollar receipt dated Sept. 12.

Recipe For Old Age: Pick Right Foreman

Ancient union arguments have been verified. The University of Chicago Industrial Relations Center announced that a five-year study at a heavy machinery plant disclosed that "Foreman who tend to be little dictators have accident rates among their subordinates four and five times greater than the average foreman in the same plant."

FOR A BETTER UNION: Pres. O. A. Knight addresses the 21st annual convention of the Oil Workers Intl. Union at Denver, Colo. The union set its sight on higher wages and strong political action—as two ways to "build a better union."

Reuther Says Annual Wage Is UAW Goal

A GUARANTEED annual wage—designed to insure three square meals a day for 365 days of the year—will be the next big objective of the CIO Auto Workers, Pres. Walter Reuther told the oil workers convention in Denver.

A guest speaker at the convention, Reuther said the UAW would submit its demands to the auto corporations a full year before present contracts expire.

And if the companies turn down the union's demand, Reuther added—"well, a lot of people will be riding around in jalopies—because UAW members won't be producing new cars until their demands are met."

Pointing to seasonal and emergency lay-offs as cutting into auto workers' take-home pay, the UAW president said workers—as well as rich persons—should have a right to the certainty of three meals a day.

"If the good Lord intended the biological processes of the rich to be different from the biological processes of the poor, he would have made two varieties of men's stomachs—the yearly and the hourly models."

Reuther lashed out at the poor showing of the 82nd Congress in refusing to take strong steps to control inflation.

"Henry Ford will go down in history as the man who took the horses off the streets of America," Reuther commented.

"And the 82nd Congress will go down in history for putting horses on the dinner tables of the American people."

Kroll Warns Taft Is Labor's Enemy

CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll told the Rubber Worker's convention that Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.) "undoubtedly" will be the Republican candidate for president next year.

"Bob Taft is an implacable enemy of our movement," he declared. "Don't fool yourselves on where he stands—he is one of the leaders of reaction in America.

"If he is elected, we can well again have the American Plan movement (open shop movement that followed World War I). We will see an open shop drive that will make all others like look child's play. Brothers and sisters, if we do, you won't be able to sit in conventions like this and talk about paying more dues—you'll be too busy trying to defend yourselves."

Kroll warned that the 1952 campaign will be a dirty one, with "tactics dirtier than those used in 1950." He recalled Republican smear tactics of last year in senatorial elections in California, North Carolina, Maryland and Ohio, and predicted that in 1952, the country will see "the Republicans going into every garbage can in the nation, digging up every bit of filth and slime to use on liberal candidates and the CIO-PAC."

Buckmaster Reports:

Tremendous Progress By Rubber Workers

APPROXIMATELY 65% of the entire membership of the CIO Rubber Workers—or 112,000 members — has come under the protection of the union shop since the 1950 convention, officers told the 1951 convention at Long Beach, Cal.

The union security clause was written into 50 additional contracts during the previous year. The URW won every union shop vote in which it participated under Taft-Hartley requirements except one—and in that case, Organization Dir. Fleet Perrine noted in his annual report, it polled a majority of those voting though not the majority of eligibles that T-H requires for a victory.

The Rubber Workers now have 160 contracts, covering 145,000 members, with the union shop. This compares with 110 a year ago and only 58 in 1945. The union claims the best union shop record in any basic industry, with practically every tire and tube company, and most other companies, signed up.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster described the progress in the past year as "tremendous."

THE "first significant breaks in the industry's long-standing and traditional opposition to the union shop, dating back to the days of Akron's fiery sit-down strikes, came in October, 1950, with modified contracts won from Goodrich and Firestone, two of the "Big Four," he said.

"Those two agreements led to complete union shops with the remaining members of the Big Four, Goodyear and U. S. Rubber, this year," he said.

"Since the Big Four has capitulated on the union shop issue, many large producers have now agreed to complete union shop contracts."

At the same time, he emphasized, the job is not completed, as about 50,000 additional union members have not finished negotiations with their employers.

It will be completed, he added significantly, "some time before the end of 1951."

Buckmaster also noted that some 125,000 workers in the rubber, cork, linoleum and plastics industries have won nearly $33 million in annual wage increases as a result of the URW's wage drive, which began three months ago.

A DOZEN major companies, he said, have yielded pay boosts averaging 13c an hour since bargaining began with U. S. Rubber on June 7.

"We are not deluding ourselves," said Buckmaster, "into thinking these recent wage gains are anything that will advance the living standards of our membership above the level we established before inflation set in.

"The 13c an hour pattern which has been established merely permits us to bring ourselves closer to the level of living costs that have been permitted to go out of sight."

82nd Congress Held 'Worst In History'

The low estate to which Congress has fallen in the eyes of organized labor was summarized for delegates to the CIO Rubber Workers' convention by Thomas R. Owens, the union's legislative representative.

"I am sorry to say," he reported, "that this past year has been the most disappointing from a legislative standpoint that we could have had.

"The 82nd Congress has been very well named 'The Do-Nothing Congress.' We thought the 80th Congress when the Republican Party was in control was bad enough. But this 82nd Congress through coalition of Reactionary Republicans and Dixiecrats has been the worst in the history of the country so far as constructive or progressive legislation is concerned."

In Spite Of Glamour

CIO Rubber Workers Set Realistic Program

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CIO Rubber Workers held their 16th annual convention last week in the spacious Municipal Auditorium in Long Beach, Cal.

The glamorous Pacific, its blue softened by a light autumnal haze, was just outside the door. A few feet away was a sun-drenched bathing beach, with inviting, glistening sand. A few miles away was Hollywood, with all the lure of movieland.

But more than 400 delegates, representing more than 200 local unions, steadfastly turned their collective backs on these attractions. Instead, they stayed on the job to whittle out, by democratic discussion and debate, an aggressive program intended to enable the union to continue the progress it has made in the past.

Per Capita Increase

The most important step taken was to increase the per capita tax to the international from 70c—lowest of any major CIO union—to $1 per month.

The convention made the decision on Sept. 18 on a roll call vote, by a count of 1080 to 370. A two-thirds vote was required. It was taken after a day of debate that found administration forces led by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster and other officers firmly in command. A dozen amendments were offered, but all were roundly defeated.

The increase came in the form of an amendment to the constitution that also raised monthly dues from a minimum of $1.50 and a maximum of $3 to a low of $2 and a high of $3.50. The new rates become effective Nov. 1.

The badly-needed additional income will enable the international officers and general executive board to expand some operations and inaugurate others for which authorization has been given by past conventions, but which have been held up because of inability to finance them.

The vote followed pleas from Buckmaster, Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs, Secy.-Treas. Desmond Walker and many rank-and-file leaders. Unexpected support came from some delegates who in the past have opposed the administration. The debate was vigorous but restrained.

Buckmaster touched off the discussion in his opening address.

"The union, while we are proud of it, we know has certain weaknesses that need to be overcome," he said.

"We started off small. We set $1 a month dues, and when I say $1 a month, I mean $1, not part of a dollar . . ."

As a result of having started off that way, Buckmaster said, "we have been unable to meet in a fully satisfactory manner the demands of our members for the various types of services which they need, such as research work, legal counsel, educational programs, public relations programs, and various other types of programs which we know and our people know they need.

"In addition, we have been unable to pursue an aggressive and militant and effective program in organizing the unorganized."

Buckmaster touched on several other phases of the union's role in the national and international picture. He pointed out to the delegates that while they were meeting peacefully in Long Beach, they were aware that "everything is not peaceful and serene" in the world.

Communism Flayed

"The threat of communism, and all of the evils that go with it, lies very heavily upon the people of the world," he said.

"I don't think that we can win this war against communism solely by the use of guns. We have to make the people of the underprivileged countries of the world come into more of the rights that human beings are entitled to if we want actually to stop communism."

Buckmaster also paid tribute to his fellow officers and the members of the company-wide negotiating committees for their cooperation in marking up the gains of the past year. These include wage increases totaling 25c an hour for practically all of the 175,000 members, and union shop protection for 112,000 members—who didn't have it a year ago.

Buckmaster's first action after taking over the gavel from District Dir. Floyd Gartell, who opened the convention, was to seize former Pres. Sherman H. Dalrymple by the hand and lead him to the microphone.

"We pay tribute now," he said, "to the greatest leader that this union ever produced, the man who just stepped up here on the platform."

Kroll Speaks

Jack Kroll, director of the National CIO Political Action Committee, bluntly told the delegates that the union has not been carrying its full share of CIO political activity.

"Your shop stewards don't ask for PAC dollars. Some of you say you can't afford to give a dollar to PAC. Actually, you can't afford not to. Inflation is costing every American between $250 and $300 a year. If we had the right kind of congressmen and senators we would have price controls, etc., and we would not have inflation—and we would have that money in our pockets."

G. L. Paterson, the union's general counsel, discussed some of the legal battles the union has been through and the problems it faces. He particularly warned against wildcat strikes.

Other speakers included Adolph Germer, organization director of the CIO Woodworkers and a veteran of early organization battles of the Rubber Workers; Secy.-Treas. Alfred T. Lunceford of the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council; CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin De Shetler, and Mrs. Annette Snider, president of URW District Council No. 5, covering the 11 western states.

IUE Conclave Backs Demands At General Electric

By FRED ROSS

NECESSITY and adversity gave birth to the first international union in the electrical union in the electrical and radio industry in Buffalo, N. Y., 17 years ago.

And in the same city last week necessity and adversity spurred on the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers at its third annual convention to greater efforts.

The AFL had refused to give an industrial union charter to the group of unions which met in 1934. (The unions all had been set up to combat starvation wages.)

James B. Carey, who is IUE president, headed the earlier union. IUE Vice Pres. Harry Block and William Murphy, who attended the IUE convention as a representative of the Defense Bond drive, also attended the 1934 meeting.

But there were differences between the two meetings.

There were only a handful of delegates representing several thousand workers at the 1934 meeting. But the third annual IUE convention was attended by 472 delegates representing 350,000 workers.

Despite its size, IUE faced real problems. Meeting its difficulties head on, IUE decided:

• To back the General Electric conference board in its contract demands.

• To ask the local unions to approve a constitutional amendment increasing the minimum local dues from $1.50 to $2 a month. After heated debate, the convention approved the constitutional change by a vote of 1142.08 to 778.92.

During the discussion of the resolution to back the union's GE conference board, Carey served notice on UE that it would be ousted at all GE plants.

"We stood up year after year on the UE convention floor," Carey said. "I must admit that success did not crown all of our efforts."

There finally came the day when the 1949 CIO convention at Cleveland ousted UE and set up IUE.

"If there is one thing that IUE has," Carey continued, "it is persistence," as he predicted IUE's victory over UE in the remainder of the GE system.

Carey charged that "GE wants to keep UE alive. He recounted the long struggle of the right-wing group which he headed within the UE to remove the Communists from power.

Carey said that when the IUE negotiators called on GE Vice Pres. Lemuel R. Boulware the day after UE won a recent NLRB vote at Schenectady "he was very cocky about his 'victory.'"

Both Carey and General Conference Board Chairman John Callahan were confident that GE would eventually grant IUE demands. And the convention resolution pledged "the entire strength of the IUE-CIO for the support of the GE workers in the achievement of their just demands."

Demands At GE

The conference board for the GE workers include:

A 4c minimum guaranteed under the 2½% wage increase, which GE has offered; a calculation of the cost of living index—on which increases are based—each three or four months instead of every six months as GE wants, and three weeks' vacation after 15 years.

IUE is also demanding a union shop, a vigorous anti-discrimination clause for women, who constitute 31.5% of the GE workers, an improved progressive schedule, better seniority provisions, assumption by the company of the 2% employe contribution to the pension and a wage re-opener next Mar. 15.

Opposition to the dues increase centered on the charge that the move would interfere with the locals' autonomy. Carey explained that the change—which was the subject of debate at the Milwaukee convention—would have to be approved by the locals.

The convention was encouraged to continue this struggle with UE by Pres. Michael Quill of the CIO Transport Workers. He said that UE's Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak and Organizational Director James Matles did not plan to precipitate the expulsion of UE at the Cleveland convention of CIO in 1949.

Quill charged that Gerhart Eisler, German Communist leader who subsequently fled this country while deportation proceedings were pending against him, directed the UE moves that made it necessary for CIO to expel the union.

Recalls Early Struggle

The early struggle of the 1934 meeting to form a union was brought home to the delegates when Carey introduced John Brophy, CIO representative on the appeal committee of the Wage Stabilization Board, who at that time was director of the Committee for Industrial Organization, which later became the CIO.

Irving Abramson, chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, told of the growth of the committee's work and appealed for greater participation of IUE members on CSC activities.

He told the delegates to refuse to sign loyalty oaths when they volunteer for civilian defense work.

The convention went on record as hailing the CSC on its tenth anniversary and "commending the valuable services it has rendered."

The convention also endorsed CSC campaign for funds to send comfort packages to GI's overseas and to aid Korean rehabilitation.

Other resolutions:

Called on Congress to make available necessary funds for civilian defense and on the Civilian Defense Administration to develop a program to assure full participation of the CIO in all civilian defense activities.

Commended and urged financial support for IUE members who have been locked out at the Bowling Green, Ky., plant of Westinghouse for their efforts to have the corporation's national agreement extended to their plant.

Commended CIO Pres. Philip Murray, "ably assisted by Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, for the leadership he had given the CIO and the labor movement as a whole, and for the support and cooperation he has given IUE-CIO."

UE News And Worker Look Alike To Carey

IUE Pres. James B. Carey called the delegates' attention to the presence at the press table of a correspondent for the UE News.

He said that he hoped that the reporter—Betty Goldstein—would report the convention proceedings accurately. He said that she would receive the same courtesies as were extended to the representatives of other newspapers — "if," he added, "you can call that soap wrapper a newspaper.

"We have some difficulty in distinguishing between the UE News and the Daily Worker."

A DISTINGUISHED VISITOR'S BADGE is being pinned on Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt by Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett at the convention of the CIO Electrical Workers at Buffalo, N. Y., while Pres. James B. Carey shows his approval. The badge was made of metals from the White House, which is being reconstructed.

Intelligent Voters Needed To Aid Peace--Mrs. Roosevelt

MRS. Eleanor Roosevelt—who was introduced to the convention of the CIO Electrical Workers by Pres. James B. Carey as "the first lady of the world"—made an ardent plea for an alert citizenry to help assure a peaceful world.

"We have a great deal to do at home in safeguarding our rights and freedom," Mrs. Roosevelt said. She declared that she was shocked by the small number of people who vote.

"Women around Poughkeepsie and Hype Park come up with 'good excuses' for staying home on election day," Mrs. Roosevelt continued. "What is at stake is whether this form of government democracy—really can be trusted.

"Have your union give you the information you need so that you will be an informed voter on election day.

"And if we don't know about people in the other parts of the world, we may find ourselves deciding something that will hurt us through its reaction on these people.

"We are fighting for freedom for all the people in the world who aspire for freedom. We are doing it by being stronger militarily and economically so that we can help other people.

"We have the spiritual and the moral values to help the world, but we must put away fear. We cannot be good citizens if we are afraid of something happening that will hurt us.

"We must make our decisions as to what we want to do at home and abroad with the aim of advancing a better life for every people everywhere in the world.

"We haven't really accepted our world leadership. When we do we will be the kind of citizens our democracy can be proud of. We can say that we are not perfect but that we are moving forward. The nation that moves forward cannot be conquered."

Upon the conclusion of the speech, Carey presented Mrs. Roosevelt who is a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild with a convention badge made of metal from the White House.

The badge bore the inscription: "To Eleanor Roosevelt for distinguished service to the cause of human rights and democratic unionism."

Demands Explained By Federal Mediator

Rising prices, higher taxes and the fact that the nation is on only a partial wartime footing are responsible for present pay increase demands, Clyde M. Mills, chief assistant to Federal Mediation Director Cyrus S. Ching said last week.

Behind union demands for more money he saw labor's view that weak price controls and higher taxes make such demands a must.

Murray Says Turn Rascals Out Of 'Hill'

CIO PRES. Philip Murray—in a speech to the CIO Electrical Workers — accused Congress of "letting this economy of ours go to hell on roller skates."

He was referring to the Defense Production Act and the recently enacted Capehart and Herlong amendments.

Murray recalled that President Truman asked Congress to enact control legislation that would stop inflation.

"It paid scant attention," Murray said, "but adopted the Defense Production Act which in itself produced inflation.

"THEN IT enacted the Capehart and the Herlong amendments which provide loopholes that enable American interest to hoist prices to any extent, while the same Congress proposes to the people of the United States that wages be frozen.

"Price Stabilizer DiSalle and Economic Stabilizer Johnston told Congress that the act does not stop inflation. Defense Mobilizer Wilson said the same thing.

"Johnston has no political axe to grind. He is not a member of a labor union. I don't believe that he is a Democrat. In fact, I know he isn't.

"Wilson (formerly president of General Electric) can't be charged with having a socialistic trend (laughter). DiSalle can't be accused of being a dangerous radical.

"You have a bad Congress. There is one remedy: to use the instrumentality provided by the federal government and vote the rascals out of office."

He said that the people by the use of the ballot box should decide what should be done with members of Congress who favored not only the Defense Production Act but also the Taft-Hartley Law.

Murray also did not pull his punches when he spoke of the action of the AFL in withdrawing from the United Labor Policy Committee.

HE SAID that he did not know why the AFL quit ULPC, but he had read reports that a deal had been made by the AFL with Sen. Taft (R. O.).

"No calamity has overtaken the nation because we don't have ULPC anymore," Murray continued. "I have worked—and your friend (referring to James B. Carey, IUE president) and the members of the CIO executive board have worked—with the AFL for many months in the ULPC.

"But people were working pretty well on the local level before ULPC, There was never anything to prevent any organization in the ULPC from taking up the matter of organic unity."

Steel Union Now Has 1.4 Million Members

CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the CIO Electrical Workers convention that the CIO Steelworkers—of which he is president—now have 1.4 million members.

"Dug In"

Labor Won't Be Left Holding 'Stabilization Bag'—Johnston

LABOR alone has practiced equality of sacrifice in the stabilization effort, Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston last week told the CIO Electrical Workers convention.

"During the recent fight for the renewal of the Defense Production Act," Johnston said,—"I watched group after group march up to Capitol Hill in Washington demanding exemptions and special privileges.

"Every group favored controls for the other fellow, but for itself it wanted either no controls at all, or else control at a higher level of prices.

". . . Labor took a different attitude. It asked for a strong stabilization program all across the board.

"You men and women in the labor movement don't believe in a controlled economy any more than I do," said Johnston, who formerly was president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and is now the top official of the Motion Picture Association.

"But you recognize that we are caught up in a great emergency. We must arm the whole free world—and arm it fast—in order to meet the threat of Communist aggression.

"We are going to carry through the stabilization program fairly and honestly, and with equal justice for all groups. If you have any fears that as a result of the weakening amendments, labor will be left holding the bag of stabilization, you can set these fears at rest.

"In our agency's battle against inflation, we have, first of all, the system of price controls. I don't want anybody to get the idea that just because I have been fighting for a stronger law, the Economic Stabilization Agency is going to lay down on the job and is not going to use the powers that it has to fight price inflation.

"Quite the contrary. I have instructed my people all down the line to use all our powers to the full and to grant no ceiling price increases that can possibly be avoided, and I am sure that these instructions will be carried out.

"Our second weapon, our second pillar of stabilization, is the wage stabilization program. The wage stabilization program comprises a series of policies worked out and administered, under my general supervision, by the tripartite Wage Stabilization Board.

"As Economic Stabilization Administrator I approved the new cost of living policy subject to review next March in the light of the conditions which then exist.

"I approved this policy because it seemed to me—just as it seemed to the board—a way of assuring the workers that a leaky stabilization program will not be put through at their expense.

"And speaking of increasing production, we are all of us in the stabilization agency aware of the desirability of encouraging payments for increased productivity when this can be done without inflationary effects.

"As early as last February I wrote to Cyrus Ching, then chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, that it would be especially helpful to the stabilization effort if arrangements could be made in the plant for payment of productivity increases through a mutually acceptable form of deferred-payment plan instead of in cash.

"In the same letter to Mr. Ching, I asked the Wage Stabilization Board to work out standards within the stabilization program under which new health, welfare and pension plans—that is to say, plans other than those in contracts before last January—could receive approval. A panel of the board is hard at work on this problem, and we expect a report in the not too distant future.

"The board is also currently working on the problems of inter-plant and intra-plant inequities—trying to set up standards for remedying this type of injustice, for doing this with the least harm to the stabilization program and avoiding the creation of new inequities to take the place of old ones."

Johnston Offered Organizer's Job

Upon the conclusion of his speech, Economic Stabilizer—Eric Johnston — who has announced his intention of resigning that post — was facetiously offered a job as an organizer by IUE Pres. James B. Carey.

"I am afraid I can't be an organizer, if I can't be a stabilizer. There are some people who believe that I'm not a stabilizer at all," Johnston said.

"You'd better see what kind of a job I'm doing before you offer me a job as an organizer."

Negroes Aided By Unions, Says Urban League Leader

DR. LESTER B. Granger, executive director of the National Urban League, in a speech to the CIO Electrical Workers convention, hailed the advance of Negroes in America, during the last 15 years.

But he warned that indifference by union members to Negroes' problems may help cancel that progress.

He said that the league has grown because the status of the Negro has grown. The league was created to aid Negroes to get a greater degree of civil rights and most of its members are Negroes.

"More and more Negroes are being integrated into the community because more and more Negroes are welcomed into labor unions," Dr. Granger said.

"There are close to 1.2 million organized Negroes, which is more than 10 times the number there were 15 years ago.

HE WARNED that the ignorant racists are "all too typical of the American community." Dr. Granger said that "for the last 300 years America has suffered from the virus of slavery. As a result, there many many people as sick of this virus as if they were physically sick.

"They must not be allowed to infect American unions."

He also warned that Communists make effective use of the racial issue.

"There is no danger of the Communists taking over any segment of our population by the use of the racial appeal unless we stand by and let the Communists win through our own inertia.

He asked whether proponents of civil rights were making proper use of the Negro press, church and fraternal organizations.

Dr. Granger wondered whether bona fide union members were as persistent in getting attendance at union-sponsored rallies as the Communists are.

He noted an improvement in our racial relations since 1940 because America has been "around the world" since then. He said that Americans because of the World War II have seen suffering all over the world.

"We saw what happened in Poland, Russia and Germany under Hitler," Dr. Granger said. "We recognize the spiritual kinship between Hitler and Americans at their worst. The only difference between Klansmen and Storm Troopers is the uniform.

"The answer is in meetings like this. Civil rights legislation would be good, but civil rights lie in the reaction of people to the spirit of the the law.

"Your ideals are our ideals, your objectives are our objectives. In the spirit of President Franklin Roosevelt, we who work in the people's cause will never stop."

TUC Will Train Young Unionists

Britain's Trades Union Congress has inaugurated a new program to teach young trade unionists the fine points of collective bargaining and negotiations. The one-month study courses will be financed by the TUC.

East Zone Shuns Rules For Safety

The Russian drive for increased industrial production in the eastern zone of Germany has brought large-scale neglect of safety regulations and a consequent increase in factory accident rates, according to refugees arriving at Brussels.

Even official Russian sources estimate the factory accident rate is up at least a third.

Refugees say families of accident victims, even those injured fatally, receive no compensation. The families are told the men themselves neglected to take necessary safety precautions. Yet if real safety measures are taken by the men production suffers and the workers are punished.

Salary Board Sets Top On Merit Hikes

The Salary Stabilization Board last week declared that employers cannot give salaried workers merit or length of service increases totalling more than 6% of the employes' base pay in any one year.

WetbacksNow Threat To Pay Of Entire U.S.

THOUSANDS of Mexican "wetbacks" have invaded the U. S. in the past few months and many are ignoring the usual migrant harvest jobs to move north into jobs in industrial centers. Wage scales and job standards are in danger of being undermined.

Field agents for the Immigration and Naturalization Service estimate that at least 10,000 wetbacks are employed at non-farm jobs in the Chicago area. ("Wetbacks" are Mexicans who enter the U. S. illegally by crossing the Rio Grande.)

Immigration officials recently deported 406 illegal Mexicans after a four-day check of industrial plants in Chicago and vicinity.

In Detroit, 101 wetbacks were rounded up in a three-day check. Thousands of others are in New York and some have been caught as far north as Alaska, officials said.

Last year, 579,000 were expelled from the U. S., at government expense, and the number is expected to be greater this year.

Congress, however, has refused to take steps to relieve the problem by imposing penalties on employers who knowingly hire the illegal migrants. Both the Senate and House killed provisions establishing fines and prison sentences for such offenses.

The CIO demanded the penalties to protect the jobs, wages and working conditions of American workers. Wetbacks are hired for extremely low pay and cannot complain because of their illegal status.

THE MEXICAN government also has demanded the penalties to protect the legal migrant workers it furnishes to the U. S. under the new migrant labor treaty. Estimates of the number of legal migrants who will be brought into the U. S. this year range from 200,000 to 400,000.

The California convention of the AFL National Farm Labor Union charged that wetbacks have been employed by some states, counties and cities on public work projects and again urged that Congress set up penalties for such offenses.

The union also recommended that unions "police their ranks" to weed out wetbacks in industry.

Commenting on the wetback problem, the Washington Post editorially deplored the failure of Congress to adopt additional measures necessary to control illegal immigration from Mexico.

Terming the Ellender-Poage bill which President Truman reluctantly signed last July "pathetically inadequate," the Post editorial called for approval of a joint resolution introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) providing $600,000 in stop-gap aid which would enable the Immigration and Naturalization Service to cope with the problem temporarily.

"The U. S. has a double obligation . . . a treaty obligation to Mexico . . . and an obligation to American farm workers whose work opportunities and living standards are being depressed by ruthless exploitation of the poverty and helplessness of these aliens," the editorial declared.

Commies Call Shortcomings 'Socialism'

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

AFTER innumerable "five year plans," the Russian people were told recently that the Soviet Union "now stands at the half way mark" toward the creation of the planned goal of a Communist utopia.

Not only that, but a lot of the Red brothers who have imagined all along that they belonged to a Communist society, now find that they are still living, if that's the word for it, under what the Commie bosses call a "Socialist" economic system.

The revelations were made in an authorative discussion of the question of the transition of the Soviet Union from socialism to communism. They were published in the latest issue of Bolshevik, important party review.

The article, in discussing the present, which is termed a transitional era eventually to be replaced by a strictly Communist way of life, says that to provide an industrial basis for communism, Soviet industrial production must be increased by "at least threefold over the pre-war level."

THE ARTICLE admitted that the present economic and social system in the Soviet Union, although established and directed by the Communist party is not, from a theoretical viewpoint an actual Communist system.

The present arrangement is called "distribution according to labor." Under communism it is hoped to ultimately achieve "distribution according to need" whatever that may mean.

A "great increase" in agricultural output was also called for but no specific percentages are given as to how much it must be upped.

Just five years ago, Premier Stalin called for approximately the same industrial increases suggested by Bolshevik. At that time he declared that Soviet industry "must achieve a threefold increase over pre-war levels" if the Soviet was to "regard our country as guaranteed against any accidents."

Stalin then gave as specific targets 50 million tons of pig iron, 60 million tons of steel, 500 million tons of coal and 60 million tons of oil.

Today, five years later, according to Bolshevik, Soviet production is still approximately half way toward those marks.

The article criticized theorists who pay too much attention to working out problems of free distribution of goods and services, noting that the first problem is literally to "saturate" the country with consumer goods in unheard of abundance.

ONLY AFTER saturation is achieved should the question of free distribution be considered, Bolshevik asserted.

The article emphasized that the state would not "wither away" and that because of the capitalist threat from abroad it would be necessary "to have army, police and intelligence organs continue in operation."

The day following publication of the article, a U. S. government observer said it "sounded like sweet music aimed at making the speed-up system more palatable."

He declared that "even if the Soviet Union triples its pre-war production by 1960, its national income will be substantially below that of the U. S. today."

"It will have to be spread out among 220 million people, as against 150 million people here," he said.

He pointed out that the Soviet Union in 1950 produced on the average only about one pair of leather shoes a person and one passenger car or less for each 2000 persons.

"Soviet city dwellers are cramped in predominately slum-quality housing with typical families living in a single room of an apartment whose kitchen and other facilities they share with other families."

He added that the Soviet diet consists primarily of bread and cereals with meat, eggs and other luxuries rarely available to workers.

He declared that there is no sign that Soviet workers' attitudes toward their jobs are changing in accordance with Communist ideology. On the contrary, the Soviet government has found it increasingly necessary to multiply incentives, rewards and penalties to obtain higher productivity.

ADA Witness OK, Capehart Tells Capehart

The witness—John J. Gunther, legislative representative of Americans for Democratic Action—appeared last week to testify against the "Capehart Amendment," an amendment very close, indeed, to the Senator's heart.

Mr. Gunther and the ADA thought the "Capehart Amendment" should be repealed outright. Senator Capehart thought otherwise and wanted to get at the inside of Mr. Gunther's qualifications to make such a proposal.

Had the witness the experience to judge a good law from a bad one, the Senator wanted to know. Was he a businessman? An accountant? Was he able?

The witness was modest. But he said that—since his competence had been questioned—he had a letter which he would like to enter in the proceedings, a letter which might drive out all doubts about his ability from the Senator's mind.

Senator Robertson (D. Va.), chairman of the subcommittee, gave Gunther permission to read the letter. Dated Washington, D. C., June 1, 1948, it follows:

To Whom It May Concern:

I have known Mr. Gunther for sometime. He is of good character, and an outstanding student with a wealth of varied experience.

As an interne, he was a member of the National Institute of Public Affairs. He has served with the International Section of the Labor Department. His most recent association has been as a staff member in the office of Senator Flanders.

I recommend Mr. Gunther as an able, loyal and conscientious person.

Sincerely,

(signed) Homer E. Capehart

N.Y. CIO And AFL Still To Cooperate

Top New York state CIO and AFL officials have pledged continued cooperation on common problems—particularly legislation—despite the recent breakup of the United Labor Policy Committee.

In an exchange of telegrams read to the closing session of the state CIO convention, New York CIO Pres. Louis Hollander and AFL state Sec.-Treas. Harold Hanover promised to continue to work together "for the common good."

CIO Counsel Attacks Insurance Tax Plan

A worker's insurance is not a form of payment, Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, told members of the American Bar Association meeting in New York last week.

It is a condition of employment the same as water and air and as such is not taxable, he said.

Foreign Aid Program Faces More Cuts In Conference

REPUBLICAN leaders are busy brewing more trouble for Administration Foreign Aid plans.

The Senate has already cut $250 million from the House approved $7.5 billion Foreign Aid measure. President Truman asked $8.5 billion.

In a House-Senate conference on the bill late last week Senators forced through two minor changes that may prove troublesome to the Administration.

One snips off $150 million from the funds made available to transfer excess equipment between member nations of the North Atlantic organization. The other limits the amount to be spent on a "foreign legion" made up of escapees from behind the Iron Curtain.

Over everything hangs the threat of the heavy-handed economy proposals of Congressman Taber (R.-N.Y.), senior minority member of the House Appropriations Committee and Republican spokesman on money matters in the House.

Taber hopes to cut the aid program by about $2 billion.

Meat Industry Strikes As Congress Reconsiders Controls

Would Deny Army Beef To Keep Profits

By MILTON PLUMB

AS IT DID during earlier hearings on the Defense Production Act last spring, the meat industry last week again struck against the American people.

This time, however, the chips are down, and the industry seems ready to go to any extreme to thwart the present effort to repeal the special-privilege amendments it succeeded, through similar pressure tactics, in getting Congress to write into the new Defense Production Act.

In its earlier strike this spring, the industry forced a shortage of beef upon American consumers by withholding cattle from the market. This time, with wanton lack of patriotism, the meat industry is extending the strike further.

It is now threatening to cut off supplies of beef to feed American soldiers and other members of America's fighting forces.

The meat industry's strike this time came as the Senate Banking Committee was winding up its hearings on President Truman's appeal to Congress for repeal of four sections of the new economic controls law. These include provisions which confer special benefits upon the meat industry.

DESPITE THE FACT that beef production this year is greater than at any time in history, the Army Quartermaster Market Center in Chicago reported Sept. 19 that the Army faced the possibility of a beef shortage.

An officer at the center said that in response to the Army's call for bids to supply 13 million pounds of boneless beef, most of the large packers had told him they could not supply beef at this time. He said he understood the industry's objections to price controls are the reason.

The meat industry strike comes at a time when beef ceilings are higher above parity than any other agricultural product. This means that the meat industry has already been getting far more than its fair share of the inflation "gravy."

Despite the favored treatment on price ceilings which Congress voted it last spring, the meat industry has found it more profitable to ignore even these high ceilings and engage in black market operations. These operations are made much simpler by the ban against slaughter quotas.

The large packers and organized cattlemen are fighting hard to keep the ban, but their little competitors are being forced out of business through their inability to obtain cattle. Four spokesmen for these smaller operators appeared before the Senate committee last week.

Meanwhile, the Office of Price Administration began checking slaughter operations in "answer" to the meat packers and slaughterers who have complained that they cannot buy their normal amount of cattle at ceiling prices because they are outbid by others dealing in the blackmarket. All slaughterers caught cheating face stiff penalties.

Growing Food Chain Wants Shrinking $ $

A straw in the wind of what is in store for consumers under the new controls law is a suit filed in the U. S. Emergency Court of Appeals last week by Safeway Stores, Inc., one of the nation's biggest food chains, against Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle.

The chain, expanding rapidly on the high profits it has been making, seeks a court order compelling DiSalle to let it boost the prices of 50 food items it sells in 1,065 stores in 21 states.

Officials of other food chains applauded the action and indicated that if Safeway succeeds, they will follow suit.

Basic Wants Of Labor Are Outlined

Labor's basic wants from management were outlined by Clinton S. Golden, labor counselor, Economic Cooperation Administration, at a conference on Humanities in Business sponsored by the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Labor, Golden said, wants "the fact of regular employment at an annual wage adequate for decent living." It also wants recognition of the dignity and worth of a person.

Other wants of workers, he added, are the right to take part and express themselves in the employing enterprise and a fair share of the returns.

Finally, he said, labor wants the right to organize for legitimate purposes.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Many of our CIO State Industrial Union Councils are having their conventions during the months of September and October. Assistant Dir. of Councils Anthony Smith will attend the Oregon State IUC in Astoria, Ore. Assistant Dir. of Organization, R. J. Thomas, will attend the Georgia, Virginia and West Virginia State IUC Conventions, all between now and the end of the month. The writer plans to attend and speak at the Missouri State IUC Convention in Jefferson City, Mo., and the Wisconsin State IUC in Milwaukee, Wis. I also plan to attend the Utility Workers Convention in Cleveland, Ohio. More about these conventions later.

Allan Haywood

According to press releases, there has been a great deal of loud barking in some quarters as to what is going to happen to the CIO in the months to come. This of course, will serve to activize our CIO membership more and more, and I am confident the results will lead to a bigger and better CIO leading the progressive forces of America. All the dire threats are likened to the barking dog who has no bite. Our reply will be constructive by continued organizing among the unorganized workers of America.

CIO Steelworkers—who represent workers in 36 plants of American Can Co. across the nation—have added another "Canco" plant, defeating the ILWU in a representation election held at the new Wilmington, Calif. plant. USA-CIO defeated Warehouse Local 26 of the ILWU (expelled a year ago from CIO as commie-dominated) by a vote of 47 to 13. USA-CIO Rep. Arnold Campo was in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that in a representation election held at the Phillips Refinery, Kansas City, Kan., the workers voted for the Oil Workers, CIO by a vote of 54 to 32 for no union. Intl. Rep. William Noell was in charge of the organizational work.

CIO Sub-Reg. Dir. Sylvester Graham reports that the Oil Workers, CIO won a representation election at the Wortham Machinery Co., Billings, Montana by a vote of 6 to 4 for no union. Intl. Rep. George Jenkins conducted the campaign.

CIO Rep. Larry Tucker reports that the CIO in a representation election, won out over the discredited ILWU at the Astoria Cannery Company, Astoria, Ore., by the following vote: eligible 1580, 1160 cast, CIO 789, ILWU 291, challenged 74, void 4, and no union 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports the following union shop election victories. All these plants are in Grays Harbor, Wash., and under contract to CIO-LIU 1754; Whiz Fish Co., West Coast Fish Co., Washington Fish Co., Crown Packers, Pioneer Fish Co., Strand, Grays Harbor Crab Co., and Point Adams Packing Co.

CIO Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election held at the General Electric plant, Huntingburg, Ind., the IUE-CIO won an important victory by a vote of 254 to 246 for no union. Dir. James Click and Rep. Ernest Rutherford deserve a great deal of credit for the job that was done in this plant.

A. F. Hartung, vice president, CIO Woodworkers reports that in a representation election held at the Sylvian Products Co., Centralia, Wash., the workers favored the Woodworkers by a vote of IWA-CIO 72, AFL 9, no union 15.

CIO Field Rep. Dominic Spasbo reports that the Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers, CIO, won over the AFL in a representation election held at the Valley Manufacturing Co., Martins Ferry, Ohio, by a vote of 70 to 27.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that the UAW-CIO won two representation elections in Columbus, Ohio, as follows: Columbus Stamping Co., UAW 22, 9 against; Scioto Steel Stamping Co., UAW 25, 2 against. Intl. Rep. Willard Dobbs was in charge of the elections.

Martin Wagner, president, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, CIO, reports the following representation election victories: Acme Quality Paints, Inc., Detroit, Mich., a subsidiary of the Sherwin-Williams Co., threw out Dist. 50, UMWA, as their bargaining agent and chose Gas, Coke by a vote of 210 to 122 no union; Standard Lime and Stone Co., Kimballton, Va., Gas, Coke 57, AFL 3, and 40 no union; Gas and Electric Co., Lynn, Mass., Gas Coke 187, Dist. No. 50, 145; Himes Brothers Dairy Co., Dayton, Ohio, Gas, Coke, 49, 4 against; Kroger Grocery and Baking Co. (firemen and maintenance) Dayton, Ohio, Gas, Coke 11, against 0. In a run-off election held at the Carthage Marble Co., Carthage, Mo., Gas, Coke 121, AFL 96.

John C. Lawson, secretary-treasurer, Stone and Allied Product Workers, CIO, reports that in a run-off election held at the Asbestos Co. of Texas, Houston, Texas, USAPWA-CIO came out on top over no union by a vote of 41 to 29. CIO Reps. Harry Cochran and James Brown worked together on this project. Employes of the Tennessee Marble Company's quarries in Knoxville and Luttrell rebuked the AFL in its abortive attempt to raid USAPWA, CIO by a vote of 36 to 24 in a representation election.

Philip J. Clowes, acting national director of the Southern Drive, reports the following representation election victories for the CIO: Southeastern Pipeline Co., Atlanta, Ga., Oil Workers, CIO 56, no union 29; M. Kimberling & Sons, Birmingham, Ala., USA-CIO 69, no union 4; Wheland Co., Chattanooga, Tenn., USA-CIO 491, AFL 132; Gold Hill Food Corp., Nashville, Tenn., Packinghouse Workers 73, no union 50; Air Reduction Sales, Fairfield, Ala., USA-CIO 12, no union 9; Cleveland Container Corp., Memphis, Tenn., Paperworkers, CIO 96, no union 53, AFL 28. Reilly Tar & Chemical, Daingerfield, Texas, USA 16, no union 6. Alamo Iron Works, Houston, USA 35, no union 14; Electric Service Co., Greenville, Texas, UAW 19, no union 0; East Texas Steel Castings Co., Longview, Texas, USA 125, no union 51; AAA Corp., Camp Sibert, Ala., Glass Workers, CIO, 50, AFL 44.

Morris Pizer, president, Furniture Workers, CIO reports the following representation election victories: Sun Glow Industries, Logan, Ohio, UFWA 71, UIU-AFL 34, challenged 4; Ridgefield Furniture Co., Ridgefield, N. J., (woodworking dept.) UFWA 31, no union 13, (upholstery dept.) UFWA 25, UIU-AFL 6, challenged 1, void 1; Ideal Seating Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., UFWA 53, no union 3. The following union shop elections were also won: Hoosier Panel Co., New Albany, Ind., for 164, against 12; O'Hearn Mfg. Co., Gardner, Mass., for 43, against 5; Oxford Cabinet Co., Oxford, Pa., for 91, against 6; and Ferguson Co., Newark, N. J., for 174, against 6.

CIO Field Rep. Bill Edwards reports that the Oil Workers, CIO, won a very important representation election at the Texaco Refinery, Westville, N. J., by a vote of OWIU 201, independent 174, and neither 3. This victory completes the last link in the chain of Texaco Refineries in America.

CIO Calls For Inflation Law's Full Revision

APPEARING under a gag rule imposed by the committee, the CIO last week presented testimony supporting repeal of each of the three amendments to the Defense Production Act on which the Senate Banking and Currency Committee would allow testimony.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray made it clear, however, that in conforming to the committee's rule which limited testimony to these three issues, the CIO by no means believed that repeal of these provisions alone would be sufficient to stop inflation.

Murray wrote the committee to object strongly to the way in which it is conducting hearings on President Truman's request for changes in the law.

"WE OBJECT," he said, "because the committee's rule limits, discussion to three weaknesses of the law when, in actual fact, it has many other shortcomings.

Even if Congress were to approve all of the administration's requests, he said, the law would be substantially the same as the one passed last year which failed to control the cost of living.

Three separate statements were submitted by the CIO.

These called for:

1. Lifting of the Congressional ban on imports of fats, oils, dairy and other agricultural products.

2. Outright repeal of the Capehart Amendment which requires the Office of Price Stabilization to allow price increases for all increased costs.

3. An end to the ban against slaughter quotas.

Nathaniel Goldfinger, Executive Secretary of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, submitted the statements on the first two issues. The third was discussed by CIO Research Director Stanley H. Ruttenberg.

In attacking the import restrictions, Goldfinger told the committee that the restrictive provisions of the act are contrary to national policy, unnecessary for the protection of domestic producers, and run counter to the objectives of the government's defense program.

HIS REMARKS were underscored three days later when Canadian Minister of Trade and commerce C. D. Howe told a treaty assembly at Geneva, Switzerland, that the restrictions written into the act over President Truman's objections are "an obvious violation" of the general international agreements on tariffs and trade.

In his testimony, Ruttenberg warned that the ban on livestock slaughtering quotas threatens to undermine the whole economic stabilization program. He said that elimination of beef price controls—combined with the inability to effectively control other food prices under the present law—would mean an end to any serious attempt to control the cost of living.

Liberal Demos Hope To Kill Aid-The-Wealthy Tax Cuts

LIBERAL Democrats met the Senate Finance Committee headon last week when the committee reported out on the floor of the Senate a $5.5 billion tax increase bill.

Led by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), the liberal bloc hoped to remove loopholes which, it claimed, have been carefully fitted into the bill to favor upper income taxpayers and corporations. Patching the Senate bill with 13 proposed amendments, the group claimed, would add between $5 and $7 billion to the federal revenue.

This additional amount, it was pointed out, would bring the yield closer to the $10.7 billion, first asked for by President Truman to carry on the rearmament program.

Income-splitting, as allowed in the Senate bill, Humphrey claimed, would withhold $2.5 billion that should come to the national treasury.

The committee also whittled $480 million from the House personal income tax plan.

The House bill would boost personal income taxes 12.5% in nearly all brackets and was considered a more equitable levy than the committee's proposal.

Humphrey's group hoped to restore both these cuts.

A COMMITTEE proposal which would take more money from the poor and middle income taxpayer than from the wealthy was an increase in excise taxes on cigarettes, gasoline, liquor and other items. This boost would increase the House levy from the same source by $23 million.

The CIO opposed increased excise tax, and the Brewery Workers fought particularly any boost in the liquor levy, contending that such an increase would stimulate bootlegging, and, in the long run, deprive the government of money.

However, Chairman George (D. Ga.), said only minor technical changes in the bill were made in the last two sessions of the committee. He added that he supposed efforts would be made to jack up the rates approved by it.

"It's all right with me if someone wants to take the responsibility of taking more money out of the pockets of the American people," he said, "but I'm not going to do it."

PRESIDENT TRUMAN received a report Sept. 19, from the Displaced Persons Commission on its work. John W. Gibson (left), chairman of the Commission and former Michigan CIO leader, presented the report. Other commissioners look on.

Best Job Steward To Get Free Convention Trip

The best job steward of the CIO Communications Workers local at Newport News, Va., will be rewarded by an all-expense trip to the national convention next Spring. Award will be based on performance of duties and participation in union activities.

Demand Pay Boost

No overtime work without an increase in pay—that's the program for Milwaukee, Wis., county employes as outlined by the CIO Government and Civic Workers Union.

An increase of $75 monthly is sought for the rest of 1951 followed by a $30 cost of living boost Jan. 1.

Reuther Reports:

First Taxes Should Go On High Incomes

WALTER P. REUTHER, CIO Auto Workers president, has reaffirmed a statement he made on a television program Sept. 16 that high income families should bear as much as possible of the tax burden before low income families are deprived of the necessities of life.

Reuther issued the following statement:

"In view of the furore my statement seems to have aroused in some newspapers, I have carefully reviewed the transcript on Sunday night's American Forum of the Air program on which I debated Charles R. Sligh, chairman of the taxation committee of the National Association of Manufacturers.

"I not only reaffirm emphatically what I said about taxing high income families, but I am amazed that any person with a social conscience would disagree with it.

"I do not see how there can be any controversy about the idea of cutting out luxury and non-essentials before any family is deprived of any basic necessities of life. As I see it this idea flows directly out of the fundamental principles of morality that form the common basis for all of the world's great religions.

"The statement that has aroused such a controversy is the following colloquy between Mr. Sligh and me:

"'REUTHER: I think that where there are millions of families in America getting less than $1,000 a year income, $10,000 or $12,000 is a good income in this period for a family.

"'SLIGH: You think $10,000 is as high as anybody should have then?

"'REUTHER: I think before you deny children decent shoes in America, people should be cut down to that level. That is what I think.'

"To me this is more than a matter of economics. It is a matter of human decency and morality. I do not at this time, and did not on the television program advocate the imposition of a flat limit on family income because I see no need for such a limit at present.

"I believe that we can get enough fat out of the luxury spending of high-income families to finance our defense mobilization program during this emergency and still leave high-income families with incomes far in excess of $12,000.

"However, if the day should come when the cost of defending freedom against Communist tyranny ever increases to the point where it becomes necessary to make a choice between reducing high incomes through taxation to a $12,000 a year level or depriving the children of low-income families of adequate food, clothing, shelter and medical care, I certainly would be in favor of reducing the high incomes.

"I supported the proposal to limit incomes advanced by President Roosevelt during World War II. I would support a similar proposal again if made in similar national circumstances, whether at the $25,000 limit proposed by the late President or at any other level that seemed responsible and necessary.

"The NAM, which Mr. Sligh represents on tax matters, would start, even now, to reduce still further, through a hidden sales tax, the income of families who already do not have enough to live on in order to protect the high incomes of those who have far more than they need."

'Economy' Bloc Won't Cut Itself

Economy-minded Senators go all out to clip federal agencies and public welfare projects, but when it comes to cutting their own expenses, including the elimination of free haircuts, that's another story.

The Senate Sept. 14 voted down moves to do away with free haircuts and Capitol chauffeurs even though it won't permit such luxuries in other government agencies.

Justifying the Senate's stand on haircuts, Sen. Carl Hayden (D. Ariz.) quoted the late Sen. William E. Borah (R. Ida.) who said years ago he wanted free haircuts continued because "I want the same service received here by Henry Clay and John C. Calhoun."

Both economy proposals were offered as the Senate considered legislation giving Congress nearly $74 million for operating funds this year. The bill passed.

SHOCKING LIVING QUARTERS for which armed services personnel pay exorbitant rental are reported in survey made by the Senate preparedness subcommittee at 15 camps throughout the nation. In the above picture is a "furnished room" at Jacksonville, N. C., near Camp Lejeune. For this and another room a private who was overseas for three years in the Pacific during World War II pays about $40 a month. Committee found thousands of GI's being gouged. (See story on Page 10.)

House Unit Approves Union Shop Measure

HOUSE approval of a bill to legalize more than 4000 union shop contracts questioned by the National Labor Relations Board was expected soon.

The House Labor Committee on Sept. 28 approved the measure, which the Senate had passed unanimously. The measure has bipartisan support.

The bill would validate union shop elections and contracts dating from the 1947-49 period when national CIO officers declined to sign Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits.

The NLRB had ruled that the signing of affidavits by the parent federation was unnecessary. The Supreme Court, however, recently ruled that a union was not in full compliance with T-H unless the central body's officers also were in compliance.

Acting on the court decision, NLRB issued a ruling in the Ford Canton case, which for a time threatened all CIO union shop agreements made during the 1947-49 period.

CIO attorneys said that ruling went too far. Later the NLRB, in a second decision, held that the disputed elections were legal.

The bill would also wipe out the requirement that an election must be held to determine whether a union would be allowed to negotiate a union shop.

Consumers' Debts Rose 20% In 1950

At the end of 1950 the nation's consumers were in hock to the tune of $20 billion. The amount they were in debt had risen by $3.3 billion during the year. That was an increase of 20%, largest increase on record.

The figures come from the Department of Commerce, which reported that the net level of all debt in the U. S. went up 9% in 1950 to a total of $484 billion. And for the first time since the war, net private debt topped net public debt.

That means prices for articles and services are 13.6 above the monthly average of 1950 and a dizzy 85.5 above the 1935-39 average, the period on which the figures are based.

How nearly steady the climb has been is shown in the figures below:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1943 monthly average	123.6	Feb. 15	167.9

Lack Of Jobs Hits Clothing Industry

WIDESPREAD unemployment problems throughout the men's clothing industry were discussed by Pres. Truman and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers last week.

After visiting the President, Potofsky said he had received a "very sympathetic" response to his outline of the needs of men's clothing workers for more work.

Noting that joblessness has spread to a number of clothing areas, Potofsky told reporters: "I believe the government can be very helpful in having industry operate on an even keel, through scheduling U. S. contracts for men's clothing in slack periods, and for areas where unemployment is particularly heavy."

Potofsky said that the "whole problem of layoffs" is important for the national economy.

Similar unemployment matters have also been a concern of the CIO Textile Workers. Many cities —Philadelphia among them—have seen only part-time work, or none at all, for large groups of textile mill employes.

Potofsky Finds

World Labor Unity Aids Peace, Freedom

INTERNATIONAL labor unity is a "potent force for democracy and world peace," Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee believes, after completing a 20,000-mile trip to Europe and South America.

Potofsky, who heads the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, summed up his views in four main points:

1 Although productivity has soared in countries receiving Marshall Plan aid from the United States, not enough "has seeped down to the workers" to improve their standard of living. More stringent regulations and supervision by the U. S. would benefit the wage earners.

2 Organized labor must have a greater voice in determining the foreign and domestic policies of their own countries.

3 All free nations must work together to offset the dream of communist world domination. In this sphere, organized labor through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has assumed an unprecedented leadership in seeking to fulfill the hopes of the people for peace and democracy.

4 U. S. alliances with the dictatorships of Franco Spain and Peron Argentina, rearming of Western Germany and revival of cartelists of the nazi Germany era can only create distrust of us among our allies.

He said that the people of Western Europe and England frowned on this country's decision to provide military assistance for Franco Spain. He described it as a "tottering fascist regime" that has stayed in power only by ruthless suppression of the Spanish people.

The ACWA president cautioned that rearmament and social progress must go hand in hand if the economy of any nation is to become or remain healthy.

Hits Rearmament

Potofsky also registered a protest over the plan to rearm Western Germany. He said that this is not popular with the labor groups in that area and with people in other Western European countries.

"I believe that democracies can survive without alliances with Franco of Spain and Peron of Argentina, and, I repeat, if we rearm Western Germany we might well have cause to regret it. That country is by no means denazified."

The United States, he went on, has assumed the leadership in guarding the peace and spreading democracy, and is making headway in that direction.

He related that while he was in Brazil he had an opportunity to determine that Peron's dream of an ABC alliance—Argentina, Brazil and Chile—was meeting with no success.

Through the ABC Peron hopes to set up a Third Force as opposed to the forces of democracy on one hand and communism on the other.

Seeks Labor Ties

Potofsky, whose specific mission to Brazil was to strengthen the bonds between labor in that country and the United States, said the country "is growing so fast it is bursting at the seams. Brazil has a great future."

While there he visited with President Getulio Vargas, Brazil's new Minister of Labor Jose Segadas Vianna and trade union leaders.

He called Vargas' attention to the fact that Brazil was not officially represented at the formation of Inter-American Regional Workers Organization at Mexico City last winter. This group is the Western Hemisphere branch of the ICFTU.

Potofsky stressed to the Brazilian president the importance of unity among the labor unions of the world democracies as an instrument of fostering peace and furthering democracy. Brazilian labor, he reminded Vargas, is an important cog for a united front.

As for Latin America as a whole, Potofsky felt that more must be done in constructive ways "so that those countries can help themselves and be real good neighbors." He had in mind expansion of U. S. Point Four assistance in agriculture, mining, sanitation, education, etc.

IUE Adopts A Resolution That UE Conclave Ignores

A RESOLUTION condemning the UE News which a Baltimore local submitted to the convention of the Communist-dominated United Electric Workers convention in New York never got out of committee.

But the convention of the CIO Electrical Workers, meeting at the same time in Buffalo, thought it was so good they passed it unanimously.

The resolution called upon the UE News to cease seditious talk, and to expose the evils of Communism as well as those of Fascism. Upon passing the resolution, the IUE convention extended an invitation for those UE locals which has sponsored it to join IUE.

W. Averell Harriman, special assistant to President Truman, told the IUE convention that "it is the free expression of American labor which you men and your representatives have taken abroad that has done more than anything else to bring to European labor an understanding of the spirit of this country.

"I feel we are on the ascendency and we are gaining the initiative in more parts of the world. The Kremlin is worried about what has happened."

To fill the one position open this year, Alexander Giordano of RCA Local 103 in Camden, N. J., was elected for a three-year term as trustee.

WSB Approves 20% Pay Boost

A 20% pay boost for 1700 CIO Shipbuilding Workers at Jacksonville, Fla., has been approved by the Wage Stabilization Board. It ruled that with no raise granted since 1948 the workers were adversely affected by cutoff date of Jan. 15, 1950 for the 10% wage hike formula.

Approval of the increase was won after a 5-day strike last June at the Merrill Stevens Drydock and Repair Co.

Miami ULPC Goes On

All segments of organized labor in Miami, Fla., are continuing cooperation, with the United Labor Policy Committee resuming its schedule of twice-monthly meetings.

One of its first projects for the season is a ball in honor of the delegates to the coming State Federation of Labor, with its treasury benefitting.

McCarthy Faces Suit And Possible Ouster

HE CAN SURE dish it out, but can he take it? An answer to this question which many Americans have asked about Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) began to emerge last week.

And it begins to look more and more that, when all the facts are in, the answer will be negative.

The cocky Senator with a reputation for mud-slinging and crap-shooting last week was under fire from two quite different quarters. First of all, he was compelled to give a pre-trial deposition in an assault-libel-conspiracy suit for more than $5 million filed against him and other defendants by Columnist Drew Pearson.

Charges Foul

Then, as the week ended, he found himself under attack—and fighting for his right to remain in the Senate—before a Senate Rules subcommittee which held a preliminary hearing on the demand of Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) that he be expelled from Congress.

In both cases, McCarthy was screaming "foul." And in both cases, he was apparently getting nowhere.

Pearson's suit, filed last March, named ten other defendants besides McCarthy. Those are the Washington Times-Herald, Columnist Westbrook Pegler, Fulton Lewis, Jr., radio commentator, and one of his writers, Edward K. Nellor; George Waters, publicity man; Don Surine, an employe of McCarthy; Morris A. Bealle, and J. B. Matthews, writers, and two unidentified persons.

Assault Alleged

It grew out of an alleged assault upon Pearson by McCarthy on the night of Dec. 12, 1950, when the two encountered each other at the Sulgrave Club in Washington.

The attorney for the Times-Herald sought unsuccessfully to prevent the press and the public from having access to the depositions but was overruled by Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts.

That meant that testimony by McCarthy, as well as all others concerned, will be open to public view. McCarthy promptly charged that the suit was simply a "political smear."

He also passed over questions regarding his military service and income as irrelevant and accused Pearson's attorney of "shyster tactics."

In the other matter, McCarthy actually screamed before he was hurt. Even before the Senate Elections subcommittee had voted to approve Benton's request for a preliminary hearing, McCarthy sought to discredit three of its five members by calling upon them to disqualify themselves.

McCarthy said that Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) should disqualify himself because his law partner has agreed to serve as attorney for a Communist editor on the grounds that freedom of the press was challenged.

He also called upon the two Republican members, Sens. Hendrickson (N.J.) and Margaret Chase Smith (Me.), to take similar action because last year they had both signed the GOP "Declaration of Conscience" which condemned McCarthyism as inimical to American institutions.

Mrs. Smith immediately asked the full Rules Committee to rule upon her qualifications to sit on the subcommittee, and promptly won a full vote of confidence.

Shifts Attack

Having lost this round, McCarthy shifted his attack and screamed that he understood that the committee had agreed to hear Benton's charges against him without first placing the Connecticut Senator under oath. Senate custom usually allows Senators to testify without being sworn, but McCarthy said that such a procedure would be "highly irregular, improper and unheard of."

Benton indicated that he was quite willing to make his charges under oath, and that he would follow whatever rules the committee ordered in presenting his testimony.

The members of the Rules Committee, however, gave no indication that they would dignify the Wisconsin Senator's bellyaching by swearing Benton in. The full committee voted to leave the matter entirely in the subcommittee's hands.

Senate Dixiegops Defeat Higher Taxes On Wealthy

THE SENATE last week made it clear that it is more interested in special benefits to big corporations and upper income individuals than it is in the welfare of the great majority of taxpayers.

A group of 16 liberal Senators from both parties, led by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), fought valiantly both to increase the yield and to distribute fairly the additional burden imposed by the tax bill reported by the Senate Finance Committee. Their efforts met with a series of defeats.

The coalition of conservative Republicans and Southern Democrats which had succeeded in committee in hacking the President's request for $10 billion more in taxes almost in half also had firm control of the Senate during efforts to amend the measure on the floor.

The committee had cut $1.7 billion from the tax bill passed by the House, and it seemed unlikely that any major increase in the measure could be made on the floor.

Humphrey pointed out that nearly all of the savings made by the committee would benefit corporations and upper-bracket individuals. He said that only $128 million of the reduction would go to taxpayers earning less than $5000 a year.

Actually, the Senate bill will mean a cut of $1.10 weekly in take-home pay for families of four with annual incomes of $4,000, the CIO Legislative Dept. pointed out.

"To compensate for the attempts to 'ease the squeeze' on middle and high incomes," Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, said in a letter to each Senator, "the Senate Finance Committee recommends a $600 million deeper bite into low incomes and a bits-and-pieces excise (sales) tax program that would steal in pennies, nickels and dimes $1.3 billion, most of it from low income families."

PRES. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers bluntly charged that the committee's bill was a big step toward the "NAM-inspired" plan to substitute a general Federal sales tax for income taxes based on the ability to pay.

"Instead of reducing the standards of luxury of the well-to-do before cutting down further the already inadequate standards of living of wage-earners and most farm people, this bill would open new tax loopholes for high incomes and luxury spending while curtailing purchase of necessities by low income families by increased income taxes and increased and new excise taxes," Reuther said.

Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) called the Senate measure a "relief bill" for the big corporations and fought unsuccessfully for stronger excess profits provisions.

Although corporation profits are now running at about three or four times the pre-World War II level, the Senate voted his amendment down by a three-to-one margin.

Then it proceeded to also vote down a move by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) to knock out the committee's "special favor" provision making the higher corporation taxes retroactive only to April 1.

Lehman pointed out that the committee date will save corporations about $500 million and declared that "there is no justification for this forgiveness."

He said that in every year except 1950 increases in corporation tax levies have been made retroactive to the first of the year and that corporations had been notified early in January that new and higher taxes would be levied.

But the Senate held fast to its determination to give this gift to corporations. It rejected Lehman's amendment 54 to 33.

Senators To Pay More Taxes Later

The Senate last week went on record as favoring higher taxes on members of the Senate —that is, the Senate of the next Congress, not this one.

Sen. Williams (R. Del.) created a panic when he moved to repeal special tax exemption privileges for the President, Vice President and all members of Congress.

That launched a series of complaints by the Senators that they were already underpaid. Some suggested that they should vote themselves an increase in salary.

Williams then agreed to modify his proposal so that Senators will retain their present tax-free allowance until January, 1953, when a new Congress comes to Washington.

"By that time, many of the present Senators won't be eligible for the exemption, anyhow," one Senator commented wryly.

Manpower Fund Slash Hit By CIO

THE CIO LAST week warned Congress that its failure to provide adequate funds to the Labor Dept. for essential manpower functions would be "disastrous to the defense effort."

In a letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee, Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., said that the $3.5 million requested for designated defense activities is not excessive in view of the wide variety of manpower problems to be handled throughout the country.

He protested the House's action in eliminating the appropriation entirely.

He said that even if the amount is restored to the $2.5 million recommended by the House Appropriations Committee, the $1 million cut "would still inflict great damage."

Cowan told the Senators that unless all the requested funds are provided, there not only would be a delay in output of vital materials and a shortage of essential skills, but that it was quite possible that these shortage situations would be seized upon as an excuse to order workers into jobs under national service legislation.

In addition to the cuts for designated defense activities, the House Committee also slashed requests for grants to the states for unemployment compensation and employment service administration, and denied $1.2 million requested for community manpower organization for defense. It also severely cut funds for the farm placement program.

Cowan also asked that "these essential items" be restored.

Topsy-Turvy Justice

Ever so often, the process of justice meanders down strange paths. But rarely in American history has it wandered so far away from reality as in the case of the notorious "Cicero riots."

The disturbance, in that Chicago suburb last July, was caused by hoodlums stirring up trouble after a young Negro street car company employe moved his family into Cicero. The riots caused tremendous property damage—but, far more important, they violated every American concept of freedom and fair play.

But the Cook County grand jury ignored all that. Instead it indicted the former owner of the apartment house into which the Negro family had moved, and others seeking to preserve civil rights. The jury, in an indictment that can be described only as fantastic, accused them of "conspiracy to injure property." Not a single one of the rioters has been indicted by the jury.

In calling on President Truman for an immediate investigation by the U. S. Dept. of Justice, the CIO in Chicago called the county grand jury's action "morally outrageous," and added that the facts of the law and "on-the-spot evidence" were both completely disregarded. The CIO's estimate of the situation has been editorially confirmed by three of Chicago's daily papers.

It is clear that there's something very rotten indeed in Cook County. As a first step to deodorize the situation, these preposterous indictments should be withdrawn or quashed.

And there should be quick steps taken to bring to justice the rioters who smeared the name of America throughout the world and who did irreparable insult to a decent American family.

Attorney General McGrath is to be congratulated for his prompt action in calling for a Federal grand jury investigation of the matter.

Can't Take It?

Thus, at the pre-trial hearings in the damage suit of columnist Drew Pearson against Sen. Joe McCarthy, the Washington Times-Herald and others, the general public had an all-too-seldom look at how reactionaries act when the heat is on. It is very enlightening.

Lawyers for the Washington Times-Herald (which is controlled down to the last line of type by Col. Bertie McCormick of the Chicago Tribune) wanted the hearings closed to reporters. Why? Because the case "might be tried in the papers"!

And Joe McCarthy, the man who has called more men names than any other character in recent history, was concerned that he might be "smeared" if the facts were reported by the press.

We're not in a position to judge who did what to whom in the rumpus at Washington's fashionable Sulgrave Club when Pearson and McCarthy got into their scuffle several months ago.

But one thing seems obvious early in the case. McCarthy and McCormick may be able to dish it out—but they just can't take it.

Japanese Labor's New Problems

By HESSELL TILTMAN

(Excerpts from an article in The Reporter magazine. The author was formerly Tokyo correspondent for the London Daily Herald, official organ of the British Labor Party.)

WHAT HAS happened to Japanese labor, and what is going to happen, is not merely a Japanese internal matter; it is of vital concern to the watching Russian and Chinese Communists—and to the United States and the West.

Relations between the Japanese movement and the free trade-union organizations in the West are increasingly close.

Japanese delegates, with full status, participated in the formation of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions in London; Japanese labor has received recognition by the International Labor Office; a number of American and British trade-union experts have done yeoman service in the Labor Division of the Supreme Commander, Allied Powers, at Tokyo in advising the rapidly growing Japanese movement (not always agreeing a 100% with General MacArthur's labor policies in the process).

The "moderate" Japanese unionists . . . while not in full agreement with American policies toward Japan, are in no sense anti-American. But the danger exists—and could prove to have been intensified by the San Francisco treaty terms—that the United States has, for the sake of expediency, run the risk of alienating a group which potentially and ideologically is on our side.

What happens to their movement is of immediate concern to the whole world. For only if Japanese labor can retain and enforce the labor-standards law and other gains, and bring the nation's low standards of living (today only about 70% of prewar) nearer to prevailing conditions in the West, can the nation avoid renewed charges of "dumping" and "coolie labor."

SCAP's labor officials, while admitting that the challenge exists, are guardedly optimistic. They say, in effect, that the Japanese trade-union movement represents the most important potentially powerful democratic force that has arisen in postwar Japan—which remembering the word "potentially," may well be true.

. . . Japanese labor hopes were raised when, last April, the ICFTU announced its support of the demand of the Japan Teachers Union—strongest teachers' union in the world with 400,000 members—for the lifting of restrictions on Japanese labor, including the ban on normal political activities of Japanese government employes.

Union circles in Japan were also heartened recently when the National Federation of Coal Miners Unions scored a major victory in a 26-day walkout in which 70% of Japan's 433,000 coal miners struck in the biggest purely economic work stoppage since the surrender. SCAP labor officials were equally heartened by the fact that the agreement which ended the strike was worked out by arbitration.

THE MAIN problems facing the movement, as SCAP's labor experts see them, are the excessive number of union officials, the need for further education of the rank and file, the threat of Communist infiltration, and the need for regrouping the multiplicity of local unions on a nation-wide basis.

The main problem, as Japan's own trade-union leaders see it, is how to encourage in the average Japanese worker the state of mind in which he will gladly work for the national welfare.

The way to do that and to counteract communism, say the leaders, is to raise the living standards of the working people.

"What Japanese labor fears," one prominent leader told me, "is not so much the rise of communism as the rise of fascism in Japan. If that threat develops, and if laws restricting the rights of Japanese labor are enacted, then we will not rely solely upon the slow process of elections to place in power a more sympathetic government.

"We shall fight with all labor's traditional weapons, and, further, in view of the fact that Japan must import essential raw materials, we will ask the trade-unionists of other lands to halt the shipment of materials to Japan."

UAW Was Needed In Auto Industry—Ford's Bennett

"'FORD SERVICE' was the name used for the plant police. Their job was to guard the gates, protect the plant, prevent theft and keep order."

"But besides these ordinary police duties, they were used to check on the men constantly, to see that they kept working and broke none of the rules . . . employes were even followed to the toilets."

That's Harry Bennett speaking and he's talking about conditions in the Ford Motor Co. plant and the Ford Service Dept., of which he was director.

Probably the most-hated opponent of labor throughout the early days of the CIO, Bennett masterminded the beatings and espionage that was directed against efforts by the CIO Auto Workers to organize the Ford plant in the late 30's and early 40's. There have been many exposes of his brutal methods and his plant "arsenal," his efforts at bribery, and his tie-ins with the underworld and native fascist organizations were common talk among Detroit newspapermen.

The self-styled tough guy now tells his own story of the union-busting work he did for Henry Ford in an article in the October issue of the magazine TRUE.

"The man who knew him (Ford) best was Harry Bennett," says Paul Markus who relates the story as Bennett told it to him.

"Fresh from a sailor's life in the Navy in 1916, young Bennett was picked up from a water-front brawl by Arthur Brisbane, noted newspaper writer, and presented that same day to Henry Ford as a young man whose rough and ready methods might be useful to the auto king in the forging of his industrial empire."

The article entitled "Thirty Years with a Model-T Genius," is a condensed version of a book written by Markus in collaboration with Bennett. "We Never Called Him Henry" is the book's title.

On the subject of Ford's relations with organized labor, Bennett declares he can say "the CIO Auto Workers got into the automobile industry for some very good reasons."

Enumerating some of the "reasons," Bennett relates it was the custom in the auto industry, when changing models, to pay everyone off and close down the plant.

"Upon reopening, all the men would be rehired at the flat rate," Bennett says. "Thus, a man who might have worked his way up to $8 to $10 a day would be rehired at the wages of a beginner. If I had been in the shop, I'd have been in sympathy with the union myself.

"Furthermore, unions were necessary in the automobile industry in order to stop all the politics, the favoritism, and the discrimination that went on in the plants.

"However, having said this much, I will say frankly that we didn't want the CIO in the plant. As the CIO's efforts to unionize the Ford Motor Company became more intense, there were accusations that I was spying on the union. The accusations were unfounded. We didn't have to spy . . . we were good listeners."

Bennett relates that it was "Mr. Ford's idea that we might get company men to go into the union and disrupt it by accusing each other of being spies and mixing it all up. But it didn't work out that way.

"Mr. Ford wanted me to fight the thing out. He told me to arm everyone we had in the plant, and use tear gas if necessary. I felt the same way Mr. Ford did."

Asserting that he worked for "peanuts" during most of the time he was with Ford, Bennett admits that he "managed to get my salary up into the $75,000 a year bracket for the last two years I was there."

The Ford Motor Co. set up a "Sociology Dept." in 1914 as a "sort of moral uplift organization which was supposed to help employes," Bennett revealed.

"The Sociology Dept. had a staff of investigators who visited every employe's home," Bennett discloses. "They asked the wives how much money their husbands saved, how much they brought home, whether they drank, and whether they had any domestic difficulties.

"If a workman had kept out of his pay a few dollars for a crap game or a glass of beer, he was in trouble. If he wanted to leave his wife, or she left him, he was just about washed up with the company. A card-catalogue was kept on just how every employe was behaving himself."

Bennett says he changed the Sociology setup in 1921 "because I thought it was a stupid waste of time and money."

In his early years with Ford, Bennett says he "saw no bigotry in him."

"I don't believe anyone else ever did either, up until around 1920 . . . However Mr. Ford did become a bigot. He became bigoted about Jews, and just about as much about Catholics, though the latter aspect of his intolerance was never so well known to the public," Bennett says.

He said that "thousands of ex-convicts and criminals were taken on the Ford pay roll over the course of the years—at Mr. Ford's request."

"Mr. Ford gave the public to understand that he hired these people to rehabilitate them. But I didn't see much of that happen. He ((Ford) often had a specific motive in hiring a given ex-convict. But behind this, I think, his motive lay deep in his own personality."

Bennett had an unusual hobby—raising lions and tigers at home. "I have always been fond of cats of any kind," he says, "and often took one of the animals into the plant with me."

Public Employe Can Strike In Germany, But Not Here

A GROUP of 19 German labor experts studying unions in the United States spent a day at CIO headquarters in Washington last week.

The eight women and 11 men in the group who visited the CIO are here on a U. S. Government sponsored educational exchange program.

George Guernsey and Katherine Ellickson of the National CIO Research & Education Dept., and Harry Pollak, CIO International Affairs Dept., talked to the group at CIO headquarters, explaining the CIO's programs and policies. Alexander Wilde, of the U. S. Labor Dept., translated the CIO aides' remarks into German.

Three of the women in the group, who are members of the Public Service Employees union, affiliate of the German Federation of Trade Unions, compared notes with Ruth Wiencek, education director of the CIO's Government and Civil Employees Organizing Committee.

They discovered that the U.S. Government, at the request of American trade unions, has helped the Germans obtain better organization and fairer collective bargaining agreements than organized government workers have in this country.

The German women said that the membership in the larger of the two German government public service employes' union was 700,000 while the other has 70,000.

The German unions bargain collectively on all levels, negotiate contracts, and have the right to strike, with certain exceptions. Public employes do not have the right to strike in U.S.

Although they have no union shop or dues check-off, union contracts provide for dues collections on work time.

Others in the group were union officials and members of youth, cooperative and trade union groups in various industries and the white collar field.

A group of Italian trade unionists are scheduled to visit CIO headquarters this week. Secy.-Treas. Frank Grasso of the CIO Paper Workers, who speaks Italian, will be their CIO host, and will preside at a luncheon for them on Oct. 3.

Blackburn Warns Lithographers Against Fake Security

By D. W. STONE

Prosperity—due to defense production—is giving some workers a false sense of security, Pres. John Blackburn warned the 11th convention of the CIO Amalgamated Lithographers of America.

Blackburn said that now is time to build strong unions, which are needed not only at present but in the future when defense production eventually declines.

The convention was held at Dallas, Tex.

Blackburn reviewed the gains ALA had made since its last convention. He stressed development of a union-controlled pension plan under which 60% of the organization's 27,000 members are now protected, and health and welfare plans in which more than 80% of the membership participate.

Representing CIO Pres. Philip Murray at the Lithographers' Convention was Emil Mazey, member of the CIO executive board and secretary-treasurer of the Auto Workers.

Mazey urged the delegates to help prepare their locals for political action to elect a Congress prepared to protect the rights of working people, rights which have been so seriously damaged or ignored by the present Congress.

The United Labor Policy Committee—in which the CIO, the railroad brotherhoods and the AFL cooperated until the latter withdrew—thawed the wage freeze, Mazey said.

B. M. Robinson, ALA legal counsel, warned the delegates that the Taft-Hartley Act was cracking down harder on unions day-by-day. He stated flatly that a Taft-Hartley union shop was, in his opinion, "worth less than what it costs and creates a greater danger than it brings us benefits."

The convention adopted a wage policy resolution which called for contracts not longer than one year, and urged that all agreements contain a cost-of-living escalator clause or a wage reopening clause.

Affiliation with state, county and city CIO councils was urged in another resolution adopted.

Another resolution stated that "henceforth and forever" no member shall be eligible to serve as an officer of this union "who is a member of the Communist Party or of any fascist group or of any other totalitarian movement," and that any member who shall win office by perjuring himself as to his political connections can be expelled.

All present International officers of the union were renominated without opposition except Secy.-Treas. Martin Grayson, who will be opposed by Frank Gilligan of the New York Local. Further nominations can be made by locals and election is by referendum ballot.

ON A VISIT to CIO headquarters, three German women government union members meet Ruth Wiencek, of the CIO's Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee. Left to right, Alexander Wilde, U. S. Dept. of Labor representative; Clara E. Sahlberg, Trier, Germany; Miss Wiencek; Hellen Mertens, Hamburg; and Margarethe Schaeffer, Fulda, Germany. The Germans plan to visit Chicago after leaving Washington.

POWERFUL AID to striking workers is provided by union counsellors. This photo shows counsellors helping members of the CIO Auto Workers during the 1949 Chrysler strike. The counselling headquarters was set up by the UAW and the Wayne County (Mich.) CIO Council and its Community Services Committee. CSC To Mark Ten Years Of Service To Membership

GREETINGS FROM international unions, councils and hundreds of locals are pouring into the offices of the National CIO Community Services Committee in New York City, as the committee prepares to mark its tenth anniversary of service to CIO membership.

CSC was established in 1941 to help raise funds for the people of war-stricken countries. It has branched out into the fields of community health, welfare and recreation to establish a program which integrates CIO in community planning and action.

CSC will celebrate its first decade at a dinner Oct. 2 at Detroit's Masonic Temple, where the CIO convention that established it was held.

Pointing to CSC's progress over the past ten years, Leo Perlis, National Director said:

"These are all accomplishments, not of the committee, but of the thousands of CIO men and women throughout the country who took our program to heart and translated it into local action, bringing real benefits to their fellow members and their fellow citizens."

Some of the accomplishments Perlis referred to were the training of 8000 union counsellors in 54 communities, and 10,000 CIO men and women on the boards and executive committees of hundreds of community agencies.

During the past ten years CIO members have contributed more than $300 million to voluntary community social welfare agencies, and over $15 million in assistance to the trade union movements of 17 foreign countries.

To help CIO members when they are most in need—during strikes—CSC has developed assistance programs. Operating through industrial union councils and in cooperation with international and local unions, these programs benefited the Auto Workers during the 1945-1946 GM strike, and the 1949 Chrysler walkout, and the Steelworkers during their 1946 and 1949 strikes.

The Textile Workers, the Communications Workers and a number of other unions also were aided during strikes.

Keeping attuned to the changing times, CSC is now promoting civil defense, servicemen's and veterans' programs and a Korean relief campaign. Food packages and comfort kits have been shipped to both Korean refugees and to servicemen of United Nations in Korea.

The committee, active in the past in such organizations as the Community Chests & Councils, the American Red Cross, CARE, and other agencies, this year helped organize the United Defense Fund and the United Community Defense Services.

CSC Program Aid

WHEN THE raging Kaw and Missouri Rivers smashed into the industrial areas of northwestern Missouri and Kansas in July in the worst flood in the area's history, the Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas State CIO Councils had a ready tool for action in their Community Services and union counselling programs.

Virgil McCormick, Community Service Committee representative, swung into immediate action when the flood reached the danger stage, working with the Salvation Army, Red Feather agencies and CIO unions on both sides of the river in arranging for emergency housing, and food and clothing.

Civil Defense Programs Spurred By Union Action

URING THE past year, the CIO National Community Service Com-tee developed a program for civil ense and plant protection.

A number of conferences on this and ted matters have been sponsored in peration with the CIO Dept. of Or-ization and Industrial Union Coun-he program is taking hold in a nber of communities where local ncils are taking the initiative in munity civil defense programs.

n example of CIO stimulating a l defense program occurred in Mil-kee when the Milwaukee County ustrial Union Council stepped in to ter a lagging civil defense program.

he Fire Chief and Mayor of Milwau- had sent letters to all industries in area asking for the initiation of fire brigades and plant warden systems for the protection of the employes and the plants. The response from industry was very poor.

A joint labor meeting was then held, and CIO officials swung into action. Following recommendations of the National CSC for procedure and program of civil defense, the Council and local unions were able to establish labor-management committees for employe-plant protection.

Chest Leader Lauds Committee's Work

HIGH PRAISE for CSC was given by Ralph H. Blanchard, executive director of the Community Chest and Councils of America, Inc., in a message to the committee which said in part:

"Where before there were a few scattered instances of CIO members serving on agency boards, Chest and Council organizations and campaign organizations, there are now thousands of such instances.

"Where support of such activities, both within and outside Community Chests, was formerly reluctant and halting in many cases, there is now a much better spirit and much more satisfactory participation.

"Most important of all, your organization has helped untold numbers of Americans better to understand health and welfare facilities which are available to them and has assisted greatly in setting up and maintaining the kind of day by day working relations which result in more services going to a greater number of people."

Secy. Conroy Quits Canadian Congress Of Labor

By GERVASE LOVE

SECY.-TREAS. Pat Conroy resigned his post as chief executive officer of the Canadian Congress of Labour at the organization's 11th annual convention in Vancouver, B. C., the week of Sept. 17.

On the last day of the five-day session—and almost at its last hour—Conroy, who a few hours earlier had been re-elected with the solid backing of all but a handful of left-wing delegates, stepped to the speaker's stand and announced that he was through.

Then, as the 636 delegates sat in stunned silence, he smiled faintly and stalked out of the meeting hall, in the Vancouver Hotel.

Conroy's exit provided a dramatic anti-climax to a siege of political activity that started weeks before the convention. Involved in it were Sam Baron and J. A. Harold D'Aoust, of the CIO Textile Workers. CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

Baron formerly was TWUA Canadian director. He was dismissed recently and replaced by D'Aoust, but was rehired as an organizer by some Canadian locals.

As a member of the CCL executive board, Baron was a candidate for reelection and had the support of the board including Conroy. D'Aoust also was a candidate for the post.

EARLIER, the convention had voted to amend the constitution to provide for four vice-presidents instead of three, and to cut down the other members of the executive board from nine to eight.

Both Baron and D'Aoust were far in the rear on the first ballot for the executive board. Needed for election were 289 votes. Only seven of the 18 candidates polled that many. The two candidates with the least number of votes were automatically eliminated, and the nine left went on a second ballot.

Elected in the second round was Penrod Baskin, of the CIO Steelworkers staff in Toronto. Baron ran second, thus failing to win a place on the board.

It was then that Conroy stepped to the microphone. He said he had supported Baron "in the undercover fight that was at least partly out in the open."

"I have taken the position," he continued, "that my support of Sam Baron was a test of the confidence of the Congress in me.

"I feel that I no longer have the confidence of this Congress, and I formally tender my resignation as secretary-treasurer, effective at once."

He was out of the hall before the delegates could recover from their surprise.

Charles H. Millard, Canadian director for the CIO Steelworkers, who had maintained that the Textile Workers should settle their own differences and refused to be a candidate for reelection as CCL vice-president when the executive board decided to support Baron, was first to reach a floor microphone.

By this time shouts of "No, no!" and "We want Conroy" were bouncing off the walls. Pres. A. R. Mosher gavelled the assembly into something resembling order and Millard started to speak.

"I am sure that this convention cannot agree with Brother Conroy's reasoning," he said.

"I have had some differences with Pat Conroy, but he received the solid support of this convention when he was almost unanimously voted to return to office. There is no question but that he still has this support. I want to move that his tendered resignation be rejected."

THE DELEGATES cheered and pounded tables and shouted their demands that Conroy return. The question was called for, and the vote appeared unanimous.

"There certainly is not the slightest question in my mind," said Mosher, "that the delegates want Brother Conroy to continue as chief executive of this Congress. But I don't control him.

"I would hope that he would accept the unanimous verdict of this convention but he has left the hall, and I don't know if he would. He feels very deeply that the convention did not accept his leadership."

Amid cries of "Get him back"! a motion was made from the floor to send a committee to Conroy to ask him to continue. An amendment to refer the resignation to the incoming executive board, with the power to name a successor if Conroy remained obdurate, was made and later withdrawn.

But before it was withdrawn it produced such a welter of cries and shouts that Mosher, too, threatened to resign unless order was restored. The original motion was passed with three "No" votes.

A committee composed of the top officers and executive board members present, augmented by Baron and by a supporter of D'Aoust—who had left the convention — visited Conroy in his room while a short recess was taken. About an hour later the members returned, glum-faced.

"Your committee has failed in its mission," Mosher said simply.

"We come back to report to you that we recommend to you that this convention adjourn. Most of the business of importance has been dealt with.

"We recommend that you refer to the incoming executive board all unfinished business, including the tendered resignation of Brother Conroy."

The unfinished business included an important resolution on foreign policy, upon which some of the left wingers had promised to tee off. But the committee proposal was adopted, and the convention adjourned.

THE NEW executive board met briefly the following morning. It determined to withhold action on everything before it, including Conroy's resignation, until Oct. 29-31, when it will meet in Ottawa.

H. A. Chappell, Winnipeg, of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes, was named acting secretary-treasurer.

Alec McAuslane, of Toronto, director for the CIO Oil Workers and a CCL vice president since 1940, who had been reelected the previous afternoon, announced his resignation before the board meeting. He submitted no formal notice, however, and the board took no official action.

Rumors that Mosher had resigned were so presistent he was forced to make an official denial.

"I have not resigned and I have no intention of resigning," he said flatly.

In elections the left wingers, were able to poll only token votes.

Mosher, only president the CCL has ever had, defeated William Stewart, Vancouver, of the Shipyard General Workers' Federation of British Columbia, by a vote of 507 to 65. Mosher is a member of the Railway Employes.

Conroy trounced Thomas Mackie, Drumheller, Alta., a Mine Worker, by 532 to 53.

Vice presidents named, in addition to McAuslane, were Sol Spivak, Toronto, of the CIO Clothing Workers, who was reelected; George Burt, Windsor, Ont., Canadian director of the CIO Auto Workers, and Silbey Barrett, Toronto, of the Mine Workers.

Executive board members chosen, in addition to Baskin and Chappell, were J. Stewart Alsbury, Vancouver, Woodworkers; Raoul Leclerc, Montreal, Municipal Employes; Fred Dowling, Toronto, Packinghouse Workers; Freeman Jenkins, Glace Bay, N. S., Mine Workers; William Mahoney, Toronto, Steelworkers, and J. E. Maguire, Ottawa, Railway Employes.

Fur Workers' Ouster Upheld

The Canadian Congress of Labour convention rejected almost unanimously the appeal of the Communist-dominated Fur and Leather Workers Union from its expulsion by the CCL executive council.

The council acted last April under authority voted by the previous CCL convention. The action followed a statement by the Fur and Leather Workers accusing the CCL of "betraying the interests of the Canadian workers" by joining with other labor groups to demand price controls from the government and oppose wage controls.

Under convention rules, the union was allowed one hour to present its case on Sept. 18, and the executive council an hour in rebuttal. No debate was permitted. The vote, taken immediately, showed only about 30 votes against the executive council's action.

The CIO expelled the Fur and Leather Workers in June, 1950.

Conroy—Like Murray—Born In Scotland, Was Miner

PAT CONROY — whose re-election to his 11th term as secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labour was followed within a matter of hours by his dramatic resignation — like CIO Pres. Philip Murray was born in Scotland of Irish parents.

And like Murray, he went to work as a coal miner as a child. He migrated to Canada at the age of 20, and worked in mines, lumber camps and factories in that country, the United States and Mexico.

Active in Canadian and American locals of the United Mine Workers, he subsequently became vice president of UMW District 18, which covers western Canada.

When the CCL was organized in 1940, Conroy become its first vice president. The following year he was named secretary-treasurer, the chief executive post of the CCL, and has been re-elected every year since. He also is national director of organization.

As a mine union official, he served on many Canadian government commissions and investigating bodies dealing with the industry.

During World War II his services on government committees dealing with production, finance and reconstruction were rewarded with the award of Member of the British Empire. Recently he has been serving as a member of the National Advisory Council on Manpower.

Conroy also has been active in the world-wide labor movement, and is a member of the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

St. Francis Xavier Univ., at Antigonish, Nova Scotia, conferred an honorary LL.D. degree upon him in 1948.

Ranjit Singh (above) is a Sikh from Victoria, B. C., who was a delegate of Woodworkers Local 1-118 to the Canadian Congress of Labour convention. He also edits an East Indian paper which is published in two languages.

Canadian Papers, Radio Give CCL Full Coverage

Newspaper and radio coverage of the CCL convention in Vancouver last week was comparable to that at a National CIO convention.

Daily newspapers in a dozen Canadian cities were represented by staff reporters. Press associations, the Canadian Broadcasting System and independent radio stations also covered the event.

Coverage by the three Vancouver dailies—Sun, Daily Province and News-Herald—was much more complete than a National CIO convention normally gets in the city where it is held.

The Daily Province and the Sun got out a special CCL edition with Page 1 devoted to news and feature stories. Included were humorous articles, such as one in the Province about a roll back in prices to levels of June 1, 1939. In addition, both had full pages of pictures. The Sun had in one edition about one-third of a page of pen-and-ink sketches of convention personalities as well as its regular coverage.

Perhaps the fact that Vancouver is one of the most solidly organized cities in the Dominion had something to do with it.

Canadian Unions Aid ICFTU

PAUL FINET, former president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, delivered a major speech to the Canadian Congress of Labour convention at Vancouver.

Finet's speech was followed by a resolution endorsing the ICFTU campaign for funds for its educational and organizing work in Southeast Asia. The CCL share is $50,000, of which $18,000 has already been raised.

In addition, they adopted a series of policy statements aimed at intensifying organization work, securing better contracts with higher wage rates, demanding improvements in several provincial and federal government services to the people, and spurring greater political action.

Among delegates speaking in favor of the motion was Ranjet Singh a black-bearded, turbaned Sikh representing CIO Woodworkers Local 1-118 of Victoria, B. C.

The convention took a firm stand in support of labor unity by "wholeheartedly" instructing the incoming officers and executive board "to continue its efforts toward full cooperation and the establishment of organic unity with all bona fide central labor organizations into one body throughout Canada."

A resolution on wages pointed out that the unprecedented and uncontrolled rise in the cost of living in the past few months has made wage increases "imperative" if living standards are to be maintained.

It urged that all affiliates "take immediate steps, consistent with their own needs and responsibilities, to secure these much-needed substantial wage increases."

The resolution also instructed the CCL Wage Co-ordinating Committee to intensify its assistance and support of affiliates in their wage demands, and directed that regional wage co-ordinating committees be set up to work with the national committee and local unions in each area.

The proposal had widespread support from the floor. Speakers pointed out that basically, it calls upon all locals to help each other in winning higher wages, especially where strikes are necessary.

"It means," one delegate succinctly said, "that we're taking on each other's burdens."

The convention also took notice of spreading unemployment in Canada, sharply rapped the Dominion government for its failure to consider CCL proposals to halt impending layoffs in the auto industry, and voted to set up an organization of unemployed workers.

It also demanded that the federal government institute work projects in affected areas and increase unemployment compensation benefits.

Other resolutions called upon the government to reimpose price controls immediately, with prices rolled back to the lowest possible levels and subsidies set up where necessary, and to relax strict credit restrictions so as to halt unemployment by widening consumer markets.

A demand for an old age pension of $65 a month at 65 years of age, without a means test, was unanimously approved. The present pension is $40 at 70 years without a means test.

The convention endorsed the CCL education program and commended Congress officers for their work in lessening discrimination and intolerance in the last year. Emmett Holmes, Vancouver, Negro delegate from Woodworkers Local 1-217, touched a sombre note in commenting on the report.

"It's like the heat," he said of discrimination. "You can't see it but you can feel it."

In his keynote talk, Mosher sharply criticized employers who help Communist-dominated unions by signing "cheap" contracts.

"Without the collaboration of such employers," he asserted, "Communist - dominated unions would have a much harder struggle to survive, but there can be no question as to the outcome.

"Communism will inevitably be undermined as far as the labor movement in Canada is concerned It is becoming more and more difficult for Communist groups to gain adherents, because communism has been so clearly exposed as a conspiracy of disloyal citizens acting in the interests of a foreign power."

On domestic affairs he said:

"During the past summer the cost of living has reached a higher level than ever before in Canada, offsetting wage increases which had been obtained only with enormous effort and, in many cases, costly strikes.

"It should be unnecessary to point out that if what they obtain from employers is nullified by the unwillingness of their governments to provide protection of their interests, the workers have no alternative but to elect their own representatives to parliament and legislatures, and thus obtain direct representation of their interests.

". . . It is not too much to say that if a political party responsive to the wishes of organized labor had been in power since the war, the (cost of living) situation would have been vastly different, and incalculable savings to the people of Canada would have resulted."

Romance Blooms At Convention

Anson slipped away from the last session of the convention to be married to Mrs. Winnifred Taylor, also of Windsor, who 'happened" to be visiting friends in Vancouver.

Roy P. Babcock, another Local 200 delegate, was best man, and several other Windsor delegates attended the ceremony.

WHILE THE BALLOTS at the CCL convention are being counted, Vera Mackenzie, Vancouver, a delegate from the Office and Professional Workers Organizing Committee, and Ed McCurdy, of the Canadian Broadcasting Co., entertain with music.

Oil Workers Win $1527 For Member

Back in November, 1949, Otis Hall, a member of the CIO Oil Workers, was fired by the Columbian Carbon Co. at Dumas, Tex. Weighing 50-pound bags of carbon black, a foreman claimed some of them were off as much as four or five ounces.

The shop grievance committee, protesting his dismissal, pointed out that the scales he used had been condemned and were so marked.

The union sought arbitration, the company stalled and finally sought a court ruling that the case no longer was subject to arbitration. It lost and another arbitrator gave Hall back his job and $1527 in back pay.

Series On McCarthy Is Available

The Wisconsin CIO News issued a 16-page supplement in its Sept, 28 edition, containing a series of stories on Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), which appeared in the New York Post. Copies of the supplement may be obtained from the Wisconsin CIO News, 952 North 12th St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Georgia Council Hears Beirne Lambast AFL

PRES. JOSEPH A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers told the 14th annual CIO Council convention that the CIO "has been, and will continue to be, in the forefront, resisting attempts of big business to take over the defense effort."

Beirne lashed out at the AFL for withdrawing from the United Labor Policy Committee and said the CIO "now stands alone in taking positions affecting both organized and unorganized workers. We can no longer count on them," he said. The convention was held in Macon.

"Long ago, the CIO recognized the need for greater production to aid a successful defense effort," Beirne said. "In order to bring this about, we urged adequate price controls and equitable wage stabilization. Much of this work was done through ULPC.

"Now selfish, small-minded leaders of the AFL have withdrawn from the ULPC. Even without them, however, the CIO will go forward to make our national effort successful."

Political action was the highlight of the convention which saw the delegates vote to set up a full time political action director and to increase their per capita tax from 4c to 8c to finance the PAC program. David C. Burgess, former PAC representative in North and South Carolina, was named director.

The convention voiced a vigorous pledge to work for the defeat of reactionary Rep. Davis and for the re-election of Rep. Lanham next year.

Charles H. Gillman, Georgia CIO director and council president, declined to be a candidate for re-election and threw his support to W. H. Crawford, CIO Steelworkers Dist. 35 director, who was elected by acclamation.

Crawford declared he would refuse the position unless he was assured that the delegates meant to conduct a vigorous political action program. "I cannot work without tools," he said. After the PAC program was approved, he accepted the post of president.

The following were elected to council positions: Lloyd Gossett, Atlanta, treasurer; Gladys Dollar, Atlanta, first vice president; R. E. Starnes, Atlanta, second vice president; Hugh Gammon, Rome, third vice president, and O. A. Nikula, Macon, fourth vice president.

Oregon CIO Discusses Power, Fish, Timber

CONSERVATION of fish and timber and the development of water power in the Pacific Northwest were matters of major consideration at the 14th annual convention of the Oregon CIO Council at Astoria.

First Vice-Pres. A. L. Hartung of the CIO Woodworkers, who is a member of the Oregon and California Timber Lands Advisory Committee, warned the delegates that more funds are needed to build access roads into federal timber stands. More money is also needed, he said, for the proper administration of the Oregon and California timber lands grant by the Dept. of Interior.

Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils, called for public development, transmission and distribution of power in the Columbia River Basin.

Meeting the "dams versus fish" argument head on, Smith declared the CIO is convinced that both fish and dams are possible. "However," he warned, "the building of certain dams should be postponed until some method is worked out to make the dams and generators safe for the salmon and steelhead fingerlings."

Council Secy-Treas. George Brown was nominated for a second full year term in office. He was unopposed. Brown is a member of Woodworkers Local 5-3, Portland, and a former IWA Director of Organization.

Pres. John Brost declined to be a candidate for re-election. Lyman Wax, Willamina, and Kenneth Smith, Portland, were nominated. Both are IWA members.

Jess Bell, Portland, was nominated for re-election as vice-president and will be opposed by Del Minkler, rubber worker, also of Portland. Election of officers will be held by referendum.

Portland was chosen for the 1952 convention.

Paul Gurske, chairman of the Oregon Industrial Accident Commission, declared that the safety record in the lumber industry is "terrible."

He reported logging and log hauling which made up 5% of man-hour employment in the state during 1951 accounted for 9% of all time lost for injuries and 58% of all fatalities.

The lumber industry as a whole in the same period of time accounted for 10% of all employment, 37% of all time lost and 66% of all fatalities, he said.

The delegates adopted a resolution denouncing Alaska Air Lines, Inc., for its failure to start air service from Portland to Alaska. The council had fought to get the franchise for the company.

Other resolutions proposed changing the State's election day to Monday rather than Tuesday as at present and make it a holiday; approved a school reorganization plan for the State, and opposed using the defense effort to bring about a longer hour week at straight time wages.

Husbands Desert; Living Cost Blamed

An official of the Montreal Society for the Protection of Women and Children blamed the 75% increase in desertions by Quebec husbands over a 10-year period on the high cost of living and inadequate housing.

George H. Corbett, executive director of the society, said the province's laws should be strengthened to make it easier for deserted wives to collect maintenance from their husbands.

Senate Unit Finds Nationwide GI Rent Gouging

THE SENATE preparedness subcommittee—in its second report—last week found that "substandard (housing) conditions and rent gouging appear to be prevalent," near military installations.

Broader than the first report, the new document covers housing conditions near 15 camps, bases and training stations.

The subcommittee — which is headed by Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.) —noted some improvements since the first report issued earlier this year.

"In such places as Columbia, S. C., and Lake Charles, La., the citizens did not wait for a Government bureau to send its agents to them with a solution for all their problems," the committee reported.

But the committee concluded that "the deplorable conditions cited in the committee's early report are not just confined to a few bases or to one or two sections of the country.

"They are widespread — much too widespread to justify any complacency on the part of those who are concerned about the morale of our fighting men."

In what marines grimly call the "second front"—a honky-tonk and tourist cabin area across from a gate of Camp Lejeune, N. C.—committee investigators found a sergeant and his wife living in a ramshackle 12 by 12 foot cabin for which they paid $7.50 a week. The report added that "toilet facilities are available only when the nearby restaurant is open . . .

"Every case of rent gouging, every instance of an American soldier forced to house his family in a hovel or a chicken coop, represented a crack in the structure of the national unity . . .

"One of the most astonishing groups of landlords in the area," was found at Camp Lejeune — commissioned officers and a master sergeant. These men rented property to fellow marines at rates so high the rent control office was forced to step in to stop gouging.

In Jacksonville, N. C., — near Camp Lejeune—a private who was overseas for three years in the Pacific pays $40 a month for two disconnected rooms in an old frame house.

The "furnishings" consist of a mattress on the floor—a mattress which the report described as "filthy" — and a small kerosene stove.

That same frame house, the Senators reported, is the home of 10 Marine families, a total of 25 persons. The area rent control director estimated its value at about $8000. Rent paid by the Marines amounts to $5000 per year.

In the same area is a converted hen house—9 feet wide by 39 feet long—for which a Marine private pays $22.50 a month. Other landlords refused to rent him better accommodations because he has two children.

"Water is obtained from a pump in the rear of a barn about 50 yards distant," the report said. "The water tastes bad and is often muddy.

"No hot water is available. There are no washing facilities. Heat is supplied by a coal stove.

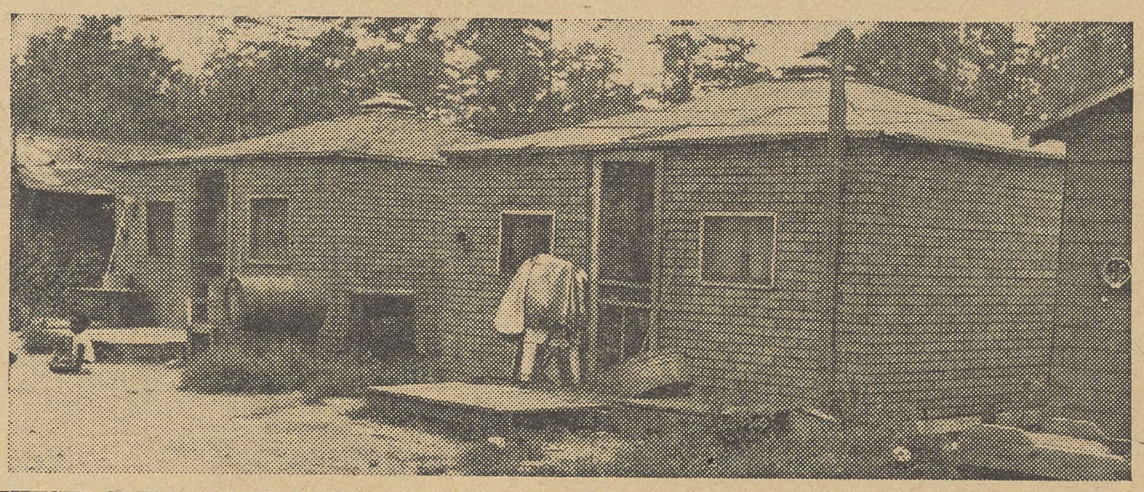
At Fort Dix, N. J., investigators found 1591 military personnel occupy off-post quarters. In nearby Browns Mills they saw soldiers living in cabins made "of a heavy type of cardboard or wallboard which has been placed on a quonset frame."

On the outskirts of Browns Mills is the "slums."

"In an area set back from the road, are a group of decrepit tattered shanties in which military personnel and their families reside," the report stated. "There is no running water available, water being secured from a filthy community pump which swarms with flies.

"The only toilet facilities are supplied by a privy some 100 yards away which 33 people share. Near the privy are piles of garbage and trash. Behind the cabins are what can best be described as a junk pile containing old papers, rags, and debris.

"Rent averages about $45 a month plus the cost of gas which runs about $10 a month."



THESE SLUM DWELLINGS near Browns Mills, N. J., were rented to Fort Dix military personnel for approximately $35 a month. These shanties have neither running water nor sanitary facilities. You're in the Army, Mr.—and Mrs.—Brown!

Business Tax 'Steal' Is Attacked By N. J. CIO Council

THE NEW Jersey CIO Council has charged that the construction of more than $111 million worth of new plants in the state "is being paid for by the American people through a giant socialism-for-business tax steal."

Terming the action by 153 corporations in 17 counties "grand larceny," the state council condemned the process known as "accelerated tax amortization" under which the government issues a "certificate of necessity" and permits the owner to deduct the full cost of the plant from his taxes in five years. The Bureau of Internal Revenue normally requires 20 to 25 years to write off the cost.

The Council pointed out that before Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson halted the practice last month, the 153 companies requested "certificates of necessity" for $146,882,308 worth of production facilities and were granted a total of more than $111 million in such tax-write-off certificates.

Permission to write off plant costs in five years, instead of from 20 to 25 years, "is a terrific boon to corporations in the present era of high profits," a Council spokesman declared.

"By reducing the owner's taxable income, it permits him to avoid payment of excess profits taxes. At the end of five years, he owns, free and clear, profit-making property which has cost him nothing to construct and which still has a 15 or 20 year life."

The Council called the program "just another method of permitting the rich boys to escape their fair tax load by shifting the burden on to the shoulders of low-income workers."

Inequities in the setup were listed by the Council. They were:

The Council said that "a more intelligent approach to the problem of constructing plants for urgently needed materials would be for the government to construct such plants, lease them to the manufacturer for the period of the emergency and then sell such plants to small businessmen when the crisis passed.

"Imagine the cries that would go up if workers in defense plants were permitted to build brand new homes and have the government pay the cost of construction through a similar scheme," the Council declared.

NLRB Slaps Company's Use Of Riot

A NATIONAL Labor Relations trial examiner last week ruled that it is an unfair labor practice for a company to instigate a riot directed at discrediting a union.

J. D. Jewell, Inc., a Gainsville, Ga., poultry company, was found liable for instigating the riot during which five members and officials of the AFL Meat Cutters were beaten or kicked.

The union has just won an NLRB election—280 to 152 for no union.

The examiner, Lee J. Best, recommended that the company "instruct all its employes that physical assaults or other anti-union demonstrations" against the Meat Cutters "or any other union organization will not be permitted in or about" the company property at any time.

Unless contested by the company or the union within 20 days, the examiner's recommendations take effect as a NLRB order.

An NLRB decision dismissed AFL Machinists charges against the Des Moines (Ia.) Auto Dealers Association.

The union, the board found, had threatened a strike but "could not say when, where, or against how many dealers." When a strike was called against two dealers the following day, the other 19 members of the association shut up shop.

"Under the circumstances," the board ruled, "the only conclusion that can be drawn is that the union's strategy . . . was to keep the respondents (the 19 dealers) off balance with the threat of momentary strike hanging over their heads at all times."

There was nothing unlawful in the union's action, the ruling continued. But since the union had set out to "produce an uncertain operating situation it cannot complain now that it succeeded."

N. J. To End Bias In Driver Applications

A civil rights victory in New Jersey was hailed last week by the State CIO, when State Motor Vehicle Director Ferber disclosed that the word "color" will be eliminated from the 1953 driver license applications.

New Jersey CIO Civil Rights Director Arthur Chapin had instituted a campaign to have the "color" designation removed from license blanks. He said insurance companies were using the information obtained from the Motor Vehicle Department to charge Negroes higher rates than whites for the same auto insurance.

UAW Sues Hudson For Half Million

Charging breach of contract, the CIO Auto Workers Sept. 24 sued the Hudson Motor Car Co., Detroit, for $500,000 in damages and back pay.

The union said that, throughout June and July, the company had some 8000 production workers report for work daily and then sent them home claiming materials shortages. Union officials said the employes were sent home because Hudson car sales slumped sharply during the two summer months.

Hit 'Wrong-Way' Riot Indictments

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SUPPOSE YOU had rented a new apartment and were moving in when a bunch of hoodlums appeared, destroyed your furniture, drove you and the other tenants out, and gutted the building.

Suppose you had previously retained a lawyer who had obtained a court injunction ordering police officials to protect you and your family against the terroristic threats of these hoodlums, and the police had failed to give you this protection.

Then suppose a grand jury met to investigate the "riot" that ensued when you attempted to move, and turned in an indictment—not against the hoodlums who destroyed the building, but against your attorney, and others, who tried to aid you in your legal rights.

Sounds like a cockeyed story the Russians might have cooked up for home consumption, doesn't it? Yet that's actually what a Cook county grand jury did Sept. 19, in acting on the case of the shameful race riot which took place in Cicero, Ill., last July, when the family of Harvey Clark, Negro bus driver and war veteran, tried to move into a newly rented apartment.

THE Illinois indictments were questioned last week by the Federal government when Attorney General J. Howard McGrath ordered a new investigation of the Cicero riots, to be undertaken this time by a Federal grand jury. A delegation from the CIO conferred with McGrath shortly before his action was taken.

"The findings are legally fantastic and morally outrageous," Michael Mann, the CIO's regional director in Illinois, said in a wire to President Truman, last week. Mann requested that the Dept. of Justice convene a federal grand jury to investigate the "basic motives of the Cicero riots."

He branded the Cook county grand jury report "a shame and disgrace to citizens of this county," which completely disregarded the facts of law and on the spot evidence."

The Chicago Council has been in the forefront of the fight to get justice for the Clark family. The council has worked with such organizations as National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Chicago Council against Racial and Religious Discrimination, on this and other racial issues.

NAACP condemned the indictment of its attorney, George Leighton, who was retained by the Chicago NAACP to defend the Clarks.

NAACP said that it would "take up the challenge of the Cook county grand jury which failed to indict any of the rioters after three months of investigation."

NAACP Exec. Secy. Walter White termed the indictment "one of the gravest threats to the Negro's fight for equal justice which has yet developed." He appealed to NAACP branches throughout the country for moral and financial support in the fight to vindicate the indicted NAACP lawyer.

Indicted with Leighton on a charge of "conspiracy to injure property . . . by causing a depreciation in the real estate market price by renting to Negroes," were:

Mrs. Camille DeRose, former owner of the property into which the Clarks sought to move; her former attorney, her rental agent, and a man who allegedly distributed Communist literature in Cicero.

FBI Investigation Asked At Cicero

CIO Electrical Workers last week demanded that the FBI investigate the failure of a Cook County, Ill., grand jury to indict any of the 6000 persons involved in the Cicero, Ill., riots.

IUE Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett, who is also chairman of the union's Civil Rights and Fair Employment Practices Committee, declared:

"The term of the grand jury had been extended for three months to handle the Cicero situation, where mobs rioted for some time, denying the Negro family, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Clark, their civil right of a place to live . . .

"The few indictments that were handed down were flimsy and ridiculous. We of IUE-CIO feel that this action of the grand jury can aid none except the Communists. We demand that the FBI immediately investigate this breach of American justice."

"Bah! I hate the stuff!"

CIO Reg. Dir. Henry J. Henry reports that in a union shop election at the River Products Co., South Bend, Ind., the workers favored the CIO Paper Workers by a vote of 71 for, 11 against. Intl. Rep. George McGrew handled the campaign.

The USA-CIO won a representation election at the Newberry Equipment Co., Memphis, Tenn., by a majority of 4 to 1. USA Rep. Earl Crowder directed this drive.

CIO Rep. Ted du Cuennois reports that in a representation election held at the National Automotive Parts Association, Richmond, Va., the workers voted for the UAW-CIO by a vote of 8 to 3 for no union.

School Trains CIO Leaders From 5 States

LOCAL CIO leaders from five eastern states were given certificates of achievement at the concluding session of the National CIO's leadership training school held the week of Sept. 16-22 at the beautiful Bynden Wood Camp, Wernersville, Pa.

The ninth of a series of regional one-week summer schools held so far this year by the CIO's Dept. of Education and Research, the group that met at Bynden Wood came from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and West Virginia. The 37 student-delegates who attended represented CIO International in the steel, auto, brewery, chemical, textile, packinghouse, paper, telephone, and electrical industries.

Lively discussions took place at evening sessions following talks by guest speakers on such subjects as international affairs, civil liberties, legislative activities and the Taft-Hartley law.

Eric Hauerslev from the Workers' Education Assn. of Denmark who spent the whole week at the school, taught a class on international affairs, and Soedarpo Sastrosatomo, press counselor for the Indonesia Embassy in Washington was a speaker at an evening program. An ECA team of 12 French trade unionists spent two days at the school.

CIO officials who spoke or led classes, included John Edelman, Textile Workers legislative representative; Tom Harris, CIO assistant general counsel; Henry Murray, National PAC, Edward Haas, president, Berks County CIO Council; Henry Shipherd, Philadelphia CIO Council, and others.

CIO's Peace Views Told In Finland

WORLD peace cannot come from loud talking but must "be established on the firm foundation of economic prosperity for the masses of the people," Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe, recently told a rally in Lahti, Finland.

"We think it is a sin and a crime to talk about the fight for peace," Reuther said, "as if peace could spring full-blown from a manifesto or a petition without having first established the economic underpinning for the peace we all want and some talk about so eloquently."

The CIO representative said American labor is active in world affairs both through its participation in the work of official recovery agencies and through direct contact with the free labor movement.

"The American program of economic assistance to Europe and to the under-developed areas of the world has only begun," he said, "but we of the American labor movement feel that in this domain of making world democracy flourish, as in the domain of domestic reform, we are moving in the right direction."

Strike Against Controls Gets Packers Higher Beef Ceilings

By MILTON PLUMB

THE MEAT industry's strike against price controls paid off again last week, as the Office of Price Stabilization reluctantly found it necessary to order still another increase in the retail beef price ceilings.

At the same time, however, there were increasing signs that Congress is beginning to get fed up with the flagrant disregard of the public interest which the big meat operators have been showing.

This, coupled with growing consumer pressure, has increased the chances that Congress actually may repeal the ban against slaughter quotas which the legislators, at the meat industry's bidding, wrote into the Defense Production Act last July.

The urgent need for quick passage of remedial legislation requested by President Truman was underscored by the findings of OPS enforcement officers when they made surprise inspections of 500 slaughter houses in more than 100 cities throughout the U. S. last Tuesday.

The inspectors found 222 violations of the law in 54 cities. As a result of inspections made on a smaller scale last month, OPS uncovered similar violations in eight of 14 cities where checks were made.

The government had filed suit against those firms where the most serious violations were found in the earlier inspections, and it plans to take similar court action on new violations uncovered last week.

As more and more evidence piled up of an industry-wide contempt for law, Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle openly charged that the industry in general, and the American Meat Institute in particular, are determined to wreck meat price controls.

DiSalle said that if the industry had cooperated with the government instead of fighting its efforts to control prices, the new increase in beef prices probably would not have been necessary.

The stepped-up enforcement drive was undertaken by OPS after it had received information that some slaughterers are upgrading cattle and falsifying weights and records in attempts to justify illegally high prices. They also are reported to be charging customers for more beef than they are actually giving them.

OPS said that it also has reports of illegal tie-in sales and side payments.

AN IMMEDIATE falling in the price of livestock resulted from its enforcement drive, OPS officials said, One slaughterer reported that, following the crackdown, he was able for the first time in several weeks to buy cattle in compliance with ceiling prices.

Another branch of the government, the U. S. Army, also acted last week to break the strike which the industry has been waging for still higher beef prices.

Following a refusal on the part of the meat industry to bid on more than 10 million pounds of beef needed to feed the armed forces, the Army announced that it would take steps immediately to purchase the meat it needs abroad.

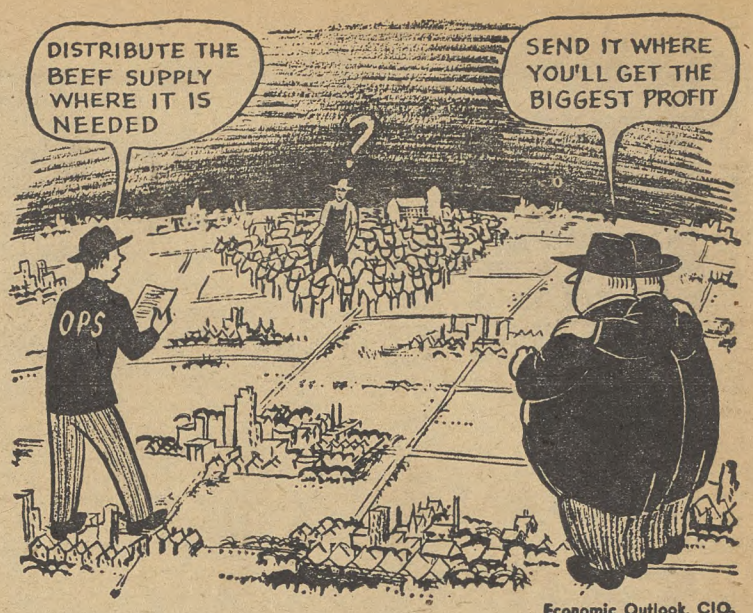
The industry has previously bitterly attacked suggestions that the government should buy foreign beef, rather than pay the sky-high prices demanded by American cattlemen. It will find it difficult to block the present Army move, however, since in its greed for above-ceiling black market prices, the industry ignored the opportunity it had to feed American troops at the ceiling rate.

Another setback to the industry came as a Senate Banking subcommittee voted to give the President the power to again reimpose slaughtering quotas. Meat industry spokesmen had opposed repeal of the present ban during recent hearings.

The subcommittee's amendment, which is reported to be certain of full committee approval, would also provide for additional controls over meat distribution all the way from slaughterhouse to wholesaler.

In voting for even more stringent meat controls than the President had requested. the subcommittee took a direct slap at the meat industry for its refusal to operate within legal ceilings.

At the same time it made it clear that it regarded as ridiculous the meat industry spokesmen's claim that the black market was caused by price controls rather than the cattlemen's stubborn refusal to abide by them.



Economic Outlook, CIO.

Economic Outlook Finds

U. S. Is Unprepared In Inflation Threat

THE United States is "not adequately prepared" to combat the continued threat of inflation, the CIO Economic Outlook said in its current issue.

The Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, is entitled "Congress Wrecks Inflation Controls."

"There are indications that inflationary pressures will be building up in the winter and spring. Defense production will be rising, with resultant shortages in many raw materials.

"Consumer income, too, will increase as employment rises. These factors will create upward pressures on prices in 1952 and 1953.

"Slowly creeping price boosts are as damaging to the economy as sudden and sharp price rises. They cut into the buying power of wages, salaries, savings and pensions. They increase the cost of the defense program.

"An effective over-all economic stabilization program is urgently needed. The Defense Production Act should be amended to provide the nation with protection against rising inflationary pressures."

The Outlook said that loopholes in the original act "still need plugging." It added:

"The Defense Production Act should provide the basis for increased production, effective price control, equitable wage stabilization, rent control and credit control, which are essential parts of an over-all stabilization program, including adequate and fair taxation, and a savings program.

"The President's request for Congressional action on the four amendments does not go far enough."

General Electric Talks Severed

The General Electric Conference Board of the CIO Electrical Workers will meet Thursday, Oct. 4, in New York to consider union action following the breaking off of negotiations with the company on Sept. 26.

The union and the company are in general agreement except for IUE's demand for a minimum wage increase of 4c an hour. The union demand for three weeks vacation after 15 years instead of the present 20 years required has been agreed to, IUE reports.

Buckmaster Is Re-elected

L. S. Buckmaster, president of the CIO Rubber Workers since 1945, was reelected at the union's 16th convention at Long Beach, Cal., by more than three to one, as was Secy.-Treas. Desmond Walker.

Vice-Pres. Joseph W. Childs was retained by acclamation. Buckmaster defeated Joseph Smith, Passaic, N. J. Walker's opponent was Roland Lashbrook, Detroit.

Buckmaster forces won all 12 positions on the executive board, 11 of whose members ran for reelection. Those named are:

Congress To Hand Big Corporations $400 Million Tax Gift; You'll Pay For It

WINS CIO HONOR: Sen. James E. Murray (D. Mont.) addresses a CIO Community Services Committee banquet at Detroit after receiving the Philip Murray Award for outstanding service to the cause of human welfare. The Montana Senator, who has been fighting the people's battle for security, health and economic progress for many decades, presented the $10,000 CIO gift to the Committee for the Nation's Health, a physicians' group fighting for national health insurance. Shown at the head table with the Senator are (l. to r.): Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers; Irving Abramson of the CIO-CSC; CIO Pres. Philip Murray; and UAW Pres. Walter Reuther. (See Story on Page 5).

McCarthy Faces Facts--And Trouble

Like Joshua of old, Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) blew his horn again last week. But Communists wouldn't tumble down, as the walls of Jericho did for Joshua. The walls were real. McCarthy's Reds aren't. His blast was directed against Philip C. Jessup, up for consideration by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as Ambassador-at-Large to the UN. The result, an illogical squeak. For story, and excerpts from "case" of Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) against McCarthy, see Pg. 6.

Filibustering Unconstitutional

The present rule requiring a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate to curb filibusters is a violation of the Constitution, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers last week told a Senate subcommittee considering proposals for shutting off debate. It gives a minority power to "arrest" enforcement of the Constitution, Carey said. Reuther claimed it permits a minority to make policy, where the majority should rule. See Page 12.

General Electric Offer Accepted By IUE

THE General Electric Conference Board of the CIO Electrical Workers last week accepted a company contract proposal as a first installment on the union's program for GE.

A strike of 70,000 IUE members was averted by the firm's proposal.

The conference board was meeting in New York City on Oct. 4 to decide on strike action when a call came from a GE official, George Pfeif, to IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer.

Pfeif suggested that the committee meet with him at once before it took any drastic action.

The proposal provides a 2.5% wage increase with a 3.5c minimum, retroactive to Sept. 15. The amount of the minimum under the 2.5% increase which GE had offered earlier was one of the points which had held up a settlement.

Agreement also was reached on a cost of living increase for the period from Mar. 15 to Sept. 15 based on a 1% raise for each 1% increase in the Consumer Price Index.

Other provisions are a wage reopener next Mar. 15—with the right to strike if satisfactory agreement is not reached—and a re-opener next Sept. 15 for further discussion of pensions and insurance programs.

GE also agreed to give three weeks' vacation after 15 years' service, effective next Jan. 1.

A number of other gains were won by IUE, including a revision of the discrimination clause to state that there will be no discrimination because of "marital status."

Negotiations had broken down several days ago and federal conciliators had stepped into the picture in an effort to avoid a strike.

The union's GE board discussed the proposed terms, agreed to accept them, but pledged itself to continue the fight for the entire IUE program for GE.

World Series A CIO Affair

The 1951 World Series is, in a way of speaking, strictly a CIO affair.

The CIO Utility Workers have organized the groundskeepers, ushers and other service and maintenance employes at both Yankee Stadium, home of the New York Yankees, and the Polo Grounds, where the Giants hang their hats.

CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who also is director of organization and councils, was an ardent rooter for the Giants during the National League playoff. Ebbetts Field, home grounds of the Brooklyn Dodgers, is not CIO-organized like the Polo Grounds.

TWUA Wins 16c For 18,000 In Three States

ALMOST 18,000 workers in approximately 400 textile processing shops in three states are working under a new contract providing a 16.25c an hour package increase over the next two years.

States covered are New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, but the benefits are extended to a group of plants in the New England states which follow the New York metropolitan area pattern.

The contract provides a 6c an hour across-the-board increase and another 6c an hour raise Oct. 1, 1952.

The new two-year agreement replaces private welfare insurance in the old pact with the New Jersey Blue Cross and Blue Shield plan for workers and dependents, giving them full coverage for hospital and surgical benefits.

Employers' monthly contributions to the industry's pension fund are doubled.

Tractor Strike Gains 13.5c, Escalator Gains

THE NINE-WEEK strike of 28,000 CIO Auto Workers at the Caterpillar Tractor Co., Peoria, Ill., won a contract producing a 13.5c an hour general wage increases and an escalator clause.

The agreement was announced by the Federal Mediation Service after a week of day and night sessions with union and company officials. Members of UAW Local 974 ratified the agreement and went back to work last week.

Cost of living adjustments will be made on a six-month basis beginning Feb. 1, 1952.

According to H. Erickson, Local 974 financial secretary, the strike grew out of the company refusal to raise wages to a level comparable to the rest of the tractor industry.

The union demand for a general boost of 19c an hour was countered by a company offer of 7, 8 and 10c an hour for various grades of work.

On the theory that the Wage Stabilization Board would not approve the union demand, the company stalled negotiations until the workers struck. Erickson was confident WSB would approve the new agreement which punches through the old 10% wage formula.

Although two weeks of the strike included the workers' vacations—for which they were paid—pickets were on duty during the entire nine weeks, Erickson said. The picket lines were never broken at any time during the strike, he added.

UFWA Keeps Team Going

The Damascus, Va., High School football team is playing its schedule this year thanks to an organization that wasn't even allowed to meet in the school hall when it was organizing a year ago.

It's the Damascus local of the CIO Furniture Workers, made up of 600 employes of a firm that fought bitterly to keep it out of town.

The high school gridders, it seemed, would have to stay on the sidelines this year because some $86 was needed for insurance on the players. The local club that had paid it in the past was no longer able to.

Things looked black until the CIO local union heard about it, invited the coach to its first anniversary dinner and in the presence of town officials, presented him with a check for the amount needed.

Senate Would Make Manufacturers Show Financial Hardship To Boost Prices

THE SENATE last week approved an amendment to the 1951 Defense Production Act taking some of the teeth out of what President Truman last summer called the "terrible Capehart Amendment."

By a vote of 49 to 21, it passed a flexible substitute for a price section of the controls law which would allow higher price ceilings only upon proof of financial hardship—a policy formerly followed by the Office of Price Stabilization.

Under the present version of the act, the OPS has to raise price ceilings to reflect added costs to manufacturers and processors since the war started in Korea.

THE CAPEHART amendment was one of several sections of the controls law passed by Congress in a petulant revolt against the President and the great body of Americans. They served to increase already swollen profits of wealthy industrialists and businessmen, to heighten the danger of inflation and to increase prices.

Another was deletion from the law of OPS authority to fix quotas for the slaughter of meat animals. The Senate Banking Committee earlier last week recommended Senate approval of a bill restoring this authority.

As the President and Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle had contended, the committee found that slaughtering quotas are "absolutely essential to a successful compliance and enforcement program."

"In the long run the fate of the whole stabilization program depends on effective meat price controls," the committee contended—again reflecting the views of the President and DiSalle.

In the Senate, Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) refused to let the controls law be changed without a fight. He offered a substitute which would have kept most of the objectionable provisions of the section he had put into the act, but it was defeated by a 41 to 28 vote.

He claimed it met all objections raised to his original amendment, and maintained his purpose was to assure individual sellers the opportunity to petition for relief from injustices.

Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) attacked Capehart's new proposal as "highly inflationary." It would allow manufacturers, he claimed, to "pyramid" costs and pass on to consumers "excessive" charges for advertising, transportation, etc.

The Senate Banking Committee, in its report on the slaughtering quota amendment, noted that it "hears many reports of black market operations and sharp practices" in the meat industry." It called upon the OPS for an "active and courageous" crackdown.

THIS had already been promised by DiSalle. He said the agency will seek stiff legal penalties against flagrant price violators and "make examples" of them. Court cases are being prepared against 443 slaughterers found in violation of beef price regulations among 1182 slaughterers investigated—most of them, he maintained, "wilful" violators.

In a speech in Philadelphia, he warned the meat industry that the time has come when it must "choose up sides" to demonstrate "once and for all what segments of the industry will line up in support of their country and which will be content to step over the line, to live by chiseling, by sharp practice and by preying on their fellow citizens."

Italian Union Members See D. C. Statues They Cast

FOUR ITALIAN trade unionists employed in the foundries that cast the four giant equestrian statues presented as a gift from the people of Italy to the people of the United States visited CIO headquarters last week.

Secy.-Treas. Frank Grasso of the CIO Paper Workers acted as host for the CIO. Speaking in their language, Grasso—who is of Italian parentage—explained to the visitors the background, program and policies of the CIO and American labor in general.

The huge golden statues of horses and human figures, at approaches of the Memorial Bridge across the Potomac river in Washington, were recently unveiled at a ceremony attended by Premier Alcide De Gasperi of Italy and President Truman.

THE EVENT was witnessed by the Italian craftsmen from the foundries—in Milan, Rome, Naples and Florence—where the statues were cast into bronze and gilded with real gold by a process going back to the days of Michelangelo.

Mrs. Petronilla Sesta, general secretary of the Italian Federation of Artists and Professionals for the last two years, accompanied the four men, all of whom are members of the National Federation of Metal Workers.

The men in the group were: Francesco Bruni, caster gilder, son of the proprietor of the Bruni Foundry, Rome; Libero Frizzi, Milan; Alberto Guintoli, gilder at Marinelli Foundry, Florence; and Luigi Marotta, head fireman and pourer, Lagana Foundry, Naples.

Their union is affiliated with the new anti-Communist Italian Confederation of Labor, a member of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which the CIO belongs.

CIO Officers Meet In Auto Union's New Home

THE gleaming new headquarters building of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit was the site of a meeting of the CIO executive officers and vice-presidents on Oct. 2.

Pres. Philip Murray and other leaders of the organization were taken on a "conducted tour" of the four-story building by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and other union officers. The UAW headquarters was dedicated last summer. It is on the grounds of an estate formerly owned by the late Edsel Ford, son of Henry.

Murray told reporters that the CIO officers held their meeting in Detroit "primarily to visit the building of the UAW and to look it over."

"It is one of the finest labor buildings in the United States," Murray said. "Its functional apparatus is well adapted to the needs of a giant organization such as this."

MUCH of the meeting was concerned with plans for the CIO convention, which opens at the Hotel Commodore in New York on Nov. 5. Principal convention committees will meet on Oct. 29. The vice presidents will meet Oct. 30 and the CIO Executive Board on Oct. 31.

Murray told reporters that the vice-presidents had given some attention to jurisdictional matters among the various CIO unions. He revealed that a committee of five CIO leaders has been studying the jurisdictional problem during recent weeks, and will make a formal report to the vice-presidents at their Oct. 30 meeting.

The committee is composed of Reuther, Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers of America; Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union of America; and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

Reporters questioned Murray concerning newspaper rumor stories of the possibility of his retirement from the CIO leadership; concerning relations with the AFL; and concerning steel union-management wage talks which will open late this year.

Murray noted that talk about his possible retirement seems to appear in the papers every year before the CIO convention. Asked about a recent article in Colliers by Ed Lahey, of the Chicago Daily News, Murray said:

"The CIO is bigger than any one man. It will continue to live, regardless of any one man."

THE CIO President said it was "unfortunate" that the AFL withdrew from the United Labor Policy Committee "without giving the CIO the benefit of consultation."

He said the attitude of the CIO is one aimed at producing "understanding," but in view of the AFL's recent actions and statements, he offered little hope that unity arrangements might be resumed.

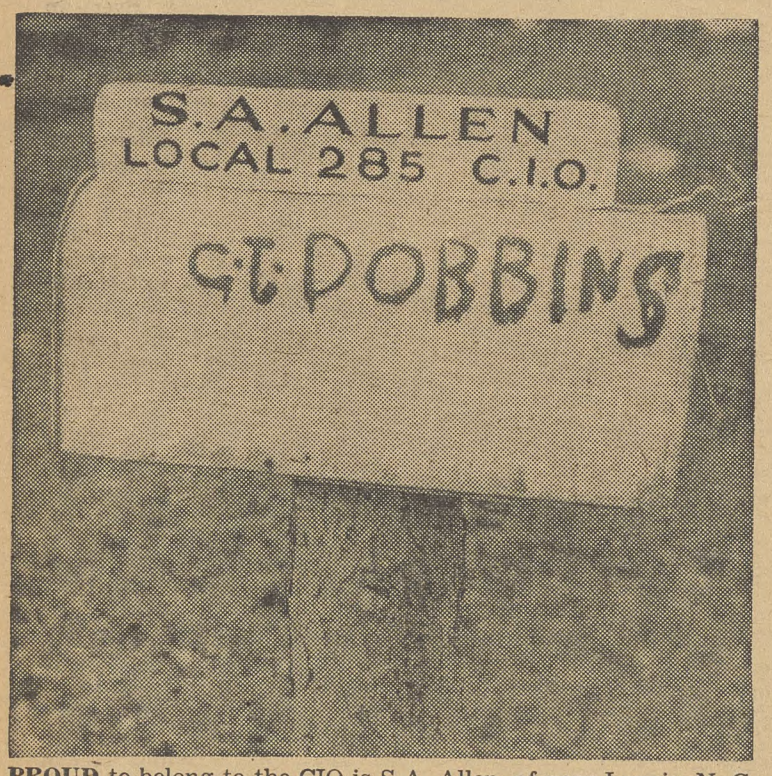
The executive board and wage policy committee of the Steelworkers will meet in Atlantic City very shortly after the CIO convention, Murray told reporters. He said that no demands have yet been formulated for economic improvements in new contracts between the union and the industry. The present pacts expire Dec. 31.

Murray added that there have been no "exploratory discussions" —formal or informal—with anybody in the steel industry concerning the new contracts.

WHEN it was suggested that under a strict application of wage stabilization formulas, the union might not be "entitled" to more than a 4c hourly wage increase, Murray said with a smile:

"I will tell you confidentially right now that 4c would be very low . . . you can quote me flatly on that."

On the evening of Oct. 2, Murray and other CIO officers were present at a CIO Community Services Committee banquet marking the group's tenth anniversary and the presentation of the Philip Murray Award to Sen. James E. Murray (D. Mont.). (See Story Page 5.)



PROUD to belong to the CIO is S A. Allen, of near Lenoir, N. C. His name as well as the number of his Furniture Workers local perches atop his mail box. Allen builds television cabinets at the Southeastern Cabinet Co.

Tax Conferees Vote Big Biz 'Gift' Of $400 Million

By MILTON PLUMB

NO MATTER what you read in the newspapers, the first victory in the current tax struggle between House and Senate conferees on the new tax bill went to big business.

The cost to American taxpayers is a neat $400 million —presented as an outright gift to the big corporations.

Because of its complicated nature, tax legislation lends itself especially to misinterpretation and resultant misunderstanding.

This fact has been seized upon by the special interests to cloak the real situation in regard to current tax legislation, which bestows "scandalous" benefits to wealthy individuals and profit-gutted corporations.

Its text, written in the hard-to-comprehend language of tax lawyers, was made available to members of the Senate only 20 hours before they were called upon to begin voting for its passage.

"The Hand That Came To Dinner"

Public Confused

The tragic result of the legal doubletalk which surrounds tax legislation is a general failure on the part of the public—meaning more than 90% of American taxpayers—to understand just how they are made to foot the bill for far more than their fair share of the cost of government.

Take, for example, the case of a union man in Pennsylvania who last week asked a visitor from Washington, "What's wrong with this guy Humphrey? I always thought he was a liberal and on the side of the workingman, but here he is leading the fight in the Senate to boost taxes still higher."

His question — natural enough in the light of general misunderstanding of tax matters—illustrates precisely how successful the lobbyists and spokesmen for big business have been selling the public an entirely false picture of taxation.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) HAS led the unsuccessful fight in the Senate for higher taxes. The truth of the matter is, however, that if he had succeeded, those higher taxes would actually mean much lower taxes for the overwhelming majority of taxpayers.

Who Is To Pay ?

There is no dispute these days over the fact that increased taxation is absolutely necessary to pay for defense and that it also is economically desirable at this time of high national income as a means of checking inflation.

The real issue, cloaked entirely behind a relatively meaningless issue of how big an increase should be voted this year, is over how much of the increased taxes should be taken from low and middle income families and how much from families with high incomes and from the excess profits of corporations.

President Truman's request for an additional $10 billion in taxes to balance the budget was deemed too high by the House, which approved a bill calling for an increase of $7.2 billion.

The House Ways and Means Committee, which drafted the measure, had the litle fellow's interests in mind, however, and provided for a steady increase in the tax rates for personal income, while also increasing the excess profits rate in corporation income.

When the measure reached the conservative Senate Finance Committee, composed almost entirely of millionaire representatives of big business, it underwent a complete revision.

Using a meat-axe technique, the committee lopped off most of the increased taxes on higher individual and corporation incomes which the House had approved.

Low Incomes Hit

At the same time it left the increased taxes on the lower and middle income families at the same higher level voted by the House. The total increase in taxes approved by the Senate totalled only $5.4 billion.

Capitalizing on the general public dislike of higher taxes, the Senate could thus boast that it had "lowered" taxes $1.8 billion.

In actual fact, the Senate's bill will make the great masses of citizens pay a much higher share of the total tax income than they would have under the "higher" taxes approved in the House measure.

Moreover, since the $5.4 billion increase approved by the Senate won't meet current government defense expenditures, the $1.8 billion it "saved" taxpayers actually is merely being deferred for future payment.

And instead of being paid by high income and corporation taxes this year, that "saving" to taxpayers eventually will almost certainly be paid largely by low and middle income wage earners.

A conference committee last week set to work to iron out the differences between the House and Senate measures. It was a foregone conclusion that the conferees would increase the total of increased taxes voted by the Senate.

The real question was whether or not the additional increase would come at the expense of the small taxpayer.

On the very first issue, it became evident that such would be the case. Misled by the usual tax lawyers' doubletalk, however, the public generally was not made aware of this fact.

Newspapers generally reported that the conferees had agreed "to accept the higher corporate income taxes voted by the House." This made it appear as though the corporations weren't going to get away easier, after all.

A committee spokesman was quoted as saying that the new rates will bring in an additional $2195 million in corporate taxes as compared with $2060 million that would have been obtained in the Senate bill. That looks as though the corporations would have to pay $135 million more.

In actual fact, however, the conferees' actions in regard to corporate taxes—the largest single source of possible increased revenue—will actually cost taxpayers about $400 million.

Moreover, that amount is an outright gift to corporations, since it represents money already set aside by the corporations in expectation of higher rates.

The Gimmick

The gimmick that makes possible this additional big business "steal" under the guise of paying "higher" taxes is the retroactive date which the conferees adopted.

Utterly ignoring custom and precedent, the conference committee made the corporate income taxes retroactive to last Apr. 1, the date voted by the Senate, instead of last Jan. 1, as the House wanted.

The change of one word—"January" to "April"—in the new law will forgive corporations from paying the higher rates on income during the first quarter of the year. That will mean a tax loss, according to Treasury experts, of more than $500 million. The $135 million "tax increase" is thus offset almost four times by this tax-gift, and the net loss is about $400 million.

Profits in the first quarter of 1951—the period exempted—were running at the annual rate of more than $51 billion. This is higher than in any other quarter in the nation's history.

McCarthy On Shoals

A cool, clean air blew over the cesspools of McCarthyism last week as evidence mounted that American sanity was about to demand sanitation measures.

There was no doubt about it, the bumptious Senator from Wisconsin and his rabble-rousing ilk were having a hard time.

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) led the drive to restore standards of decency to the Senate by outlining "ten cases" involving McCarthy in actions which, he charged, were each alone sufficient cause for expulsion from the Senate.

The charges levelled against McCarthy were outright perjury, acceptance of $10,000 from a building corporation while presiding over a committee considering its interests, many instances of lying, and other serious offenses.

It was typical of McCarthy not to answer these charges. Apparently unable to stand up before the facts Benton had assembled, he refused to appear before the committee to answer them, although most of the responsible press of the nation had editorially urged him to do so.

When he later appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to charge Ambassador at Large Philip C. Jessup with following the Communist line, McCarthy wrangled with the committee for two days and then had all of his smears completely refuted by the documented evidence submitted by his intended victim.

"I have never seen a more arrogant or more rude witness," Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) found it necessary to tell McCarthy at the end of his testimony.

One of the chief points in McCarthy's attack upon Jessup had been his affiliation with the Institute of Pacific Relations. This lost most of its weight, even in the eyes of most Republicans who have been attacking the Institute, when the hearing brought out that Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) also had been connected with the IPR at one time.

It has always been clear that McCarthyism is vicious and mean. The hearings now make equally evident that the Wisconsin Republican has used "barefaced falsehoods, distortions and misrepresentations" in his smear campaigns. The Senate ought to throw him out.

Minority Veto Power

Chances are that you haven't heard anything about the civil rights program for months.

The reason is simple: there just hasn't been any action in Congress on bills to outlaw various practices of discrimination against minorities.

And the reason for the lack of action is simple, too: it lies in the veto control exerted by a minority of Senators, who have the power to talk any bill to death. The heart of that veto power is the two-thirds rule, under which only 34 Senators can effectively prevent real consideration of any bill they dislike.

Not for the first time, the CIO last week called for a revision of those rules, in order to free the Senate from the bondage of a minority and to restore the power of a majority to debate and vote on bills such as those involved in the civil rights program. Until the Senate can free itself of unlimited talkathons by the Southern Dixiecrats—or, for that matter, of any minority caucus—it will not function under true majority rule.

No system of logic can explain why the United States Senate cannot, by majority rule, democratically limit its own powers of debate.

The filibuster has been the last refuge of the forces of reaction and repression. The Senate should take steps to modernize those rules, which belong to the 18th, not the 20th, century.

Into A Corner!

The Health Of The People

By SEN. JAMES E. MURRAY OF MONTANA

(Excerpts of a speech delivered by Sen. Murray at Detroit after he had received the CIO Community Services Committee's Philip Murray Award for outstanding service to the welfare of the American people.)

PERHAPS the most fruitful example of liberal philosophy translated into action is our system of Social Security. Behind it lies just one single thought—a thought born out of the experience which faces every working family in the Nation when it confronts the four risks with which all such families once contended. These are:

Loss of employment through no fault of its own;

Injury on the job;

The economic penalties of old age and death itself;

And, fourth, the economic penalties of sickness and ill health.

Over great opposition, we succeeded in erecting bulwarks against the first three of these risks. We have provided the average working family with its first real protection against unnecessary poverty, suffering and human need.

But in the continuing fight to strengthen our system of Social Security, we cannot afford too long delays.

In our fight for a sound National Health Program, what has been achieved so far?

FIRST, this nation has moved forward through the construction of hospitals and health centers in local communities throughout the land.

SECONDLY, we no longer use Federal research funds solely to find the causes and cures for the diseases of cattle and pigs and chickens. At long last we have forced the admission that children and their mothers are important too. Now we have Federal aid to medical research so that our scientists can have the funds necessary for a broad attack against disabling and killing diseases.

And a THIRD great gain was scored only last year through the Social Security amendments. Funds have been authorized to reduce maternal and infant deaths.

These gains are behind us. Immediately ahead lie other fights, equally important to the health and well-being of our families. The nation's medical, dental, and nursing schools stand in desperate need of Federal aid if they are to maintain high standards—still more if they are to expand to meet our needs for more and more men of medicine.

THE BILL which could meet this need—Senate Bill 337, which you of the CIO have wholeheartedly endorsed—may come up in the Senate in a matter of days.

On the one side, fighting with the thirteen Democratic and Republican Senators of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, are the majority of the deans of the medical schools, organized labor, and a host of organizations representing millions of American veterans, farmers, church-goers, professional men and women, and consumers.

Against us there is but one organization. But the three millions of dollars which this organization has to spend each year on its lobbying activities make it a veritable Goliath blocking the paths of progress in the field of health. And this Goliath fights not only against S. 337 and other such measures; it even dares oppose the suggestion that we use the surplus money in our Social Security Fund to pay for the hospitalization needed by those elder citizens—65 and over—who have paid social security insurance.

I refer to the Committee for the Nation's Health—a courageous band of distinguished physicians and outstanding citizens who have fought tirelessly and brilliantly in behalf of measures to improve the health of every family in the land. You of the CIO know the Committee for the Nation's Health as a staunch ally. Indeed your President, Philip Murray, serves as its honorary vice-chairman along with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and other distinguished public-spirited citizens.

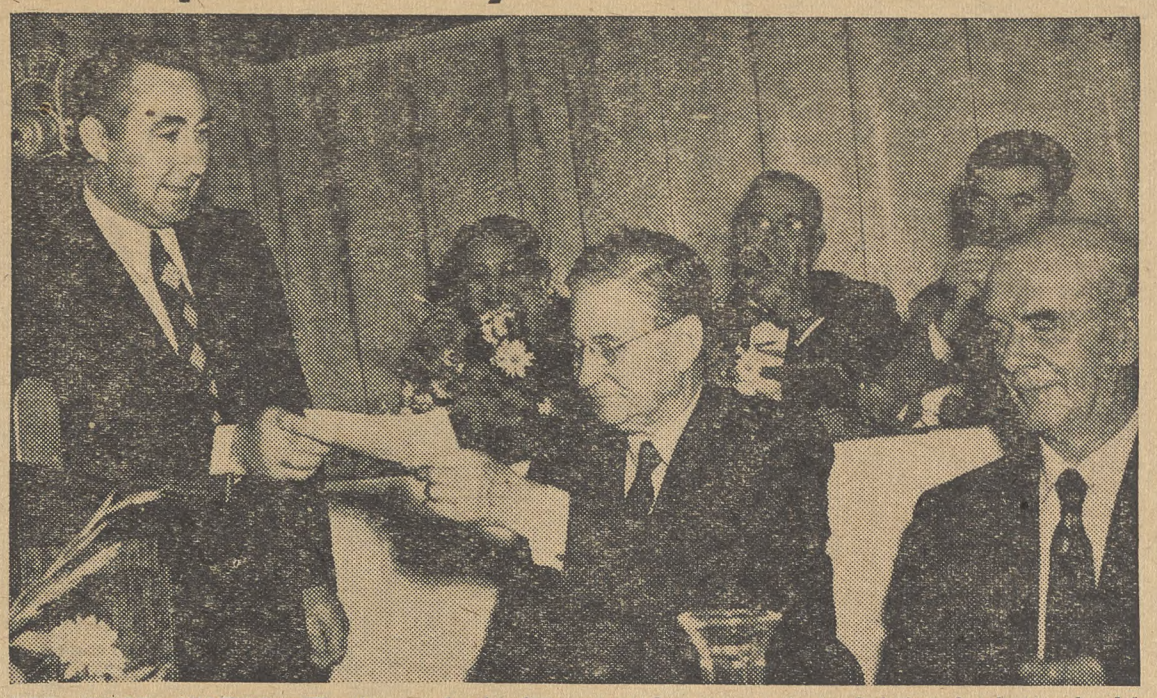
CIO-CSC Philip Murray Award Given Sen. Murray

OCT. 2 WAS a big night for the Murrays. On that evening, Sen. James E. Murray, Montana Democrat, received the CIO's "Philip Murray Award" for outstanding service to humanity.

The occasion was the tenth anniversary banquet of the CIO Community Services Committee—and the committee also came in for generous praise for its record of welfare service during the past decade.

At a banquet in Detroit more than 1000 CIO officials and members saw the popular Montana Senator, who has been in the forefront of every liberal fight in Washington for many years, receive both a plaque and a check for $10,000 from the CSC.

Sen. Murray, noting that congressional liberals "usually get 'whacked' instead of 'plaqued,'" voiced high praise for CIO's many services to the nation.



FOR GOOD WORKS: That's a check for $10,000 that UAW-CIO Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey is handing to Sen. James E. Murray of Montana. Check was part of "Philip Murray Award" presented to the Senator, who has devoted many years to fighting for better health and social security laws. He turned it over to physicians committee fighting for national health insurance. Occasion marked 10th anniversary of CIO Community Services Committee.

Donates Award

Sen. Murray turned the $10,000 check over to the Committee for the Nation's Health. He described that committee as a "courageous band of distinguished physicians and outstanding citizens who have fought tirelessly and brilliantly in behalf of measures to improve the health of every family in the land."

Pointing out that CIO Pres. Philip Murray is an honorary vice-chairman of the committee, Sen. Murray added:

"Through brilliant planning; through ability to make each dollar do the work of ten; and through many sacrifices on the part of its small staff the committee has welded into a fighting organization the liberal, independent-minded physicians throughout the nation."

The Montana Senator, who began his public career as a crusading County Attorney in Montana, surveyed the state of many of the causes for which he has fought.

He voiced thanks that the country has gone a long way since a railroad president preached the doctrine "that the rights and interests of the laboring man will be protected and cared for, not by the labor agitators, but by the Christian men to whom God in His infinite wisdom has given control of the property interests of the country."

Against this type of thinking, Sen. Murray said "we had to erect, or resurrect, a democratic creed—to breathe meaning into those words of the Constitution" that Congress shall provide for the general welfare.

He recalled that CIO Pres. Murray has been "in the forefront of every worthwhile fight since then" to advance the well-being of the American people.

Truman Wires

The Senator said that it would be "unseemly" for him to accept the CIO's honor award "if I did not feel that through me you are in reality paying recognition to all those other liberals in the Congress."

The Detroit banquet heard words of praise both for Sen. Murray and for the CIO-CSC from a number of union officials and in the form of a telegram from President Truman.

The President hailed Sen. Murray as a "staunch liberal" and said "the richly deserved award . . ." symbolizes his concern for the health and welfare of all Americans."

CSC Praised

Pres. Murray described the CIO-CSC as "a pillar of the CIO" and said its work is "noble" and "holy."

"There can be no doubt," he said, "that the Community Services Committee has functioned well during these past 10 years."

In just the same way, he added, "Sen. Murray has devoted himself to humanitarian work in a different field."

"But both Sen. Murray and our organization have been striving for the same goals of humanitarianism," he added.

Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers commented that the only prominent Murray not present was Arthur Murray.

The CIO-CSC, Reuther added in a more serious vein, "has always symbolized the human feeling of Philip Murray that we cannot solve our social and economic problems in a vacuum."

"For millions of families, there is an economic barrier that prevents adequate medical care," he said.

Paying tribute to the Community Services Committee's work, Reuther said:

"The agencies that wage war on battlefronts can get a $100 million from Congress.

Have To Beg

"The agencies that wage war on illness or poverty have to stand on the street corners and beg for nickels. It is time that the importance of both battlefronts is fully recognized."

Other speakers included Irving Abramson and Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC chairman and director; Pres. August Scholle of the Michigan CIO; and Pres. Mike Novak of the Detroit CIO, and Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the UAW-CIO.

CSC Lauded

THE CIO Community Services Committee, which is celebrating its 10th anniversary this month, was set up originally to raise funds for war-stricken countries overseas and developed into a coordinating body for CIO contributions to community health, welfare and recreation activities.

Its record over the past decade has been a genuinely magnificent one—a testimonial to labor's responsible participation in public affairs. We take pleasure in congratulating the CIO on this record—the more so since we have had occasion now and then to deplore what seemed to us irresponsible labor demands put forward without adequate regard for the general welfare.

Through the Community Services Committee, CIO members contributed more than 300 million dollars from 1942 to 1950 to local philanthropic agencies such as the Red Cross and the Community Chest. They gave over 15 million dollars for special labor projects in 16 countries overseas during the same period; and between 1945 and 1950, they purchased food and clothing packages amounting to approximately two million dollars from CARE for distribution abroad.

AFL members undoubtedly participated in these philanthropies with equal generosity, although without any central coordinating agency analogous to the CIO's Community Services Committee.

The CIO body has served not only to elicit a generous labor response to community needs but also to give labor a powerful voice in community affairs. Most important of all, it has given great numbers of individual workers an invaluable sense of sharing and of "belonging" in their own home towns.

SERVICE TO COMMUNITY: Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, describes the committee's work on behalf of CIO during the past 10 years. More than 1000 Detroit residents and CIO leaders attended the anniversary banquet. President Truman wired greetings.

The McCarthy Story: Benton's 10 Case Histories

HIGHLIGHTS from the 59-page statement of Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) before the Senate Rules subcommittee on Sept. 28, in which he cited 10 specific cases to substantiate his charges that Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) is unfit to hold membership in the Senate:

"The issue here this morning is thus not merely the moral conduct of a single Senator. It is the mighty symbolism of the Senate itself. If your committee, with its high responsibilities, tolerates corruptibility and mendacity in a United States Senator, shame is brought to a whole people. Such toleration undermines on a world scale the capacity for leadership of that people in a world desperately requiring their leadership."

"As the members of the Committee must know, many unusual claims and charges have been published which support the thesis that Senator McCarthy's is a pattern of conduct sustained over a period of many years, and repeated again and again, rather than merely a series of events between '47 to '51."

"Freedom to lie is not a freedom which membership in the U. S. Senate confers upon any man; nor does membership confer the freedom to commit unethical acts of any kind."

"My evidence . . . will . . . help your committee find the the answers to pertinent questions as to whether Senator McCarthy has borne false witness and as to whether he has deliberately and repeatedly corrupted and subverted facts . . . whether he has practiced calculated deceit and falsehood on both the U. S. Senate and the American people."

"I shall submit a group of case studies, 10 in all, to help illustrate the general charges I have just made . . . I shall start with the charge of perjury."

"Case No. 1 establishes that Sen. McCarthy apparently lied under oath to a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee last year . . . This case further indicates deliberate deception of the Senate by Sen. McCarthy in altering the text of that sensational speech when he read it into the Congressional Record."

"Congress has frequently brought contempt and libel proceedings against witnesses who have appeared before its committee. I have submitted to you this morning much direct evidence and much supporting evidence that a member of the U. S. Senate rests under the cloud of suspicion of perjury . . . Certainly the Congress should not be able to bring witnesses for trial for perjury—witnesses who are not members of the Senate—if it is to refuse to bring one of its own members to book who stands under an indictment of having committed perjury himself."

"Case No. 2 illuminates the lack of character, ethical standards, and integrity of Sen. McCarthy by detailing his acceptance of $10,000 from the Lustron Corp., a corporation which had a vital interest in the ouctome of the deliberations of a Senate housing committee presided over by Sen. McCarthy . . ."

"Sen. McCarthy took money from a party at interest."

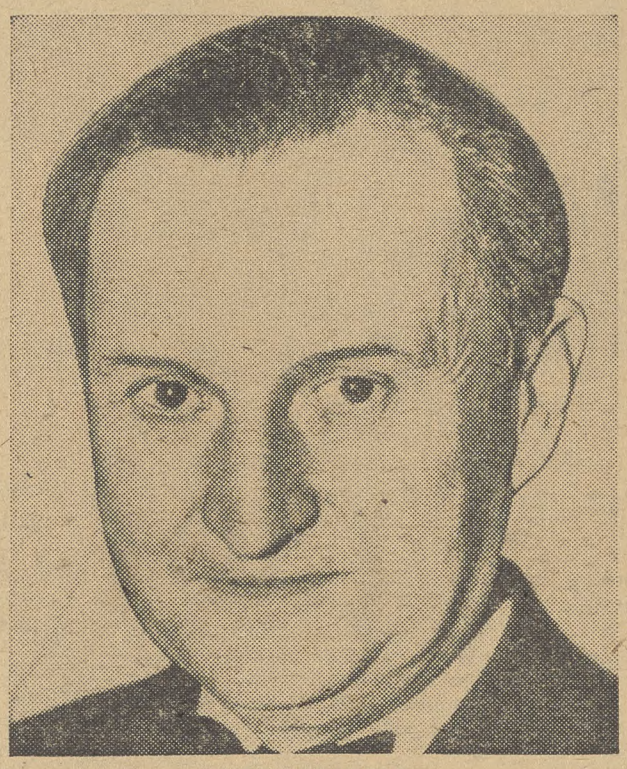
"The fact that he would take $10,000 from a corporation which was vitally concerned in a field in which he carried vital responsibility as a legislator . . . makes refrigerators and cameras look like very small potatoes for small fry."



SEN. BENTON
Asks McCarthy's Ouster

"Case No. 3 highlights Sen. McCarthy's efforts to hoax the Senate with the incredible charge that Gen. George Catlett Marshall has been part of a 'conspiracy so immense and an infamy so black as to dwarf any previous such venture in the history of man.' "

"I believe that this Committee should investigate whether in fact Sen. McCarthy believes his own incredible statements in this speech. If he doesn't—manifestly, here is more evidence of his deceit and fraud which warrants his expulsion from the Senate . . . If he does believe these extraordinary charges, the inquiry of this committee should take a very different turn from that which I have anticipated. We have had one instance in Senate history of an expulsion proceeding against a Senator thought to be of unsound mind."

"In part the word McCarthyism has grown to mean the charging of communism against named individuals under the cloak of congressional immunity—and in such a way that an innocent man is presumed guilty until he can prove himself innocent, and yet is left with no suitable way to prove his innocence and clear his reputation."

"Sen. McCarthy on March 30, 1950, told the Senate that responsibility for making public these names rested squarely upon Sen. Tydings. He made this charge even though he had given his statement (containing the names) to the press before the meeting began."

"All Senators naturally shrink at the thought of facing up to the fact that the Senate has an amoral man who uses the lie as an instrument of policy. Only when one case piles upon another case, when incident piles upon incident, and story upon story—do we learn to face up to the terrible reality, a reality which is a source of shame to all of us."

"They did not know and Sen. McCarthy did not tell them that his 'FBI chart' was a hoax. My authority for my statement that the 'FBI chart' is a hoax is Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI . . . This alleged 'FBI chart' is an affront to the Senate. Shall we, as Senators, continue to permit ourselves and millions of our constituents to be hoodwinked by a Senator who has never made good a single one of his accusations against the State Dept.?"

"His action in the Malmedy case and his Malmedy speech follow such a pattern of extraordinary distortion and falsehood as to confound the most reasonable observer."

"In these irresponsible attacks on the distinguished Sen. Baldwin and his colleagues on the subcommittee, Sen. McCarthy follows the technique which he has followed again and again: the deliberate policy of destroying a man's reputation, regardless of the evidence, if this serves to attain some objective Sen. McCarthy is pursuing."

"I do not suggest that these 10 case stories which I have submitted . . . by any means exhaust the flood of material that has poured in . . . Quite the contrary. These could be multiplied to an extent I've had no time to determine."

"I submit that there is one act of hypocrisy which most offends the deepest convictions of the Christian conscience and also the American spirit of justice and fair play. That act is to put the brand of guilt on an innocent man. I submit that there is no one who has erred more recklessly and maliciously in this respect than Sen. Joseph McCarthy."

Joshua?

McCarthy Blows His Horn Again, But No Reds Tumble Down

SEN. McCARTHY (R. Wis.), the contemporary would-be Joshua, was still blowing his horn last week. But even the imaginary walls of his allegedly Communist-populated Jericho refused to tumble. Despite McCarthy's conjuring, there just wasn't a real commie anywhere to be seen.

After listening to McCarthy's long serenade of hate against Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup, and hearing the latter's reply, nearly all fair-minded Americans were convinced that all that had come out of the former's horning in on the hearings before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was an utterly illogical squeak.

Talked Two Days

For two days, Wisconsin's mud-slinging member of the Senate had testified that Jessup, nominated as a U. S. delegate to the United Nations General Assembly, was an absolute follower of the Communist Party line.

When he finished, Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) exclaimed:

"I want to say for the record that in all my experience in the Senate, never have I seen a more arrogant or rude witness before any committee."

Then Jessup, on the following day, took the stand to refute McCarthy's charges one by one. He submitted documented proof to show the calculated distortion of his opponent's arguments and branded them "barefaced falsehoods, distortions and misrepresentations."

He suggested that the committee should "consider whether this disregard for truth, under oath, was or was not deliberate."

Even before Jessup had taken the stand, the best qualified group in the country to determine the truth of McCarthy's charges had given him a clean bill of health. The President's Loyalty Review Board, after an exhaustive consideration of all the evidence, announced that there could be "no reasonable doubt" of Jessup's loyalty.

McCarthy's Move

McCarthy then told the press that Hiram Bingham, the review board's chairman, had assured him that the board would never have cleared Jessup as "a security risk," but that it had no power to rule on anything other than Jessup's loyalty.

"I never told him any such thing," Bingham promptly retorted.

Bingham pointed out that he had had no communication with McCarthy since the Jessup case was taken up. He added that never at any time had he expressed any opinion about Jessup as a security risk.

The skullduggery of the Bingham incident fitted neatly into the pattern of similar cases involving McCarthy which Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) had outlined to the Senate Rules subcommittee to support his contention that McCarthy is not fit to be permitted to remain in the Senate. (See abstracts from Benton's testimony elsewhere on this page.)

Won't Face Facts

McCarthy has refused to accept the committee's invitation that he appear before it to answer Benton's charges.

If charges of as serious a nature had been made by a Senator against a private individual, the person accused would almost certainly be compelled to answer them or go to jail. It is unlikely, however, that McCarthy will be forced to go before the committee against his will.

On still another front, the taking of pre-trial depositions in Columnist Drew Pearson's $4.5 million suit against McCarthy and 10 other defendants continued. McCarthy, who had stamped out of the first session, was expected to add to the statement he had made the week before. No date has yet been set for the trial.

Meanwhile, Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) said Oct. 3 on America's Town Meeting of the Air that "McCarthyism is so bad that it must be ranked with communism as a threat to democracy."

In a debate with Rep. Kersten (R. Wis.), Bolling declared that the purpose of McCarthyism is not to fight communism but "to get publicity, power and prestige for Sen. McCarthy." He added: "The effect of McCarthyism has been to undermine the strength of democracy by creating disunity, based on distrust and fear. In this way, McCarthyism has actually aided communism." M.P.

Ohio Council Plans Compensation Clinics

The Ohio CIO Council is planning a "brass-tack, practical presentation" of workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation at two three-day schools in Columbus this month.

In addition to the two main themes, time will also be devoted to factory safety. Top technicians in the field from the U. S. Dept. of Labor, the Ohio Industrial Commission and the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, together with union experts will answer questions on specific problems.

The first school for delegates from the northern section of the State has been scheduled for Oct. 17-19. Delegates from the central and southern sections of Ohio will attend Oct. 24-26.

Utility Union Lashes Controls Act

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

"LIGHTS OUT" is the slogan of the CIO Utility Workers when its members are forced to strike by a public utility company.

In Cleveland, however, lights burned late at night at the union's 5th annual convention, as delegates laid plans to build their organization stronger.

The convention was also a victory celebration as UWUA recently won a 40-day strike at the Ohio Power Co. The settlement gave union members a substantial wage package and contractual gains.

UWUA Pres. Joseph Fisher pointed out despite this and other gains during the 18 months since the last convention, profits of public utliity companies were still far ahead of production workers' wage increases.

Split Unfair

Fisher cited figures showing that while wages of 13 million American workers were raised an average of 14c an hour in 1950, gross profits of employers as a whole went up an additional 25c per hour on each employe during the same period.

"In other words," Fisher declared, "out of an increased margin of about 40c available for distribution, workers got 14c and employers got 25c. Both workers and consumers paid for these vastly increased profit margins of the last year.

"There has been a hoarding of scarce materials and a sitdown strike on the part of many producers who demand swollen profits before they agree to meet the government's needs.

"Is it any wonder that labor raises loud objections to the inadequate provisions of the Defense Production Act?"

Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers, lashed at the Capehart amendment to the Defense Production Act, saying it makes control of prices "an impossibility."

Common Foes

McDonald, who is assistant to Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston, listed as the "common foes" of organized labor the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chambers of Commerce and the Farm Bureau Federation.

He charged those organizations "are insisting on" firm wage controls but at the same time fighting price controls. "Any group which advocates such a policy is an enemy of labor," he declared.

Two major dangers facing the nation were listed by McDonald as inflation and communist aggression.

He charged that Soviet Russia is determined to conquer the world by either force or internal disruption.

"Communists respect only force," he said. "Where weakness is evident in any nation—whether it be military or economic—the Russians consider it an invitation to move in.

"They hope to do the job in America by having inflation destroy our economy."

The Steelworkers' official voiced hope that the Defense Production Act will be amended next year. He said there is little hope that the present Congress will make the necessary changes.

Calling for all-out support of PAC, McDonald warned that PAC committees must be formed and trained this year in order to function next year—"the year of decision."

The convention showed its awareness of the danger of mounting inflation by condemning the Defense Production Act as inadequate and, calling for further legislation to control prices and for "effective" rent control. A resolution denounced Congressmen who "vote to scuttle economic controls and expose the nation to greater perils."

UWUA Secy.-Treas. William J. Pachler delivered a slashing attack on the injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, terming their use against unions "one of the most vicious, rottenest measures favoring Big Business on the law books of the country today."

Many Injunctions

He cited the experience of UWUA regarding company-inspired injunctions during the recent Ohio Power Co. strike. During the past year, he pointed out, most companies the union has been forced to strike have obtained injunctions in a matter of hours after the strike began.

The 450 delegates representing 80,000 dues paying members heard Pachler report that the union conducted three successful strikes and engaged in 17 organizing campaigns since April, 1950.

Nine campaigns were won, three are still in progress, four were lost and one, the East Ohio Gas Co. drive, was frustrated by a National Labor Relations Board decision.

More than 5000 new members were brought into the union since the last convention, including 3000 at the Boston Edison Co., Boston, Mass. Most elections were won despite opposition by the company, or the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL, or both, Pachler said.

Delegates voted to set the range of monthly dues between $1.50 to $2.50 and raised the per capita tax of local unions from 50c to 65c a month.

Dues Increased

The dues increase was approved with only four dissenting votes after Pres. Fisher and Pachler declared the additional revenue was necessary for an expansion of services, an organizational program and establishment of a welfare and pension program for union officers and staff members.

The convention reaffirmed its traditional policy of opposition to government ownership of public utilities except where investor-owned companies fail to provide for power distribution and sale.

Another resolution called for outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and "enactment of a just and equitable labor relations act."

Pres. Fisher, Secy.-Treas. Pachler and Vice Presidents Harold J. Staub and William R. Munger were re-elected by acclamation to three-year terms.

AFL Merger Plan Would End CIO's Industrial Unions

CIO VICE PRES. Allen S. Haywood, who is director of organization and councils, is fondly known as the "daddy" of the Utility Workers.

He responded to a standing ovation at the UWUA convention by recalling the trials and tribulations which faced the membership before the union came into the CIO.

Terming the UWUA top officers "great leaders who have worked untiringly for your interests," Haywood declared he was "proud of the record your union has made since it affiliated with the CIO in 1945."

Speaking on the possibility of eventual merger of the CIO and the AFL, Haywood said that such a move would succeed "if and when the AFL is ready to sit down with us and talk common sense" about the problems in the way of an amalgamation of the two organizations.

"We are willing to unite," he told the cheering delegates, "but only under conditions and an agreement that guarantees our rights and their rights."

He said present AFL terms for merger would mean absorption of the CIO and the carving up of its industrial unions for the benefit of the AFL craft groups.

"Under their terms, a union like yours for example, would be swallowed up by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and your members would be Class B members in that organization."

He pointed out that the CIO was born out of necessity in the 1930's because the AFL with its craft union philosophy refused to accept industrial unionism.

"The CIO is playing a proud role in the American labor movement," he declared. "In the 15 years of its existence it has performed a human revolt in America. It has brought humanization to industry through higher wages, better working conditions, pensions, health and welfare benefits, paid holidays and paid vacations."

What! No Atomizer?

In Detroit, CIO Auto Workers have no regrets that labor publicity has driven a special Cadillac, being prepared for Dictator Peron of Argentina, into obscure storage.

The super-luxurious job, for a fascist who has forced millions of workers into company unions, was being outfitted with air-conditioning, a built-in bar, rear-seat television, a small refrigerator and special telephones.

Health Program For Workers Expanded

The U. S. Public Health Service is developing a comprehensive program for additional protection of workers' health both on the job and at home, Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing announced last week.

The service's Division of Industrial Hygiene has been renamed the Div. of Occupational Health, as a better indication of its job of promoting the health of the individual worker.

Hadacol Ads Again Called Fake By FTC

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission still thinks — just as it did a year ago—that the advertised virtues of Hadacol, the current patent medicine fad, are much greater than those of the preparation itself.

The FTC branded the claims as "false, misleading and deceptive," and ordered the officials of the LeBlanc Corp., Lafayette, La., to answer formal charges there on Nov. 26. The firm was founded by State Sen. Dudley J. LeBlanc of Louisiana, who built it into a multi-million-dollar operation before selling it a few months ago.

Despite the sale, the FTC said he continues to "formulate, direct and control" the company, and directed him to appear at the hearing.

Hadacol contains vitamins and minerals in a 12% solution of alcohol. The FTC said it may make up deficiencies in such vitamins and minerals, but "contrary to claims made" in advertising, is of "no value" in treating cancer, tuberculosis and everything else down to and including that tired feeling.

The FTC warned the firm about its advertising a year ago, and the company said it would quit making extravagant claims.

FPC Boosts Gas Rates By Default

NATURAL GAS consumers in four states will pay more as the result of the Federal Power Commission's failure to act on a case involving their interests.

The Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. last week notified the FPC that it was putting a rate increase into effect for the natural gas it sells to 16 utilities in four states.

While the price boost applies to the wholesale rate, it inevitably will be passed on to consumers.

The company was able to put the new rate into effect without the commission's approval because of a legal gimmick which allows a higher rate to be applied if the FPC fails to complete action within five months on its suspension of an application for a new rate.

The FPC, which recently in effect voted continued price gouging of consumers by ruling that it had no jurisdiction over the Phillips Petroleum Co., this time let the higher rates go into effect by merely failing to take action.

Is it only coincidence that the Phillips Co., the biggest of the natural gas producers, furnishes gas to the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co.?

Named To Rent Board

Appointment of Secy.-Treas. James Coates, of CIO Auto Workers Local 669, as a tenant member of the Northeastern New Jersey Rent Advisory Board was announced last week.

Coates, who lives at Allendale, N. J., succeeds Manuel Kurzberg, former education director for the Passaic Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers, who resigned July 26.

New Style 'Bureaucrat'

Former CIO Aide Raps Congress On ECA Cut

IT apparently takes the CIO to supply the kind of federal government "bureaucrat" —even if he is a temporary one—who has nerve enough to take a crack at Congress in a public speech.

The criticism came from Robert Oliver, labor adviser to the Economic Cooperation Administration and prior to that CIO regional director in Texas. It came during a speech before the National Fraternal Congress, a central body of fraternities, at its convention in Chicago.

"It is unfortunate that Congress has so drastically cut the funds which ECA had asked for economic purposes," he declared.

"I, for one, believe it was very short-sighted of Congress to cut ECA funds, and to curtail ECA activities. It is indicative of . . . a sort of ostrich psychology of burying our heads in the sands of rearmament, and leaving our . . . well, leaving ourselves exposed to attack."

OLIVER maintained that rearmament and recovery of Europe are not ends in themselves, but "ways and means to securing for ourselves the sort of world we want."

"Seriously," he said, "what we must face up to is that we do not face a temporary crisis, we face a new era.

"All over the world people are looking to us for guidance and leadership. But they are not yearning for leadership to recovery of 19th Century capitalism.

"They are not looking to us for leadership down the dismal road of rearmament. They are looking to us for leadership up the highway of the 20th Century man.

"Our interest in Europe is not —and must not be allowed to appear to be—an interest in how many soldiers they can provide from among their sons, or how many battlefields they can provide in their countries.

"They must know, and we must help them know by our words and deeds, that diversion of energies and resources to rearmament is a temporary diversion and that we all have our eyes on a far more important end. That end is the welfare and happiness of all free men in a democratic world of expanding opportunity.

"MY PLEA is that we do not become so absorbed in ways and means of defense against outside aggression that we forget the true nature of the free world's strength, and thereby neglect to build the world we want."

One of the means the ECA is using "to build the world we want" is the Production Assistance Drive, Oliver said.

"The workers of the United State," he explained, "have confidence in our system of production because it is based upon the concept of the ever-expanding economy.

"The care of this concept is the progressive increase of productivity and the deepening of consumer markets. It is exactly here that the greatest promise lies in appealing to the workers of Western Europe . . .

"The ECA production assistance drive is intended to demonstrate not only that it is possible to increase productivity sharply, but also to market the increased production and to share the substantial benefits of the improvement equitably between the ownership as greater profits, the workers as higher wages, and the consumer as lower prices."

Mosher Says

Canadian Labor Congress 'Will Continue To Progress'

DIFFERENCES of opinion in the Canadian Congress of Labor which led to the resignation of Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy at the recent Vancouver convention have been "greatly exaggerated," CCL Pres. A. R. Mosher said in a statement last week.

Mosher said the distortions apparently were an effort "to weaken the Congress." Conroy resigned two hours after he was re-elected, with only a scattering of left-wing votes against him, on the claim that other election results showed the CCL no longer had "confidence" in him.

The resignation was rejected unanimously by the convention, but Conroy refused to withdraw it.

"I should like to state in the most positive manner," Mosher said in his statement, "that the structure of the Congress has not been weakened in any way by these differences of opinion, and that fact itself indicates the democratic nature of our organization.

"The Canadian Congress of Labor, representing 350,000 workers, has become firmly established as a strong and responsible Canadian organization.

"The feeling of regret of the membership at the resignation of Secy.-Treas. Conroy was made abundantly clear by delegates to the Vancouver convention.

"We are still hopeful that Mr. Conroy will reconsider his resignation, but in any event there is not the slightest doubt that the Congress will continue to make progress and to function in the service of Canadian labor."

Brewery Workers Win Akron Strike

Local 268 of the CIO Brewery Workers, at Akron, O., settled its three-weeks strike against the Quaker Oats Co. of that city last week when the company agreed to pay a general wage increase of 10½c an hour.

Negotiations began in July, when the union notified the company it wished to discuss a wage increase under a reopening clause in the contract. On Sept. 11, union members rejected a company wage offer 523 to 1. Two days later they walked out.

Defense Task Spurs Use Of Handicapped

NATIONAL EMPLOY the Physically Handicapped Week is being observed this week—its goal the integration into the nation's economy of the millions of handicapped workers whose skills and services are too often rejected by employers.

The observance has the strong support of the CIO. The week was proclaimed by President Truman under an act of Congress asking the President to urge support of programs "calling for full opportunity for physically handicapped men and women in employment."

The week has a special significance this year, as the bottom of the manpower barrel is being scraped by the demands of defense and civilian production. Millions of handicapped workers were given employment during the World War II manpower shortage and proved themselves competent, steady and less prone to accidents than their more fortunate fellows.

ONE OF the objectives of the observance is to inform the public that vocational rehabilitation and training are available to the handicapped under the auspices of state employment services.

The Office of Vocational Rehabilitation and the Census Bureau reported after a recent joint survey that at least two million workers could be added to the country's labor force if they receive the necessary rehabilitation and training.

In the six years since the first observance of the week, 1.3 million workers with physical impairments have been trained and placed in jobs where they have proved their ability.

Paul A. Strachan, president of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, asked for full public support of the week "knowing that its beneficient operations will bring smiles of gladness to replace tears of sadness, productivity instead of idleness and wealth instead of poverty."

More Juvenile Cases

About 12 in every 1000 children in the nation between the ages of 7 and 17 came to the attention of juvenile courts because of delinquency in 1949, according to a study just released by the Children's Bureau, Federal Security Agency. The year saw a 4% increase in juvenile delinquency cases over 1948.

'Canada Alone' Plan Aids Seaway Backers

SUPPORTERS of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project have launched what may prove to be a last-ditch stand in Congress against the lobby which has successfully blocked approval of the essential defense undertaking for more than a decade.

Hanging over the legislators' heads is the formal proposal of Canada to undertake the project alone, if Congressional approval is not speedily forthcoming.

Since shipping on the St. Lawrence is predominantly in the hands of U. S. interests, unilateral Canadian development would mean that consumers in this country, in the end, would pay the major share of the cost in tolls without acquiring the advantages of joint ownership and control.

A new resolution to authorize joint U. S.-Canadian construction was introduced in the House Oct. 1 by Rep. Blatnik (D. Minn.), who said that his measure was "a new and materially different approach" designed to meet objections raised by opponents. His legislation would require the Canadian Parliment to agree before construction starts on the principle of charging tolls on the seaway to make it self-supporting and self-liquidating.

Blatnik pleaded for Congressional support of the revised plan on the grounds that supporters of the seaway now "have gone more than half way to meet" their opponents' objections. He conceded, however, that "some elements in the country" would not "be appeased" by the compromise, but would continue to try to block action.

He was referring to the lobbyists for railroad, coal, port and utility interests, who have beaten back all efforts to enact legislation putting into effect a 1941 treaty between the U. S. and Canada promising joint construction of the seaway.

The House Public Works Committee by narrow margins has killed all of the bills submitted earlier this year.

In the Senate, where the Foreign Relations Committee has bottled up pending seaway legislation, Sens. Moody (D. Mich.) and Aiken (R. Vt.) last week again were pressing for consideration of the project.

Moody reminded the committee that it had promised last August to take action at the "earliest opportunity," after he and Aiken had cancelled their effort to enact the seaway legislation as a rider to the foreign aid bill.

THE CHANCES of Congress taking up seaway legislation have increased greatly since Sept. 28 when Canadian Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent formally presented to President Truman his government's plan to undertake the project alone unless there is early authorization for joint development.

Confronted with the reality that Congress for 10 years has refused tc pass legislation permitting the U. S. to live up to its treaty obligations, the President said that, although he prefers joint action, he would support the Canadian plan as "second best." Seaway legislation will be introduced at the fall session of the Canadian Parliament.

The importance of the seaway to national defense has been stressed by all top military leaders. In addition, the recent opening of vast iron ore deposits in Labrador and northern Quebec make the St. Lawrence a vital supply route for steel mills in U. S. cities.

Health Insurance Would Cut Medical Cost Three-Quarters

By WILLIAM MILLIS

YOUR MEDICAL care costs twice as much now under America's highly touted system as it would under prepaid national health insurance.

And you would pay only half of the reduced cost, because your employer would pay the other half.

That indication of the high cost of inadequate medicine came last week in an economic report, "The Cost of Medical Care," prepared by the Heller Committee and published by the Univ. of California.

THE COMMITTEE—whose past investigations of living costs have proved valuable to union contract negotiators—checked on the annual medical costs of 455 "middle income" families in the San Francisco Bay area.

The families' average incomes were $4100 a year—that's $1000 above average wages for factory workers—yet the cost of medical care, said the committee, is a "staggering and often disastrous financial burden."

Average medical costs, the report found, were 6% of annual income and another 1.5% for dental care.

In contrast, the Heller report by Emily H. Huntington estimates that comprehensive, family coverage health insurance would cost 3 to 4% of annual income. National health insurance—which CIO advocates—would be financed by a 1.5% wage deduction on employes and a matching 1.5% employer contribution.

THE CASE for national health insurance and other measures to improve the nation's health, as supported by CIO but stymied in the Dixiegop-controlled Congress, received full substantiation in the Heller Committee report.

So-called voluntary health programs, which were bitterly opposed by the "doctors' lobby" until only a few years ago, were rejected as "inadequate type of limited coverage" which "did not provide adequate security against the costs of medical care."

"The only way that real protection can be accomplished," the Heller report said, "is through a system of compulsory health insurance at least for the low and moderate-income groups in our population."

KEEP IT COMING: Pres. Russel Yarman of Local 711, CIO Electrical Workers, stands in the midst of a display of food and checks contributed to locked out members of IUE Local 740, Bowling Green, Ky. The lockout began Aug. 15 after Westinghouse management broke the terms of its national agreement with IUE by refusing contract benefits to Local 74.

Four IUE Locals Win $320,000 In UE Assets

FOUR LOCALS of the CIO Electrical Workers have won legal battles for possession of more than $320,000 in assets they had accumulated before bolting the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers.

In each case—two in Minnesota and two in New Jersey—the verdict was based on the same factor:

That continued membership of the UE in the CIO was a condition of affiliation of the locals, and that when the CIO expelled the UE because of its domination by the reds, the locals were free to do as they pleased.

Involved were Local 1140, an amalgamated group representing 2000 Minneapolis, Minn., IUE members; Local 1145, representing 7000 employes of the Minneapolis-Honeywell Co.; Local 447, with 3500 members at the Federal Telephone & Radio Corp., Newark, N. J., and Local 410, with 4500 members at the Westinghouse Electric Co., in Bloomfield, N. J.

THE DECISION in Minnesota case—involving more than $200,000 in assets—came in a case involving Local 1140. It was handed down by Judge Rol E. Barron in the 4th Judicial District, who heard the case without a jury. By agreement of all parties, the trial was consolidated with that of the case involving Local 1145.

The situation in the New Jersey cases, involving more than $120,000 in assets, was similar. The decision, by the State Superior Court, came in the case of Local 447, with the Local 410 litigation a companion case.

The trials were on the merits in all cases.

Judge Barron summarized his conclusions after an analysis of the evidence showed conclusively that prior to the expulsion, the emphasis had been on membership in the CIO rather than in the UE, as CIO attorneys had claimed.

". . . the Defendent UE undisputedly was expelled from the CIO on Nov. 2, 1949," he wrote, "and lost its CIO affiliation on that day, thereby failing to perform and breaching the implied agreement and implied condition that it would remain affiliated with the CIO.

"This breach effectively rendered unenforceable any contract rights of the Defendant UE against the Plaintiff (Local 1140).

"THE PLAINTIFF thus being free of any enforceable provisions preventing its disaffiliation, intact with its property, became free by a majority vote or greater to sever its relationship with the UE and, taking its property with it, to remain independent or seek a new affiliation . . .

"Accordingly, judgement and decree for the Plaintiff is granted . . ."

The IUE had won one earlier case on the same basis, and thus now has won all five court actions involving UE locals' assets. The UE and its locals have yet to win a case.

Executive Board Of ICFTU To Meet

The executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will meet Nov. 26-30 in Brussels, Belgium, to implement the decisions made at the world congress held in Milan, Italy, in July.

Among items on the tentative agenda are: Appointment of several assistant general secretaries, requests for affiliation from the Australian Council of Trade Unions, with 900,000 members, and the Australian Workers' Union, probable announcement of the establishment of the ICFTU Asian regional office in Colombo, Ceylon.

Bowling Green Story Shames Westinghouse

By W. P. WELSH

THE "BOWLING Green Story" — the lockout of members of CIO Electrical Workers Local 740 at the Westinghouse Electric Co. plant in Bowling Green, Ky.—is rapidly attracting national attention because it involves a huge corporation's refusal to live up to its signed agreement.

In the Kentucky city of 20,000 people — famous among other things for crack basketball teams —the IUE intervened after the AFL Electrical Workers had petitioned for an election at the newly established plant last May. The IUE won the National Labor Relations Board contest 142 to 2 for IBEW and 3 for no union.

On the basis of a signed master agreement with Westinghouse calling for the extension of benefits to all Westinghouse plants where IUE became the bargaining agent, the union asked the company to open negotiations.

However, the firm refused to extend the 9c an hour wage increase, union shop, seniority, holidays, vacations and other benefits, already won through the national agreement, to its Bowling Green employes.

Production workers in other Westinghouse plants earn from $1.25 to $1.41 an hour. In Bowling Green they get 75c. Maintenance men generally are paid up to $2 an hour except in Bowling Green, where the rate is 80 to 85c.

Employes finally began demonstrations, demanding their rights under the master contract. The company threatened to close the plant if the demonstrations continued and did so when the workers immediately called a mass meeting. The gate was padlocked on Aug. 15.

Missouri CIO Flays Former Gov. Donnelly

DELEGATES to the 13th annual convention of the Missouri CIO Council unanimously adopted a resolution branding former Gov. Phil M. Donnelly "extremely objectionable" to organized labor as a candidate for any office in the 1952 election.

The convention was held in Jefferson City.

Donnelly, a Democrat, was elected Governor in 1944, and could not run to succeed himself under Missouri law. He has not announced his candidacy for next year's balloting, but has issued a statement saying he would decide by shortly after Jan. 1.

The resolution condemned Donnelly as a phony "liberal and friend of labor until his election to the highest office in the State, after which he clearly demonstrated his utter disregard for the wage earners of Missouri."

"He has in general adopted a lofty, egotistical attitude," it said, "with utter disregard for the sick, poor and needy, which renders him most unacceptable to labor as a candidate for any public office."

The resolution specifically charged that Donnelly "used his office in the interests of Missouri's powerful utilities by demanding passage of and affixing his signature to a bill designed to reduce utility employes to virtual involuntary servitude."

The reference was to the King-Thompson Act, which restricts the right of workers in the utility field to strike. The constitutionality is now being tested in the courts.

The convention also condemned the former Governor for signing the Madison Act, an earlier law regulating unions which has since been repealed. The resolution came from the St. Louis Industrial Union Council.

ANOTHER resolution urged the CIO to take the lead in promoting development of the Missouri River basin through an authority similar to the Tennessee Valley Authority, and condemned the "Pick-Sloan pork-barrelling program of the Army Engineers as a worthless project."

The convention approved the cooperation of the CIO with other relief organizations during the summer floods after hearing CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary describe the CIO role during the crisis.

The delegates expressed "bitter opposition" to pending legislation which would permit St. Louis to reinstitute an earnings tax. They described the levy as "unfair, unjust and unwarranted, and not based on ability to pay."

Other resolutions demanded:

An increase in state relief grants.

A raise to $30 a week in unemployment compensation benefits.

Greater use of voting machines.

Recognition of the farmer and the worker as well as business by political parties in their choice of candidates.

Prompt investigation of housing shortages in defense areas with a view to the imposition of rent controls.

STILL OTHERS endorsed CIO workers education and a proposal for week-end educational conferences in conveniently-located cities in the State.

Convention speakers included CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Tilford Dudley, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Harold E. Edwards, of Kansas City, was re-elected president and James A. Davis, of St. Louis, secretary-treasurer without opposition.

CIO Boycotts Demos' Dinner

The Missouri and the St. Louis CIO Councils have backed up their opposition to the likely candidacy of Ex-Gov. Donnelly for the State's highest executive post by refusing to take part in the Democrats' annual Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner Oct. 6.

Executive Secy. Oscar A. Ehrhardt of the St. Louis CIO Council said that CIO organizations and leaders have refused to buy $25-a-plate tickets for the dinner or to make $100 contributions as sponsors.

While Donnelly has not formally announced his candidacy for governor, he said that numerous requests that he enter the race "cannot in fairness to my friends be ignored."

Franco Marks 15th Year, 'Forgives' Strike Penalties

DICTATOR Franco of Spain celebrated the 15th anniversary of seizure of power last week by canceling all punishments imposed on workers who led the cost-of-living strikes that paralyzed a large part of Spanish industry last spring.

The workers had been deprived of their seniority rights and other benefits because of their role in the walkouts, according to a Reuters dispatch from Madrid.

Repercussions from the strikes are still being heard in Spain, according to word received by the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions at its headquarters in Utrecht, Holland.

The IFCTU reported that several Spanish priests issued a sharp statement printed in Apostolado and published in Barcelona, center of the walkouts, which in effect supported the strikers.

"If our workers get no food," they said, "it is absolutely useless for us to preach on the true principles of family life.

"Moreover, it is useless in that case to make sermons on morality and the duty to rear children in a Christian way. This is what we wanted to point out clearly to all Barcelona authorities as well as the Ministers of Labor and Justice . . .

"It has to be recognized that nobody among those living in the higher circles cares about the misery of the working class. The only means to abolish misery would be the introduction by law of a new system of distribution."

Virginia CIO Action

GOP Urged To Back Byrd For President

IT IS DOUBTFUL if the GOP will appreciate it, but delegates to the Virginia CIO's lively convention suggested that the Republican Party nominate Sen. Harry Byrd (D. Va.) for President or Vice President.

A resolution passed unanimously by some 175 delegates representing 35,500 CIO members in Virginia urged the GOP to put Byrd on their ticket "as a reward for his years of loyal service to the Republican Party."

Adopted at the end of a session on political action plans for 1952, the resolution pointed out that in the past two sessions of Congress, Byrd had voted with the Republicans on domestic issues more often than Sen. Taft (R. O.), "Mr. Republican himself."

The convention was held at Roanoke.

The convention re-elected Council Pres. Charles Webber and Secy.-Treas. James H. Boyette, chose 19 vice-presidents, heard speeches by presidents of three CIO international unions, and drew up a program to strengthen political, legislative and organizing activities.

Webber and Boyette were re-elected without opposition. Earlier the council's executive board, taking note of a smear attack made on Pres. Webber by James P. Hart, Roanoke attorney, asking for Webber's ouster, unanimously passed a resolution expressing confidence in their president.

Three international union presidents, all of them CIO vice-presidents, were among the leading speakers at the Roanoke convention. Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers warned the delegates that political action was needed to keep labor from losing "by law what we have won at the bargaining table and on the picket line."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, who is a member of the Wage Stabilization Board, told the convention that the law under which WSB functioned was unfair. "If a union loses a strike, that is the end," he said. "If a strike is successful the employer has an appeal to the board."

Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, in an attack on the AFL for splitting up the United Labor Policy Committee, said the ULPC had "provided more labor unity than any single action in the past 50 years." He urged the preservation of "labor unity in the lower echelons where it is already built up."

EARNEST PUGH, CIO regional director for Virginia, said that in the last year the CIO had won 27 elections involving nearly 7000 workers, and that now CIO unions have bargaining rights for more than 50,000 workers in the state.

The council's memorial award of $100 for 1951 went to Eugene R. DeHart, of Radford, Va., member of the Steelworkers employed as a foundry machine operator, who was cited for his "unflagging zeal and devotion to the CIO movement in Virginia."

The convention urged President Truman to set up a Fair Employment Practices Committee by executive order and called on the Virginia General Assembly to outlaw the poll tax and to bar segregation on public carriers and in public buildings.

Other resolutions called for a federal anti-lynching law and urged an aggressive PAC drive in every community.

Colorado CIO Warned

PAC Work Is Needed To Defeat Taft In '52

By MARVIN ZELDIN

SEN. TAFT (R., O.) is "the darling and stooge of the big money interests and is a small-minded person," charged Darrell Smith, assistant to PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, at the 13th annual convention of the Colorado CIO Council.

Smith predicted that Taft would be the Republican candidate for president next year and warned the delegates that Taft would win if labor doesn't wage a strong political campaign and get out the vote. The convention was held at Colorado Springs.

Another speaker, State Sen. LaRoy Purdy, a Democrat and a CIO Communications Workers' district director, attacked both Congress and the Colorado Legislature, which he dubbed "Colorado's cattle congress."

Purdy said that "an unholy coalition of Republicans and Democrats" in Congress sold the American people down the river by "emasculating the defense production act."

With these two speakers setting the keynote of the convention as "political action," the delegates evolved a strong PAC program which will include giving the facts to the people, precinct organization and getting out the vote.

Resolutions passed by the convention—the largest Colorado CIO gathering ever — urged farmer-labor cooperation, an affirmative program to wipe out discrimination, and CIO representation on the policy making boards of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield health insurance plans.

WAYNE PRICE, of Local 2102 of the Steelworkers, was elected president of the council, and William Ted Butler was unanimously re-elected secretary-treasurer. Eleven vice presidents were elected, two more than in previous years.

The are Merle Dengler, Auto Workers; Eugene Rosati and Thomas Lamarito, both Paper Workers; L. E. Lathrop, Steelworkers; Nettie Sides, Clothing Workers; Roy Penn, Rubber Workers; Earl Law, Steelworkers; Robert Person, Brewery Workers; Evelyn Davidson, Oil Workers; William Shugart and T. Ralph Stuart both Communications Workers.

ORDERS to relieve unemployment among Lawrence, Mass., CIO Textile Workers were sought from Federal officials in Washington by a delegation representing the area's 26,000 wool and worsted workers, more than half of whom are jobless. Shown at one of the meetings are, left to right (seated) Ted Silvey, CIO assistant to National Production Authority; O. A. Knight, president of CIO Oil Workers and NPA assistant director; TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, and Rep. Lane (D.), whose district includes Lawrence; (standing) Pres. Leo A. Lutz of TWUA Greater Lawrence Joint Board and Local 227; David G. Hetherington, Local 227 executive board member; Frank R. Arcidiacono, board member of Local 227 and Massachusetts CIO Council; William DuChessi, of TWUA staff; John W. Edelman, TWUA Washington representative; Arthur W. Brown, TWUA Greater Lawrence area director; Gordon K. Whittaker, Joint Board business agent; Mrs. Oboline Biron, Local 227 board member; Mrs. Nita Snigorski, Local 227 recording secretary, and Sol Barkin, TWUA research director. Massachusetts members of Congress promised to help.

Papers Scream Manpower Shortage, But Lawrence, Mass., Has 17,000 Idle

FIVE working members of the CIO Textile Workers came to Washington recently to try and get some help for their less fortunate fellows — union members who lost their jobs when the bottom dropped out of the woolen and worsted market back in June.

The day they arrived, a textile worker who had been jobless for months jumped off a Lawrence bridge and killed himself because he couldn't feed his four young children.

Textile workers account for 26,000 of the 56,000 gainfully employed men and women in Lawrence.

Virtually all of them are TWUA members who work in woolen and worsted mills. But more than half of them are out of work—11,600 persons, practically all textile workers, are drawing unemployment compensation every week, and another 5000 have exhausted their benefits.

A LARGE proportion of those still "working" are actually employed a maximum of three days a week.

The objective of the Lawrence workers who came to Washington was to get the Dept. of Defense to expedite government contracts promised them in August. Authorities at that time agreed to instruct the various service branches to place orders for woolen and worsted cloth quickly, so as to take advantage of new lower prices and to cut down on unemployment.

But the business of getting the orders to the mills has taken longer than anticipated. The employment situation has grown worse, rather than better.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, in Washington as a member of the Wage Stabilization Board, made several appointments for the committee and accompained it on a number of them. Research Director Sol Barkin of TWUA went along to explain the over-all picture in the industry.

At the Quartermaster Corps, top officials agreed the paper work could be speeded up. But, they said, there is a question as to whether the government can place orders to relieve unemployment, or whether it must give contracts to the lowest bidder.

O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers, in his capacity as assistant director of the National Production Authority, and Ted Silvey, CIO staff member who is aiding him, undertook to make every effort to have defense contracts channeled into distressed areas.

ALMOST the entire Massachusetts congressional delegation accepted an invitation from Rep. Lane (D.), whose district includes Lawrence, to meet with the delegation. Two of the most important men in the House were present—Majority Leader McCormack (D.) and Minority Leader Martin (R.).

So were Sens. Lodge and Saltonstall, both Republicans. All of them promised to get behind the Lawrence people and push for contracts for that distressed area.

The people back home, the delegation told the Congressmen and Senators, were becoming bitter and despondent. They can't understand, they said, how so many people can be out of work with all the newspapers crying so loudly about a manpower shortage.

Soviet Satellite Workers Restive Under Speedup

WANT TO take a trip through the Iron Curtain and see how the workers are getting along in the Soviet satellite countries?

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions does it regularly—by proxy. It prints what it turns up in its publication, Spotlight, a compilation of uncensored news from the dictatorship nations.

Here are some highlights, from the latest issue, on what the workers and their phony unions are doing under the so-called "people's" rule.

Chechoslovakia: Gen. Secy. Kohout of the Czech Miners Union in a speech at Banska Stavnica on Miners' Day complained that wages are "rising more rapidly than productivity" of the miners. What he means is that the miners resist the speedup.

The labor shortage is so serious that 77,500 clerical workers are being transferred to factories and mines, and a camp has been prepared in Tessin to house 4000 Chinese due to arrive soon to work in the mines.

Hungary: The executive committee of the Railwaymen's Union adopted a grovelling resolution admitting the "truth" of charges that members are resisting "labor competition." That is another name for the speedup which not only leads to greater exploitation of the workers but to an increase in accidents.

"Old-fashioned thinking," the resolution said, "and the old professionals, many of whom are our enemies, have done everything to prevent the introduction of the excellent methods proved in practice in the Soviet Union."

Poland: Only 50.6% of the workers belong to the United Polish Workers Party, the name the Communists use, compared to a high of 62.2% in 1945.

Most of the skilled workers, confident in their ability as workers, have successfully resisted tremendous pressure to join the party.

East Germany: Horst Schafer, a young shoemaker at Rosslau, took the Communists at their word when they held a "free discussion meeting" under the auspices of the so-called National Front. He couldn't understand, he said, why in the East Zone one of the four occupying powers was always being praised and the other three were always being damned.

The audience kept the police at bay. The next day Schafer got sort of a safe-conduct from a high police official after unsuccessfully trying to see Pres. Wilhelm Pieck. A few days later he was ordered to report to the labor exchange at Rosslau. He went, and hasn't been seen since.

W. Virginia CIO Slaps Reds, McCarthy, Taft

COMMUNISM, McCarthyism and Taftism were scored in turn before more than 200 delegates to the West Virginia Industrial Union Council convention in Martinsburg on Sept. 27-29.

John B. Easton, president of the council since its inception in 1937, said he was proud that the people of his state resent both communism and McCarthyism.

"As for communism," he added, "it is a lost cause in West Virginia."

Sen. Kilgore (D., W. Va.) told the delegates that the Taft-Hartley Act "is aimed at destroying all of the hard-won rights of organized labor" and urged its outright repeal. The convention unanimously adopted resolutions opposing Sen. Taft (R., O.) for President and calling for T-H repeal.

A resolution making it mandatory for all CIO locals in the state to affiliate with city and county councils in order to strengthen membership and carry out the CIO program was also adopted.

Other resolutions adopted included approval of a new method of fixing CIO jurisdiction, legislation for protecting natural resources and wildlife, and legislation to safeguard natural water supplies from greedy use by private interests.

THE CIO national leadership was praised as were both U. S. senators and all six congressmen from West Virginia. The convention also called for increased financial assistance for the State's needy and expressed opposition to any legislation limiting income tax to 25%.

Speakers besides Easton and Kilgore were Rep. Staggers (D. W.Va.) Assistant Secy. of Labor Robert Creasey, Charles Sattler, State Commissioner of Labor, Sol Stettin of the CIO Textile Workers, CIO Rep. Fred Pieper and Phillip Weightman of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Easton and Secy.-Treas. Albert D. Viller were reelected by acclamation. On the last day delegates adopted a constitutional amendment making the sessions biennial rather than annual.

Woods Rolls Back Rent In Four Areas

FOUR more "critical" defense areas have been placed under federal rent control, with rollbacks, by Rent Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods.

Eight other such areas were recontrolled previously in a move Woods described as "primarily anti-inflationary, designed to protect not only the tenants, including servicemen and their families, but the great mass of decent, square-shooting landlords against the activities of rent gougers."

The new areas are Huntsville, Ala., where rents were rolled back to the Jan. 1 level; Tooele, Utah, and Anchorage and Fairbanks, Alaska, were July 1 rent levels will prevail.

Six military installations are in these areas: Redstone Army Ordnance arsenal at Huntsville; Tooele Ordnance Depot and Deseret Chemical Depot in Utah; Eielson and Ladd Air Force Bases, near Fairbanks, and Elmendorf Air Force Base and Fort Richardson, near Anchorage.

Mayor Aids Lobby In Ending Rent Controls

THE WELL - HEELED real estate lobby closed the month of September with its fourth triumph in the Bay Area in California when Oakland city council voted to end rent controls by unanimous vote.

Aiding in the defeat of labor and the public was Mayor Clifford E. Rishell, who prevented a representative of the large Naval Center from testifying.

"The hearing is somthing the Navy would not want to be mixed up with," Rishell said in advising the Navy not to attend. He said there would be "Communists, unionists and Socialist speaking against decontrol."

So these facts were not brought out: The Naval Supply Center employs 3000 civilians who rent off-base housing units; the Naval Air Station employs 9000 who must rent in Oakland. The Parks Air Force Base has hired 33,000 and 2000 airmen require housing with rents of $30 to $50, and 1000 more at $50 to $75.

Nor were these findings of a survey presented: No vacancies exist among the 3536 public housing units and there's a waiting list of 1000 families; 27 real estate agents reported inquiries for 460 units a week; 12 others have 925 on their waiting lists.

Seeking to keep the public hearing arguments confined to four selected speakers, Rishell explained:

"I'm only trying to eliminate the 2 A.M. bedlam of the Berkely hearing." He referred to the spirited session there at which unionists, veterans and college students clamored for rent controls and lost to the Apartment Owners Association. Following Berkeley in the decontrol parade came Albany and Emeryville.

Speakers in favor of retaining controls included Sam Pratt, James McKenny, J. Doherty and Robert Ash, of the Oakland CIO Council.

Pointing out that the Bay Area is one of the biggest military centers in the country, McKenny said budget requests indicate it will get even larger and there will be an increasing need for low-cost housing. (LPA)

Rent Control Big S. F. Issue

MAINTENANCE of Federal rent controls has been made a No. 1 issue in San Francisco's city election—by the organized landlords themselves.

Not waiting for the Nov. 6 ballot results for Mayor and supervisors, the Bay City's apartment house industry last week openly announced a decontrol drive which will bring before the supervisors soon after the election, a petition to wipe out rent ceilings.

The landlords opened their drive with a dinner at the Palace Hotel featuring Rep. Carlton Moore of the Texas Legislature as "the man who masterminded most of the nation's decontrol campaigns."

Even before the landlords announced their drive, the San Francisco CIO Industrial Union Council, in interviewing municipal candidates for possible endorsements, closely questioned them on safeguarding rent ceilings. The city-wide Tenants Council, headed by M. C. Hermann, veterans' leader, was organizing to fight the decontrol action.

German Federation Warns Of Company Union Revival

COMPANY unionism is being revived in Germany, the executive board of the German Federation of Labor (DGB), warned in a statement issued at a recent meeting.

The movement is called the "Freie Demokratische Partei" (FDP), according to the DGB statement. It is camouflaged as a national - Christian movement and is receiving financial backing from some employers.

Leaders and sympathetic employers include many persons who helped Hitler in his bid for power, the DGB said.

The German labor movement is unified, and unlike those in most other European countries, has no connection with either political or church groups. The Christian labor movement, a factor before Hitler destroyed the power of trade unions, does not exist.

Jacob Kaiser, formerly a Christian trade unionist and now a federal minister, rejected an FDP request to organize a "Christian trade union movement." Trade union unity must be safeguarded, he said, in the interest of a sound social policy and in order to insure proper balance within the German national economy.

FDR Labor Center Mortgage Burned

A slight fire has lighted the way toward new achievements by Michigan's CIO leaders and members. The blaze, nine miles north of Port Huron, Mich., was a ceremonial one—the burning of the mortgage on the FDR-CIO Labor Center.

Bought in 1946 for $142,500, more than $75,000 has been spent on improving the center's 52 buildings, which include an auditorium and dining room, recreation hall, store, office and administration facilities, five lodges and 32 cabins, used for leadership training institutes and conferences and as a children's camp. Hundreds of members have attended courses and 150 youngsters a week have been guests each summer.

Give A Buck To PAC

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE WRITER had the pleasure of addressing delegates at the convention of the Wisconsin State Industrial Union Council. This council was one of the first to remove and eliminate totalitarian control. The delegates received and heartily endorsed the CIO program. They intend to continue their cooperation and support of the national program. From Milwaukee, the writer proceeded on to Cleveland to attend and address the Utility Workers Union of America convention. This union is mighty close to me. I was chairman of the organizing committee from which grew the powerful Utility Workers of today. The delegates in attendance know the value of their union, they know that it has brought the entire membership important gains. The convention was a constructive one, and one that voiced its support of the CIO program. I enjoyed being with them, and talking with my old buddies, Joe Fisher, Bill Pachler, Patty McGrath and others.

Allan Haywood

While in Cleveland, I along with others visited and assembled on the "stone steps" built years ago by Mayor Tom Johnson for the expression of free speech without fear of arrest or interruption. The "stone steps" represent our American way of life.

The writer, along with Pres. Murray and other CIO vice presidents, attended a banquet in Detroit, given by the CIO Community Services Committee in honor of Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.), Sen. Murray has always fought to protect the rights of the American people, helping them achieve those things that make for human betterment. Long may he be with us.

I also visited the Auto Workers' new headquarters, Solidarity House, while in Detroit. This beautiful building points to the progress made by the Auto Workers from the early days when organizing among the workers first began.

Incidentally, for you rabid baseball fans: Did you know that the ushers handling the recent Giants-Dodgers games at the Polo Grounds and those handling the Yanks-Giants World Series are organized, and members of the CIO?

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the Steelworkers won representation elections at the Aircraft Paper Sheet Co., with one plant in Burbank, Calif., and two in Los Angeles, by a vote of USA 56, IAM 20, no union 26. Intl. Rep. Ken Stonehouse was in charge of the campaign. In another representation election at the Quality Foundry, Los Angeles, the workers voted 8 to 1 for the Steelworkers. About 100 workers are involved.

THE CIO Stone & Allied Products Workers' Union won a victory at Southern Cast Stone Co., Knoxville, Tenn., in a representation election involving 70 production and maintenance employees. The workers favored USAPWA by a vote of 54 to 9 against, despite a vicious anti-union campaign by the company.

CIO Rep. David Sternback reports that the CGT-CIO, Puerto Rico, won two representation elections: Puerto Rico Shoulder Strap Corp., eligible 29, 21 CGT-CIO, 1 challenged; and Merino Mosaic Factory, 21 eligible, 16 CGT-CIO, 5 against.

Reg. Dir. August Scholle reports that LIU 1064 won a representation election among the cafeteria employees of Ternstedt Instrument Co., Livonia, Mich., by a vote of 8 to 1 challenged.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a union shop election at the Ohio Malleable Iron Co., Columbus, Ohio, the workers favored the USA-CIO by a vote of 178 for, 16 against. Intl. Staff Rep. Sam Stokes handled the election.

Reuther, Carey Flay Filibuster Rule As Violation Of U. S. Constitution

IT IS A violation of the Constitution for the Senate to permit filibusters, two CIO spokesmen declared last week in testimony given before a Senate committee.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers both assailed the present rule which requires a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate to curb unlimited debate.

Testimony of the two CIO officials was presented before the Senate subcommittee considering two resolutions to permit shutting off Senate debate by a majority vote, one submitted by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.), and 10 other senators, the other by Sen. Morse (R. Ore.).

Reuther told the committee that the present rule governing cloture (closing debate) "reaches out to put its mark upon all the work of the Senate, of the Congress and the entire federal government."

"Majority rule was plainly intended by the men who wrote the Constitution," he maintained. Under it, he added, "a minority point of established governments throughout the world at that time, that government cannot be entrusted into the hands of common people," Carey said.

OPPOSES FILIBUSTER: Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers (left) tells the Senate Rules Committee that the present rule requiring the vote of at least 64 of the Senate's 96 members to stop filibusters is unconstitutional. Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), who presided at the Oct. 3 hearing, is at the right. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey also testified.

Tracing the history of the development of the democratic ideal, Carey asserted that "the CIO stands wholly committed to the philosophy that an imperative need in this country is continuing expansion and extension of the democratic process. The CIO does not except the Senate from the application of this philosophy."

Sen. Humphrey, who also argued for cloture by a majority vote, said that minorities can be wrong "more often and more easily" than majorities.

"THAT IS why," he said, "the rule of the majority was adopted and that is why we prefer democracy to any other alternative form of government."

Sen. Lehman said that "no amount of double talk can disguise the fact that Rule 22 was the ill-conceived offspring of a mesalliance between the opponents of civil rights legislation and those who wanted to pay passing lip-service to it.

"So civil rights legislation is very much a part of this picture," he said. "I will state frankly that should Rule 22 be amended along the lines of my proposal, my first motion would be to take up civil rights legislation."

within the U.S. Senate has the power to suspend, weaken or destroy our foreign policy.

"If, under Rule 22 (the present rule), 33 Senators stand fast or absent themselves, they can have their way; they have the power to forestall any vote forever. This is a rule by veto, the irresponsible veto of a minority.

"WE WOULD be the last to urge that debate should not be free and open. This is the most essential element in the democratic process. But when debate has ceased to provide information or to contribute to the reasoned decision founded on the facts, when debate has become the means of obstruction, we must have the power to end debate and to take action.

"As pointed out in our brief, this is what is meant by Sen. H. C. Lodge back in 1893."

Carey's statement, presented by his assistant, Harry Read, pointed out "that a continuation of the present rules of procedure in the Senate on limitation of debate constitutes a real and present danger to all our governmental operations.

"There is certainly no constitutional warrant, that I have been able to find, for limitless debate in the U.S. Senate, and the commitment into the hands of 34 men of power to arrest the enforcement of the Constitution itself," Carey declared.

He said that those who oppose permitting the will of the majority to determine an issue "reflect the fear of democracy that earmarked the political reasoning of the 18th century."

"They seem to share the view-

NLRB Grants Free Speech To Union, Too

THE National Labor Relations Board last week made an important decision covering the so-called free speech and captive audience sections of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In effect, it held that when an employer calls his employes to a meeting on his own premises and speaks against a union seeking recognition rights, he has to give the union the same chance, providing his workers cannot otherwise "reasonably" hear both sides.

The ruling was made in a case involving unfair labor practice charges brought by the AFL Retail Clerks against Bonwit Teller, Inc., swank New York women's specialty shop. The board also set aside the results of a representation election in which the union was defeated.

Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members John M. Houston, Abe Murdock and Paul L. Styles signed a majority opinion. Member James J. Reynolds, Jr., dissented in part.

Both Sides

"We believe," said the majority opinion, "that the right of employes, guaranteed by Sect. 7 of the act, freely to select or reject representation by a labor organization necessarily encompasses the right to hear both sides of the story under circumstances which reasonably approximate equality."

"Equality" of opportunity to be heard was lacking in the case. The company barred union membership solicitation on its premises, both during and outside of working hours, and did not even acknowledge the union's written request for a chance to present its story to the employes.

"This is not to say," the opinion continued, "that an employer is proscribed from addressing his employes and urging that they reject a union unless he invites a union representative to come into his plant and make an appeal for support of the union.

Not Iron-Clad Rule

"Nor does it mean that under any and all circumstances an employer is under an obligation to accede to a union's request that it be granted an opportunity to address the employes on the employer's premises.

"It is to say that an employer who chooses to use his premises to assemble his employes and speak against a union may not deny that union's reasonable request for the same opportunity to present its case, where the circumstances are such that only by granting such a request will the employes have a reasonable opportunity to hear both sides."

Raises Promised

Six days before the NLRB election, the company closed its New York store early and called its employes to a meeting at which the company president urged them to vote against the union.

He also told them wage increases were pending, a statement the board said was a "promise of benefit" for voting against the union and hence a violation of the law. The same technique and same speech were used next day at the White Plains, N. Y., store.

Happy About New Homes

The apartments range in size from 4½ to 6½ rooms, the largest containing four bedrooms. Rents are from $10 to $50 a month depending on the tenant's income. Only low-income families who have been living in slums like these Paterson "dwellings" shown in the photo at the left are eligible.

How Rent Recontrol Law Works

AN OPEN hearing held recently before members of the Arlington County, Va., Board to determine whether or not residents want rents in that area to be recontrolled focused attention on the steps required to recontrol rents under a new law.

The law, passed only two months ago as an amendment to the 1947 Rent Act, makes it possible for any interested group to request rent recontrol when a housing shortage develops.

It also provides methods by which a local governing body may place such a request before Rent Stabilizer Tighe Woods.

Steps necessary to recontrol rents are:

1. A public hearing must be advertised and held by the proper local governing body.

2. If a substantial number of residents appear to favor recontrol the local governing body may pass a resolution asking for recontrol.

3. A copy of such a resolution is then sent to the Office of Rent Stabilization. After ascertaining the action, Director Woods can then set maximum rents—based on a period before the date at which rents went soaring.

Following recontrol, it was added, a Rent Advisory Board for the area concerned is appointed by the governor of the state, subject to Woods' approval, to make rent adjustments on an individual basis. The Arlington County Board has not announced its decision.

House Group Again Ducks Seaway Vote

THE HOUSE Public Works Committee, considering new emergency legislation in a race to authorize the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project as a joint international undertaking before the Canadian government decides to go ahead alone, stalled for more time last week.

Although it was scheduled to vote on the measure last Friday, the committee postponed final action until January.

With the 27-member committee almost evenly split on the measure, "horse-trading" and "jockeying for support" are now going on in earnest.

On the last of several committee votes on the seaway this year, the project was defeated 15 to 12. Meanwhile, Rep. Secrest (D. O.), a longtime opponent of the measure, has indicated that he might shift his vote because of Canada's determination to build the project alone, and a new member, Rep. Steed (D. Okla.), has been appointed to fill a vacancy on the committee formerly filled by an opponent.

Secrest's shift has left the old committee divided 13 to 13 on the basis of previous votes, and Steed can tip the balance either way.

UAW In Drive To Raise Aircraft Wage Rates

THE CIO Auto Workers have launched a national drive to win higher wages for aircraft workers.

Delegates to the second of two national aircraft conferences, held in Washington last week, voted unanimously to give all-out effort to bring aviation pay scales up to those prevailing in the automotive industry.

The first conference was held at Long Beach, Calif., two weeks ago.

Cost of living pay adjustments, annual wage boosts based on increased productivity, employer-financed welfare benefits and other concessions will also be sought for the 100,000 UAW aircraft members.

Vice Pres. John W. Livingston, who is also director of the union's aircraft department, told the delegates that with aircraft employment rising under the impact of the national defense program, a determined organizing campaign will be carried out in new plane plants throughout the country.

As part of the higher pay drive, Livingston called on U. S. Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin to raise the minimum wage of aircraft workers employed by companies with government contracts from the present level of $1.05 an hour to $1.35.

The Wage Stabilization Board, of which Livingston is a labor member, was asked to set up a special national panel to deal with aviation wage problems. The panel would consider aircraft wages from a national point of view and thus could permit standardization of pay rates within the industry.

LIVINGSTON said the UAW also seeks to have adopted throughout the aircraft industry adjustments similar to those now considered standard in the auto field.

This would call for raising wages when prices go up and for giving workers a fixed increase in hourly pay each year as a general improvement factor.

The delegates pledged full support to the 20,000 UAW members on strike at plants of the Wright Aeronautical Corp. in Wood Ridge, N. J., and the Douglas Aircraft Co., Long Beach, Calif.

Bill Collector May Come But Not As Benefactor

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

THE Federal Trade Commission has been quietly cracking down on certain unethical practices of various mail collection agencies during the past year.

The government agency has no objection to these agents attempting to collect money owed their clients by delinquent debtors but it has drawn the line when they employ deception and deceit to secure the information.

A series of trial examiners' initial decisions, complaints, and orders have been handed down by the FTC, outlawing the use of such names as "Manpower Classification Bureau," American Deposit System," "National Service Bureau" and "Dispatch Forwarding System," to conceal the true identity of collection agencies.

One ingenious company, operating in Chicago under the name of "Gen-O-Pack Co.," has been sending form letters to debtors informing them that a "substantial sum of money" was being held for them which would be delivered upon receipt of a filled-in form letter listing place of employment, present address and other information.

Recipients who sent in the information requested received the sum of money but it turned out to be 3c, according to the FTC. Shortly thereafter they would be contacted by an agent of the creditor demanding payment of the overdue account.

Another practice challenged by FTC as deceptive is the use of a letter and post card promising free gifts and representing that the debtor had been awarded a prize by the sponsor of a radio show.

OTHER concerns such as the "Employer's Clearing House" of Detroit implied, the FTC said, they they were engaged in conducting an employment agency and that the information requested was for the purpose of securing a job for the recipient.

FTC has ordered the Gen-O-Pack Co. to cease and desist from:

1. Using any stationery in connection with the location of dedelinquent debtors unless the words "collection service" appear prominently.

2. Inferring that any money or other property is being held for persons of whom information is sought unless the money or property is accurately described as to value.

3. Using of the name "Manpower Classification Bureau" or otherwise alleging that it is in any other business than that of obtaining information concerning alleged debtors.

4. Using the name "American Deposit System" to imply it is engaged in the business of receiving and holding money for persons about whom information is sought.

Pay To Continue At Funerals

CIO Chemical Workers will be paid up to three days while attending funerals for members of their immediate families, under a new contract with Jamieson Pharmacal Co., Detroit.

Chemical Workers headquarters said that the new provision covers rites for members' in-laws.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN signs the foreign aid bill and hails it as part of the effort of the free world "to unleash the constructive forces of human freedom." Congressional leader and government officials are smiling their approval of his action.

CIO Asks Every $ For Europe

THE CIO last week called upon the House Appropriations Committee to vote "every single dollar" authorized in the new foreign aid legislation.

This is especially necessary, it said, in connection with that portion marked for economic aid.

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers made the appeal as chairman of the CIO International Committee.

In a letter to Rep. Cannon, (D. Mo.), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, Potofsky said that the CIO is "gravely concerned over the short-sightedness of those members of Congress who are embracing a policy of unlimited funds for rearmament, but little or nothing for economic aid to support the armaments program."

Potofsky pointed out that a vast rearmament program superimposed on the already strained economies of Western Europe, without adequate provision for civilian requirements, could easily spell disaster.

"The responsibility for action to prevent disaster rests squarely upon the United States," he added.

"Foreign assistance restricted solely to armaments would be a particularly cruel way of telling the countries of Western Europe and free men everywhere that we are interested in their welfare only to the extent of the number of soldiers they can supply from among their sons, the number of battlefields they can provide in their countries."

SHORTLY AFTER receipt of Potofsky's letter the committee approved a $7,482,527,790 appropriations measure.

A cut of $45 million was made in the economic aid authorized for Asia and the Pacific, but the committee approved all other items, including more than $1 billion in economic aid for Europe, exactly as authorized by the new foreign aid law.

In addition, it included an extra $44,476,271 which President Truman had requested to liquidate outstanding authorizations under last year's program.

Congress OKs, Truman Signs Weakened Foreign Aid Bill

AFTER beating down a last-minute move by GOP isolationists which would have sent the measure back to conference, Congress last week finally passed legislation authorizing the expenditure of $7,483,400,000 to carry out the administration's program of military and economic aid to friendly foreign nations.

President Truman signed the bill into law on Oct. 10.

The amount authorized was more than $1 billion under that requested by the President, and $489 million less than the amount provided last year. Moreover, since the bill merely authorizes the program and money must still be voted to implement it, there is a strong possibility that further cuts will be made when Congress votes on the separate appropriations measure.

The appropriation recommended last week in the bill reported out by the House Appropriations Committee cuts $45 million from the economic aid sections.

DESPITE warnings by top military leaders from Gen. Dwight Eisenhower down that the non-military aid provisions of the bill were as essential as the purely military sections, Congress made most of its heavy cuts in the economic sections of the authorizing bill.

A last-minute plea from Eisenhower did, however, result in adoption of a provision permitting the transfer of 10% of the funds between the military and economic aid items. It was this action which Senate Republican isolationists tried to seize upon as an excuse for shelving the bill.

In asking for the additional "flexibility," Eisenhower cabled his "depressing fear" that the original cuts made by the Senate and the House would seriously unbalance the European build-up up program. He again said that the military-economic relationship was "so clear that, at the very least, a considerable degree of flexibility should be permitted in the administration of the funds provided."

The House approved the 10% transfer provision which the conferees wrote into the measure without serious opposition. In the Senate, however, Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) and Sen. Dworshak (R. Ida.), opposed it on the grounds that the conferees had exceeded their authority. They were overruled by Vice Pres. Barkley.

Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) then moved to recommit the measure. He was supported by Sen. Taft (R. Ohio), who argued that since the conference committee provision would allow the use of an additional $250 million for economic aid beyond that approved by the Senate, the conferees had, "in effect, violated the wishes of the Senate."

Foreign Aid Act Hits At Cartels

Although its false "economies" have seriously hurt the foreign aid program, Congress, over the opposition of Sen. Taft (R. O.), took one important step to strengthen it.

It wrote into the new law a provision sponsored by Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) that hereafter foreign military and economic aid dollars must be used in such a way that they will:

1. Discourage cartel and monopolistic practices in countries receiving American help and encourage competition and productivity.

2. Encourage the development and strengthening of free labor union movements as the collective bargaining agencies of labor within such countries.

This move to recommit was branded just "plain god damn demagoguery" by Sen. Connally (D. Tex.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. His comment, intended as a whispered aside directed across the aisle toward the GOP seats, was heard clearly in the galleries. Connally said that the GOP opponents were quibbling over "just a trifle."

Dirksen's recommital motion was defeated 48 to 30. On the final Senate roll call, 19 Republicans joined 37 Democrats in support of the bill, while 18 Republicans and three Democrats voted to opposed it.

Taft and several other Republicans, after supporting the move to further weaken the measure, shifted their votes to go on record at the end as supporting it.

THE TOTAL amount authorized was $197 million more than approved by the Senate and $15 million less than originally voted by the House. One reason why the House favored the higher authorization may be found in the nature of the hearings conducted by its Foreign Affairs Committee.

Such men as Paul Hoffman, former head of the Economic Cooperation Administration and Nelson Rockefeller, chairman of the Intl. Development Advisory Board, highlighted the extensive public hearings before the House group, which also heard testimony from many organizations and qualified individuals.

In the Senate, however, closed hearings were held before a joint session of the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees. No public witnesses were heard.

The presence of the Armed Services Committee and the failure to listen to public witnesses probably is the chief reason why the Senate cut military aid by only 5% while slicing economic aid nearly in half.

98% Of 12,000 In Local Buy Bonds

Steelworkers Local 1104, Lorain, O., has chalked up an outstanding record in the sale of U. S. Defense Bonds.

Following a week-long campaign, sparkplugged by the local's officers, reports showed that 98.5% of the employes had signed up to purchase bonds under the payroll deduction method.

With 12,000 employes on the payroll of the National Tube Co. plant, this meant that 11,200 union members were purchasing bonds. Only 180 had failed to sign up.

Congress Eliminates T-H Union Shop Vote Requirement

A CONFUSION-RIDDEN decision of the U. S. Supreme Court involving some 4,700 union shop contracts was overturned last week by a heavy vote in the House of Representatives.

The House vote—by a 307-18 margin—sent to the President for signature a measure that would:

1. Fully legalize about 4600 union shop contracts signed by CIO unions during the period between passage of the Taft-Hartley Act in mid-1947 and the end of 1949, when national CIO officers signed Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits.

2. Abolish the special union shop National Labor Relations Board election heretofore necessary before a union can legally even ask an employer for any form of union security protection.

The bill, which was strongly endorsed by the CIO, had as sponsors a strange pair of political bedfellows: liberal Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.) and ultra-conservative Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.). It had been passed unanimously in the Senate, by voice vote, before going to the House.

The 18 votes in opposition also came from a strange mixture of political opposites. Among them were die-hard conservatives like Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.), who almost automatically opposes any bill to help unions, and a group of liberal, pro-labor Congressmen mostly from coal mining districts.

The United Mine Workers had opposed the bill, perhaps because strengthened union security for many CIO unions might stand in the way of raiding efforts by District 50 of that organization.

The bill, after being lodged for several weeks in the House Labor Committee, finally moved out of that group with a heavy vote. The Rules Committee reported it to the floor under a rule barring amendments and limiting debate to one hour.

Behind the bill lay a record of confusion in industrial relations growing out of a Supreme Court decision last spring, and two subsequent NLRB orders.

THE HIGH COURT in its decision had over-ruled a Labor Board decision that national organizations like the CIO and AFL are not "national or international" labor organizations in the strict sense of the Taft-Hartley law's language.

So, the NLRB had said, in a number of decisions, the fact that CIO national officers had not signed the non-Communist affidavits did not prevent affiliated unions from going on to Labor Board election ballotings.

Some of these decisions were appealed by employers through the courts, however. The Supreme Court finally ruled that no union was fully in compliance with the Taft-Hartley affidavit provision unless the national federation to which it was affiliated was also in compliance.

The Labor Board, acting on that Supreme Court decision, reversed its position. In a case involving the CIO Auto Workers at the Ford plant at Canton, Ohio, the NLRB held that the UAW's union security contract provision was no good, and it ordered an election sought by an AFL craft union.

A few days later, after vigorous protests from CIO sources, the Labor Board finally ordered hearings on its decision, and then partially reversed its earlier ruling. But CIO lawyers feared that the reversal did not fully protect the union shop provisions or other aspects of CIO contracts signed in the 1947-49 period.

In knocking out the necessity for future union security elections, the law knocks out a ridiculous brain-child of the anti-labor bloc.

Theory behind the union shop election was that workers were being forced against their will into labor unions by "czars."

But statistics showed overwhelming majorities—often ranging close to 100%—in the secret ballot voting for a union's right to seek security clauses in its contracts.

AS A RESULT, the elections were doing little except to cost the taxpayers a needless expenditure to prove the obvious.

Pearl White For President

In what are sometimes called the good old days, there used to be a movie actress named Pearl White who appeared in a serial entitled The Perils of Pauline. The remarkable thing about the serial, apart from the terrible things which happened to our heroine, was the manner in which each week's installment ended.

There she was bound to the railroad tracks as the train rushed on and, just as the wheels were upon her, the installment ended and the breathless customers were told to come back next week.

Most of them did only to find that our heroine was rescued from the railroad tracks but, through some mischance, had gotten locked in a cage with a man-destroying gorilla.

Pearl White and Pauline haven't been around for some years now and so the commencement of a serial entitled The Perils of Alphonso comes as a nostalgic reminder of those good old days.

It started a week or so ago in most of the nation's newspapers. Sen. Robert A. Taft, who since 1944 has been running as hard as he can for the presidency of the United States, was discovered by the newspapers—they're awfully clever at finding out things like this—to be "considering" the idea of trying to get the Republican presidential nomination.

When he was asked about it, Senator Taft, with the modesty becoming a movie heroine—at least a movie heroine of those good old days—said he really didn't know, he didn't want to intrude, but if people really, honestly and truly wanted him to, why then . . . .

He let it be known he was having a survey made by his loyal henchmen, Ben Tate and David Ingalls. They were sounding out the sentiment and, on the basis of their survey, he would make up his mind.

This week the survey was made public. Are you surprised that it "revealed" an overwhelming public demand for Robert A. Taft as the Republican nominee for President?

But still our hero falters. Come back next week.

The Senator wants to survey the survey. He wants to read his own mail. He wants to talk to other people. The great announcement, the gracious acknowledgment of the public clamor, will positively come next week—he says.

Violating the ethics of mystery-movie reviewers, we'll tell you how it's going to come out. The hero will be rescued from the cliff of indecision by an enthralled public and, manfully shouldering his unwanted burden, with a brave smile on his lips, will march bravely forth—as a real-life candidate—to meet the dragon.

They did it better in the old silent movies.

One Less Idiocy

Congress, by a thumping majority, has restored the validity of thousands of CIO union shop contracts which had been made invalid by a senseless decision of the U. S. Supreme Court. It has also eliminated the need for special NLRB elections before a union can ask for any kind of union security.

The new law un-does the damage caused by stupid legislation and unrealistic jurisprudence.

The 82nd Congress being what it is, we can be thankful for even these small favors.

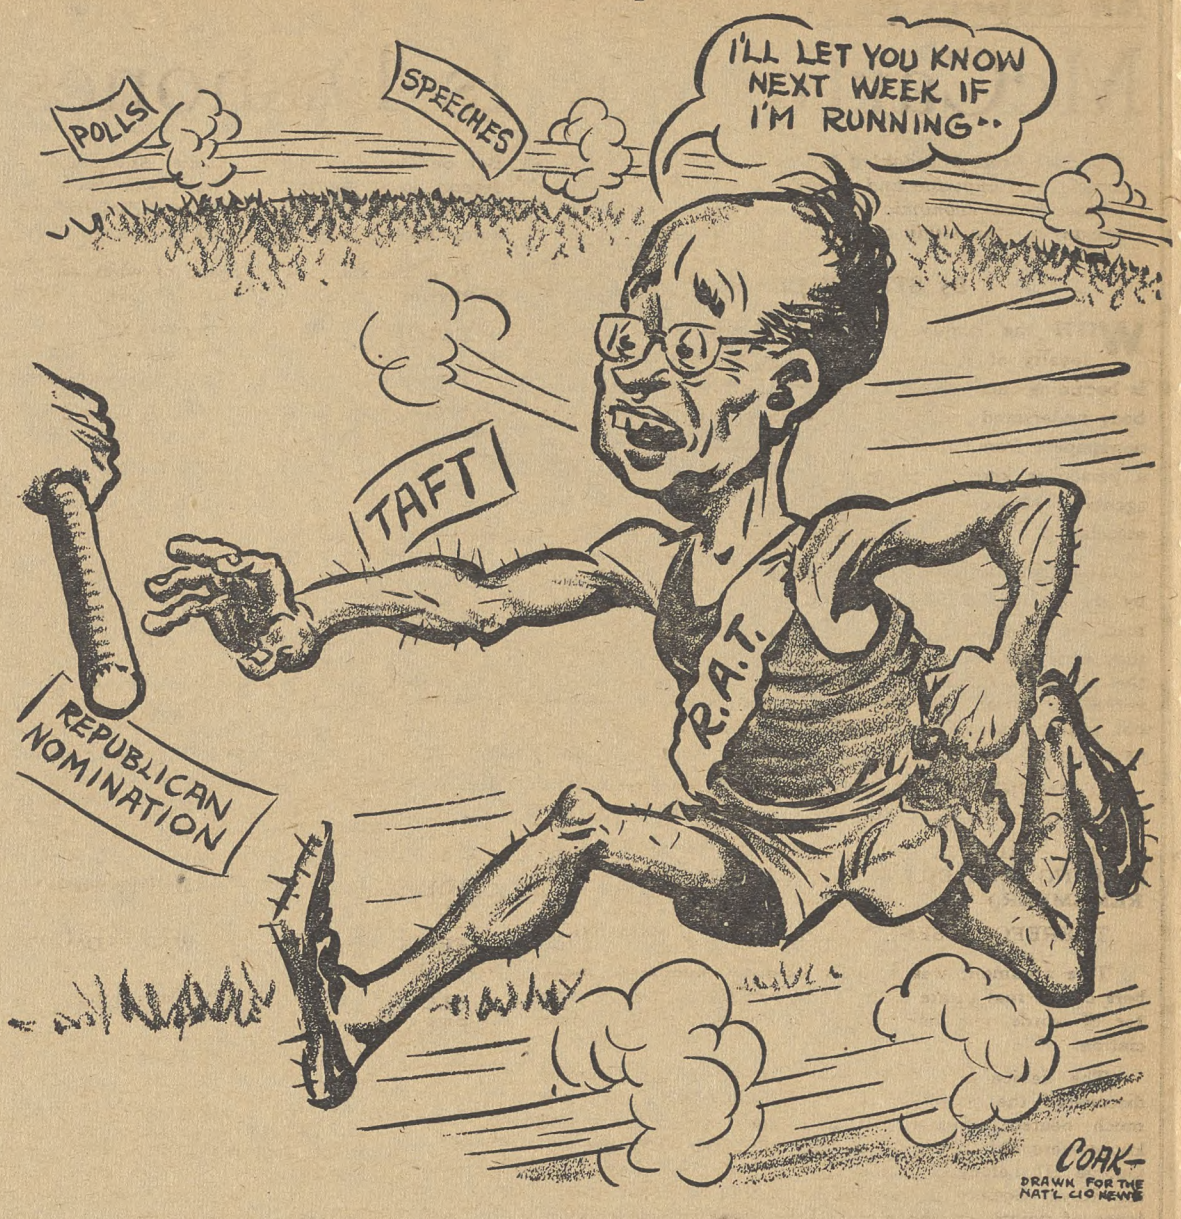
Is This Suspense?



Aftermath of a Riot:

'The Audience Was Very Quiet . . .'

Two months ago, the author of this article was the center of an evil race riot in Cicero, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago. Here—in a story reprinted from "Work," the organ of the Chicago Catholic Labor Alliance—he tells of people's reactions to the crisis through which he lived.

By HARVEY CLARK, JR.

IT WAS A fashionable supper club. A radio program was being broadcast from there, and we—my wife and I—were the "guest attractions."

When the radio announcer asked me for details about the Cicero riot, I tried to make my story as "nice" as possible. I just told them the straight facts, without emotion. I even tried to add a touch of humor. After all, I couldn't expect a group of strangers to be greatly interested in our hard-luck experience.

I told them how happy we were when somebody found us a place in Cicero, after we'd been looking for an apartment for months. I told them how the Cicero police threatened us. How the mob destroyed all our possessions, except for the clothes that we wore. How our little daughter, Michele, 8, had asked, "Daddy, why don't they like us?"

As I continued answering questions, I suddenly realized that the audience was very quiet. They seemed to be listening to every word I said. I knew that here was a group of people who were really concerned about our misfortune. I saw a man at a nearby table wipe tears from his eyes. And when I was through, they stood up and applauded.

WHEREVER I'VE gone in the past few weeks, I've found people who were shocked by the violent unbrotherliness which we had faced. They wrote us letters; they wrote letters to newspapers, magazines and radio stations.

The discrimination which Negroes face is usually a quiet thing: for example, the "sorry" of an employer who refuses to hire Negroes, or the implied "whites only" in most real estate ads.

The Cicero outbreak jolted many men of good will who before had never known or never cared. In this sense, some good did come out of the riot.

A man in Georgia wrote us that he'd always been taught to look down on Negroes, but a Time magazine story on the Cicero riot had shaken him deeply. A bride sent us a set of dishes she'd gotten as a wedding present.

One precious item that the mob destroyed was an $800 spinet piano. That really hurt me. I remembered all the overtime I'd worked as a bus driver so that my daughter would have a good piano on which to develop her musical talents. A radio program in New York came to the rescue and raised more than enough cash to replace the piano.

A Franciscan priest, Father Leon Sullivan, passing through Chicago, visited us and gave us a beautiful Japanese painting on silk. Father Sullivan had an experience in common with us. He too had been expelled as an "undesirable person." After a "public trial," Chinese Communists condemned him as an "enemy of the people" and ordered him out of China.

IN A NOTE to us, Father Sullivan wrote: "I was sickened at the thought of the awful inhumanity Americans could show to a fellow American in a land of love (despite all its injustice). Let's work together to remove some of that injustice."

Of the 2000 letters we received, only about 20 were hostile. All the hostile letters were unsigned; only a few of the friendly letters bore no signature.

What impressed me most of all was the great number of people who weren't afraid to stand up and be counted. I knew how some of my white friends felt toward us.

I knew how a former employer of mine in Nashville felt. The other day while in Chicago, he phoned me to express his sorrow. An Italian himself, and thinking that Cicero was predominantly Italian, he was especially apologetic because he feared I might suddenly become anti-Italian.

The Cicero riot showed the hate that remains in the world. But what followed it showed us that there also is love. Because of this, there is hope for me and my wife and my two children—and for all the colored members of the human family.

An Expert Says

McCarthyism Is Dishonest Play On Words

The CIO News is indebted to The Progressive for this article on Language and Loyalty. The author, Stuart Chase, is an economic analyst and an authority on semantics—the study of words.

By STUART CHASE

WITH the highly publicized investigations into the loyalty of Americans, the term "guilt-by-association" is becoming increasingly familiar. Unfortunately, not everybody understands what it means. I have seen letters in the newspapers from angry gentlemen declaring that of course a person is known by the company he keeps, and only agents of Moscow would question the validity of guilt-by-association.

The angry letter-writers have a point. A man is known by the groups he frequents, and if they are second-story men, we are quite justified in locking the windows. But they miss the real point. I therefore propose a change in the phrasing. A more accurate term would be "guilt-by-verbal-association," for the trouble is primarily word trouble, not physical association. Here is a specific and notorious example, put in the form of a syllogism to sharpen the logic:

COMMUNISTS ARE IN FAVOR OF GOVERNMENT HOUSING.

SEN. TAFT IS IN FAVOR OF GOVERNMENT HOUSING. (HIS BILL WAS FINALLY PASSED, YOU REMEMBER.)

THEREFORE, SENATOR TAFT IS A COMMUNIST.

This argument was actually used by embittered members of the real estate lobby. It is, you see, entirely a matter of words, and has nothing to do with physical association.

The device is an old one. After Benjamin Franklin discovered the principle of the lightning rod, there was much heated argument whether sharp points or round knobs were better conductors. Franklin favored points, but George III belonged to the knob school. The King urged the Royal Society in London to rescind its resolution in favor of points, on the ground that Franklin was a leader of the insurgent American colonists and so a traitor!

FRANKLIN FAVORS POINTED LIGHTNING RODS.

FRANKLIN IS A REBEL AND A TRAITOR.

THEREFORE, IT IS TREASONABLE TO ARGUE FOR POINTED LIGHTNING RODS.

Thus stated, we smile at guilt-by-verbal association. But Senator Taft did not smile. And all the hundreds of decent, loyal American citizens who have been branded traitors and Communists by this verbal trick, do not smile. Some, indeed, have committed suicide.

It is the standard bludgeon of what we now call "McCarthyism."

COMMUNISTS OPPOSE CHIANG.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT OPPOSES CHIANG.

THEREFORE, THE STATE DEPARTMENT IS RUN BY COMMUNISTS.

Uncounted citizens have fallen for the above syllogism. Here is one on a more personal level, but equally vicious:

MY GROCER HAS CHEATED ME.

MY GROCER IS A YANKEE.

THEREFORE, ALL YANKEES ARE CHEATS.

Westbrook Pegler, in one of his columns in 1949, furnished us with a genuine museum piece. He said: "Although of course there is no charge of perjury against Mrs. Roosevelt in the Hiss case, she is co-defendant in a figurative sense because Hiss is a protege of Felix Frankfurter who has been a power behind the throne ever since the New Deal began." Let us unwrap this masterpiece:

MRS. ROOSEVELT WAS MARRIED TO MR. ROOSEVELT.

MR. ROOSEVELT INAUGURATED THE NEW DEAL.

FELIX FRANKFURTER WAS PROMINENT IN THE NEW DEAL.

ALGER HISS WAS A PROTEGE OF FRANKFURTER.

HISS IS ON TRIAL FOR PERJURY.

THEREFORE, MRS. ROOSEVELT IS ON TRIAL FOR PERJURY—"IN A FIGURATIVE SENSE."

The editor of the New York Post punctured this one with a semantic needle a few days later. He cited the Pegler column and went on: "And Westbrook Pegler is a Communist because he played poker with Heywood Broun who was called a Communist by Martin Dies."

The theory behind guilt-by-verbal association is simple. Once grasped, no honest mind would ever again credit any "proof" based upon it. Every person has many characteristics. People are tall, short, medium, blond, brunette, male, female, radical, conservative, Catholic, Jew, American, Negro, white, Mexican, fat, lean, quick-tempered, literate, illiterate, and so on, indefinitely. Furthermore, no two human beings, even Siamese twins, have identical characteristics. B is never the exact counterpart of A.

The trick is to find a characteristic of A which is also a characteristic of B. As both A and B have literally tens of thousands of characteristics, a few are bound to be similar.

The next step is a towering logical leap: Because a single characteristic is possessed by each, therefore all characteristics are interchangeable. A and B are practically identical. Thus:

THE POPE ADVOCATES MINIMUM WAGES.

STALIN ADVOCATES MINIMUM WAGES.

THEREFORE, THE POPE IS A COMMUNIST, OR:

THEREFORE, STALIN IS A CATHOLIC.

It can work either way, but usually, as in Gresham's Law, the direction is degenerative.

A cousin of mine produced a typical case. She said that her maid was untrustworthy. She said further that her maid was a Negro. "You can't trust one of them, not one!"—and her mouth set in a straight line. Here is what happened in the regions above her mouth:

SALLY IS NOT DEPENDABLE AS A MAID.

SALLY HAS A BROWN SKIN.

THEREFORE, ALL PEOPLE WITH BROWN SKIN ARE UNDEPENDABLE.

With this logical blunderbuss, one can "prove" anybody to be anything. The normal processes of human communication, human knowledge, to say nothing of human decency and consideration, cease to function. Presently, if accusations of this kind spread widely enough, democratic society would become unworkable.

COMMUNISTS STUDY RUSSIAN.

McCARTHY STUDIED RUSSIAN (ACCORDING TO MARQUIS CHILDS).

THEREFORE, McCARTHY IS A COMMUNIST.

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Better yet, would be to recognize and renounce a logic which no self-respecting barnyard fowl would have any part of.

Only humans have developed language, and only humans can befuddle and hurt themselves with its abuse.

McCarthy & Company's Effort To 'Get' Jessup Boomerangs

THERE were a lot of mixed metaphors (as well as expressions of disgust) resulting from last week's developments concerning Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and his latest smear campaign against Ambassador-at-Large Philip C. Jessup.

But, once again, the rambunctious junior Senator from Wisconsin and his equally rambunctious supporters got hit with their own muddy boomerang.

Three metaphors of McCarthyism will be reported here. They are:

1. McCarthy himself dancing a dans macabre like Salome and demanding the head of John-the-Baptist Jessup.
2. Former Minnesota Gov. Harold E. Stassen (R.) in the role of a McCarthy—and out-McCarthying McCarthy himself in sticking by and enlarging a completely discredited lie he had told about Jessup.
3. Franco-loving and McCarthy-loved Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) playing an obedient Charlie McCarthy to Joe McCarthy's Edgar Bergen.

In the first instance, the chances now seem slimmer than ever that McCarthy will ever get Jessup's head. As the McCarthy clique's gyrations tangled them in their own web of misrepresentations, the whole maneuver was seen to be clearly tagged with the label of "dirty politics."

The public's reaction was instantaneous. Several hundred newspapers printed the comment of one anti-McCarthy columnist that, "For the first time, Senate spectators who once cheered McCarthy have begun to titter."

And then, as the Senate Rules Subcommittee voted unanimously to make a full investigation of the charges against McCarthy by Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), the head on the platter began to look more like McCarthy's own.

Saddest spectacle of all was the adoption of McCarthyism by Stassen. In supporting McCarthy's attack on Jessup, Stassen had told the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee that the late Sen. Vandenberg (R. Mich.) had told him that Jessup had proposed an end to U. S. aid to the Chinese nationalists at a White House meeting in 1949.

STASSEN claimed that diaries of Vandenberg and the late James V. Forrestal, Secretary of Defense at the time, would support his testimony. Immediately following his first testimony to this effect, several other Senators were reported to have said that they, too, could furnish additional proof that Vandenberg had opposed Jessup at the meeting.

Fifty-five Republican members of the House also jumped on the bandwagon and urged rejection of Jessup's confiirmation as U. S. delegate to the United Nations General Assembly.

The big mystery of the week was what had become of the "supporting evidence" for Stassen which several Senators had said they also had from Vandenberg when the charge was first made.

Meanwhile, Sen. McCarran, the man McCarthy has called the best kind of Democrat in the Senate, was trying vainly through hearings by his Judiciary Subcommittee to discredit the Institute of Pacific Relations and thus support McCarthy's attack upon Jessup for his association with this group.

In best McCarthy style, he answered charges of perjury levelled against his key witness, former communist Louis Budenz, by merely recalling him to the stand and allowing him to repeat his charges. Columnist Joseph Alsop, who had made the charge that Budenz "lied," was not even questioned by McCarran's committee.

BUDENZ'S charges were made and repeated at open sessions of the committee, but when former Vice Pres. Henry Wallace appeared to answer them, he was forced to testify behind closed doors. Wallace released his statement to the press although McCarran tried to prevent him from doing so, and the facts brought out completely refuted the Budenz testimony which the committee had done its utmost to publicize.

The State Dept. and Jessup branded the charge "absolutely false," but Stassen repeated it, and in the best McCarthy fashion enlarged it by charging that a plan is now being readied by the State Dept. to turn India over to the Communists in much the same way.

The record was then produced. It completely refuted Stassen's headline-getting statements. Vandenberg's diary, introduced in evidence, didn't even mention Jessup.

Peron Reported Losing Grip

Labor in Argentina has begun to turn away from Dictator Peron, Dr. Gainza Paz, former editor of the Buenos Aires newspaper La Prensa, told a CIO delegation at a meeting Oct. 9 in New York.

Gainza fled to this country after the Peron government forced his paper to close because of its opposition to his policies. He told the CIO group that Argentine unions are puppets of and controlled by their government, but that they are beginning to rebel against Peron because he has abandoned them to inflation after using them politically.

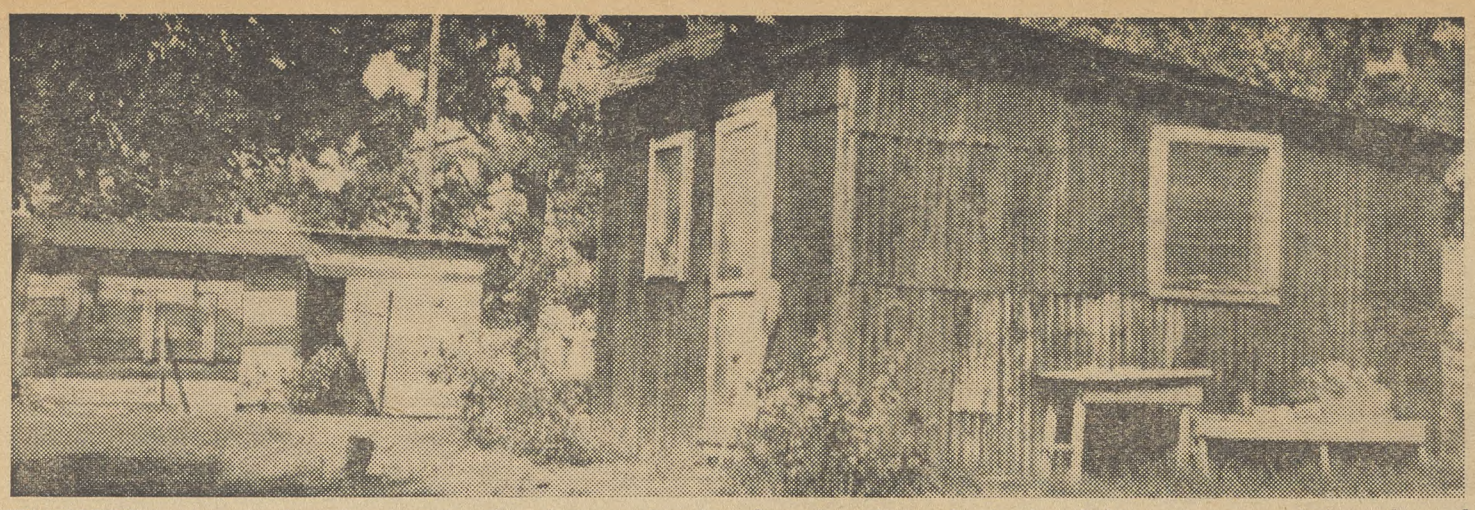
Meeting with Gainza were Executive Vice Pres. Martin Kyne of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union; Secy.-Treas. Ralph Novack of the Newspaper Guild, and Dr. Ernst Schwarz, Secretary of the CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs.

Toledo CIO, AFL Continue Unity

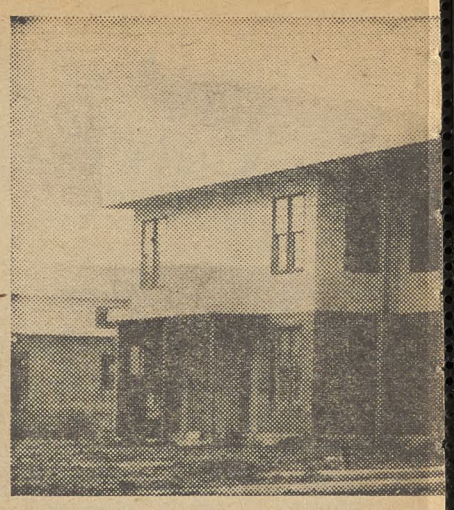
The CIO Council and the AFL Central Labor Union in Toledo, O., are going to keep right on working together despite the AFL withdrawal from the National United Labor Policy Committee.

Announcement was made in a joint statement signed by Council Executive Secy. Howard Rediger of the IUC and CLU Executive Secy. Ray J. Flory. Plans are "well matured, locally, for a substantial enlargement of our spheres of mutual assistance and cooperation," it said, especially in politics.

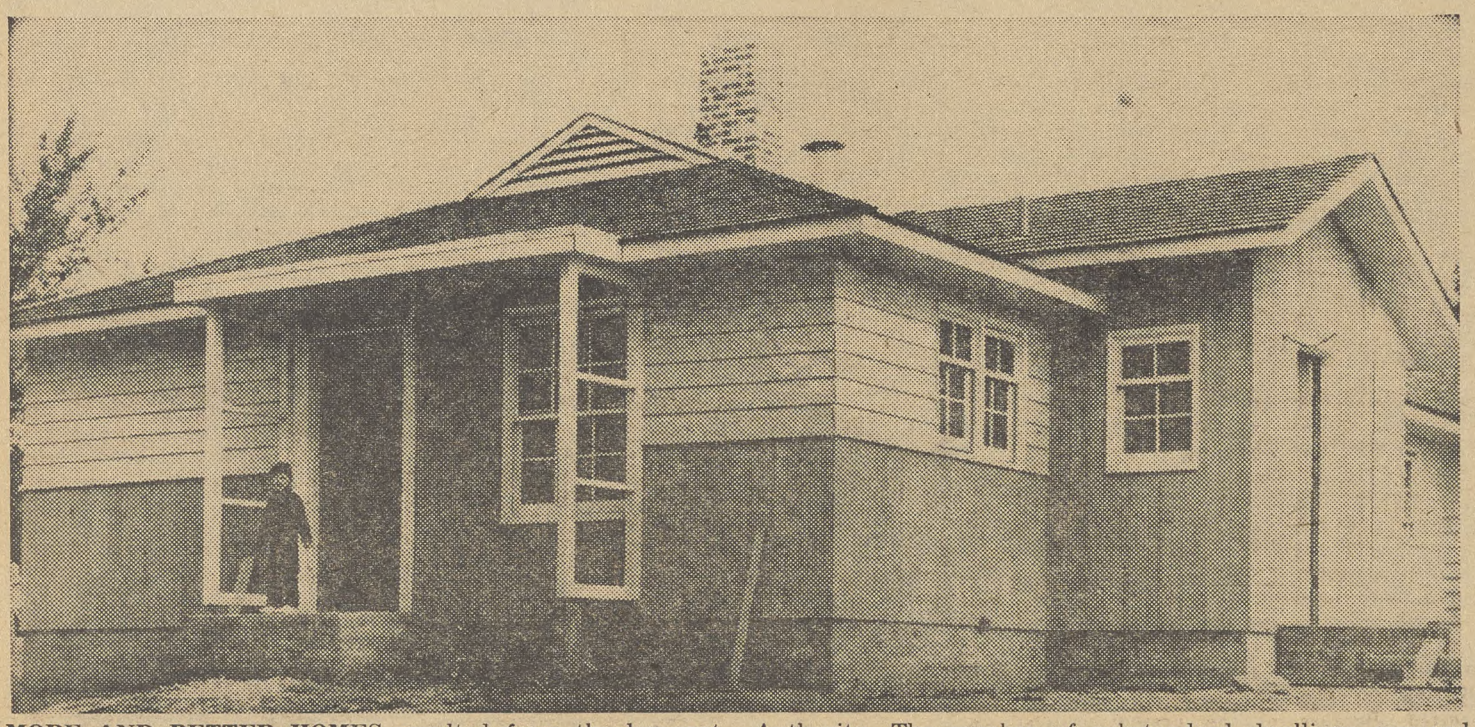
"It seems to us utterly absurd," the statement asserted, "to ignore the lesson of all trade union experience. Mutual action wins mutual benefits; separate action divides us, weakens us and injures us all."



"BEFORE" is the simple title given by the photographer to this picture of the home of a Little Rock (Ark.) family prior to the erection of low-rent dwellings with the help of federal subsidy by the Little Rock Housing Authority. Tenants who have been living in shacks of this sort are now being rehoused under the government's program. Slum areas like these are not confined to Little Rock. They can be found in practically every American city, large or small.



"AFTER." This picture, taken last m home which is replacing the shanty sl ing units to house some 200 low-in nearing completion in Little Rock. N



MORE AND BETTER HOMES resulted from the low-rent housing program undertaken by the town of Nampa, Ida., with federal support. Here is a typical building in the 75-family dwelling project developed by the Nampa Housing Authority. The number of substandard dwellings removed from the same site provided quarters for only 23 families. The Nampa homes were among the first in the country completed under the 1949 Housing Act.

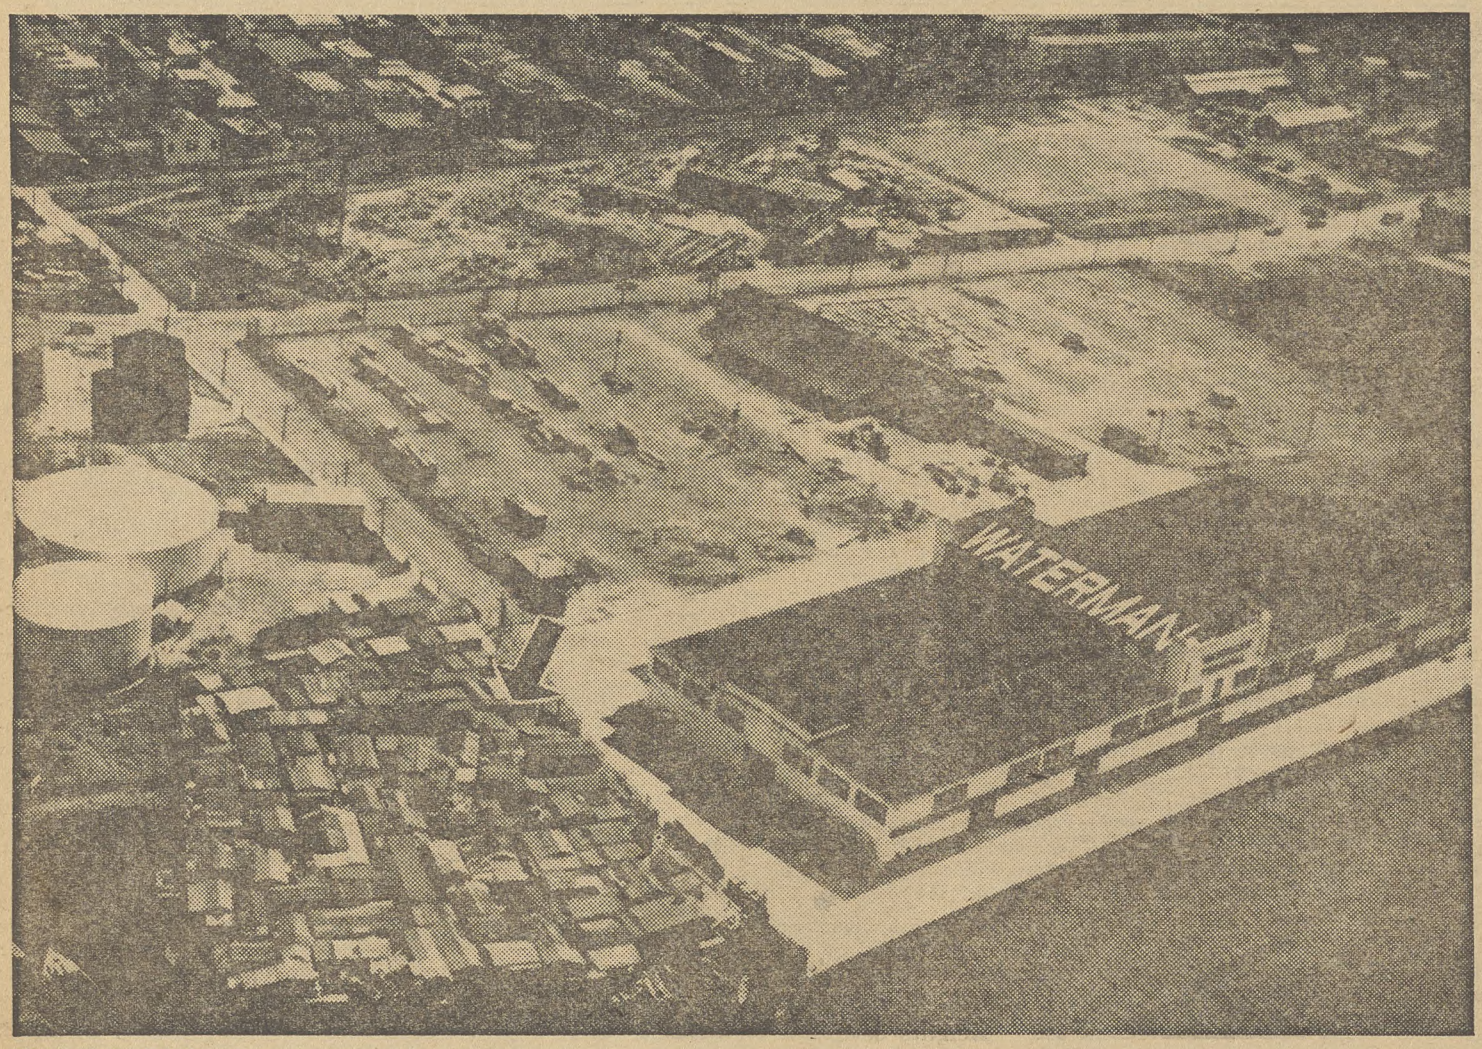
Slums Go,

By MILTON PLUMB

THE CIO NEWS is publishing for th first time the accompanying pictur illustrating some of the accomplis ments of the low-rent, slum-clearan housing program made possible by th Federal Housing Act of 1949.

Administered by the Public Housing A ministration, the act authorizes the co struction of 810,000 low-rent dwelling uni by local housing authorities over a si year period, under a limited federal subsi program. By the middle of September, 195 construction had begun on a total of 98,4 low-rent public housing units. Of thes 6377 units, including those pictured he had been completed.

After considerable wrangling, Congre this year authorized the beginning of co struction on 50,000 more units, so that b the end of fiscal 1952 a total of about 140,0 low-rent dwelling units are expected to ha been launched under the program. The orig nal act had contemplated the erection nearly that many—135,000 units—each yea



SLUMS BEFORE the program of low-rent housing made possible their eradication are typified in this picture taken in 1950 at San Juan, Puerto Rico. The arrow points to a slum area there known as "Coal." Note how densely the shacks are crowded together and how they reach out over the water. Sewage, dampness and lack of adequate sanitation made the area a serious health menace. Puerto Rican slums were long regarded as among the world's worst.

or Are Housed—Slowly

he program is so far behind schedule be- se of the opposition of the real estate y and the National Association of Home lders, which have fought it tooth and l. Through falsification of facts and un- ted expenditures of funds, the real es- e interests have persuaded many local mmunities to vote down public housing.

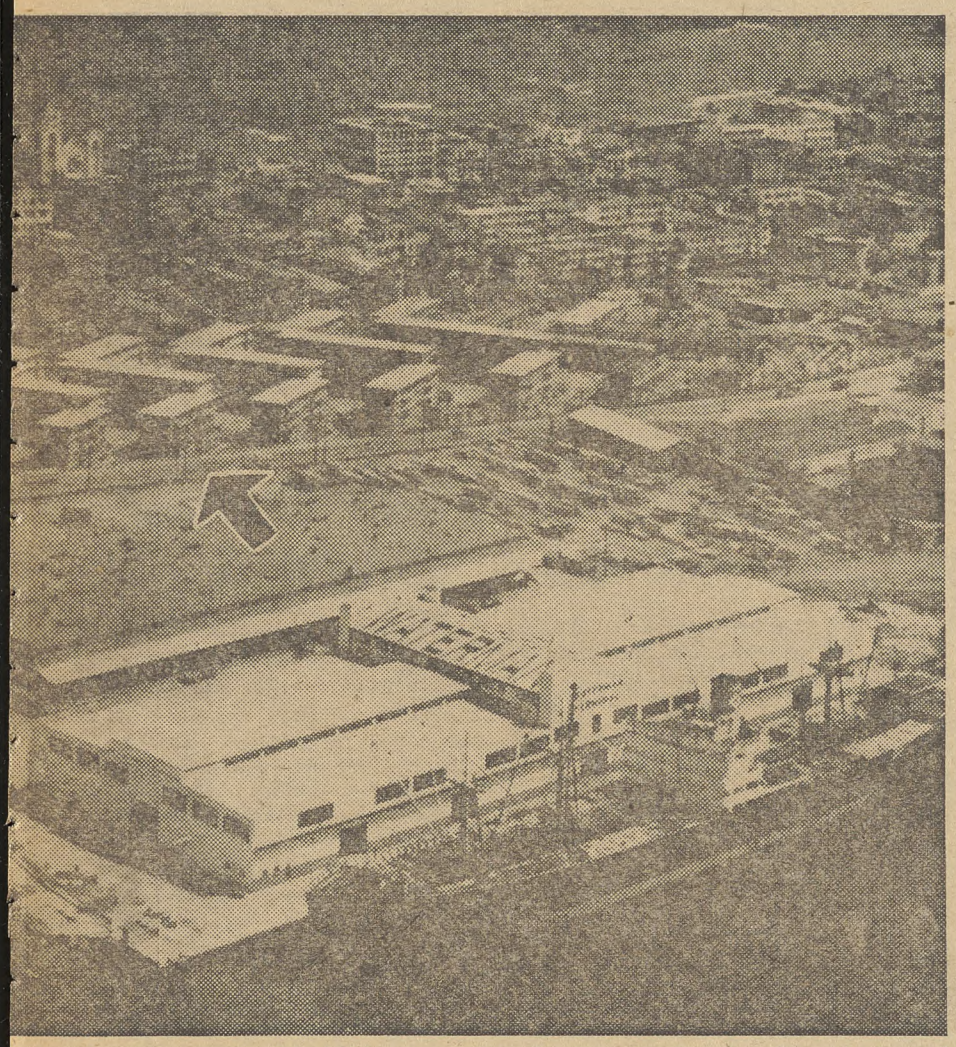
t the same time, however, private bank- interests have been scrambling to buy the bonds which local housing authori- issue to finance their projects. By last y, $171 million worth of these long- m bonds had been awarded by local horities to finance developments in 58 mmunities.

he Public Housing Administration ex- ses only a very general direction of the gram. It sets minimum standards for w construction and administers the feder- subsidy funds. Under the 1949 act, the al housing authorities, created under te laws, have the primary responsibility carrying out the low-rent public hous- program.

ocal authorities are authorized to con- uct and operate the low-rent housing projects with the aid and under the supervision of the PHA. Although the federal government may loan up to 90% of the development cost of a project, the actual financial aid extended is chiefly restricted to payment of annual contributions pledged as security for the local housing authority bonds, the proceeds of which finance the projects.

ANOTHER example of the readiness of private investors to undertake the program is found in the fact that, although nearly 100,000 new low-rent units are now under construction, no payments of federal subsidy funds have been made to date. In the long run, the total federal subsidy will approximately equal the bond interest.

One important provision of the program is that the law requires local housing authorities to tear down, close or bring up to standard condition a number of substandard housing units equivalent to the new units erected. Because of the present critical shortage of low-rent housing units, however, they are permitted to defer the destruction or closing of these units for the emergency.



the slum-clear- g Act of 1949 is present only half onstructed. Note,

UNSUBSTANTIAL? These low-rent homes in the project of 36 units built by the Kingsport Housing Authority, Kingsport, Tenn., refute completely charges by the real estate lobby that constructions under the federal housing program are "unsubstantial" and "eyesores." Countless Americans would welcome a chance to live in "eyesores" of this sort. Brick construction keeps maintenance cost at a minimum and assures an attractive neighborhood for years to come.

NEARLY 100 FAMILIES are getting better low-rent housing in the Lee-Walker Heights development in Asheville, N. C., built by the local housing authority with the aid of the 1949 Housing Act. The front of one unit in the project is shown in this recent photograph. Not the attractive appearance and excellent construction. These will be worth pointing out to Congress when the real estate lobby launches its annual attack on the federal housing program next year.

Woodworkers Membership More Than 100,000

By MANLEY J. WILSON

AS THE largest convention ever held by the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America convened at Denver, Pres. J. E. Fadling reported that the union has more than 100,000 members in the wood industry.

The officers' report said that there has been a net gain of 14,274 members—an 18% increase—in the past year. The union has members in 22 states, Alaska, British Columbia and eastern Canada.

Fadling in his opening speech declared that the last vestige of Communist influence has been driven from the union.

"I am proud to report," Fadling said, "that our union has been able to go through a fight with such an organization as the Communist Party and to abolish the reds from our ranks.

"Early in the history of our union, it became apparent to the rank-and-file membership that something was wrong—that something was the Communist Party which had slyly worked itself into the union.

"Action was taken to correct this and those who try to worm their way back into positions of influence can rest assured that there will be no compromise with fellow travelers."

Secy.-Treas. Carl Winn said that IWA is entitled to nine delegates to the National CIO convention in New York City next month.

"This is the largest representation we have ever been entitled to at a CIO convention," Winn said.

Ask T-H Repeal

The delegates adopted a legislative program calling for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and the enactment of a "fair and equitable labor relations law, based on the principles of the Wagner Act."

Vice-Pres. Al Hartung charged that "employers are using the Taft-Hartley law to browbeat workers through the injunction section and the courts are handing out excessive fines and other penalties against unions."

"The National Labor Relations Board has bowed to the will of the employers by making and changing established board policy in a hysterical and confused manner," he added.

"We can no longer depend upon the National Labor Relations Act, as amended by the Taft-Hartley law, to protect the rights of unions or to guarantee to the unorganized workers their right to belong to a union of their own choosing."

Former Rep. Charles Savage of Shelton, Wash., who was the legislative committee chairman, presented a resolution calling for the repeal of anti-labor laws.

In urging its adoption, Savage said labor union officials should be given credit for presenting a program that would bring about the repeal of these laws. "But," he warned, "we cannot force a program such as this through an anti-labor Congress such as we now have."

Sen. Millikin Hit

Sen. Millikin (R. Colo.) was bitterly criticized by Secy.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of the CIO Oil Workers—whose headquarters is Denver — who said oil companies made generous provision for executives, but denied workers the same type of protection.

"While Millikin is all for a withholding tax for workers," McCormick said, "he is bitterly opposed to withholding taxes on dividends and corporation income."

Members Increase 42% In One District

Membership of the CIO National Woodworkers of America, in the British Columbia District, increased over 42% during the past year, the officers reported to the convention.

A year ago there were slightly over 18,000 members in the district, and now there are more than 25,600.

McCormick attacked the policies of the Wage Stabilization Board, assuring the Woodworkers that the wage raise of 12½c per hour for lumber workers which had been approved by the WSB was "certainly not all you were entitled to."

George Roberts, Western CIO-PAC director, praised the IWA for its community activities and for its fight for equal rights.

"The Woodworkers as well as all CIO unions have always been staunch supporters of the Bill of Rights and of the Constitution of the United States," he said.

"If everybody in this country supported these things as well this country would be a much better place in which to live."

Longer Work Week Hit

Attempts to destroy the 40-hour week were hit by the delegates in a resolution which charged that it was a "specious plea for combating inflation and aiding the national defense" and characterized attempts to lengthen the work week as "anti-labor moves of big business."

CIO Regional Director Mike Livoda of Colorado welcomed the delegates to Denver with an appeal for continued aggressive political action by all unions to maintain labor's gains.

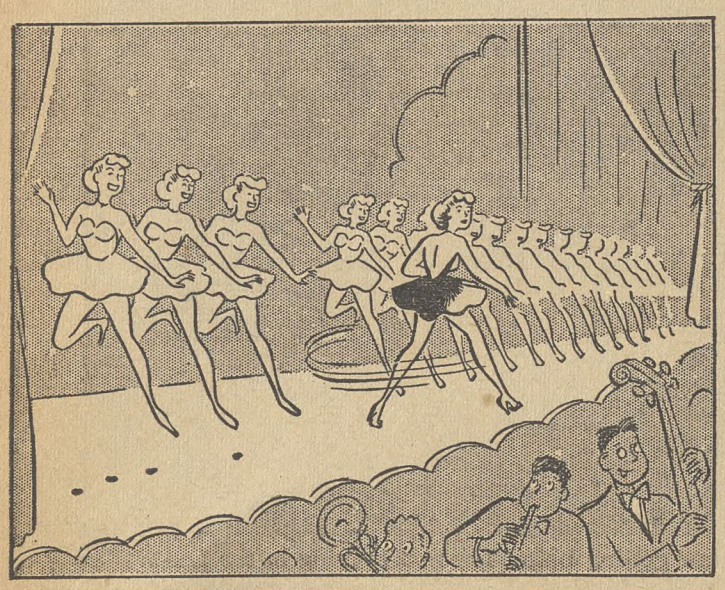
Fight On Beetles Urged

The delegates called for a continuing appropriation by Congress for fighting spruce beetles in the forests of the Rocky Mountain states.

Fadling said that in Colorado alone the beetles had destroyed the timber in an area as large as Rhode Island and that thousands of acres of other woodlands in Colorado and other Rocky Mountain states were menaced.

The convention also appealed to Sen. Magnuson (D., Wash.) and President Truman for emergency action in providing housing for loggers and mill workers who had lost their homes in a recent forest fire at Forks in southwest Washington.

IWA Vice Pres. John Hawkins said a critical housing shortage had been made much worse by the loss of 36 homes. He added that the continued operation of the plywood plants and logging camps in the area was threatened unless something was done to provide adequate housing.



"Just remembered—I gotta register!"

Remember to Register—and Give Your Buck to PAC!

Fadling, Hartung In Contest For Presidency Of IWA

Pres. J. E. Fadling, who is serving his third term, will be opposed in a referendum election by 1st Vice Pres. A. F. Hartung.

Competing for the post left vacant by Hartung are Burke Christie, Olympia, Wash., and J. E. Dicey, Laurel, Miss.

Nominated for second vice president were Claude Ballard, Portland, Ore., and Tom MacKenzie, Vancouver, B. C. The incumbent, John Hawkins, will not be on the ballot.

Fadling is a member of Local 3-2 of Aberdeen, Wash., where he formerly worked in a sawmill. He was first vice president of the union when the war started, enlisted in the Navy and upon his discharge in 1945, succeeded to the office of president because of the death a few months prior of the late Pres. Worth Lowery. Ballard, then second vice president, had served in the interim.

Hartung is a member of Local 5-37 in Vernonia, Ore., and formerly worked as a hooktender in a logging operation there. Long active in the labor movement in Oregon's lumber industry, he was president of his local in 1935.

Later he became president of union's Columbia River District Council and also served as CIO regional director for Oregon.

Dixiecrats Fail To Eliminate District Fire Dept. Anti-Bias

THE DISTRICT of Columbia (Washington) Commissioners last week stood back of their order to end segregation in the District's fire companies despite the opposition of three Dixiecrat members of the House District Committee.

The plan drew the fire of three Southern Democrats, Davis (Ga.), McMillan (S. C.) and Smith (Va.).

Davis said that the integration plan would jeopardize the city's safety, would "smack of dictatorship methods, and would disclose a complete disregard of the wishes of the personnel of the Fire Dept."

DAVIS SAID that resolutions "imploring" authorities and taxpayers to continue the policy of segregation were adopted at two meetings of Local 36, AFL Firefighters, whose membership was given at 749. Actual strength of the fire department is 1040. Davis reported the vote for segregation was 204 to 26.

Davis late last week introduced a bill to revoke the commissioners' order.

Replying to Davis, Commissioner Joseph Donohue pointed out that "there is no segregation of hazards" in fighting fires.

"Segregation of firemen," he said, "who are paid from public funds, and who are risking their lives in your interest and mine, is not only un-American, it is unconscionable."

The commissioners on Oct. 2 had approved the plan to integrate 14 Negro firemen, currently assigned to administrative duties, into companies now manned by white firemen, in which there are 26 vacancies.

Fire Chief Joseph A. Mayhew, supporting the commissioners, predicted the integration plan would be in effect by Oct. 16 despite threats by Davis to take stronger action if the order is not reversed.

Commenting editorially on the fight, the Washington Post declared that "the impudence of Rep. Davis in seeking to block the Commissioners' order . . . is really astounding."

Citing the fact that non-segregation has been the policy of the Washington Police Department for some years, the editorial declared that nonsegregation, especially in municipal facilities, "is the rule over virtually all of the country, except for the section that Mr. Davis represents.

"Congressman Davis' contention that integration would jeopardize public safety is a straw man erected to distract attention from his real purpose. A small bloc in Congress, of whom Mr. Davis is one, is determined that there shall be no progress in race relations in Washington."

IN VIRGINIA, the president of State Medical Society struck a blow for anti-segregation when he assailed the society's ban on Negro physicans as "unfair, unjust and undemocratic."

Dr. C. Lydon Harrell, of Norfolk, urged admittance of "well qualified Negro doctors" to the state organization when he spoke to the 104th annual meeting of the society at Virginia Beach.

The meeting instructed delegates to initiate polls in their county societies to determine whether the word "white" should be deleted from society membership requirements.

Defense Production Lag Laid By Rieve To Inadequate Planning

A DEMAND for an over-all defense production program to avoid "a serious failure" in the mobilization effort and to end the present "waste of manpower and skills" has been served by the CIO on Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson.

Such a program is essential if the country is to be mobilized efficiently and fairly, the CIO Committee on Economic Policy advised Wilson in a letter signed by its administrative chairman, Emil Rieve. Rieve also is president of the CIO Textile Workers.

Rieve told Wilson the CIO is "seriously disturbed" by "failures and mistakes" as made plain in the Defense Mobilizer's third quarterly report on defense production to President Truman. The report was issued Oct. 1.

Pointing out that the scheduled peak level of defense production has been pushed back some three to six months, Rieve said that this "admitted slowdown of pace" was "of major significance."

He added that delays in achieving defense production targets represent "a failure to meet our obligations in a critical period of world history."

Rieve reminded Wilson that the CIO had in the past "predicted a slowing down in the pace of production schedules if proper steps were not taken to minimize the difficulties," and said the CIO is "dismayed by the apparent failure of the mobilization agencies to enforce the necessary precautionary measures."

"An over-all defense production plan has been slow in getting started," Rieve wrote. "The shift in the scheduled pace of defense production is undoubtedly due to a great extent to the failure to plan the effort properly."

As an example of the imbalance in the program to expand industrial capacity, Rieve cited Wilson's report that "steel works and rolling mill programs are now about 35% built, while only 19% of the more urgently needed blast furnace capacity is in place." He also referred to Wilson's statement that the shortage of structural steel is a major bottleneck causing a widespread slow-down in many scheduled defense projects.

"The imbalance in the steel expansion program has economy-wide ramifications," Rieve said. "Yet, an important cause of the shortage—the disparity between the expansion of ingot producing and rolling mill facilities—could not have arisen as a major issue, had the mobilization agencies operated on a planned program."

Lack of planning has also created serious manpower problems, Rieve pointed out. Defense production is not moving fast enough to take up the slack created by curtailments in the use of steel, copper and aluminum for civilian production, he added.

"It seems essential," Rieve concluded, "that the Office of Defense Mobilization, as the top civilian mobilization agency, perform the task of meshing together the individual programs in the light of long-range defense emergency requirements and resources—without which there can be no efficient planning.

"A key to the problem appears to be the need for more effective direction of defense production, in order to expedite it and to integrate it with material curtailment orders, available manpower and civilian requirement. This can be accomplished only by over-all long-range planning and program development."

Rieve complimented Wilson for the "frankness and honesty" of his report, and said that "we of the CIO recognize the difficulties inherent in the mobilization effort."

He also said that, although he was seriously concerned over shortcomings in the program, he was, on the other hand, "heartened" by the progress that has been made.

Pakistan Union Leader Calls Burmese Reds Peace Threat

BURMA FACES a very grave danger from the Communists—"and the people in the United States don't seem to realize it," according to C. P. Dave, assistant secretary-general of the All Pakistan Confederation of Labor.

"This is dangerous," he explained, "because both East Pakistan and India—the important Indian province of Assam—border on Burma. East Pakistan could not be defended against an attack from Burma because of the terrain, it's so wild and mountainous. Anyone could come and go at will there—and sometimes I think they do."

Dave (the final "e" is pronounced) is in the United States on a three-month visit under a Smith-Mundt Act grant from the State Dept. He has been in Washington and San Francisco, where he attended the AFL convention. Later he will go to Pittsburgh, Boston and New York, where he will visit the CIO convention, and will attend the CIO Dept. of Education and Research School to be held in Norman, Okla., the last week in November.

Communism, he explained, is not much of a problem in Pakistan for a very good reason: The fifth largest country in the world, with 80 million people, it is the only one in Asia that has a surplus of food.

"Food is cheap," he said, "and everybody can at least eat. Communism will appeal to the masses in Asia so long as they are hungary, because it promises everything. That is the principal reason for its success in China. The democratic forces did nothing about land reform, the biggest problem in all Asia.

"The Communists sent organizers into Pakistan from India. They had some success politically, but none with the trade union movement. They conspired with some politicians to overthrow the government, but luckily they were caught. Now they're all in jail or back in India where they belong."

THE ALL Pakistan Confederation of Labor was formed in Sept., 1950, by a union of the East and West Pakistan Federations of Labor. Dave, a dock worker, who had been joint secretary of the West Pakistan group, became assistant secretary general of the new organization.

The Pakistan labor movement's greatest need, said Dave, is trained leadership. Two men, he said, are just returning after four or five months of training in London offered by the British Trades Union Congress. Others will go later, he added.

He was hopeful of additional training opportunities when the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions program is implemented at Asian regional headquarters in Colombo, Ceylon.

CIO Outlook Urges Labor-Management Units To Mobilize Manpower For Defense Work

THE COUNTRY can get the most efficient use out of its labor force in the defense mobilization program by applying the lessons of cooperative consultation and operation learned during World War II, according to the current CIO Economic Outlook.

"Reliance upon cooperation with labor and management," says the Outlook, "does not mean that planning should not go forward or that special agencies and policies are not required.

"It merely indicates that such planning must proceed within the traditional American framework which leaves sufficient play for the great energies and abilities of the American citizenry."

VOLUNTARY cooperation of government, labor and management was responsible for the "miracle of production" that American industry performed during the war, says the Outlook, which is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research. Where compulsion was instituted, it failed.

The Outlook says that a basic step in planning manpower mobilization involves the establishment of labor-management committees of the World War II type. Such a committee, including agriculture, has been set up nationally and is making a constructive contribution, it adds. Regional committees also have been formed, and local area committees are being created.

One of the things the government can do to make manpower mobilization more effective, the Outlook says, is to "anticipate and resolve potential manpower difficulties, rather than create them." It added:

"The defense agencies have issued some good policy statements on their goals as to gearing contract-letting to manpower supply, but performances lag behind.

"The military and civilian production agencies must carefully schedule their production requirements according to the importance of each job in relation to the national defense effort.

"An ironclad system of materials allocations must be established to insure that critically needed production comes first. In such industries as metal-fabricating, where materials are scarce, proper allocation of available steel or copper to defense purposes will promote appropriate shifts in employment as needless luxuries are eliminated."

The government's failure sufficiently to coordinate cutbacks in the automobile and other consumer durable goods industries with increasing defense production has cost hundreds of thousands of lost manhours, says the Outlook.

It cited Detroit, where thousands of workers have been laid off and scores of factories closed because not enough attention "has been devoted to meshing the military production needs in the available plants and manpower."

THE publication also warns the military against drafting highly skilled workers unless it can use their skills in the armed services, and it is sharply critical of the U. S. Employment Service setup with a separate organization in each state.

It calls for a unified national employment service tied in with a uniform, national unemployment insurance system with adequate uniform benefits, conditions and administration.

The country is wasting a lot of potential production by failing to use the present period for "tooling up" labor as well as factories, the Outlook says. As output increases more and greater skills will be required, but unless they are learned, they cannot be used.

Steelworkers Hold Seminar To Hit Bias

A NOVEL method for finding the way to root out discrimination in all its forms was tried by the CIO Steelworkers last week at Pennsylvania State College, where it held a Seminar on Human Relations addressed by educators, clergymen and others.

The seminar was held in cooperation with the college. The college president, Dr. Milton E. Eisenhower, declared that the seminar marked the first time that the national leadership of a big union met with education, church and industry leaders to "explore systematically some of great problems of the day."

In a speech sounding the keynote of the seminar, Steelworkers' Pres. Philip Murray, who also heads the CIO, said that the basic rights of all people must be safeguarded.

Murray said that the basic rights must be protected not only by law, but, if necessary "by the active vigiliance of those who can afford to offer protection in moral and legal fashion."

HE SAID the seminar was another forward step for the Steelworkers in their efforts to find a key pattern for ending "discrimination in all its open and hidden forms."

Murray said that the combining of the most effective methods available into a general plan would "aid materially in the elimination of prejudices and discriminatory practice."

He added that such spadework must be done "if the efforts and the experience of eminent leaders of the church, the state, science, education and business are to be combined with that of labor in charting a course which will bring about the attainment of our mutual goal."

"This type of action will help eliminate the moral decay and sickness which presently infects society through the evils of prejudice and discrimination," he said.

"It will bring about a real feeling of mutual respect on the part of each man for his brother, supported by a deepening sense of social responsibility in a democratic world where freedom, equality, human dignity and the brotherhood of man are accepted without question."

The seminar was attended by about 25 top Steelworkers' officials,

SECY.-TREAS. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers continued Murray's theme when he pointed out that raising the basic economic standards of the minorities helps everybody, including the owners of industry.

He said that raising economic standards "gives the people more money to spend" and puts more money into the channels of trade.

McDonald said higher economic standards call "for more production. More production in the hands of capable management means lowering of unit cost of production. Lower unit cost usually means a little better profit."

He said the Steelworkers and the steel industry have made "great contributions" toward eliminating discrimination.

A New York Times editorial said it "is heartening that the CIO Steelworkers and the Pennsylvania State College have launched an intensive study of prejudice and the evils that flow from discriminatory practices based on race, creed or color."

Declaring it significant that the undertaking was launched "by a union that from its inception ... has insisted that there is no room for second-grade citizenship in the nation," the editorial said the time has come for all unions to take more such positive action.

Large Scale Distribution Of Land Underway In Italy

THE SOCIAL revolution reached Italy this month. By the end of October, some 50,000 acres of farm land in the poverty-ridden province of Calabria, at the southern tip of the country, will have been distributed by the De Gasperi government among the peasants who work it.

The distribution constitutes the first large-scale move in Italy's program of breaking up large estates and turning over the land, in small plots, to peasants who stand at about the bottom of the nation's economic scale.

The current distribution began last weekend at the Calabrian town of Isola Capo Rizzuto. The names of 4900 peasant families were placed in a huge box. In another box were the names of the sub-regions where the land is located.

A small girl, picked at random from the thousands of persons attending the drawing, reached in and selected cards, as government officials looked on.

The first name drawn was that of Bruno Ranieri, of Isola Capo Rizzuto. Because of the size of his family, he received six hectares, or nearly 15 acres. It turned out to be in one of the preferred farming sub-sections.

RANIERI AND the other fortunates will pay for their land in 30 annual installments at about what it would have cost them to rent it.

The Economic Cooperation Administration, the U. S. Point Four program and the Italian government will help the new owners fertilize their acres and obtain good quality seeds, and will teach them how to operate so as to get the highest possible production.

The breakup of huge estates, practically all of them in the south, has been one of Italy's major postwar problems. Of the country's 77,000 landowners, less than 1% own more than 42% of the land—a situation exploited by the Communists to the point that the peasants began seizing the land themselves.

Legislation authorizing expropriation of land from large owners was passed last year. It is costing the government about $1 billion. Acreage is purchased at a price determined by experts, and is generally being paid for in government bonds.

Visitors From Europe See U.S. Faults

LIFE in working class America isn't quite as rosy as they'd been led to believe, members of a team of European trade unionists said last week during a visit to National CIO headquarters in Washington.

The six men who conferred with CIO representatives are part of the first all-trade union technical assistance team of eight brought to the U. S. by the ECA for a four months' study tour. They came from England, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Germany.

The foreign unionists were selected for the trip by ECA's Trade Union Advisory Committee which is composed of union officials representing 24 million workers in Western European countries receiving Marshall Plan aid. Four such teams in all have been selected. The other three are scheduled to arrive later.

Several members of the team felt that there'd been too much bragging abroad and in this country about America's standard of living. Frankly, said one member, he found this "a little nauseating."

ONE FELT that "contentment of mind" should be considered in determining what makes up a high standard, and he had not seen much evidence of this.

Another thought that the average American worker's three main interests outside of his job were—his television set, his car and the comics. He doubted that these provided enough for a good life. All seemed to agree that American industrial workers in big plants don't have the rich opportunities for sociability with other workers that European workers have.

All six of the men are union officials in their own countries. Olav Bruvik, who comes from Haus, Norway, is president of the Norwegian Textile Workers union. Holke E. Svenson, from Huddinge, Sweden, is an official of the Swedish textile union.

HARRY E. Matthews, Surrey, England, is National Industrial Officer for the General and Municipal Workers, second largest union in Britain. It has a membership of 800,000. (The Transport and General Workers has about 1.3 million members, Matthews said.)

Harry Jensen, a local trustee of the Machinists Federation, and Arnold R. Johannesson, president of the Plumbers Union, both hail from Denmark. Alfred Beyer of Dusseldorf, Germany, serves as temporary official with the German National Trade Union Federation (DGB).

Court Says Cure-All Is No Better Than Aspirin

You may just as well take a tablet and a half of aspirin; it won't cure you but will do just as much good as Imdrin.

That's the contention of the Federal Trade Commission, upheld at Chicago by the U. S. District Court which issued an injunction against the makers of the widely-advertised drug.

Hereafter the firm is forbidden to claim in its radio and newspaper advertising that Imdrin is "an adequate, effective or reliable treatment for any kind of arthritis, rheumatism, neuritis, sciatica, gout, neuralgia, fibrositis, or bursitis."

Unions Praised For Role In Getting Jobs For Handicapped

THE VITAL role of organized labor in placing the physically handicapped in productive work was emphasized last week in Washington, D. C., at the kickoff luncheon opening the 7th annual observance of the National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week.

Sponsored by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped and the Variety Club of Washington, the luncheon was attended by high labor, government and civic leaders.

Guests included stars, directors and producers from the Hollywood movie colony, and dozens of handicapped persons from the Washington area.

Sen. Blair Moody (D. Mich.) paid tribute to the "cooperation of labor" in placing thousands of the handicapped in productive jobs where they have become "our secondary army" in the struggle for national welfare and security.

AFPH Pres. Paul A. Strachan said he was convinced that the only way to handle the problem of the physically handicapped is to regard it "as a cold-blooded economic proposition." He called for public support for the AFPH program of employment, medical treatment, education and training.

"It is my absolute conviction," Strachan said, "that the great pillars of this program are, on the one hand, industry and business, and on the other, labor. Unless there is understanding of this problem, and agreement between these two groups as to supporting this program, it cannot win."

Labor-management committees, now operating in many cities, are the means to do the greater part of the job, he stated. Through them employers and workers learn at first hand that when injury or disease incapacitates a person for one job he may be trained to do another.

REP. McCORMICK (D. Mass.), majority leader of the House, soundly endorsed the AFPH program of rehabilitation and job placement.

Now that the social conscience of America has been stirred, we should "make available jobs at the American wage scale" for all willing and able handicapped persons, he said.

He was proud of the part he played as a member of Congress, he added, in giving government recognition to the annual observance.

Indiana CIO Fights Hike In Bus Fare

THE INDIANA CIO Council is planning to appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court the action of the State's Public Service Commission in granting a fare increase to a bus company without holding public hearings.

The rate increase was granted to the Evansville City Coach Lines after a commission examiner turned down the request as "unjust and unreasonable" — the position taken by the Evansville CIO Council.

But the bus company was permitted to file a new application, and the higher fare became effective, although neither the Evansville CIO Council nor the public was notified of the new application.

The State Supreme Court rejected the State CIO Council's appeal, which was based on the grounds that the constitutional right of due process had been violated.

The council has appealed to all affiliated unions in the state for financial help to meet the cost of the forthcoming litigation.

Teacher Lack Seen Growing

DEFENSE mobilization is a main factor in the shortage of teachers, particularly in the primary grades, and the situation is not likely to improve during the emergency, states a U.S. Dept. of Labor bulletin.

The shortage of elementary school teachers is more acute than last year, although more students completed training, because higher paying defense jobs have drawn them away, says the bulletin in analyzing the effect of the defense program on the employment of teachers.

More than 25,000 teachers are needed to take care of the estimated 800,000 increased enrollments in elementary schools. This has brought the total number of pupils in these schools to about 24½ million. Of these 12% are in private and parochial schools.

Teachers' salaries have increased in recent years, though not at a uniform rate throughout the country, but they are still low in the elementary grades. These salaries are higher in larger cities, varying from an average of $4172 in cities with populations of 500,000 or over, to $2683 in towns under 5000.

CWA Member Wins Oxford Scholarship

One CIO member and two AFL members were awarded the 1951-52 Ruskin College Labor Scholarships for study at Oxford Univ., England.

CIO winner is Eileen Kerr of Linden, N. J., a switchboard operator and member of the Communications Workers. Miss Kerr has been studying toward a B.S. degree at Seton Hall Univ., specializing in labor relations.

The other winners are Edward Banyai, of Allentown, Pa., a member of the Ladies' Garment Workers Union and Neal Moore of Topeka, Kan., of the Typographical Union.

WSB Okays Over-Formula ARA Increase

THE WAGE Stabilization Board last week approved a special pay raise of $39 to $50 monthly for more than 1300 members of the CIO American Radio Association.

The board's action averted the possibility of a major strike and tieup of ocean-going vessels.

Agreement on the higher-than-stabilization formula came on an 8 to 4 vote, with employer members dissenting against labor and public representatives.

Earlier in the week the WSB had refused to issue a decision on the dispute until it had received a full report from the Defense Manpower Administration.

Last July the ARA negotiated the increase with Atlantic Gulf and Pacific Coast ship operators, but WSB approval was needed if the raise was to exceed 6.2%

The board's decision was based on the grounds that the dispute was a "rare and unusual" case requiring above-formula pay to help out the critical manpower situation in the maritime industry.

Vice Pres. Philip O'Rourke of the ARA termed the WSB directive "completely acceptable" and added that "it saves the walkout situation."

If the walkout had occurred a nation-wide tieup of non-military shipping would have taken place. Federal law requires that ocean-going vessels cannot sail unless a licensed radio operator is aboard.

The union had said that in the event of a strike critical military and defense cargoes would be moved.

Wisconsin CIO Elects 9 New Board Members

THE 14th annual convention of the Wisconsin CIO council elected Ted Kurtz of the Brewery Workers as secretary-treasurer and placed nine new members on a revamped executive board.

John M. Sorenson, incumbent secretary-treasurer, refused nomination. Kurtz polled a clear majority on the first ballot. He was opposed by Fred Erchul of Local 50, Packinghouse Workers, and John Wieczorek, Local 248, Auto Workers.

Delegates to the convention, held in Milwaukee, voted for a return to the old method of electing an executive board, whereby each international union or a group of international caucuses selects its representatives subject to convention acceptance, the Wisconsin CIO News reported.

In addition, the number of vice presidents who make up the board was increased from 11 to 12.

SEN. Joseph McCarthy (R. Wis.) had a rough time of it at his home-state CIO convention. Speaker after speaker lambasted him, and the delegates passed a resolution soundly condemning his smear tactics.

Council Pres. Herman Steffes started the ball rolling by thoroughly examining McCarthy's record of "lies and slander," then charged that the Senator was elected with the help of Communists. He said McCarthy was undermining American foreign policy and playing into the hands of the Kremlin.

"And if he isn't paying dues to the Communist Party, he's cheating them," Steffes added.

Emil Mazey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Auto Workers, declared that the job of "expelling McCarthy from office—the task of kicking him out," is up to the organized labor movement in the State.

The McCarthy resolution was passed unanimously by the delegates. It condemned the Senator and pledged the Wisconsin CIO to "work vigorously to defeat him in the coming Senatorial election, and thus remove what is now Wisconsin's shame."

One of the convention's major tasks was the creation and adoption of legislative and education programs.

Court To Review One Labor Case

THE U. S. Supreme Court last week marked the first day of its fall session by denying review to 14 out of 15 cases involving labor unions.

A writ of certiorari (decision to review) was granted in only one labor case.

The court's action in granting review to the case of the American Insurance Co. appeared to guarantee that some light will be shed not only on collective bargaining requirements under the Taft-Hartley Act but also on the specific status of an employer's insistence on a "mangement rights" clause in a contract.

A court of appeals had refused to support a ruling by the National Labor Relations Board that the insurance company had failed to bargain in good faith because it insisted on including a "management rights" clause in its contract. The NLRB appealed the ruling.

Of the cases denied review, seven involve questions under the Taft-Hartley Act while two each arose under the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Portal-to-Portal Act.

Amalgamated Fund Boosts Benefits

SOME 150,000 clothing workers throughout the U. S. are getting substantial increases in the social benefits distributed by the Amalgamated Insurance Fund, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers and Raymond H. Reiss, president of the Clothing Manufacturers Association of the U. S. A., said in a joint announcement last week.

Made retroactive to Oct. 1, sick and accident benefits were boosted from $15 to $20 a week, maximum surgical benefits from $150 to $200, and hospitalization benefits from $6 to $9 a day, they disclosed.

The fund is financed by employer contributions of 2% of weekly payroll for health, life and other social insurance benefits, and 3% for old-age retirement benefits. The increased benefits are merely the latest that have been added from time to time since the fund was established in 1942.

IN THEIR joint statement Potofsky and Reiss said the added benefits show the "desire of both employers and the union to improve and increase the security of those men and women who devote their lives to the clothing industry."

"This industry pioneered in these social insurance measures," they said, "because we felt, a long time ago, that the efficiency, health and security of the workers depended on more than appeared each week in their pay envelopes.

"Our social insurance program is one of the aspects of enlightened labor-management relations which have marked the clothing industry for more than a quarter-century.

"We propose to improve constantly this program in consonance with sound insurance principles."

Organizationally Speaking

THE WRITER addressed the conference held by the CIO Steelworkers District 7 in Philadelphia last week. The conference was presided over very capably by Reg. Dir. Charles Ford. The Steelworkers in this area have shown a great deal of progress, keeping pace with all the other districts throughout the United States. The House altered the Taft-Hartley Act by repealing the provision requiring union shop elections. The measure was sent to President Truman for his signature by a roll call vote of 307 to 18 after the House had defeated an effort to send it back to the Labor Committee, 304 to 22. The new legislation will legalize thousands of CIO, as well as AFL, bargaining and union shop elections held under the auspices of the National Labor Relations Board before either union filed non-Communist affidavits.

Another World Series has become history. The Yanks are the victors. As we pointed out a week ago, the ushers at both the Yankee Stadium and the Polo Grounds are members of the CIO. While attending one of the games, the writer had the pleasure of meeting the officers of the local, which is affiliated with the CIO Utility Workers.

The IUE-CIO has won its first representation election in California. According to Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler, it defeated the UE by a vote of 20 to 12 at the General Electric Supply Co., Los Angeles. Organizer Frank Grillo was in charge of the operation.

DeShetler also reports two wins for the Clothing Workers. Both victories were in representation elections: at Bayly's, Los Angeles, 120 voted CIO and 4 against; at Riviera of California, Los Angeles, 57 ballots went to the CIO with 26 against.

A. F. Hartung, vice president of the CIO Woodworkers, reports a representation victory at the Atlanta Oak Flooring Co., Atlanta, Ga. The count showed the Woodworkers with 153 votes and no union with only 11.

In what will probably be one of the last union shop elections, the Woodworkers won a unanimous decision at the Forest Product Treating Co., Laramie, Wyo. According to Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda, the election was held because of the recent reversed interpretation of the NLBR. The count showed all 50 of the votes cast in favor of the union.

REG. DIR. Michael Mann reports a representation win for the Glass, Coke & Chemical Workers at the Van Clees Co., Chicago, Ill. Of 174 eligible votes, 134 ballots were for the UGCWA-CIO and 39 against.

Reg. Dir. John Easton reports a victory for the Wholesale and Retail Department Store Employees CIO over the AFL. In a representation election at the Borden Milk Co., Huntington, W. Va., the CIO union won by more than 40 to 1. Of 129 eligible votes, 123 voted: 82 for the CIO, 2 for the AFL and 39 for no union. The campaign was conducted by Field Rep. Joe Rice, Secy. Edgar Johnson of Local 21, and a committee of the local members.

Mary Norton On Manpower Unit

THE NATIONAL Labor-Management Policy Committee has approved three recommendations from the Women's Advisory Committee on Defense Manpower aimed at getting more women on labor - management committees, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin announced last week.

One recommendation was that the women's group have a liaison member on the national policy committee. Former Rep. Mary T. Norton, retired New Jersey Democrat, vice chairman of the women's group, was named.

The second proposal was that Tobin "suggest to labor and management the desirability of appointing qualified women to regional and area labor-management committees." The third recommendation was that the appointment of women "be given special regard" when area labor-management committees appoint advisory committees.

Three new members have been appointed to the Women's Advisory Committee, Tobin said. They are former Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Cal.); Miss Mary C. Griffith, Denver attorney, and Mrs. Alice Hogan West, Pasco, Wash., of the AFL Railway Clerks.

New Move Made In Congress To Name Relief Recipients

THE "SHAME-LIST" rider which Indiana's Sen. Jenner (R) has been trying to force on the American people ever since his state's GOP-controlled Legislature voted last year to make public the names of persons on relief has come back to life again.

It was approved last week by the conferees on pending tax legislation, and this time it's got a mighty good chance of permanent survival.

When it was attached earlier this year to two different pieces of related legislation pertaining to social security, the amendment was thrown out by two joint Congressional committees on the grounds that shame lists are so big an issue that they should be considered in a separate bill.

The Jenner rider has no connection whatever with taxes, but it does have the approval of a socially irresponsible majority of the conferees handling the present tax bill.

Hence, despite its earlier defeat on its merits as social security legislation, it may be enacted into law as a "tax" measure.

While at present, Indiana is the only state affected by the conferee's decision, the personal privacy of nearly five million needy persons is threatened.

Meanwhile the Indiana Legislature—called back to a special session after the state had lost its court battle to compel Ewing to continue paying $30 million in Federal welfare funds despite the shame list provision it had written into law—was deadlocked in a bitter fight on the issue.

Two Republican members of the Indiana Senate broke with their party and joined the Democratic minority to pass a bill suspending the anti-secrecy law to make the state again eligible for federal aid. The House, on the other hand rejected the Senate measure and voted to appropriate $29 million of state funds for a "home rule" welfare program.

The "shame lists" of Indiana became a clear cut party issue when the Republican National Executive Committee this month commended the Indiana House for insisting on making the names public even though it would cost the state's taxpayers an additional $29 million.

However, in the state itself there was powerful pressure being exerted in support of the two rebel Republican Senators. Directors of the Indiana Farm Bureau threw their support behind them in urging suspension of the law until 1953 to avoid loss of federal aid. The majority of Indiana legislators are from rural areas.

LAST WEEK'S Legislative News Letter published by the Indiana CIO Council reported that "old and infirm spectators throng the galleries daily to sit there and watch conscienceless politicians play havoc with their very livelihood and existence."

The CIO Council charged that the "true reason for this entire welfare mess that has developed here in Indiana" is a "purely political one." The Council also warned that "if the actions of the obstinate Republicans in this special session continue, we taxpayers of the state can look for a sales tax, and addition to the gross income tax or additional property taxes, or perhaps all three."

San Francisco CIO Backs 4 Candidates

The San Francisco CIO Council has announced its endorsement of four candidates for the Board of Supervisors in the forthcoming elections after receiving from them and others the answers to a series of questions centering around their attitudes toward keeping rent control and quick passage of a city Fair Employment Practices ordinance.

Recommended to affiliated local unions were the candidacies of Dewey Mead, a veteran member of the board; Thomas P. O'Toole, Henry Fischer and Al Graf. The council made no endorsement for mayor, after interviewing the three major candidates, "on the ground that none of the candidates fully meets the requirements necessary for all-out labor support."

Housing Officials Told Of Nation's Home Ills

BETWEEN 30 and 40 million Americans live in homes that are "seed-beds of preventable disease, crime, juvenile delinquency and possible dissatisfaction with the American way of life."

That's what Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing told the annual conference of the National Association of Housing Officials in Washington last week.

He warned the 500 officials attending that it is "obvious" federal housing will be cut down by shortages of materials and concentration "on the very essentials of national defense." But, he added:

"We shall have only ourselves to blame if we make the mistake of transforming temporary delays into permanent inactivity . . . We cannot fall into the trap, over the next 20 years, of dealing only with super-emergency situations."

He urged, meantime, further research on housing for older people who are making up an increasingly larger proportion of the population.

SINCE THE end of the war 60 acres of ramshackle central city buildings have been razed. They are now being replaced with an over-all development that includes new office buildings, wider streets, park land and additional parking space. He advised:

"Your public bodies must work as brothers, not as rivals . . . Unless they work as a team, nothing will happen in actual redevelopment . . . And redevelopment cannot be a thing apart. The whole city must be improving, too."

Rep. Rains (D. Ala.) hit at people who arbitrarily call "socialistic" any government program they may dislike. He was a little tired, he explained, of having his own votes characterized as "socialistic," and declared there is "a very great dividing line between a free government and a communistic-socialistic setup."

Federal aid for housing, he made clear, is not "socialistic."

UAW Cites Steps To End Joblessness

PRES. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, with the approval of the union's executive board, last week demanded maintenance of present production schedules "until defense work is available to take up the slack in unemployment."

The request was sent during a meeting of the executive board in Detroit to President Truman, Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson and Administrator Manly Fleischmann of the National Production Authority.

The auto industry, like many others, has been hard hit by unemployment growing out of failure to mesh in defense jobs with cutbacks in civilian production. Reuther offered a six-point program, aimed at giving workers the same protection accorded wealthy corporations.

In addition to maintenance of present production schedules, it included:

Appropriation of federal funds to enable state unemployment compensation systems to give 40 hours' pay a week to workers laid off as a result of defense mobilization policies.

Integration of defense work in civilian plants "to assure that unused productive capacity is fully used for defense production."

A campaign to increase collections of scrap metals.

A technical task force to coordinate research on substitute materials for copper and other critically scarce materials.

Convention Preliminaries Start Next Week

The 13th annual National CIO Convention will open in New York on Nov. 5, but the preliminaries will get under way there next week. The CIO executive officers and vice presidents will meet Oct. 30. The CIO Executive Board will meet Oct. 31 and probably Nov. 1. In addition, the convention Resolutions, Officers' Reports and Constitution Committees will begin their work of preparing reports on Oct. 29.

The convention itself will start with an address of welcome by Mayor Vincent Impellitteri of New York and Pres. Philip Murray's keynote speech. An impressive speakers' list has been prepared, with addresses by government officials, political figures and leaders of the national and international labor movements. Invocations opening each session will be delivered by some of the country's most prominent clergymen. (Story, Page 3.)

TWUA Brings Hope To Lawrence, Mass.

Lawrence, Mass., was a paradox—poverty in the midst of almost nationwide plenty provided by defense expenditures. The reason: its main source of employment, the textile mills, had few orders and few jobs.

Things were getting no better fast when the CIO Textile Workers decided on a course of action. A union delegation came to Washington and with the help of TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve saw government officials. It returned home with promises that more orders for textiles would be sent to Lawrence mills. Now in place of despair, there is hope—and increased prestige for TWUA throughout the community. (Story, Page 7.)

CIO Credited With Defeat Of Unjust Tax Bill In House

THE FINAL fate of the new tax legislation was uncertain at press time.

But—largely because of CIO efforts—it was almost certain that whatever bill is passed will be at least slightly more fair to low income taxpayers than the first compromise measure reported out originally by the House and Senate conferees.

In the biggest legislative upset of the present session, the House on Oct. 16 rejected the $5.732 billion tax-increase bill drafted by the conferees. The vote was 203 to 157.

Rejection of the bill—generally regarded as a clear slap at the George-Millikin-Taft-Byrd group responsible for the measure, came about as the result of a strange combination of liberal Democratic and conservative Republican votes.

A total of 64 Democrats, most of whom were merely registering votes of protest against the many unfair provisions of the measure, joined 139 Republicans, who on the whole were simply making a gesture seeking to embarrass the administration, to make up the majority voting to send the bill back to conference.

The New York Times reported that the Democratic opposition consisted almost entirely of "members from industrial districts with heavy labor union constituencies."

The Times said that "one factor" in the bill's defeat "was a letter from the Congress of Industrial Organizations, received by Democrats shortly before the voting, urging rejection of the bill."

The CIO letter (see separate story, this page) had branded the compromise tax-bill grossly inadequate and completely unfair to persons with low incomes.

Following the House's action, the CIO called upon the conferees to report out "a tax bill which raises considerably more revenue than the original one they reported out and which raises that additional revenue in a more equitable and fair manner."

IN A letter, Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., listed eight ways of improving the measure and asked the conferees to "accept the best and reject the worst features of the House and Senate bills."

The conference committee, however, made no serious effort to produce an adequate bill "observing the principles of equity and equality of sacrifice," as the CIO had requested. Instead of increasing the tax yield by increasing taxes on high individual and corporate incomes, they simply reduced the total tax yield by $14 million.

This reduction, however, came as the result of their giving a slightly better break to taxpayers in the low income brackets. The only significant change was a reduction in the tax increase for taxpayers in the lowest tax bracket—under $2000—of .5%.

THAT meant a boost for this lowest group of 11% instead of 11.5%. The increase for most other taxpayers was left at about 11.75%, as set forth in the original compromise.

No change was made in the relatively small boost in corporation income taxes which had been proposed in the first conference measure.

The Senate, apparently in an effort to influence House action, acted somewhat out of turn and voted its approval of the new compromise only a short time after it had been reported out.

The House, which usually acts first on tax matters, did not take up the compromise until Friday.

CIO Protest Felt In Vote On Tax Bill

A LETTER from Nathan E. Cowan, CIO Legislative Dept. director, is widely credited with causing liberal Democratic representatives to vote against the tax bill reported out by the Senate and House conferees.

The letter was sent to Vice Pres. Barkley, Senate Democratic Leader McFarland (Ariz.), Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.) and Democratic House Leader McCormack (D. Mass.). It said:

"The bill fails to observe the basic principals of equity and equality of sacrifice.

"We have no quarrel with the need for raising federal revenue. We believe, as we have testified before both House and Senate committees, that at least an additional $10 billion in revenue can and must be raised. . . . However, such increased taxes must be borne equitably by all groups in our population.

"While low and middle-income individuals have their taxes increased 11.75% under the terms of the bill, starting at $28,300 for single individuals and $57,600 for a married couple, the tax increase is scaled down until the recipient of a $1 million income would have his taxes increased by only 1.5%.

"THE incidence, therefore, of this new tax increase falls most heavily upon the low-income individuals."

The excise tax increase was attacked because it would "impose a greater burden upon the low and middle-income individuals" and "could lead us through the back door into a national sales tax. . . . "

The letter added that "the tax increase for corporations is insufficient."

It said that both the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee stated that corporations would still be left with profits after taxes of $20 billion following the contemplated increases.

The letter quoted the report of the House committee which said:

"Thus, after considering the increases in corporate taxes by this bill, in 1951 their profits will be from about 180 to 230% of corporation profits after taxes during the last war."

Heads Health Institute

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers last week announced the appointment of Dr. Trawick H. Stubbs as director of the union's Health Institute in Detroit.

Dr. Stubbs, who was formerly Dean of the Medical School at the Univ. of Missouri and director of the university's hospital, will also act as medical consultant for other activities of the UAW Social Security dept.

NAM Please Note: Why Not A National Profits Week?

PRES. WILLIAM H. Ruffin of the National Association of Manufacturers has been opening his mouth and putting his foot in it—again.

Ruffin is a southern textile manufacturer. As NAM president, he does a lot of talking about high wages. As a boss, he doesn't pay 'em.

In a speech in St. Louis co-sponsored by the NAM, St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and the Associated Industries of Missouri, Ruffin belabored his audience for not putting in some good words for profits. Profits are high enough, according to government and private statistics, to command a wide assortment of good words.

"Profits are, and have been, good for every man, woman and child in the United States," he solemnly proclaimed.

He chided them—and all businessmen—for having reached the point where they are "apologetic" about profits.

"We've come almost to the point," he asserted, "where we speak of profits, if at all, in whispers . . .

"It's about time we businessmen stood up and told our fellow Americans what's right about profits."

He didn't go on from there. Instead he went to Little Rock, Ark., where he made the same speech at another meeting sponsored by the NAM, the Associated Industries of Arkansas and the Rotary Club.

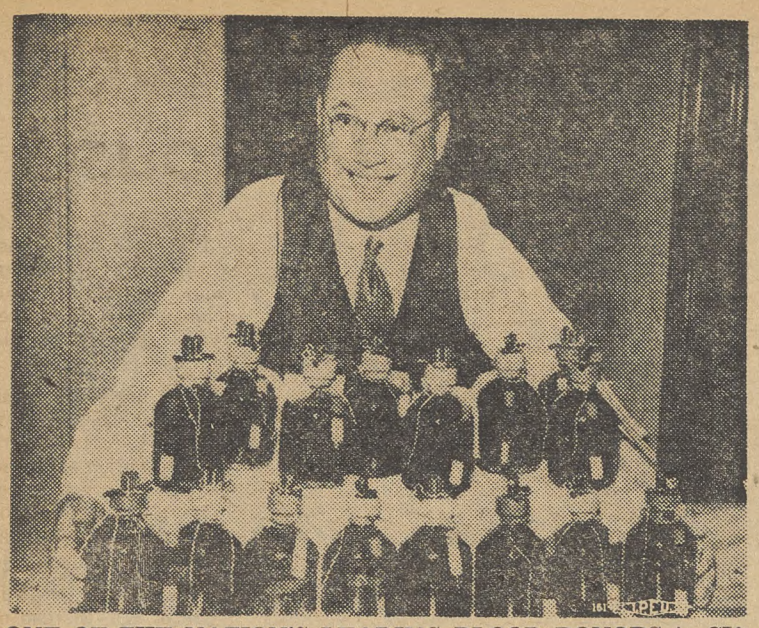
A few days later he was at Lake Placid, N. Y., for the NAM's 22d Institute on Industrial Relations.

There he warned the assembled businessmen-students to prepare themselves for the "practical collapse" of wage stabilization.

He said he found the indications "ominous" that the Wage Stabilization Board and perhaps other government agencies "have no intention, in a real show-down," of making the board's policies really work.



ONE OF THE NATION'S LEADING BLOOD DONORS is CIO Clothing Worker official Leo Polk. On Sept. 17, Polk, who is ACWA's Detroit Board business representative, gave his 72nd pint since Pearl Harbor.

Hartley Flops As Lobbyist For Firm Selling Harmful Drugs

SEN. TAFT'S partner in the legislative infamy bearing their names, ex-Rep. Hartley (R. N.J.), has registered again as a lobbyist.

This time he's being paid $5000 for three months work, plus about $350 expenses, to try to keep the sale of harmful drugs from being put under stricter regulation.

Hartley registered Sept. 28 as working for the Western Medical Corp., Chicago, to defeat the drug sales bills sponsored by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Rep. Durham (D. N.C.). He said that the firm he represents provides medicines for epileptics, and that the bills, if approved, would put it out of business.

Actually, the bills merely tighten up the narcotics laws by regulating the sale and labeling of harmful drugs and patent medicine. Any firm "put out of business" by it would only be one which is now realizing most of its income by distributing a product potentially harmful if not used only as directed by a physician.

Washington experts familiar with the Western Medical Corp.'s business say that the medicine it sells for "epilepsy" contains the drug phenobarbitol, and that it is possible for persons addicted to obtain as much as nine grains a day from the firm by mail.

As chairman of the House Labor Committee in the 80th Congress, Hartley was cosponsor of the Taft-Hartley Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947.

Despite his $1666-a-month fee from Western Medical to oppose the bills, Hartley hasn't done so well. The House passed Durham's bill last August. Last week, in spite of Hartley, the Senate approved Humphrey's measure by a voice vote.

Galaxy Of Speakers Listed For CIO Convention

THE 13TH annual National CIO convention scheduled for New York's Hotel Commodore on Nov. 5, will get under way with an address of welcome by Mayor Vincent Impellitteri.

Cardinal Spellman will give the invocation, after which CIO Pres. Philip Murray will deliver his keynote speech. Incidentally, Murray will speak on Oct. 26 at the CIO Maritime Union convention at Manhattan Center, New York.

An impressive list of speakers has been compiled for other sessions.

Secy.-Gen. J. H. Oldenbroek of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D. N. Y.), will speak the afternoon of Nov. 5. At the convention banquet that night, Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle, Administrator Manley Fleischmann of the National Production Authority and Murray will give talks.

Other addresses:

Nov. 6, Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston and Mrs. Eugenie Anderson, U. S. Ambassador to Denmark.

Nov. 7, Assistant Secy. of Defense Anna Rosenberg, Chairman Nathan Feinsinger of the Wage Stabilization Board and Exec. Secy. Lester Granger of the National Urban League.

Nov. 8, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R.-L. N. Y.) and Pres. W. P. Kennedy of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Rabbi Israel Goldstein will deliver the invocation on Nov. 6, Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill on the following day, and Rev. Sandy Ray on Nov. 8.

Elections will be held Nov. 9.

A conference on labor law called by the CIO Legal Dept. will be held the afternoon and evening of Nov. 9 and throughout Nov. 10. Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman will discuss "Civil Liberties and National Security" at a closing dinner.

CIO officials and convention committees will be meeting throughout the week prior to the convention. The convention resolution, officers reports and constitutions committees will begin sessions Oct. 29. The CIO executive officers and vice presidents will meet Oct. 30, and the Executive Board Oct. 31 and probably Nov. 1.

Taft Admits His Law Fails To Oust Reds

IN A POLICY statement—joined in by Sen. Taft (R. O.)—the Senate Labor-Management Relations subcommittee declared Oct. 16 that the Taft-Hartley Act has failed to knock Communists out of the American labor movement.

This was a surprising admission by Taft, who in co-authoring the law four years ago had led the fight to force all union officers to sign non-Communist affidavits before their unions could use the services of the National Labor Relations Board. At that time, Taft had argued that this would rid the labor movement of Communists.

But it didn't. The red-dominated unions merely have boycotted the board or relegated their Communist officials to backstage roles so that "fronts" could sign non-Communist affidavits. In some cases, union officials have "resigned" from the party.

In last week's statement, the Senate subcommittee said quite frankly: "The problem of the Communist-dominated union . . . still remains to be solved."

SEN. Humphrey (D. Minn.) chairman of the subcommittee, announced that the group would soon launch a broad investigation of left-wing unions in defense plants.

As a prelude to the investigation, the committee voted to publish as a Senate document the reports of the CIO trial committees which expelled Communist-dominated unions. Humphrey said that he regarded these documents as "of considerable historical significance."

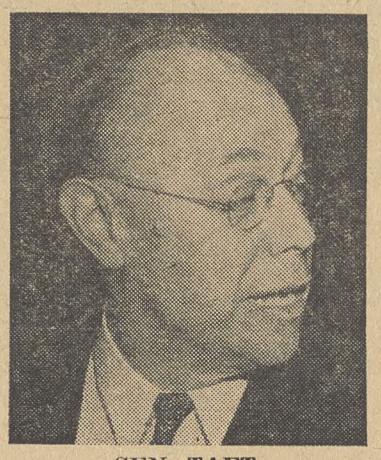
He added that the CIO reports "demonstrate how an alert and democratically governed organization destroyed Communist infiltration by the due process" and that they "illuminate the nature of Communist strategy as a conspiracy to subvert the unions as democratic institutions and to convert them into bases for the extension of Communist power."

Taft Does The Obvious, Announces Candidacy

IT TOOK a bit of doing, but it was done. And the first hat to go into the 1952 political ring, seeking the Republican nomination for the Presidency, got thrown last week.

On the sweatband were three initials: "R.A.T."

The staging was well-done and what stage hands would call "good theater." All of the modern age's flair for publicity techniques combined to make the setting, a crowded room in the Senate Office Building, as impressive as possible.



SEN. TAFT
Makes Third Try

Kleig lights, set up to give just the proper photogenic shadows, glared brightly. Microphones, adjusted carefully, gave just the right vibrance to the speaker's voice.

AND fastidious ushers handed out a full-text libretto of the program to follow as they conducted the nation's top political reporters to their seats in the plush interior.

When some 200 of the latter, a score of newsreel and TV cameramen, and a flock of news photogs were all in their places, it happened.

A flashbulb popped. Sen. Taft, "Mr. Republican" of Ohio, walked into the room.

Then the obvious was made—obvious. While motion picture cameras clicked and more flashbulbs gleamed, the cynosure of all eyes, beaming broadly, took over the microphones.

The time had come for him to reveal all. He did so.

He was not—Sen. Taft read from his prepared statement—going to stop running for the Presidency.

Looking coyly like a drawing by Dr. Seuss, the Senator went through his libretto, consisting of four "statements" which the ushers had previously handed to the press.

He read them pretty well. There were only six sentences where he departed—by a word or two—from the text.

After he had finished, one reporter whispered: "He read those things like he really believed them."

The amazing thing is that he probably did.

"I AM GOING to run," Taft declared, "because I believe I can conduct the only kind of campaign which will elect a Republican to office."

There was real conviction in his voice as he said it.

Then the man who, through 12 long years in the Senate, has fought consistently nearly all measures designed to help labor and the common people, said something that made it difficult for some listeners to believe their ears.

Urcel Daniel of the Bureau of National Affairs asked Taft how much labor support he expected to get. Taft actually replied that he expected to have it!

He predicted "an even break among union members and a majority vote of all workers in the presidential race."

Again, he really seemed to believe it. An insult to labor's intelligence obviously had not been intended.

Taft declared, however, that he was confident that he would be both nominated and elected.

And that led to perhaps the neatest summing up of the whole show by Republican Gov. Earl Warren of California, who commented:

"It isn't as if this is the first time he had thought that."

(This will be Taft's third try for the nomination.)

Who Said Taft Is Not For Sale?

THOSE who were naive enough to wonder what led up to the shift of position of Sen. Taft (R. O.) on legislation providing aid to medical education no longer need do so.

The powerful doctor's lobby, which won another victory against the people Oct. 4 when Taft helped scuttle the very bill he had helped to draft, is passing the hat to help him in his campaign to get elected President of the United States.

A letter pleading for contributions has been sent out by the Draft Taft Clubs of America over the signature of Dr. Harry M. Hedge, chairman of the club's "medical committee."

The text said that the committee believed "your interest will be best served" by Taft's nomination.

"He has consistently opposed the Administration's efforts to develop a nation-wide compulsory sickness and hospitalization plan for our country," Hedge continued. "Because of your sepecific stake in Taft's election, we believe you will also want a minimum of 10 one-dollar memberships with which we will enroll you and nine of your friends."

The Senate was flabbergasted early this month when Taft suddenly withdrew his support of the $300-million bill providing federal aid to medical schools over a five-year period to relieve the acute shortage of doctors, nurses and other medical personnel. This resulted in the bill's being sent back to committee for further study.

Taft, who sponsored the bill with five other Republicans and seven Democrats, had campaigned actively for its passage for more than two years. Last February he signed the unanimous report of the Senate Labor Committee endorsing it as "a practicable short range emergency solution of an immediate and urgent problem."

Unless medical schools are immediately expanded to take care of the thousands of qualified premedical students now turned away each year for lack of facilities and funds, it is estimated that there will be a national shortage of 22,000 doctors, 5000 dentists and 100,000 nurses by 1954.

WHEN Bill to Aid Medical Schools came to the floor this month, Taft abruptly claimed that he had decided to oppose it in view of the huge defense expenditures facing the nation.

His reversal coincided with an about-face on the measure by the American Medical Association. Last year the AMA endorsed an almost identical measure, passed unanimously by the Senate. That bill died when the House failed to act on it.

This year, however, the AMA —and Taft—came out against the bill.

Are You Listening?

If listening to radio commercials on a crowded street car or bus, after a hard day's work, were our greatest problem, the country would be a lot better off—or at least, a lot less nerve-wracked.

There are, as any fourth grade school kid can point out, more serious problems facing the nation. Nevertheless, it is good that the Supreme Court has decided to review the forced-listening, captive-audience issue involved in street car commercial broadcasting.

Forced listening to commercials while riding home to dinner involves the principle of the individual's right not to listen—a right which is becoming more difficult to practise every day.

Since corporations have been moonstruck with the idea of presenting programs of conservative 19th century economics—on company time, and on company property—to their employes, the issue becomes increasingly important. We hope that the Supreme Court, after listening freely and attentively to the arguments in the case, will defend that principle of the right not to listen.

Sound Advice

Paul Hoffman, the former head of the government's Marshall Plan agency, has had a better than average chance to see both democracy and dictatorship at work. So, his caution against fear and panic—reprinted, in part, elsewhere on this page—should be carefully read and heeded.

Perhaps more than at any time since Franklin Roosevelt's inaugural in 1933, we have—in the field of civil liberties—nothing to fear so much as fear itself. Fear can play directly into the hands of the dictators quicker and more effectively than sabotage or subversion.

In Congress last week, two members of the House—one a Fair Deal liberal, one a middle-of-the-roader—have been forced to deny patently ridiculous charges of "communism."

An able public servant, who has rendered yeoman service to the nation's fight against Soviet aggression, has been given thumbs-down treatment by a Senate sub-committee because he had been called—on the most unsubstantial kind of "evidence"—a friend of the reds.

In every part of the country, in both private and public life, charges are being hurled with gay abandon—and the victims face loss of job opportunity or the ruin of a career.

The smear campaign will grow as election day 1952 comes closer. It won't be directed primarily at Commies or near-Commies. It will be directed at good citizens whose ideas happen to displease other citizens. If the smear campaign continues, you, your neighbor, your pastor or your union are equally liable to be its target.

Sen. McCarthy, the fast-talking man from Wisconsin, deserves much of the discredit for promoting this reign of smear and suspicion. He has a host of imitators and would-be imitators.

Their plans will go awry only if average, decent American citizens—in the unions and outside them—throw off the tentacles of fear or panic. Hysteria, as Paul Hoffman has pointed out, can be a good deal more dangerous than the most energetic efforts of the tiny band of harassed Communists who try to guess on Tuesday what Stalin's speech on Monday really meant.

The Operation Was Successful, But—

There's Too Much Fear

By PAUL G. HOFFMAN

Excerpts of an address by the former head of the Economic Cooperation Administration, now director of the Ford Foundation, when he received the annual "Freedom Award."

THE THOUGHT-CONTROL of dictatorship is imposed by force, but discussion, criticism and debate can be stifled by fear as well as by force. Persecution by public opinion can be powerful as purges and pogroms.

School teachers, Government clerks, Government officials, and even businessmen can be frightened out of their rights under the first amendment as effectively as if that amendment were repealed; and frightened men are at best irresponsible in their actions and at worst dangerous. Of all the forms of tyranny over the mind of man, none is more terrible than fear.

Of late, some of our people—often good people—have been blindly spreading just this kind of fear.

In their zeal to combat communism they have been betrayed into using methods and measures which impair the sources of our strength and thus play directly into the hands of the Kremlin.

They are making criticism socially dangerous. They are forcing conformity through fear. They are ready to pillory anyone who holds an unpopular view or supports an unpopular cause. As a result, too many of our fellow citizens have been afraid to speak out. In far too many cases, decisions, often decisions in high places, have been influenced by fear.

In short, the danger of Communist penetration and disruption has been compounded by the spread of panic. All of this in a nation which has grown to greatness and glory because it has recognized the rights of nonconformists and dissenters.

IF WE WANT to assert the free nature of man and strengthen our free society, we must insist that within the law of libel and slander, the unlimited right to criticize must be maintained.

This right is meaningless unless it extends to the thoughts with which we disagree—in the words of a great Chief Justice of the United States, freedom for the thought we hate.

I, for example, disagree most intensely with the Daily Worker's talking of every opponent as a Fascist. I also disagree intensely with those who make reckless charges of Communist sympathies.

But I would not for a moment suppress these irresponsible critics. They must not be suppressed. They must be answered.

We must remember too that a free society is a just society. Everybody concerned about freedom in America must be concerned about justice, too.

One reason why we must encourage criticism is that we must encourage people to point out such injustices as remain in America and to fight for their elimination. An unjust society cannot long endure. An injustice against one puts all justice in danger.

Only by safeguarding the rights of minorities do we safeguard the rights of majorities. Racial and religious discrimination, special privilege, and inequality of opportunity for growth are on the wane in this country; but, where they still exist, these and other injustices must be discovered and rooted out.

THESE CONVICTIONS of mine are at best merely guidelines to a program of action. The forming of that program must be a task for our best minds—for men of great stature.

The aggressive expansionism of the Kremlin has made the rebuilding of the military strength of America and the free world vital to the maintenance of the peace. But something more is needed effectively to counter totalitarian plans for world domination.

We must dedicate ourselves anew to making in America a demonstration of a free, just, and unafraid society at work. No police system could keep the news of this demonstration from reaching the peoples of the world, even those behind the iron curtain.

Our forefathers projected this demonstration by framing a Constitution which firmly grounded on the nature of man combined freedom and justice.

We must not let their aspirations escape us; we must push steadily forward toward the realization of the American dream.

Railroads Grab Tax Rebates, Fight Seaway

By MILTON PLUMB

"If you live in a glass house, don't throw stones," Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.) told the American railroads, in remarks published in the Oct. 16 "Congressional Record."

Rabaut cited over-all figures on the amount of "certificates of necessity" issued to American railroads under the rapid tax amortization program. He revealed that a total of $638,840,349 in such certificates had been approved. (See story, this page.)

This amount is more than the total entire cost of the U.S. share of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, which the railway lobbies have spent almost unlimited funds to defeat. Yet, the railroads' chief basis of criticism has been the cost of the seaway's construction.

While other groups, notably local transportation and power interests, have also lobbied against the seaway for selfish ends, the chief source of financial support for the anti-seaway bloc has been the Association of American Railroads.

The facts brought out by Rabaut's remarks highlight one of the most glaring evils of present tax-loopholes. It is well-known in Washington that many of the biggest corporations, which receive billions of dollars in gifts of the taxpayers' money through certificates of necessity and "depletion allowances," use vast sums of money to fight progressive legislation.

Moreover, the railroads' sudden interest in expanding to the extent these certificates indicate is in marked contrast to their attitude from the end of the war through 1950. It will be recalled that the railroads bitterly resisted all efforts of the CIO Railroad Workers to persuade them to improve facilities during these profitable years.

Now, however, when they can charge most of the cost of improvements to American taxpayers, they are more willing to make the necessary improvements.

Rabaut did not name any of the railroads involved.

Because of the importance of the people's knowing exactly how they are being made to foot the bill, The CIO News undertook an independent investigation to document his charges.

"Watch out for that new crane operator; he's quite a card."

Rabaut Wises Up Congress On Rail Tax Write-Off

CONGRESS on Oct. 16 received a compilation of data showing that "the outspoken railroad opposition" to the St. Lawrence Seaway "has not been solicitous of the national budget in seeking rapid tax write-off privileges as they have been in criticizing the seaway on its cost of construction."

Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.), presented the facts.

He disclosed that a total of 157 "certificates of necessity" allowing the railroads to write off 65% to 85% of a total of $636,840,349 have been granted under the rapid amortization provisions of the Defense Production Act.

The total share of the United States in the proposed joint seaway undertaking with Canada is only $566 million. Canada's share has been set at $252 million.

Rabaut pointed out that the total amortization that has actually been allowed for rail equipment, according to separate over-all compilations of the Bureau of the Census, comes to more than $562 million. Moreover, applications for certificates totalling nearly $150 million more are pending.

Included in his remarks was the text of a letter from Michigan's Gov. Williams, warning that Canada intends to complete the seaway without further delay and that the need for U.S. action is "urgent."

Williams said that the Canadian plan involved major changes in engineering plans. He added that it would provide access for ocean vessels to Detroit, but would not include channels to Lakes Huron, Superior and Michigan.

"All states and municipalities, but particularly those located north and west of Detroit, should view this revision with deep concern," Williams said.

State Department Tells Of World Trade Boon

ONE OF THE reasons for the CIO's support of the efforts of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Economic Cooperation Administration is spelled out in a new State Dept. publication.

The pamphlet, American Labor and World Trade (Publication No. 4254), doesn't even mention workers in other countries. It tells what foreign trade—exports and imports—have meant to the American worker in terms of steady jobs. It adds:

"World trade is NOT a one-way street for any country's exports. World buyers, therefore, must find a way to pay for our goods, and those of other countries, in order to buy. The only way to do so in the long run is by selling their products to the United States and to each other."

With higher wages, workers in other countries will be able to buy more goods. A lot of these goods will have to come from the United States, and American workers will have jobs producing them. Another lot will have to be made on machinery turned out by American workers—that means more jobs in this country.

It's as simple as that.

The CIO, of course, supports higher wages for workers in other countries for additional reasons. One of them is that a worker ground down by poverty, and no hope of climbing out of it, is easy prey for Communist and Fascist propaganda.

The State Dept. pamphlet boils down U. S. trade policies to two clear aims: "the expansion of general trade among all nations," and "the establishment of this expanding trade on a mutually advantageous basis of fair practices."

Of prime importance in attaining these aims is the reciprocal trade agreement program, which the CIO strongly supports. Reciprocal agreements are now in effect with 43 nations, covering 75% of our foreign trade.

"In concrete terms," says the booklet, "they represent a collection of horse trades— U. S. concessions balanced against foreign concessions."

THEN the State Dept. took a look at what foreign trade has meant to the American worker and his well-being:

"Since 1934, when the trade agreements program was initiated, employment in the U. S. has risen from 41 million to more than 60 million . . . Industrial production has more than doubled. Consumer spending has more than tripled.

"Wages and salaries in manufacturing industries have been multiplied by four and one-half. Average gross weekly earnings, in dollars, are three times as large. And the domestic economy, since 1945, has provided jobs for some 13 millions released from the armed forces.

Austrian Labor Anti-CP Stand Lauded

THE AUSTRIAN labor movement received the plaudits of the CIO at its recent convention for its victorious fight against communism.

They were delivered by Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, in a speech at the congress of the Austrian Trade Union Federation. Reuther spoke in German.

"On no trade union front," he said, "have the disciples of the new dictatorship, the Communists, been more decisively and overwhelmingly frustrated and defeated than here in Austria, by you and your comrades.

"You have stopped the Communists cold because you know and understand the source of Communist power. You know and understand that the fight against the totalitarianism of the East cannot be won alone by tanks and planes, but must be waged as well on the economic and political field. . . .

"Because you have not been content merely with repeating the negativism of anti-communism, but have concentrated on the practical job of making democracy work on practical bread and butter terms—for this reason you have proven to be the most effective of anti-Communists.

"How much stronger the whole free world would be today if it realized fully that by cleaning up its remaining cesspools of insecurity and poverty, of slums and disease, of discrimination and colonialism, how much weaker the Communist appeal would be without these legitimate grievances to exploit demagogically."

Reuther also expressed the hope that an Austrian peace treaty could be signed soon.

Jap Women Unionists Visit CIO Office

THE CIO is playing host at its national headquarters in Washington to many foreign trade union visitors these days. Last week it was a group of six Japanese women who came to see how the CIO runs its affairs.

The women unionists are here for three months to study practical trade union methods and educational work.

Five of the Japanese visitors are union officials. The sixth conducts a weekly nationwide radio program on women workers. They represent a variety of job and union experience in textiles, electrical and iron manufacturing, and in the department store, newspaper and telephone fields.

MISS Kikue Takeda heads the women's section of a department store local and holds various other union offices, including that of chief of the women's section, Tokyo Council of Trade Unions. (Women unionists in Japan belong to a section separate from the men.)

Miss Chiyoko Kishimoto, chief of the women's section, Natl. Federation of Telecommunication Employes Union, has been a telephone worker since 1933.

Mrs. Michiko Watanabe, organizer for the Japan Federation of Trade Unions, has been chief since 1947 of the women's section of the federation in the prefect of Ehime.

Mrs. Tomi Funayama is vice-chief of the union in the spinning mill where she has been employed since 1937.

Mrs. Tamako Ogawa is employed as an office worker in an iron manufacturing plant, and is chief of the union's women's section.

Mrs. Koyoko Nishi is a moderator on a weekly national radio network program for women workers. She is a member of the newspaper union and the New Japan Women's League (similar to our League of Women Voters).

Brooklyn Plant Drives Home ECA's Program

A NEW, ultra-modern clothing factory—to the design of which the CIO Clothing Workers contributed—was used recently to allay one of the strongest fears that besets European workers.

Union and management joined to show the new plant of Eagle Clothes, Inc., in Brooklyn, to a group of 16 French labor, industry and government representatives here for a six-weeks tour of key industrial plants under sponsorship of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

The object was to demonstrate to the visitors that technological advances and increased productivity don't have to cause unemployment and lower working conditions. Another aim was to show that labor and management can work together for the common good.

The idea that increased productivity means unemployment or undesirable changes in living and working conditions is widely held by workers in most countries receiving Marshall Plan aid. That is what often happened in the past.

THE Communists have been using it to fight the ECA productivity drive, which aims at boosting production with labor as well as management sharing in the profits, and with the public able to buy at a lower price.

The Eagle plant was opened three months ago with ceremonies in which Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers participated. In a speech at the time, he said its planning demonstrates that "enlightened employers can and do think in terms of efficient production."

"It is an expansion," he said, "of the harmonious relations between the ACWA and one of the outstanding firms in the clothing industry."

The plant features the first application of the assembly line to hand operations in the clothing industry.

Working conditions were scientifically designed to provide a minimum of fatigue and a maximum of comfort. Production is expected to jump, quality control to improve and manufacturing costs to fall.

ACWA Vice Pres. Murray Weinstein told the French delegation that the union had participated in planning the factory and production system to guarantee that the workers' interests would be protected. The company and union have had contracts for 30 years.

VISITORS representing three of the anti-Communist union organizations, the Force Ouvriere, the Christian Trade Union, and the Foremen's & Supervisors' Union, wanted to know what the workers got out of the glittering new plant.

The piece rates paid the workers remain the same as in the old factory, he said. But they can produce more, so they have an increase in their take-home pay. The number of workers and the number of supervisory employes, he added, has actually increased since the plant was open.

He also pointed out that improved production techniques mean a better product which the consumer can buy at a lower cost —the American way of stimulating sales and maintaining full employment.

Union and management jointly presented a plaque to the visitors as a demonstration of the amiable labor-management relations they share.

Ohio Council Issues 'Compensation Facts'

The Ohio CIO Council has published the third edition of its booklet, Workmen's Compensation Facts, and has dedicated it to the "corps of local union 'watchdogs'."

The publication is intended for the use of compensation committee members, local union officers, shop stewards or others.

Lawrence, Mass., Hopes Washington Ends Slump

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

THIS IS the story of a city that is fighting mad—and how the CIO Textile Workers Union got it to fight for its own survival.

Look down on Lawrence, Mass., from an airplane and the thing you see first is the mile or more of textile mills that line the banks of the Merrimack River.

Years ago they used to say that the Merrimack turned more spindles than any other river in the world. That was in the days when water power turned the wheels.

Walk down Essex st., Lawrence's "main stem," and you see hundreds of people any working day. They aren't shoppers because their arms aren't loaded with bundles.

Most of them are "just taking the air," they'll tell you, because Lawrence—like many other textile cities in New England—is caught in the grip of an unemployment problem such as it hasn't known for almost 20 years.

Things are tough in Lawrence, very tough indeed. A few weeks ago there wasn't a glimmer of hope that things were going to improve much in the near future.

Textile workers were growing resigned to becoming a statistic in some economist's brochure on "what ails New England's textile industry."

Week after week they went to the unemployment compensation office (located in what was once a textile mill) and signed for their checks. They were the lucky ones.

Many of them weren't eligible for benefits because they didn't earn enough last year. Others had exhausted their benefits weeks ago.

Although it is one of the smaller Massachusetts cities, Lawrence could claim the doubtful distinction of having one out of every five unemployed in the state.

Jampacked into the less than seven square miles that make up the city are slightly more than 80,000 residents. The bulk of the working force is tied to the textile industry and has been since Lawrence was "planned" by New England textile barons a little over a century ago.

Typical of the slump in which Lawrence found itself was the Wood mill. Lawrencians point it out to visitors as the largest woolen and worsted mill in the world, six stories high and almost a third of a mile long.

When things were normal, it employed about 7800 workers. In recent weeks it had skidded down to less than 2900. Other mills in the city were affected similarly.

ELSEWHERE in New England, away from the textile centers, things were humming. The metropolitan papers carried page after page of "help wanted" ads.

Many Lawrence workers looked these over and mentally balanced their years of experience as textile workers, their ties to the community and their natural reluctance to pull up stakes against the prospect of having an honest-to-goodness paycheck again.

Some of them headed for the areas where defense contracts are keeping employment high and where new arrivals are greeted with job offers almost as soon as they step off the bus.

Most of them elected to stay on, to sweat it out and take whatever hand fate might deal.

The people were dejected. What was the matter, they asked themselves, with an area that was neck-deep in depression while the rest of the country was experiencing a boom and national employment was never so high?

Part of the answer they knew too well. Lawrence is a one-industry town, and when that industry hits the toboggan, everyone—merchant, professional man and mill worker alike—feels it.

Most of the city's big textile plants are under contract to TWUA. Employes at the Wood mill and its sister plant, the Ayer mill, are organized in Local 227, TWUA's largest woolen and worsted local.

The mounting seriousness of the situation was causing concern to union officials, particularly to Arthur W. Brown, area director for the union in Lawrence.

Brown conferred with TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve who is in Washington where he is serving on the Wage Stabilization Board. They came up with a plan that promises to give quick relief.

In 48 hours the plan was being translated into action. Brown announced that a delegation from Local 227 would go to Washington and hammer away at the "brass" to get immediate aid for Lawrence.

The idea electrified the community. Business men and mill employes saw in it the first really concrete effort to relieve the situation. Gloomy predictions that Lawrence was going to be a "ghost town" were silenced overnight.

LAWRENCE'S daily paper got solidly behind the idea. The managing editor, who also serves as chairman of the Greater Lawrence Citizens' Committee for Industrial Development, addressed the eight-member delegation on the importance of their mission just before they boarded a Washington-bound plane.

A reporter for the newspaper accompanied the group and sent back extensive coverage of their activities in the capital. Favorable editorials helped boost the prestige of TWUA as a go-getting outfit.

Rieve had lined up one official after another for the Lawrence delegation to visit.

Sol Barkin, TWUA's research director, joined the group, and with Brown, sparked the interviews with representatives of the Defense Production Authority, National Production Authority and other agencies.

THE DELEGATION was warned that the Quartermaster Corps would be a tough nut to crack. But here again doors swung wide and the Lawrence people outlined their problems and got promises of help in the form of defense textile contracts.

Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin pledged his support and had a personal representative with the group much of the time. Rep. Lane (D. Mass.), himself a Lawrence resident, arranged a meeting of the entire Massachusetts congressional delegation to hear the workers' story.

A committee was formed on the Spot and has since gone to Sec. of Defense Robert Lovett to speed orders into the distressed area.

There was no time for sightseeing in the two days and three nights the group spent in Washington. Days and evenings were filled with interviews, all of them sympathetic.

Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.) promised investigation of the issuance of "certificates of necessity" for southern textile concerns to build new plants while Lawrence mills stood ready and waiting to turn out fabrics.

And on every side you can hear praise for TWUA as the organization that spearheaded a community's fight for its survival.

World Is Getting Smaller Each Day

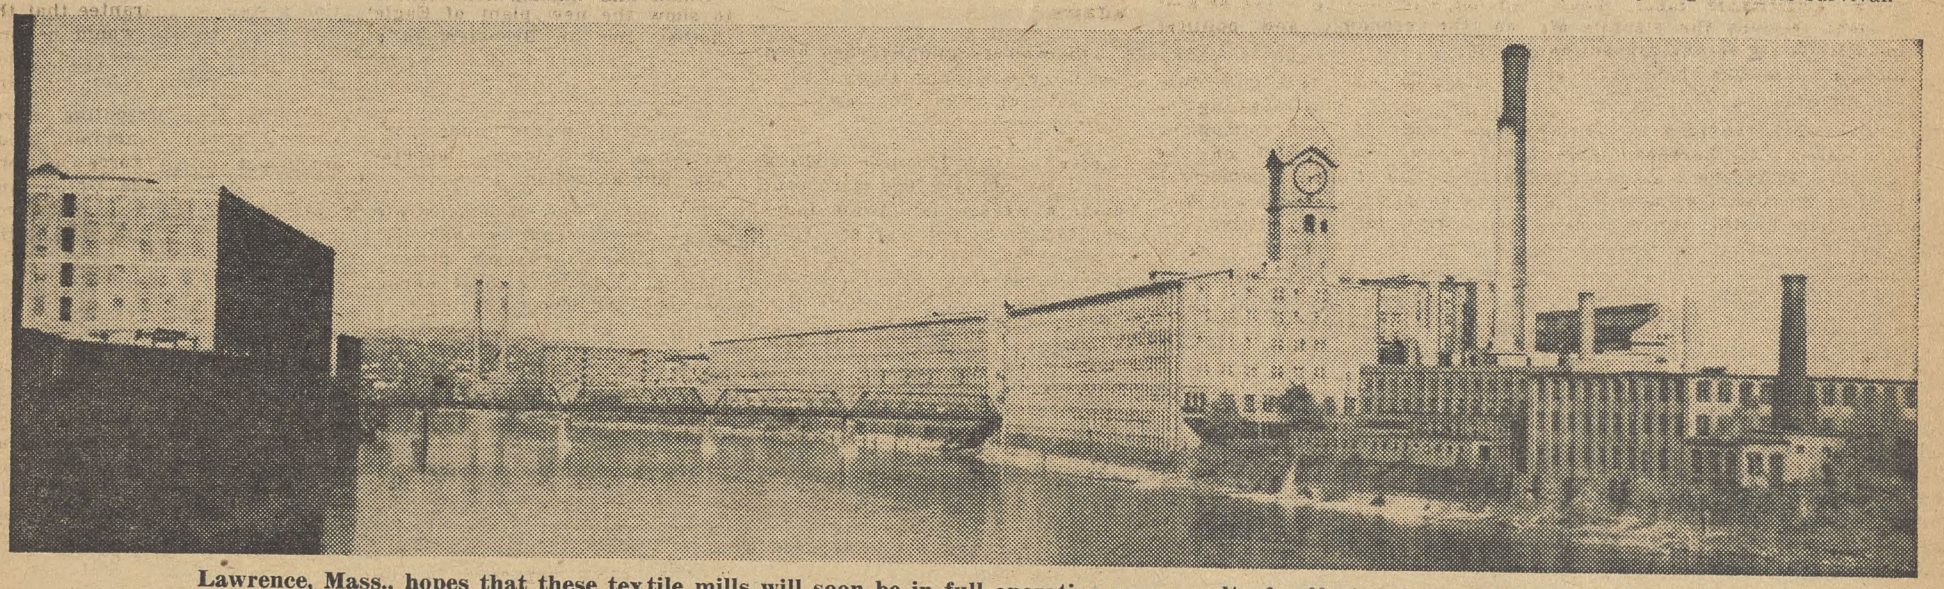
Lawrence, Mass., is thousands of miles from Italy, but the effect of the slump that hit the textile mills in the Bay State town was felt there.

Many of the textile mill employes are the children of Italian immigrants and have maintained their ties with Italy.

During recent Italian elections they wrote countless letters and sent packages to Italian relatives to get them to vote for candidates favoring democracy and against the Communists.

Came the slump and the flow of packages and the letters extolling democracy stopped; it was difficult to explain away the bad turn of events.

The Italian Communists were happy.



Lawrence, Mass., hopes that these textile mills will soon be in full operation as a result of efforts of the CIO Textile Workers.

Textile Workers Protest Plans To Move Plants South

IF THE CIO Textile Workers should cry aloud in anguish, "How stupid can you get?" nobody should be surprised.

Here is what the union has come up with lately by keeping an eye on the daily and trade papers:

1. Textron, Inc., announced it will close its cotton mill at Nashua, N.H., adding its 1000 employes to the rolls of the unemployed in a part of the country where half of all textile workers are working part time or not at all.

At a time when building materials are short, skilled construction labor is short, and machinery is approaching the critical—and when the textile industry has the capacity and the skills to meet any foreseeable demands—Textron has filed applications with the National Production Authority for structural steel to build three new plants in the south.

These would be at Williamstown, N. C., requiring 1000 tons of steel; Elizabethton, Tenn., requiring 1553 tons, and Textron, S. C., requiring 1005 tons. Total estimated cost would be more than $9.5 million. Workers will have to be trained.

In addition, the Monroe County, Miss., Board of Supervisors has agreed with Textron to build it a new cotton factory at Aberdeen, Miss., costing $2.6 million.

And on top of that, the city of Meridian, Miss., has voted to bond itself to build a plant and buy machinery which Textron will operate there.

2. The Utica and Mohawk Cotton Mills, Inc., which has operated in Utica, N.Y., for 103 years, announced it is closing its mills and moving to Clemson, S.C., within the next few months.

3. The U. S. Rubber Co. is being granted materials to build a new mill at Shelbyville, Tenn., to produce heavy duck for the armed forces.

John W. Edelman, TWUA Washington representative, as much in sorrow and wonder as in anger, filed protests against the senseless re-shufflings.

In a letter to A. Henry Thurston, director of NPA's textile division, he formally requested that Textron be denied allocations for its proposed three new plants. He also asked NPA to tell residents and officials of Monroe County and Meridian, Miss., that the necessary permits for construction of the facilities they propose to present to Textron will not be issued.

"Let me state," he wrote, "that the Textile Workers Union is firmly of the opinion that (with very minor exceptions) no additional facilities for the manufacture of textiles are needed in this country either at present or in the near future."

The Textron and Utica closings, Edelman wrote, will make idle "almost 2000 of the most skilled textile workers in the country."

"In the South most new mills are being erected away from centers of population. The help has to travel considerable distances," he continued. "Gradually houses are built near the plants. . . . In Nashua and Utica there is no need to use up materials for building houses or other necessary facilities; the workers are right there and have homes in established centers."

Edelman's Utica protest went to Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.). It pointed out that some of the people who will be thrown out of work by the proposed move have been employed by the mill for 40 and 50 years.

UAW Board Ends Two Of Three Walkouts

THE CIO Auto Workers' executive board last week asked 20,000 striking aircraft workers to return to their jobs, but recommended that 8500 other members remain out at Borg-Warner Corp. plants.

The Wage Stabilization Board, acting on instructions from President Truman, had asked the union to call off all three strikes and let the WSB make recommendations for their settlement.

The union refused to urge the Borg-Warner workers to go back on the ground that not more than 15% of that company's output is for defense production. UAW officials said the remaining 85% is used in civilian production.

The union's refusal to end the Borg-Warner tieup was tempered by the pledge to try to work out "practical arrangements" for resuming work on items essential to the defense effort.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther, of the UAW, making the recommendation that UAW members at the Douglas Aircraft Co., Long Beach, Calif., and the Wright Aeronautical Corp., Wood-Ridge, N. J., "recess" their strikes, declared that "we are fully conscious of the responsibilities placed upon us by the vital importance of the defense effort."

He charged that Wright particularly has taken advantage of the emergency "by accumulating vast profits at the taxpayer's expense while ignoring the legitimate demands of its employes."

Wage issues are involved at both Wright and Douglas plants.

THE Borg-Warner dispute centers on UAW determination to win a master agreement covering all the company's plants. The firm insists that each plant have its own contract.

In differentiating between the strike at Borg-Warner and those at the aircraft plants, Reuther declared that the UAW did not intend to permit any management to "hide behind a small amount of defense work" to avoid collective bargaining.

He urged President Truman to reconsider his certification of the Borg-Warner dispute to the WSB and expressed regret that the union had not been consulted before it was made.

THIS UP-TO-DATE food and meat market is operated by Local 3317, CIO Steelworkers, Palmerton, Pa. The idea grew out of strike relief headquarters which was established during the nine months when members of the local were on strike at the New Jersey Zinc Co. plant.

Unions Spur Meet To Protect Alcoholic Beverage Industry

THE FOUNDATION for a united front to protect the legal alcoholic beverage industry against all comers — including the bootlegger—was laid at a recent meeting in New York called by the National Coordinating Committee of the Beverage Industry.

The committee was formed two years ago at the instance of CIO and AFL unions in the industry interested in protecting the jobs and living standards of their members. Joseph P. Brady, general coordinator of state councils for the CIO Brewery Workers, is chairman and presided at the New York conference.

"Its purpose is to inform, alert and educate a large body of Americans," he said in describing the committee's work, "about the industry's chief problems, such as discriminatory taxes, detrimental legislation and moonshining, and to induce action upon them of a favorable nature.

"It proposes to accomplish these objectives through uniting the voice and energy of labor with the voices and energies of the various other segments of the alcoholic beverage industry in a common effort to promote the constructive and combat the destructive."

THE meeting, officially termed the committee's first Eastern Regional Forum, called on the sponsors to work out plans for permanent liaison between organized labor and industry groups, and asked that more such meetings be held in other parts of the country.

Vice Pres. Rocco Bunino of the National Licensed Beverage Association warned the industry that it once destroyed itself by failing to hang together.

"We had our industry restored to us in 1933 by the American people," he said. "It has taken us 18 years to reach this day when we can, all of us, sit down together to work out ways and means to see that our jobs and our businesses are never again destroyed."

Other speakers included: Secy. Anthony J. Ferro of the Brewery Workers New York State Council; Secy. Martin Gross, Jr., of the CIO union's Pennsylvania State Council; Secy.-Treas. Ed S. Miller of the AFL Hotel & Restaurant Workers; Ralph Heymsfeld, vice president of the Distilled Spirits Institute; John F. O'Connel of the New York State Liquor Authority, and Erwin B. Hook, director of the New Jersey Alcoholic Beverage Control Board.

Several speakers paid tribute to Brady for his initiative in bringing together the industry's various segments for the meeting.

CIO Says Restore Research Fund

Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., warned in a letter to all Senators that unless the recent action of the House in cutting the foundation's appropriation from $14 million to $300,000 is restored, the agency will be reduced to impotency.

He said the cut "is in direct opposition to the will and desires of the many public-spirited groups who have worked to establish the foundation . . .

"We have long been aware of the critical need for scientists and engineers and have long supported the program of fellowships whereby students will be given opportunities to receive advanced training in science and engineering.

"We deem it false economy to refuse to spend a few million for basic research in science, on which depends not only the machines of tomorrow but our national safety, welfare and prosperity."

Easy To End Filibusters, Reuther Says

IF A majority of the members of the Senate really want to end filibusters by a simple majority vote, they can easily do so, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers told the Senate Rules Committee last week.

Reuther's statement was filed in response to the committee's request that he submit additional details about the two methods of changing the present Senate rule on cloture which he had proposed during testimony Oct. 3.

Breaking the veto power of the filibuster and establishing a majority rule in the Senate will be the Nation's "No. 1 civil rights issue in the 1952 campaign and elections," Reuther said last week.

"The American people want the Senate to be an acting, not talking, legislative body," he said.

Under the present rule, two-thirds of the entire membership of the Senate must vote to end debate before a filibuster can be broken. In his earlier testimony, Reuther had submitted a fully documented legal brief showing that the rule is unconstitutional.

The unlimited debate made possible by the rule blocks enactment of civil rights legislation, Reuther pointed out. Under its provisions, it has been impossible to stop the filibusters which Southern Senators have launched against such legislation whenever it comes to the floor.

"FOR BOTH major political parties to continue to give lip service to civil rights legislation, including FEPC, anti-lynch, anti-poll tax and other long overdue measures, while acquiescing in continued strangulation of such legislation by veto of a minority under the unconstitutional Rule 22 would be to continue a colossal hoax upon the American people," Reuther declared.

Urging action in the present Senate, Reuther said that, despite the rule—which Dixiecrats presumably would try to use as the basis of a filibuster against the effort to repeal it—cloture could be imposed by a simple majority vote, provided the Vice President ruled that the present rule is unconstitutional.

NLRB Tells Employers:

Fire 'Illegal' Strikers, Bargain For Rents

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board—in separate decisions—has ruled:

1. That workers who take part in an "illegal" strike under the Taft-Hartley Act lose their right to job reinstatement.

2. That rents on company-owned houses are a proper subject for collective bargaining.

In the former case, a three-man majority of the board held that 62 strikers—members of the American Communications Association—need not be rehired by the Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., Inc., and Commercial Cable Co., New York City. ACA was ousted from the CIO because of Communist domination.

The 62 were among 2000 involved in a 1948 strike against the companies. Most of the other workers were later reinstated to their former jobs.

THE NLRB majority declared the strike "was illegal from its inception" because when the strike was called the ARA had not complied with the non-Communist affidavit requirement of the act and was ineligible to obtain a union-shop referendum.

In ruling that the employes had lost their rights under the act because of their participation in the illegal strike, the board majority said:

" . . . we find that the union adamantly insisted that the companies agree to an unlawful union-security contract, and that the strike was called and prosecuted . . . to compel the companies to accede to the union's demands for such a contract."

The majority ruling, upholding the recommendations of the board's trial examiner, Horace A. Ruckel, was signed by Paul M. Herzog, chairman; James J. Reynolds, Jr., and Abe Murdock, members.

John M. Houston, a fourth member, dissented on the ground that there was lack of proof that the strike was unlawful. The fifth member, Paul L. Styles, did not take part in the case.

Houston insisted that the ruling was "an unjustified abandonment" of the board's rule that an employer may not decide to fire a striker for "unprotected" strike conduct after the employer has "condoned" the walkout by agreeing to reinstate the striker.

UPSETTING findings of a trial examiner, the NLRB said a rent increase put into effect last year by the Bemis Brothers Bag Co. on some 250 housing units was illegal because the company refused to discuss the matter previously with the United Textile Workers, AFL.

When the union asked to negotiate proposed rent increases, the company declared: "This is purely a landlord-tenant relationship and has nothing to do with working conditions . . . in the contract." The trial examiner agreed with the company and recommended dismissal of the union's charge.

In overruling his decision, the board pointed out that in past cases "employer-provided living accommodations are included within the terms 'wages' and 'conditions of employment.'

"We find therefore that the company's owned and operated housing units are a mandatory subject of collective bargaining under the law . . . and that the company, by refusing to bargain with the union concerning the housing rentals, has violated the law."

Hungry Russians Eat 'Peace Doves'

Moscovites at last have a real reason for being grateful to Premier Stalin.

When he announced recently that another Russian atom bomb had been exploded, he had hundreds of plump white pigeons, apparently meant to do the work of doves of peace, released over Red Square.

The hungry Russians thought it was a wonderful idea. They chased down the pigeons and ate 'em.

East German Women Cool To 'Speedup'

THE WOMEN of Western Germany don't think much of the "honors" paid women workers in the Russian-controlled Eastern Zone, according to an article in a recent issue of Gleichheit, women's magazine published by the Social Democratic Party.

Neither, the magazine adds, do the unhonored women workers in the Soviet Zone. A number of women were recently awarded the titles "activist" or "heroine of work," and were given cash and gift premiums and promotions to supervisory or personnel positions.

"The "activist movement" in the Soviet Zone, the magazine says, "is the attempt to save the economy from impending ruin by increasing demands on human labor."

There are three types — the "Hennecke Shift," named in honor of a woman activist, which simply increases output; then a movement to produce higher quality goods, made necessary by the large amount of scrap resulting from the Hennecke movement, and more recently the movement "for the maintenance of publicly owned machines and tools."

Some of the East Zone women, the magazine points out, have had experience as industrial workers and are familiar with the methods introduced as an "advance" in production techniques found tried and true by workers in Russia.

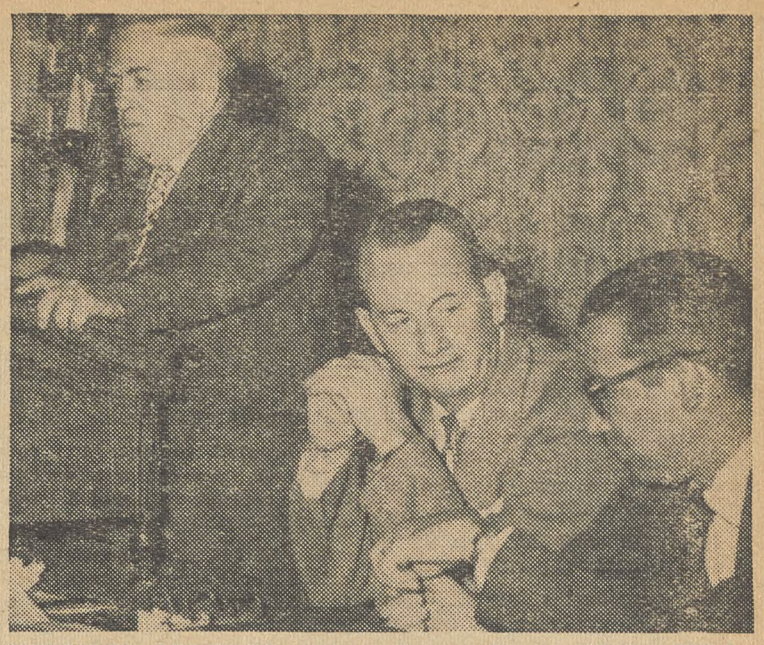
"So far the 'activist movement', or as it should be called the speed-up movement, has not had the desired effect," says the magazine article.

"A large majority of workers in the Soviet Zone have realized the fraudulent character of the 'activist movement' and are not willing to waste their energy and health under present insufficient food rations for the Communist economy, for the manufacture of arms or for Soviet reparations . . .

"These women are subjected to the terror of the Communists in the same degree as their male colleagues. They are forced to become members of the Communist Women's Federation, the Communist union, the party or one of its affiliated parties.

"IN SPITE of all this, women in the Soviet Zone are not too tired to train their children in a spirit contrary to the teachings of the schools and the children's organizations.

"How especially the women try to evade the regulations of the Communist government is shown by the efforts of the Labor Ministry to pass a compulsory labor law for women after propaganda measures failed to bring the women into the factories voluntarily."



KEYNOTE ADDRESS at the policy conference of the CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee at Philadelphia is given by CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who is IAWOC chairman. Seated are Richard T. Leonard (left) and Harold Ash, IAWOC director and secretary-treasurer respectively. IAWOC has a potential membership of 750,000.

Marshall Plan Put Britain 'On Her Feet'

THE FULL story of what Marshall Plan aid did for Great Britain, and what Britain did with the Marshall Plan aid she received, is told for the first time in a booklet recently printed by the British government.

Entitled "Recovery Record," it shows how a "great and generous idea was transformed into economic reality, how it helped Britain to stand once again on her own feet."

Marshall Plan help to Britain was ended on Jan. 1, 1951, by agreement of the British government and the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Up to that date Britain had received $2694 million in aid. This, the booklet points out, represents $72 for each American household or $18 for each person in the United States; conversely, it means $208 for each British household or $54 for each Britisher.

The story is divided into four parts.

The first tells why help was needed: how 25% of all British wealth had disappeared during the war, how the nation was faced with the seemingly impossible task of rebuilding and expanding her industrial might, and restoring confidence in sterling, despite destruction, neglect, dissipated overseas assets and huge debts.

THE BURDEN was increased by the necessity of importing half of her food and all or practically all of the raw materials for her factories and mills.

The second section recounts the story of how the western European nations at a meeting in Paris during the summer of 1948 accepted the invitation of Gen. George Marshall, then U. S. Secretary of State, to set up an overall plan of economic rehabilitation which this country would help finance.

It also describes how the dollars Britain obtained under the Marshall Plan were used—40% for food, 40% for raw materials, 12% on petroleum products, 7% on machinery and equipment, and the rest on miscellaneous and administrative costs.

The third section, The Road to Recovery, shows how Britain inched her way from the edge of economic disaster through the first stages of recovery with the help of Marshall Plan assistance. It tells how the dollar gap was closed, how production zoomed upward and exports soared, and how the sterling bloc, of which Britain is the banker, was stabilized.

The final part describes the progress that has been made in cooperation among the free nations of Europe and the other countries whose currencies are tied to the pound. It is a heartening story of increasing production, more and freer trade, and mutual assistance, specific enough to silence the most outspoken critics of ECA.

38 ACWA Members Complete Course

Thirty-eight members of the CIO Clothing Workers have completed a week of training under the union's third annual education program at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

IAWOC Parley Spurs Organization Drive

ONLY 18 months old, the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers held a policy conference Oct. 13-14, reviewed its short past and found it good.

Not content to rest on its laurels, IAWOC looked to the future and planned to increase its organizational efforts. The meeting was held at Philadelphia, where the union was formed.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president, director of organization and councils and chairman of the IAWOC-CIO, gave the keynote address. He pointed out that the union now holds bargaining right with eight insurance companies, including the huge John Hancock Mutual Life Co., where a precedent-setting contract was recently negotiated.

Organizing drives are under way among the agents of six more firms, the most important being the Metropolitan Insurance Co., where elections have been set for Nov. 30, in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York City.

Companies under contract include Home Life, Quaker City, Monumental, Golden Eagle, United Mutual, and Lincoln Republic in the life insurance field, and the United Life & Accident Association.

The IAWOC was formed in April, 1950, right after the United Office & Professional Workers Union was expelled from CIO because of Communist domination. Since then the UOPWA has been driven out of the insurance field.

With upwards of 750,000 persons employed in the insurance industry, the IAWOC has the opportunity of becoming one of the largest unions in CIO, it was pointed out by speakers.

MEMBERSHIP in the union is restricted to employes of insurance companies. However, eligibility is extended to statistical, stenographic and clerical employes as well as agents.

The conference voted to remain an organizing committee instead of becoming a national union until a larger segment of the industry is organized.

Haywood announced the appointment of Richard T. Leonard, former Auto Workers vice president, as director. The other officers, Haywood, Vice-Chairman Simon Helfgott and Secy.-Treas. Harold Ash, will continue to serve.

Pegler Is Fighting Word In Arizona Where He Lives

Even the shadow of a trace of a hint of an implication connecting a politician with Westbrook Pegler is enough, in some places, to bring a demand for an apology.

It happened in the Arizona State Senate. The Democrats were sounding off on Gov. Howard Pyle, a Republican—perhaps in an effort to stop his campaign for reelection before it really gets rolling. Sens. John Pintek and Sam Head, Democrats, were attempting to kill the Governor's $2000 allowance for travel outside the State.

Sen. Harold Giss, also a Democrat, did not agree with them. The Governor should have enough travel allowance in keeping with the "dignity and welfare" of Arizona, he said, to "represent the people as an ambassador."

"We are not a Westbrook Pegler type of State," he declared. Pegler is a resident of Arizona.

"I resent most deeply connecting my name with Pegler," bridled Pintek, "and demand an apology from the Senator."

Everybody was on edge until Giss again got to his feet.

"The Senator has misunderstood my remarks," he said. "I did not connect his name with Pegler. I was speaking about a type of State we have been called. If the Senator feels that slandered him, I humbly apologize."

Ohio State Affirms Campus Speaker Gag

By AL ZACK

IT HAPPENED in Columbus, O. It could happen any place in the United States. It is a story of smear . . .

. . . a story of how men, in positions of public trust, knuckled down to the smear spreaders and slapped a gag on two traditional American freedoms — freedom of speech and academic freedom.

It is the story of Ohio State Univ., and its "gag rule."

The story begins July 11, when a group of graduate students at OSU's School of Education announced they had invited Dr. Harold Rugg, of Columbia Teachers' College, to speak at a summer seminar.

Rugg is a controversial figure in the field of education. Extremely unorthodox and a firm believer in "progressive education," he is no Communist or Socialist. He has attacked some evils in the American free enterprise system, but with a view toward curing the ills.

Bricker At Odds —With Himself

Sen. Bricker (R. O.), as a trustee of Ohio State Univ. introduced the resolution barring campus speakers whose economic or social philosophy varies from the orthodox, but he talks out of the other side of his mouth when he's in Washington.

It was he who sounded off at greatest length and with the loudest devotion to freedom of the press when President Truman recently clamped down on news he thought might help an enemy. He even went as far in his zealous defense of the Constitution as to introduce a bill repealing the President's order.

Maybe the Constitution doesn't apply to Ohio. Or maybe Sen. Bricker and Trustee Bricker should get together.

Almost at once, two Columbus newspapers (the Ohio State Journal and the Dispatch) launched a full-scale, McCarthy-like attack on Rugg, the university, the faculty, the students and all who came within range of the Rugg voice.

Throughout July, the attack continued in these papers. They are owned by the powerful Wolfe family, which also owns one television and two radio stations in Columbus, a chain of banks and other assorted commercial enterprises, and also the Central Ohio Republican machine.

THEN THE Wolfe papers demanded Gov. Frank J. Lausche call upon the seven-man OSU Board of Trustees for an investigation.

Lausche did that and more. He urged the board to "study the entire problem with a view to working out a plan which will assure proper screening of the different meetings being held and the individuals who are invited to participate as principals."

To this open invitation for a gag rule, the trustees responded with alacrity. They decreed that henceforth no person could speak at OSU until and unless he had been cleared by the college president.

The Ohio CIO Council immediately took steps to bring the unsavory situation to the attention of the public.

Using its weekly radio broadcasts over several Ohio stations, plus its widely circulated News Letter and Monthly Review, the Ohio CIO told the story of the OSU gag rule in detail.

It brought together the comments of some conservative Ohio daily newspapers which were sharply critical of the ruling.

The CIO Council continued to attack the ruling. It pointed out the tie between this attack on academic freedom and other attacks against the public school system throughout America.

OTHER groups and organizations joined the battle. The OSU faculty adopted a resolution of protest. Clergymen of all faiths pleaded with the trustees to rescind it.

Then the university took two steps which heightened the storm.

First, it announced that "disloyalty" would be the test which decided whether a speaker could appear on the campus.

Secondly, it barred its first speaker. He was Dr. Cecil Hinshaw, of the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization.

Hinshaw's record was as clean as a hound's tooth. He was not a Communist, Socialist or radical. Even professional "subversive hunters" testified to his anti-Communist beliefs.

But he is a pacifist. That seemed the only ground for barring him.

At this point, the Ohio CIO Council Executive Board took two steps.

First, it adopted a resolution which called the ban "the first step toward imposition of thought control on the campus," and added that it "represents the most serious threat to free education in the history of Ohio."

Discussing its own views on the freedom of thought, the board noted:—

"A free and virile system of education is the root and heart of our democracy. From it stems the understanding and appreciation of democracy, which is our strength and our sword in these days of trial.

"Democracy cannot be permitted to stagnate—and stagnate it will, wherever thought control is imposed . . ."

The CIO board urged the trustees to "carefully and conscientiously re-examine the order" at a meeting scheduled for Oct. 15.

At almost the same time, Pres. L. S. Buekmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers, whose headquarters are in Akron, O., denounced the ruling as an "infringement of academic freedom."

In a letter to Dr. Norman P. Auburn, president of the Univ. of Akron, congratulating him on comments against the speaker ban, Buckmaster said the order denied OSU students the right to hear all sides of a question, "particularly those ideas which are considered unorthodox."

On Oct. 15 OSU trustees met again. U. S. Sen. Bricker (R. O.), who had sponsored the ruling was absent.

After several hours discussing the protests, the board told newsmen it was "affirming" its original order.

'Council' For Negroes Hit By Ohio CIO

WHAT IS called by its sponsors the "National Negro Labor Council" has set up a "founding convention" in Cincinnati, O., for Oct. 27 and 28.

Pres. Jack Kroll of the Ohio CIO Council, in a statement authorized by the 19-man executive board, warned Ohio CIO members "not to be misled or beguiled by the glib slogans or slick promises" of the new group. Kroll also is national director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

"Our investigations," he said, "have proven to us that this outfit has no base in the bona fide labor movement of America.

"Those who have stayed behind the scenes but who are really pushing this meeting are those boys who were expelled from the CIO for attempting to subvert the legitimate aims and aspirations of the labor movement.

"They have been tried and convicted by real trade unionists of having attempted to make of the labor unions mere arms of a political ideology foreign to America."

The CIO statement intimated that the new "council" is a device to split Negro workers away from the legitimate labor movement. This, incidentally, is a typical Communist maneuver to divide and confuse. Kroll also recalled the CIO's long fight against racial and religious discrimination.

"WORKING openly and ceaselessly," he said, "we have already made some substantial progress in the fight to bring about real equality of opportunity regardless of race, creed or color.

"However, much remains to be done.

"But achievement of these truly decent goals will come, we are convinced, by use of that good old America weapon—the ballot. They won't be achieved by allowing Communist-dominated groups, determined to achieve their own peculiar goals, to exploit the present suffering and need of minorities."

Kroll's warning was sent to all CIO locals in Ohio. It concluded.

"We strongly suggest you advise all your members of those prominent in this outfit and of our strong and well-founded suspicions that this group is neither interested in the problems of the Negro nor the worker, but is merely another sounding board for anti-democratic propaganda.

"We urge eternal vigilance against all who would trade on the good name of the labor movement to achieve any end, especially an end which draws praise, in these troubled times, from those who use the troubles of others to achieve their own ends."

Buckmaster Urges Scrap Salvage Aid

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers has urged URW members to support the government's iron and steel salvage drive.

In a letter to the presidents of 300 URW locals, he called upon union members to "cooperate in every way possible" with managements to insure success of the campaign.

A MEMBER of the CIO Steelworkers, Sgt. Leonard Consentini, who lost an arm while fighting with the U. S. Army in Korea, puts the finishing touches on a flower pot at Walter Reed Hospital, Washington. He hopes to return to work at the machine shop at Bethlehem Steel's Sparrows Point, Md., plant.

Pamphlet Tells Why Contracts Should Be Written Simply

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

DID YOU ever, with the best intentions in the world of being a well-informed union member on your job, set out to read the union-management contract at your plant?

And did you finally give up in disgust because you couldn't make any sense out of it?

Well, cheer up. The trouble isn't with you—it's with the way the contract is written. For it is the custom to write agreements in legalistic gobblydegook that takes "a college education or its equivalent" to understand.

Authority for this statement is a leaflet on the "Readability of Union Contracts," sent out by the Univ. of Minnesota's Industrial Relations Center. The article, written by Jeanne Lauer, graduate student, and Donald G. Paterson, Professor of Psychology at the university, originally appeared in the July, 1951, issue of Personnel and is copyrighted by the American Management Association, New York.

SINCE company lawyers, as much as anybody, are responsible for the legalistic wordiness and complexities of collective bargaining contracts, let's hope the leaflet handouts get wide distribution among them. The article makes sense. Here are some of the points it brings out:

The basic terms of the relationship between management, union and employes are spelled out in the collective bargaining agreement. It is "a day-by-day guide to action by foremen, shop stewards and business agents," the guide for airing and settling grievances.

It is "one of the most important written communications in the field of industrial relations. It codifies areas of agreement between management and organized employes."

The problem of writing contracts into "a form readily understood by the rank and file has been strangely neglected" in the industrial relations field. Only one extensive research study (The Art of Readable Writing by R. Flesch, Harper & Bros., 1949) has been aimed at this specific problem.

Some examples of provisions in actual contracts are given in the university's pamphlet to show how they can be simplified by breaking up long sentences, using short instead of long words, and making essential points stand out from the less important.

Rents Rolled Back In Four Areas

The fantastic profits being rung up by gouging landlords were abruptly ended last week in four defense areas when Rent Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods ordered re-controls. He rolled back rents to pre-inflation dates.

Three of the rollbacks were in military areas where conditions had been exposed by a Senate Preparedness subcommittee.

These were Carteret, Jones, Onslow and Craven counties, N. C., around Camp Lejeune, where rents were rolled back to July 1, 1950; Bartholomew, Brown, Jackson and Shelby counties and part of Decatur county, Ind., around Camp Atterbury, rolled back to Aug. 1, 1951; and Kitsap county, Wash., around the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, Key Point Naval Torpedo Station and several ammunition depots, rolled back to last May.

Rents around Paducah, Ky., where an atomic energy plant is being built, were rolled back to the Jan. 1 level. The order covers Ballard and McCracken counties, Ky., and Massac county and Vienna, Ill.

OWIU Booklet Presses Claim For $2 Raise

AS PART OF the campaign to win $2 a day pay increase for workers in the oil and allied industries, the CIO Workers have issued a pamphlet stating their case.

"We are asking for this raise," it says, "because we need it to meet the high cost of living, because we have earned it through our hard and productive work, because the employers can easily afford to pay it, and because the best interests of the people will be served if we receive it."

With an increase of only one-third in the work force since 1939, it points out, oil refineries are now turning out products worth nearly $24 million a day compared to less than $6 million a day in 1939.

PROFITS in the industry rose 430% during the 1939-50 period, but wages have not kept pace, the pamphlet shows. They have increased only 140% for the same time, while sales show a jump of 263%.

"Hourly paid workers have contributed many of the ideas for technological improvements which have advanced the oil industry," the report states.

The union has never stood in the way of those improvements even though they have cost some members their jobs, it adds, because the union believes the workers' long-range good lies in the efficiency of the industry.

"The oil industry can raise our wages $2 a day and still make more profit in 1951 than it did in 1950," the booklet claims.

Inflation will not be spurred if the proposed wage raise is put in effect, the union asserts.

"It will be the same $2 in circulation," it explains, "whether we or the employers have it. The effect on inflation will be the same."

Several Magazines On Guild Unfair List

The CIO New York Newspaper Guild has placed Hillman Periodicals, publisher of several national magazines, on its unfair list because it countered an organizing campaign by firing 10 employes.

The union filed a petition for a National Labor Relations Board election on Sept. 21. The firings took place Oct. 5 after supervisory personnel had questioned the employes about their union affiliations.

The company publishes the magazines Pageant, People Today, Movieland, Screen Guide, Real Story, Real Romances, Confessions, Headquarters Detective and Uncensored Detective.

Gets ADA Post

Reginald Zalles, administrative director of the Massachusetts CIO Council, has been named national executive secretary of Americans for Democratic Action.

In 1948 he joined ADA and later helped organize the Massachusetts United Labor Committee, which included CIO, AFL and ADA. He was appointed to the post with the council in 1949.

The Virginia CIO Council convention was held in Norfolk, not Roanoke, as erroneously reported in the Oct. 8 issue of the The CIO News.

USA Director Warns Of Bias In Steel Town

THE MORRISVILLE, Pa., area, where the U. S. Steel Corp. is building a giant steel mill, can be made into a model community "where men and women can give their best as citizens and workers."

That's what H. Charles Ford, director of the CIO Steelworkers' District 7, told the third annual Conference on Planning and Economic Development of the Greater Philadelphia and South Jersey Area.

Ford represents more than 40,000 steel workers and their families. He declared that given the normal facilities and civic benefits, "these men and women will be satisfied and productive in this giant enterprise."

He warned, however, that the workers who settle in the area "will expect that any man, regardless of race, color or creed, will be able to buy or rent a home nearby."

"There is a great need for rental housing in the area," Ford pointed out, "in the neighborhood of 3000-4000 units."

He charged that the only evidence of providing for them to date has been furnished by two builders who "are taking advantage of a business opportunity and making the best of it."

"Every responsible civic group must get together," he said, "and see to it that when families come from many parts of the country to serve in the development of this new community, it will be a point of pride and not a point of shame to the community.

"Labor's stake in this undertaking is its interest in and knowledge of the American working men and women who are members of the Steelworkers who will be employed on this project."

Seaway Held Blocked By Banks, Utilities

SEN. AIKEN (R. Vt.) told delegates to the 9th annual Vermont CIO Council convention that selfish Boston and New York banks and utility people are blocking construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Completion of the project would be the best thing that could happen to New England railroads, he declared. The boom that would hit the area would give them a tremendous boost, he asserted.

He said he was worried about the future of some Vermont industries, but that seaway-attracted industries would more than compensate for them.

Vermont has many of the qualities needed for the location of heavy industry, he continued. He mentioned that it has land available for the construction of thousands of homes, adequate water, a good climate and untapped or wasted raw materials.

Speaking to more than 100 delegates, the Senator also scored the concentration of heavy industry and government defense orders.

He lauded the CIO for its concern with national problems, and thanked the council for its support of the seaway.

Pointing out that cheap power is a major factor in attracting new industry, Aiken said that any area where power costs more than four mills per kilowatt hour is out of consideration. He noted that in Burlington, Vt., where the convention was held, the current rate is 15 mills.

Speaking on labor unity CIO Reg. Dir. Francis Carmichael of Boston pointed to the presence at the convention of several State AFL leaders as evidence that people at the grass roots want labor unity even though national leaders of the AFL scuttled the United Labor Policy Committee.

GOV. LEE Emerson told the convention that the reservoir of skilled labor in the State "has been instrumental in building us up industrially."

"Another commendable factor of the labor force in this State is its stability," the Governor said. "Most laboring men own their own homes, pay taxes and have a stake in the community. They are good citizens."

Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO councils, spoke on the development and conservation of natural resources. His remarks touched on navigation, forestry, public power and the advantages of the seaway's construction.

Pres. James Christie, Frank Dumas, first vice president; William Imlach, second vice president, and Secy.-Treas. Ruth Daigneault were re-elected.

Arthur Hartman, ACWA Aide, Dies

Arthur Hartman, vice president of the Ohio CIO council, died of a heart attack in Cincinnati Oct. 13. He was 50 years old.

Hartman, who was associate manager of the CIO Clothing Workers' Cincinnati joint board, was active in the labor movement for more than 20 years. He became a business agent for ACW in Cincinnati in 1931.

He was the first president of the Greater Cincinnati CIO Council and was extremely active in community affairs for many years.

Widely known throughout the state, Hartman was first elected a vice president of the Ohio council in 1942, and was re-elected annually ever since.

Nebraska CIO Told Wherry Tires D.C. Too

DELEGATES TO the fifth annual convention of the Nebraska CIO Council were told that "people in Washington are as weary of Sen. Wherry (R.) as you people here in Nebraska."

The speaker was R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO director of organization. He brought greetings to the convention from CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

Thomas made an urgent plea for concerted political action by local unions throughout the state, terming it "the only way we can be assured that the working men and women will have their interests represented."

The major interest of the delegates centered around economic controls and the development of the Missouri Valley region to prevent further flood disasters.

Citing the necessity of a Missouri Valley Authority, Thomas declared the people of the area "should not be made to suffer because of the lack of such an undertaking."

Touching on the recent break-up of the United Labor Policy Committee, Thomas said the withdrawal of the AFL from that body "undoubtedly would hurt the labor movement," but that the CIO "is determined to carry on alone, if necessary, the battle for the American working men and women."

RESOLUTIONS passed favoring federal aid to education; a national health program; farm-labor unity, and creation of Missouri Valley Authority legislation.

Other resolutions urged repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act; condemned discrimination in employment and called for a national civil defense program.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE WRITER, as chairman of the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, opened the second official conference of this organization in Philadelphia on Oct. 13. The IAWOC-CIO has made important gains in the 18 months it has been in operation. The delegates all were enthusiastic about the progress made by the organization and they are certain that the IAWOC-CIO is the one organization for all insurance workers. The delegates expressed to the writer their thanks and appreciation of the splendid support and help given them by the CIO and its representatives. In order to obtain more money to carry on the organizational work yet to be done, these delegates voted in favor of increasing their per capita tax to the CIO from $1.25 to $1.50 per member.

Allan Haywood

The conference closed on a note of going on to victory in the pending elections in Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and the New York City area.

The Wage Stabilization Board is holding a briefing session this week for members of its regional boards at the Hotel New Yorker, New York City. The writer is planning to attend and also to meet and talk with CIO members of regional boards.

My assistants, R. J. Thomas and Anthony W. Smith, both attended CIO State Council meetings this past week. Brother Thomas journeyed to Grand Island, Neb., to speak to members of the Nebraska State CIO Council on such vital issues as flood control measures and the proposed Missouri Valley Authority. The delegates voiced their support of National CIO policy in every way.

Brother Smith attended the Vermont State CIO Council Convention in Burlington, Vt., and the delegates there voiced similar support of the CIO and its policies. The Vermont Council is and has been through the years a fine council, effectively serving its membership.

Charles Gabriel, assistant director of the CIO Communications Workers in Ohio, reports representation election victory at the Elyria Telephone Co., Elyria, O. The CWA won by more than 2 to 1 with 60 votes for the union and 26 against.

Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports a union security election victory for Local 917, IUE-CIO. The election was held at the Singer Manufacturing Co., South Bend, Ind. Results showed 1082 votes in favor of the union shop, 84 against, 6 challenged and 2 void.

IN ANOTHER IUE-CIO win, at the True Temper Corp., Bowling Green, Ky., Reg. Dir. W. B. Taylor reports a tabulation of the votes indicated 30 for the IUE and 10 against.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that CIO Local Industrial Union 78 won a representation election at the Modesto Produce Co., Westby, Calif., by a vote of 24 to 12 against. CIO Rep. Ken Gillie and Rep. Lum Moorhead of the local were in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at the plant of Margolin Brothers, Memphis, Tenn., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the CIO Woodworkers by a 32 to 0 count. IWA Rep. F. M. Dickenson handled the election.

Murray Backs D. C. Home Rule

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and seven other prominent persons have sent an open letter to Senate Majority Leader McFarland (D. Ariz.), urging him to bring up for debate and a vote a bipartisan bill giving home rule to the District of Columbia.

The bill, which President Truman supports, is sponsored by 22 Senators headed by Sen. Case (R. S.D.), Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) and Sen. Taft (R. O.). The people of Washington, capital of the greatest democracy in the world, haven't been allowed to govern themselves for the last 75 years.

'Poor' Phone Company

Members of the CIO Communications Workers in Fairmont, W. Va., who work at night at the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. switchboard, are required to do maintenance work and painting during slack hours.

When the girls asked the company to provide protective clothing, they were turned down. The CWA local however bought them smocks; on each was embroidered the legend "Donated by CWA-CIO."

Timid Senators Give Jessup Scalp To McCarthy

SEN. McCARTHY (R. Wis.) won at least a temporary victory last week when a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee voted 3 to 2 to disapprove Ambassador - at - Large Philip C. Jessup as a United Nations delegate.

But on other fronts, including one in Congress itself, the Wisconsin smear artist was having a rough time.

Perhaps the most significant was the refusal of Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts to dismiss Columnist Drew Pearson's $5.1 million suit against McCarthy and others. Pearson claims the Senator assaulted and libeled him as part of a conspiracy to hold him up to ridicule. McCarthy had asked for the dismissal.

A second set-back to McCarthyism came in Switzerland, when the Swiss Federal Court convicted Charles E. Davis of spying for McCarthy. Davis, an American, was sentenced to eight months imprisonment and ordered expelled from the country.

McCarthy has denied that Davis had been hired to work for him, but Judge Albert Rais in passing sentence said:

"He (Davis) put himself at the service of the Republican Sen. McCarthy, with whom he was in contact either directly or through the intermediary, the agent of McCarthy in Paris, to whom he sent similar intelligence of a political nature."

The court identified John E. Farrand as McCarthy's Paris agent. It said that Davis had forged a document in an effort to demonstrate falsely that John Carter Vincent, U.S. Ambassador to Switzerland, had Communist connections. The court declared:

"Davis has received from McCarthy, through the intermediary of Farrand, money for this activity."

Following Davis' conviction, Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) made public a letter about Davis from Deputy Undersec. of State Carlisle S. Humelsine, which he said supported one of the 10 charges he had made in demanding McCarthy's expulsion from the Senate.

BENTON turned over to the Senate Elections subcommittee now investigating McCarthy the letter outlining Davis' activities. He said that "the pattern of conduct I have described underlying Sen. McCarthy's actions also seems to extend to the people he employs." He charged directly that unethical acts by people on his staff were "countenanced" by McCarthy.

"Here we have an admitted homosexual ex-Communist convicted as a personal spy on Sen. McCarthy's payroll trying to frame an American diplomat—John Carter Vincent—with a fake telegram linking him to Communists," Benton pointed out.

Voting against Jessup in the subcommittee were Sen. Smith (R. N.J.), Sen. Brewster (R. Me.) and Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.). Voting to approve the nomination were Chairman Sparkman (D. Ala.) and Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.).

The members who voted against him made it clear they placed no credence in McCarthy's charges.

The rejection was still theoretically subject to action by the full Senate Foreign Relations Committee, necessary before the nomination could go to the Senate floor. However, Chairman Connally (D. Tex.) refused to call a meeting.

REJECTION by the full committee or the Senate would amount to a personal victory for McCarthy as well as for former Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota, who also got into the act. Lack of action by the Senate would permit President Truman to give Jessup a recess appointment.

By its decision, the subcommittee made clear that it is dominated by a group of timid men afraid to defend a person under attack even though all charges against him were fully discredited.

"The chief victim of the McCarthy-Stassen triumph, if Ambassador Jessup is not confirmed before the Senate adjourns," said the Washington Post editorially, "will not be Ambassador Jessup. It will be the American people."

Rubber Workers Win Union Shop, 13c Raise

A FULL union shop was part of the first company-wide agreement signed by the CIO Rubber Workers and the Midwest Rubber Reclaiming Co., East St. Louis, Ill. The firm also has a plant at Barbeton, O.

In addition, the 500 workers in the company's two plants will receive a 13c an hour wage increase.

UN Six Years Old This Week

THE SIXTH birthday of the United Nations falls on Oct. 24.

Most of the world's peoples probably will celebrate the occasion with mixed feelings—the UN has done much to unify peace-loving nations, but has failed to eliminate the fear of war.

It was in 1945 that representatives of 50 nations met at San Francisco to draft the UN charter (Sixty nations now belong.) Peace was in the air.

There were smiles all around. For the first time since the League of Nations proved inadequate to deal with the world's problems, the little people seemed to feel an era of peace was at hand.

But the spirit of unity and peace was short-lived. Soon the Iron Curtain was lowered.

UN attempts to halt Soviet aggression peaceably and establish world peace on a sound basis met with veto after veto in the Security Council.

The UN's accomplishments, though, have been many.

UN forces can claim credit for beating off the Communist invasion of the Republic of Korea. In Palestine, UN mediation and conciliation stopped a war and resulted in the birth of Israel.

IN INDONESIA, conciliation and mediation again won and resulted in friendly ties between the Netherlands and the United States of Indonesia, a former Dutch possession.

In Kashmir, UN efforts stopped fighting between India and Pakistan. The UN plans to hold a free election in Kashmir to determine its future status.

Italy's former colonies also have found help from the UN. Libya is to be independent by 1952 and a UN commissioner is working with the Libyan peoples to help set up their own government.

Somaliland has been placed under UN trusteeship and the world organization is working on plans for its independence. Similar work is being done in Eritrea.

But on the UN's sixth birthday, peace still hangs in the balance.

Rent Control Kept In Richmond, Cal.

United labor forces won a fight for continued rent controls in Richmond, Cal., when the City Council by a 5-4 vote refused the landlords' request for a formal public hearing on decontrol.

CIO and AFL leaders, who had mapped joint strategy with the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Young Democrats, led the fight at the council session. Pres. Jack Bruhl of the CIO Council and Pres. Hugh Caudel of the AFL Central Labor Council spoke against the hearing.

Area Rent Dir. John Blake produced a survey showing that only 126 rental units—less than 1% of total rental housing in the area—were available.

Myles Horton Gets UPWA Post

Myles Horton, director of the Highlander Folk School at Monteagle, Tenn., has been named education director of the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

He replaces Lou Krainock, who resigned to go to Alaska.

An active union organizer and educator for 20 years, Horton founded Highlander in 1932. He joined the CIO Textile Workers Organizing Committee in 1937 and helped form the first CIO textile union in the South at McCall, S. C. Later he was general CIO organizer for North Carolina. Hundreds of CIO members have attended institutes and classes at Highlander.

'Horsemeat Congress' Makes The Rich Richer, But The Rest Of Us Poorer

'Big Boys' Ask Taft Where To Send The Dough

SEN. ROBERT TAFT "went home" last week—but not to his native Ohio. He "went home" to the Union League Club at 37th St. and Park Ave. in New York City.

There, before 300 sympathetic Union League Club members, the principal announced candidate for the Republican nomination for President delivered himself of these opinions:

1. That "the fundamental issue remains: Liberty against Socialism." (That's from the author of the Taft-Hartley Act.)

2. That the U. S. should re-examine, reject or defer — in other words, welsh on—pledges and performance of economic and military assistance to non-Communist nations in the face of world-wide aggression by the Soviet Union.

3. That the biggest threat to U. S. security is that the country might try to do more than it is capable of doing. (And the Republicans talk about "lack of confidence in America.")

4. That the late Harry Hopkins and W. Averell Harriman thought Communist Russia was just another democracy (they didn't), while no one has ever made greater military mistakes than Gen. George C. Marshall. (Taft was just trailing along after Sen. Joe McCarthy [R. Wis.], who went a lot further in attacking the General on the floor of the Senate where there's "no speed limit" in the way of libel laws.)

5. That the U. S.—principally because of defense spending—is going bankrupt, with the Federal Government spending $60 billions this year.

While Taft was reviving the "Liberty vs. Socialism" war-cry of the GOP, which has been aired every four years since 1936 and by Alf Landon (remember him?), a Taft colleague, Sen. Bennett (R. Utah), former president of the National Association of Manufacturers, chimed in with the claim that only the Republicans respect the "value of the dollar."

(Yet it was the Republicans like Bennett who led the attack in Congress a few weeks ago on the Defense Production Act under which price controls were torn to smithereens.)

The Senator from Ohio was in a congenial atmosphere at the Union League Club.

Present, as the New York Times noted, "were numerous business executives and policy makers, many of whom are regular contributors to Republican campaign funds." It said:

"One of the first questions put to Senator Taft in a question-and-answer period after his talk was: 'Where do we send the checks for your campaign fund?' Mr. Taft did not answer directly."

NOTE: Maybe Sen. Taft is bashful (for now) about contributions to his campaign fund (after all, that's not a matter to come up during Union League Club luncheons), but The CIO News is not bashful in suggesting that if you're interested in defeating Taftism in '52, that you give your PAC Dollar now!

TAFT IN TALK HERE ASKS POLICY STUDY

Would Reappraise Our Foreign Commitments in the Light of Our Ability to Meet Them

Senator Robert A. Taft urged yesterday a complete reappraisal of American foreign policy, which he said had cost the United States the peace after it had won the war. He suggested the revaluation be made by a new joint military-civilian commission.

The Ohio Senator, who earlier this week announced his candidacy for next year's Republican nomination for President, made his proposal in a luncheon speech before the Union League Club, Thirty-seventh Street and Park Avenue.

No greater military mistake was ever made, Mr. Taft said, than General of the Army George C. Marshall's invitation to the Russians to take over Manchuria.

"Foreign policy is a matter of judgment, of good sense," he said. "They [the Democratic National Administration] cannot escape responsibility for the result."

...gress.

Taking cognizance that most of his listeners at the luncheon were in the upper-bracket income-tax group, he cautioned against any hope that the revenue bill pending before Congress would fail of enactment, even though it was rejected by the House earlier this week.

...funds.

One of the first questions put to Senator Taft in a question-and-answer period after his talk was: "Where do we send the checks for your campaign fund?" Mr. Taft did not answer directly.

...reply to the question.

ORDER NOW!

Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS

The thirteenth constitutional convention of the CIO will be held in New York November 5 to 9. What it does will be important to every CIO member. Officers of international and local unions should make certain that their members are familiar with its decisions.

You can do this NOW by ordering additional copies of the special convention issue of the CIO NEWS. This special edition will give complete coverage of the convention in articles and pictures. Texts of the more important speeches and resolutions will be carried in full.

BUT YOU SHOULD ORDER NOW. ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE IN BY NOVEMBER 5. BY ORDERING IMMEDIATELY, YOU CAN BE SURE THAT YOUR MEMBERS WILL GET THE FULL, AUTHENTIC CIO STORY.

SPECIAL RATES

• BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for large orders.

In sending lists of addresses for bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each address. To facilitate bookkeeping, please send checks with smaller quantity orders.

• INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged by sending us mailing strips not more than 2½ inches wide.

NOTE: These prices are special rates for the enlarged convention edition of the CIO NEWS. Unions which already subscribe to the CIO NEWS and those which wish to take this opportunity to begin subscribing regularly to the CIO NEWS, may begin their bundle order or group subscription order with this issue and be charged no more than regular bundle order and subscription rates.

PICKET DUTY such as this paid off for the CIO Brewery Workers at the Anheuser-Busch Brewery, St. Louis, where 2000 members were locked out three weeks.

Brewery Workers Win Settlement In Lockout At Anheuser-Busch

CIO BREWERY Workers last week defeated "a full-scale war against our organization" by the big Anheuser-Busch Brewery in St. Louis.

The three-week dispute began in a company move to wipe out 50 jobs, multiplied into a lockout of more than 2000 workers, and ended in a full shutdown of the brewery with 6000 CIO and AFL members on the street. It was settled at a bargaining session running until 4 a.m. on Oct. 25.

While detailed terms of the agreement were withheld pending ratification by CIO members, Karl F. Feller, Brewery Workers international president, reported from St. Louis:

"Everything was settled to our satisfaction. The men are going back to work as soon as possible, including those whose jobs are in dispute pending arbitration. All discharged people are to be rehired without any loss of seniority or other rights."

Feller also said that the company had agreed to withdraw damage suits for a total of $4 million which it had brought against both CIO and AFL brewery unions.

Agreement was reached after the CIO union had declared in its paper that it wouldn't be "pushed around by Anheuser-Busch. If that company's officials want war, they will have it."

"Anheuser-Busch is big—but not so big that it can get away with this violation of its union agreement with our organization, not to mention the greater violation of human rights it is guilty of in its treatment of our St. Louis brothers," the paper added.

The settlement at Anheuser-Busch came as a general shutdown of St. Louis breweries was developing. An AFL warehouse local had struck three smaller breweries in an organizational drive among office employees.

During the Anheuser-Busch lockout, according to daily press reports, picket lines of CIO Brewery Workers were respected by members of several AFL organizations, including truck drivers.

The Anheuser-Busch dispute originated in a company move, fought by the CIO union to eliminate some 50 inspection jobs. When negotiations failed late last month, management first locked out 1500 members of Bottlers' Local 187 and later almost 600 members of Brewers and Maltsters Local 6.

Four Communities Vote Out Rent Control

Rent controls have been dropped in four localities where the local governing bodies voted to get rid of them, Director of Rent Stabilization Tighe E. Woods announced last week.

They are Alameda, Cal., Dolton and Matteson (Cook County), Ill., and Kalamazoo, Mich., Ruston, La., also was decontrolled because the housing shortage there has been reasonably met, Woods said.

7th New Ceiling This Year Reached By Price Index

The Consumer Price Index of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reached an all-time high—the seventh new ceiling this year—when it climbed to 186.6 on Sept. 15.

The new high represented an advance of .6%, or 1.1 points, over the 185.5 level, where it had remained for the two previous months. It means that articles and services cost 86.6% more than the 1935-9 average, on which the index is based, and 8.5% more than the 1950 monthly average of 171.9.

It also means that 70,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers employed by General Electric automatically get a 1.1% pay increase retroactive to Sept. 15.

The practically steady climb since Jan. 15, 1950, is shown by these figures:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1943 monthly average	123.6	Feb. 15	167.9

CIO Board To Consider Jurisdiction

THE CIO Executive Board meets this week to consider—among other things—a plan for avoiding jurisdictional friction within the CIO.

Pres. Philip Murray is expected to call the board meeting to order on Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 10 a.m. The meeting, like other pre-convention sessions, will be held at the Hotel Commodore in New York.

CIO's 13th annual convention gets under way next week, on Monday, Nov. 5, in the big main ballroom of the Commodore.

SEVERAL committee meetings will be held this week at the hotel. On Tuesday, Pres. Murray will meet with Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and the nine vice-presidents. On Friday, Nov. 2, the Political Action Committee will consider plans for the election year ahead.

The Executive Board will hear a report from a five-man special committee on jurisdictional problems, which was appointed several weeks ago by Pres. Murray. On the committee are Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Auto Workers; Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union; and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

THE COMMITTEE is expected to bring to the meeting of vice-presidents and to the Executive Board a proposed means of heading off organizing and election contests among two or more CIO affiliates.

Last week Pres. Martin Wagner of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers issued a press statement charging that jurisdictional strife is "jeopardizing" the security and solidarity of the CIO.

Wagner, who has voiced concern about the situation during recent months, said there is no "easy way" to settle the problem but pleaded that it can not be ignored.

The Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers head said his union will present a 10-point resolution dealing with the matter to the convention resolutions committee.

Union Shop Bill Signed By Truman

PRESIDENT Truman last week signed the recently passed bill removing the union shop election requirement from the Taft-Hartley Act.

As it stands now, a union can negotiate a legal union shop clause with the employer if it is the legitimate bargaining agent of the workers, if it publishes financial reports, and if its officers have filed T-H affidavits. The change does not apply where state laws forbid the union shop.

The President issued a statement commending as "salutary" the "sensible economics and the protection of stable industrial relations effected" by the bill, but said he welcomed it "for an even more fundamental reason."

"On numerous occasions," he said, "I have stated that the major objection to many of the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act is their basic hostility to collective bargaining.

"Instead of creating an atmosphere in which management and labor may come to an agreement on the basis of mutual respect and common interest, the act imposes artificial restraints upon parties engaged in bargaining.

"Although this bill eliminates only one of the act's defects, it nevertheless constitutes recognition by the Congress of the necessity to move in the direction of a new statutory framework—one which will enable both management and labor to conduct their affairs without arbitrary government intervention."

Convention On Radio

Highlights of the CIO Convention will be heard in nightly broadcasts Nov. 6-9 over CKLW, a 50,000-watt station at Windsor, Ont.

The program—based on tape recordings of the convention proceedings—will be sponsored by the CIO Auto Workers.

CKLW—located just across the Canadian border from Detroit—and WDET, the UAW's FM radio station, will both carry the convention program.

WSB Pension-Welfare Panel Urges End Of Restrictions

A SPECIAL panel report to the Wage Stabilization Board last week set the stage for an important, controversial decision as to whether bargaining for pensions and health and welfare plans shall be freed of government regulations.

With labor and public members agreeing, the panel majority report urged "decontrol" of present WSB restrictions on pensions and social insurance.

The majority report constituted a recommendation, from which industry members of the panel strongly dissented. It was anticipated that employer representatives will organize a strong campaign to block a final WSB decision which would open the way to further gains in the pension-insurance field pioneered by several CIO affiliated unions.

Labor members of the special panel majority were Harry Becker, director of the CIO Auto Workers Social Security Dept., and Carl Huhndorff, research director of the AFL Machinists.

Crux of the controversy is whether or not WSB approval shall be required on pension-insurance programs.

The majority report says, in effect, that the WSB should step out of that field. It recommends that no board approval be required for amending existing pension programs, except where employers' payments be increased; for "cost of living" increases in pension benefits; or for creation of new plans "which do not exceed the limits of accepted industrial practice."

82nd Congress 'Best Ever' —If You're In The Big Dough

By MILTON PLUMB

LEAVING a heap of unfinished business — and many broken promises—behind it, the 82nd Congress has left Washington until next January.

Its first session officially came to an end at 6:35 p.m., Oct. 20. Actually, many of its members had called it quits a day or two before and were already out of town and well started on their two-and-a-half month vacation before the final gavel banged.

The end was typical of the Congress.

It was 20 days behind the date originally set for adjournment by Senate Majority Leader McFarland (D. Ariz.). And it found the Senate engaged, down to the very last moment, in a talk fest which kept it in session 45 minutes longer than the House, which had adjourned sine die at 5:45 p.m.

It took nine months and 17 days to end the first session—one of the longest in history. Whether the job which the 82nd Congress has done is good or bad, depends pretty much on the point from which you view it.

Big Bonanza

From the standpoint of the big money boys and defense profiteers, for example, the "Horsemeat Congress"—as the 82nd has been called—can only be regarded as one of the "best" in history.

On the other hand, if you're just an average American, logic could only lead you to an entirely opposite conclusion.

Or, if you're in the liberal-minded group which realized what was in store as soon as you saw the conservative-reactionary victory in the 1950 election, you might concede, all things considered, that the 82nd Congress perhaps even did a better job than one could hope for—from the 82nd Congress.

There were serious setbacks for the people, right down the line.

Once more a coalition of anti-Fair Deal forces in both parties pushed aside all progressive measures having wide popular support, yet demonstrated a shocking readiness to do the bidding of big business and monopoly.

But on the foremost issue of our time—adequate military preparation to protect America from Communist aggression—the Congress, in its bungling way, didn't do half bad.

Despite constant efforts by an increasingly vocal group of isolationists, the 82nd Congress did beat them back sufficiently to enable the Administration to continue to carry out America's program of strong international leadership.

It voted perhaps more than adequate funds for the building of our military defenses, and while it threw many monkey wrenches into the foreign aid program, it at least made continuance of the program possible.

Also on the positive side, one should add something Congress did not do. Although there certainly were serious efforts in that direction, at least it did not wipe out more of the major gains in farm and labor legislation made during the last 18 years. Some of those improvements had been taken away by the 80th Congress by such legislation as the Taft-Hartley Act.

'From The Same Cloth'

For the rest, however, the record of the 82nd Congress is as empty of things that the average American can praise as were the seats of the House and Senate on Mondays and Tuesdays throughout the session.

On those days, the legislature barely functioned because the "Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday Club" — consisting of members from near-by states—was away enjoying a four-day weekend.

'Wrecking Crew'

Despite serious damage to the efficient operation of the government by the false "economizing" of the self-styled "wrecking crew" that called the turn on appropriations matters, the 82nd Congress appropriated more than $98 billion. That is the highest peacetime total in history.

At the same time, it failed to take steps which might have reduced this amount by tens of billions. It failed to act on several pending reorganization proposals of the Hoover Commission, some of which would have brought about efficiencies in government saving at least $5 billion.

And, through a parliamentary trick by Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.), it pigeonholed the plan of Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.) to modernize Congressional appropriations methods, which might have enabled it to save billions more.

High Price Toll

Moreover, in one fell swoop, Congress more than canceled every cut in appropriations and other economies it had made by failing to provide a law adequate to check inflation. By weakening the Defense Production Act, it boosted the total budget by tens of billions of dollars—in the form of added costs for military and other equipment.

At the same time it added perhaps as much as $16 billion in inflation to the prices that will be paid by consumers in the year ahead.

While adding to the cost of government, Congress failed to meet its responsibility to provide an adequate tax bill. As a result the government will be in the red during the fiscal year 1952—for the first time in several years.

The deficit will be about $5 billion.

Nevertheless, the "rich man's tax bill" passed by the 82nd Congress increased taxes on the low and middle income taxpayers considerably and let corporations and big income individuals off with comparatively small increases.

And in the same tax bill, it set the clock back thirty years by reviving "shame lists" through throwing relief rolls open to publicity, and by wiping out the government's program of encouraging farm cooperatives through special benefits.

Confronted with one of the most crucial world situations in history, the 82nd Congress spent most of its time looking into the past. It launched a record total of 134 investigations, most of which—while capturing headlines—were of little real concern to the present.

Few Exceptions

There were exceptions, of course, such as the Kefauver crime investigation and the expose of housing evils, a subcommittee headed by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), but most of the others were openly political, or developed from that into vehicles for mud-slinging and witch hunting.

While the public's attention was thus diverted, the lobbies for big business and special interests saw that those laws that were passed were written the way they wanted them, or else kept other laws they opposed bottled up in committee.

Casualties, due to the failure of Congress to act, included such vital measures as statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, the St. Lawrence Seaway, FEPC, home rule for the District of Columbia, federal aid to education, and all significant resource development and social welfare legislation.

The Record's Being Made

It is with some sense of apology that the CIO News again inflicts upon its readers another item about Robert A. Taft, such as graces our front page this week. There are, after all, many other things in this nation of ours that deserve attention and the Ohio Senator has perhaps been getting a disproportionate share of our newsprint allotment.

But this is a time when the record is being made, when true feelings and intentions slip out. After the campaign is on, after the ghost writers have assembled, after the smart politicos are called in to weigh and value each statement and each deed—when the Big Show is on—it's hard to see behind the scenes.

Now is the time to see the naked truth.

With this thought in mind, we point out the fact that the first speech made outside Washington by Taft following the announcement of his candidacy was made to that symbol of hidebound reaction, the exclusive Union League Club of New York. Taft spoke, in this maiden speech, to an audience described by the New York Times as consisting of "numerous business executives and policy makers." And the first question asked was, "Where do we send the checks for your campaign fund?"

It's something to remember when the Senator comes a-courtin' during the '52 campaign.

Silence On The Potomac

There's a strange and welcome silence in Washington, now that the 82nd Congress has gone home to roost. The 82nd was a talking Congress—talkier even than most of its predecessors. It was an investigating Congress—there were more probes than an average citizen could keep track of.

But despite the talk and the probes—or maybe, because of them—it was a Congress that let the people down.

The conservative coalition spent money—lots of it—for guns. But it never seemed to understand the real implications of American democracy's problems throughout the world, or of the need for strengthening democracy at home in time of crisis.

So, while it provided the dollars for tanks and planes, it cut the effectiveness of the Voice of America, which speaks democracy's message to the rest of the world.

While giving an o.k. to defense production, it bowed to special interests in its actions on an anti-inflation program. There's no real barrier now on our law books to the rising inflation. As CIO Vice Pres. Allan Haywood put it recently, our present laws won't stop inflation any more than a boy with a water pistol can stop a stampede of elephants.

We need better weapons against rising living costs; we need action on civil rights, housing, health, social security and Taft-Hartley.

Perhaps it's over-optimistic to think we can get such action from the 82nd Congress during the next session.

But in the 2½ months before the 82nd goes back to work, it won't do any harm to let its members—while they're "resting" back home—know that the people aren't very happy with the record of the first session.

That Ain't No Witch!

'Genesis Told In 400 Words'

MR. PRESIDENT, I want to invite the attention of those present who are not too thoroughly intoxicated with their own verbosity to try to protect themselves in the next session of Congress from the hopeless affliction which we have been suffering since the 31st day of July, when we should have adjourned, under the law, and gone home to ascertain what our constituents wanted us to do and to have an opportunity to absorb some of their wisdom and prudence and to learn how we can best serve them after the third day of next January.

On the famous trial of the great Semitic issue, "If a man die shall he live again," one of Job's friends, Zopher, on his cross examination of the afflicted patriarch, asked this question: Should a man full of talk be justified?

It is an interesting reflection to consider what a modern Zopher would say if he had heard the United States Senate since the third day of last January, while it was constructing this hideous edition of the Tower of Babel. I think the judgment would have been just as it was in the case of Job, first by man, and then by the Almighty Himself. The answer was no; a man should not be justified by talk.

LET ME SAY, Mr. President, that while I shall point out in a moment the average number of pages consumed in this monster with the three hideous heads, irrelevance, loquacity and verbosity, the average Senator has consumed 79.1 pages. I have consumed about 15⅓ pages, so I am not going to apologize for taking a few minutes' time in suggesting that between now and next January we declare a war against the windbags of the Senate.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the Holy Bible. It is God's description of the creation of the whole vast universe. There is everything in it from the tiniest grain of sand to the most stupendous star. It lays down a code of ethics not only for the government of the Israelites, but for the whole human race until the end of time. This copy is Winston's lawyer's edition of the Bible. I use the lawyer's edition because a large number of members of the Senate are lawyers.

The total number of pages in this Bible is 1143. What do Senators suppose is the number of pages that informed us of the wisdom and the opinions of the Senators since the 3rd day of last January? It is not a thousand or two thousand. I am referring, now, only to pages which have been consumed by Senators. I have also subtracted the number of pages consumed by the calling of rolls and quorums. The Senate has not consumed 1143 pages, as the Almighty did when He laid down his government for the whole world. Senators have consumed 7920.

THEIR VERBOSITY has kept the Senate chained like Prometheus to the rock since July, because in January we talked and talked, in February we talked and talked. In March and April we did the same, and in May and June we did the same. We did not start to work until in the middle of June.

I have told the Senate what the average number of pages of the average Senator is; it is over 79. But there are members of the Senate—and I mention no names, and I want expressly to exclude both the majority leader and the minority leader, because there are reasons why they must talk. They are dragged into debates whether they want to be or not.

Some of the greatest economists who have cut five per cent from appropriations have, by their speeches, cost us more than would have been saved had they got all their amendments through.

Mr. President, it costs $85 a page to print the Congressional Record. Approximately 20 Senators have consumed less than ten pages in the Record since the third of last January. More than half of the remainder have consumed fewer than twenty pages.

Approximately 20 members of this body have consumed about two-thirds of all the pages in the Congressional Record and have laid this burden on the backs of the taxpayers without a scintilla of justification. It has cost the taxpayers $6732 to print these pages, and the total cost of printing this monumental work of verbosity, up until last night, was $646,272.

Don't Let Those Utility Ads Bamboozle You

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

MAYBE you remember that obnoxious radio commercial "Film never lets up, Film never lets up . . ."—Well, neither does the propaganda of the power companies.

Recently in national magazines there was a big ad by the utilities. In large type was "Who ASKED you?" It went on: "Who asked you to pay for electricity used by people you never heard of, a hundred or a thousand miles away?" And then:

"Nobody! But you do help pay the bills for hundreds of thousands of favored people and hundreds of privileged businesses using electricity from certain federal power systems. Your taxes helped build those systems. Your taxes are used to subsidize service to their customers."

Well, it's quite true that Uncle Sam did not go around to Old Man Carter, or John Q. Citizen of What Cheer, Ia., and ask Carter or John Q. personally whether it was okay to go ahead with plans for such projects as the Tennessee Valley Authority. But the TVA issue was fought out in Congress by men whom John Q. helped to elect, and in that sense John Q. certainly had a hand in the decision. And that was true of rural electrification and government electric power transmission lines.

The private utilities don't like public power. They don't like government-built dams. They don't like government power plants, transmission lines, the Rural Electrification Administration.

They say it's wrong for the government to compete with private enterprise; the government ought to stay out of the power business.

Well, Old Man Carter would like to ask the private utilities a question: Why aren't they just as mad because the government didn't ask Carter, and all the other citizens, before handing out (to date) a cool half a billion dollars of our money to these very same utilities?

The figure, to be exact, is $568,867,000. That represents the rapid tax amortization granted on 57 projects to the giant private utilities of the nation.

Rapid amortization means the utilities can write off the cost of plants and expansion in five years instead of the usual 20 to 25 years. And "writing off" means a deduction before they pay taxes. The larger the write-off, the less the apparent profits; the lower the profits, the lower the taxes Uncle Sam gets.

Such tax amortizations are granted when a firm gets a "certificate of necessity," meaning that the expansion they plan is necessary to national defense. But many of these plant expansion programs were planned long before the Korean war broke out, so the tax write-offs are a government handout to the utilities—at your expense.

So, Uncle Sam is a great old gent when it comes to handing out money to the private utilities. It's only when he finances public power projects that help the little fellow that he is way off base.

Which makes the utility ads about "Who ASKED you?" a fraud and a delusion. But this shell game is even worse than that. For the private utility companies are trying to befuddle you—at your expense.

Those advertisements are part of their costs of doing business. And such costs are deducted from gross income of the utilities, before they figure out their net income on which they pay taxes.

And that isn't all. Where rates charged by utilities are regulated by a state body, the utilities are entitled to "a fair return" on their investment. And "a fair return" is a profit after all expenses; which means, after deducting the cost of the kind of advertising that tries to bamboozle you.

Where would you wind up if you fell for their propaganda?

That's easy. You'd be paying more, lots more, for electricity, gas and oil. And the utilities will have tricked you into that—with you paying the cost of being fooled.

Federal Ethical Standards Reflect U.S. Morals—Douglas

"BUSINESS is business" . . . and "politics is politics." Put the two together—especially on the eve of a national election year—and you get many a headline about "corruption in government."

Last week, but not high in the headlines, came a long look at "ethical standards in the Federal Government."

It came from Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), chairman of a Senate Labor and Public Welfare subcommittee.

Rather than reaching for the headlines, Douglas pointed at the nation's "double standard of morality." This is reflected, he said, in current investigations of influence peddling.

The report describes America as a nation in which "the clever man who makes a 'fast buck' gets a certain amount of acclaim, provided he makes enough of them."

"The political trickster frequently can claim his rewards—if he wins," it continued.

"THERE is tolerance in American life for unscrupulous methods which bring immediate rewards, even though those methods, if they should become universal, would destroy the very society in which they are tolerated."

The report then pointed to economic influence in political affairs:

"Examples of double standards can be found in all walks of life today. The credit system of the country is based upon faithfulness in meeting obligations . . . yet some bankers have felt no compunctions about using RFC refinancing to rid themselves of bad risks.

"The businessman's code is to be independent and stand on his own feet, but some organized industries, as well as other economic groups, do not hesitate to use all possible political forces to secure highly favorable decisions from legislators and administrators at the public expense.

"There is in American life a double standard, one highly responsible in its warm feeling for the welfare of our fellows, and the other coldly irresponsible in its single-minded devotion to direct personal advantage. The ruthless standard is epitomized by the traditional comment that 'business is business' and 'politics is politics.'

"When the two realms of economics and politics are combined, however, there is a clear danger to society from aggressive and self-centered policies."

Despite pressures, Douglas found "the basic integrity of the Federal Government, in most branches, is relatively high."

"Most public servants . . . are honest and faithful," he declared.

Serious Lag Seen In Aid To Disabled

Some 66,193 disabled men and women have gotten jobs during the past fiscal year, the most in 31 years, through a joint federal-state program.

Director Mary E. Switzer of the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation pointed out, however, that the national program falls far short of meeting the need for 250,000 rehabilitations a year just to keep abreast of the annual serious disablements. There is a backlog of two million disabled men and women, she added, who must have rehabilitation services if they are to return to work.

"We are lagging because of three factors: not enough funds, lack of trained personnel, and a shortage of facilities," she said.

Republic 'Hold Out' Plant Signs Pact

The last unorganized plant operated by the Republic Steel Corp., the Niles Steel Products Co. at Elyria, O., has been organized and brought under the firm's basic agreement with the CIO Steelworkers, Dist. Dir. William E. Donovan announced.

The company has signed a stipulation bringing the 90 employes under the contract, Donovan said. The district director acted as chairman of the negotiating committee, and was assisted by a delegation from the newly organized union, Local 4638, and USA Staff Rep. William McPhillips.

Russell's Testimony On Cloture Shows Morse Has Better Memory

THE uncompromising stand of the Dixiecrats against majority rule in the Senate was eloquently stated on their behalf last week by Sen. Russell (D. Ga.).

His testimony closed several weeks of hearings before a Senate Rules subcommittee on proposals to limit Senate debate. Russell, in effect, called Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), a leading opponent of the filibuster, a liar. The facts don't bear him out.

In earlier testimony, Morse had charged that the present Senate rule which makes it impossible to shut off debate was adopted as the result of a "deal" between certain Republican and Southern Democrat Senators involving votes against Northwest public power projects and other issues.

Russell said that Morse's statement "was entirely false and without foundation—whole cloth." He added that he had complete familiarity with the negotiations that had resulted in working out and passing the present rule, which was introduced by Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.).

"I never heard the first thing about some deal until about a year later," Russell continued, when an "irresponsible columnist had certain charges that some Southern Senators had been in on such a deal."

Morse had testified that he had made his charge in the Senate at the time the rule was adopted and was merely repeating it. Russell's testimony denied this assertion.

Anyone who checks the Congressional Records for the period between March 16 and March 18, 1949, will find that Morse spoke at length on his charge, and did so more than once. The rule was adopted March 17, but it had been given tentative Senate approval on the 15th.

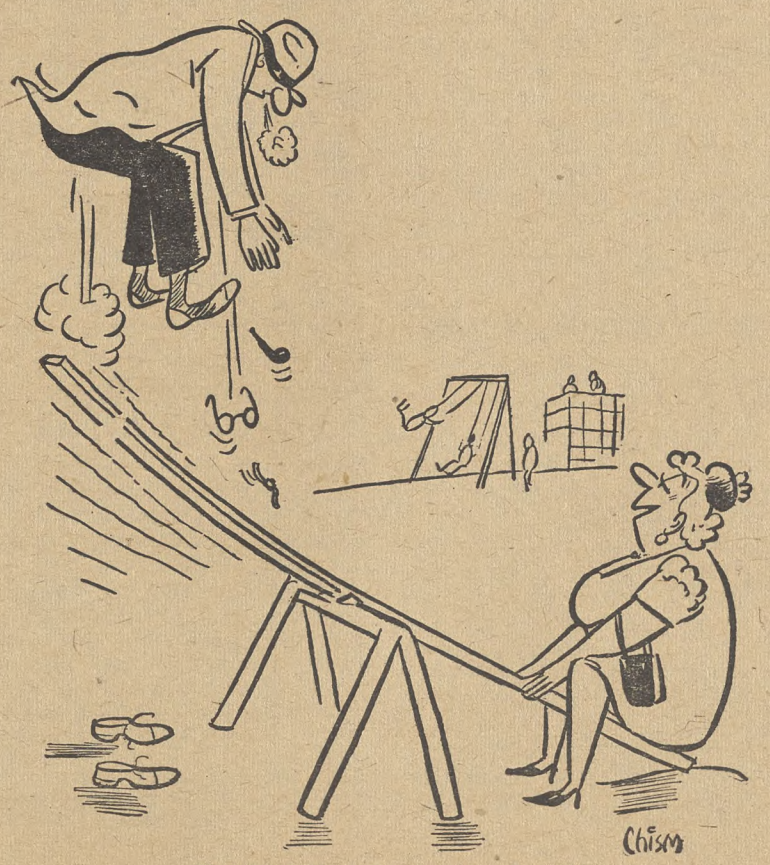
On March 16, Morse charged that "over half, at least, of the Senators in favor of the Wherry substitute amendment pledged themselves to vote for the subject matter of that amendment in advance of debate."

HE THEN made a prediction which subsequent events have wholly justified:

"I think, in fact, a new de facto political party in America was formed on the floor of the Senate last night. I think the new political party, in fact, is a coalition of Democrats and Republicans who stand not only for the principles of the Wherry substitute, but we shall see whether the future voting record does not also indicate that in large measure."

Russell was in charge of action on the rules change and served as floor leader during debate.

In view of the record, his "whole cloth" charge against Morse has all the earmarks of McStassenism.



Ha! Ha! Fooled you that time."

NAACP Leader Raps Byrd

Sen. Byrd (D. Va.), recently was blasted by Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, for the part he played in fostering segregation in his home state.

White declared that while Byrd "has been calling for economy in the government," he has been "encouraging the expenditure of millions to bolster segregation in Virginia."

Speaking in Richmond to an unsegregated audience, White charged that "a small and arrogant block of U. S. Senators—including Harry Byrd—is using the threat of filibuster to block progress in race relations."

Richmond officials had at first refused to permit the meeting on the unsegregated basis, but later agreed to allow it because the gathering was private.

NMU Convention Celebrates A Year Of Progress

By WILLIAM W. WEISS

THE CIO National Maritime Union held a harmonious convention in New York City last week. That fact in itself made news.

In his opening address to the 500 delegates attending the eighth annual NMU conclave in the huge Manhattan Center auditorium, Pres. Joseph Curran recalled previous conventions which had been marked by disruptive disorder.

"As I look around the hall today, I see very few of these disrupters who tried to wreck your union," Curran said.

"I know who they are and so do you. And before this convention is over, they will undoubtedly make themselves known. When they begin to speak, you and I will recognize them for what they are."

He pointed out that the last time the union had met in Manhattan Center, in 1947, the Communists by their delaying tactics had kept the sessions going for 24 days at a cost to the NMU of a third of a million dollars.

Citing the 40-hour week as the greatest economic advance won by the NMU this year, Curran declared that seamen are now on equal terms with shore workers and need no longer be considered "second class citizens."

"When we were negotiating with the ship owners, we told them that either we get the 40-hour week this year—or else," he said. "They knew we weren't kidding and after 14 years they signed on the dotted line."

Other Gains

He listed other gains made during the year for the union's 50,000 members. These included two wage increases totaling 12.4%, a pension and welfare plan, retention of NMU hiring provisions, and the re-establishment and increase of war risk bonuses and insurance.

In marked contrast to previous conventions, the opening day was mild. The only fight that developed was on the nomination of a delegate who had abstained from voting during the 1949 session on a resolution to defend the U. S. against all attackers, including the Soviet Union. His nomination was withdrawn.

Curran charged that some ship owners still continue to attempt to find stooges in ship unions to do their bidding.

"We still have those who attempt to pit one race against another, one language group against another, and they must be stamped out," he said.

"Our union is like America. It is a melting pot, and it should grow stronger for that very reason. There is no reason why, as human beings, as trade unionists and as workers, we cannot live and work together."

He said also that it was the duty of the convention to study the question of unity with other maritime unions in the struggle for economic gains and thus offset the shipowner's principal weapon—keeping seamen divided and thereby weakening their bargaining power.

He warned that while political action is important to any union, it should not go ahead of economic action.

"That's the way the disrupters in the union were trying to push us," he added.

In his report, Curran said the 82nd Congress "has taken the 'Worst Congress' loving cup from the infamous 'Do Nothing' 80th Congress."

"The love match is still on between the Dixiecrats and the reactionary Republicans," he said. "This unholy coalition has stalled Congress by playing politics with every major legislative issue."

He called next year "the year of decision," and said that if the forces of reaction take over the country in 1952, "labor unions will take a terrific beating."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, addressed the convention's second session. He called the breakup of the United Labor Policy Committee "one of the greatest tragedies the labor movement has ever experienced."

Haywood Speaks

He said the responsibility for wrecking the unity of labor "is squarely on the shoulders" of the leaders of the AFL. Reviewing the activities of the ULPC up to the time of its dissolution, Haywood said the rank and file union members of the nation "were let down" when the AFL withdrew.

"The subject of organic unity was never discussed at any ULPC meeting," he declared. "The CIO will never return to the AFL unless we come back on honorable terms.

"Let the AFL leaders get the cobwebs out of their eyes and realize that the CIO is here to stay. We intend to go it alone if necessary, in order to carry on the fight for the working men and women of this nation."

The convention unanimously approved the foreign policy of the Truman administration and condemned "Soviet imperialist aggression" in Europe and the Far and Middle East. A resolution termed the Soviet Union "wholly and solely responsible" for the unsettled condition of the world, and warned against accepting a "sudden switch in the Kremlin line."

The country's stand in Korea, its preparedness program, the North Atlantic Pact, the European Recovery Program and the President's plan for aiding the underdeveloped areas of the world were also supported in the resolution.

Attempts to disrupt or end the nation's foreign aid program by "leftist and rightist-isolationists" were condemned.

An all-inclusive resolution on the American merchant marine, designed to strengthen the country's maritime policy, was also adopted unanimously.

The resolution pointed out the need for maritime planning and called for a "realistic" ship construction program with a strengthened subsidy policy to include all American flag vessels in competition with foreign merchant fleets.

It restated the union's support for a "proper subsidy program," and declared that such payments should be made on a direct parity basis so a direct accounting could be made to the American public.

Other Features

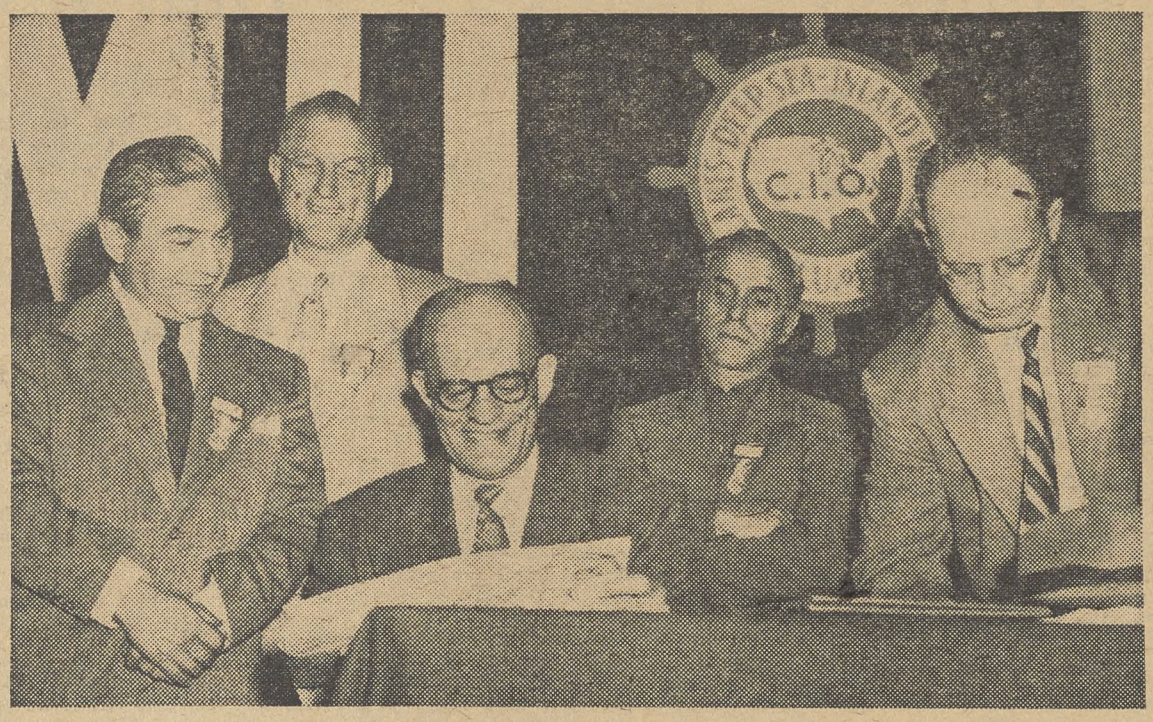
Other features called for the return of all military-operated commercial vessels to private operations, an end to unfair railroad competition against domestic water carriers, and a realistic policy on the training of seamen with emphasis on upgrading.

It opposed the rebuilding of foreign merchant ships at the expense of the American merchant marine.

Other resolutions advocated support of a civil rights program, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the free state of Israel and forest conservation.

Morris Iushewitz, secretary-treasurer of the New York City CIO Council who gave the welcoming address, called for an all-out political drive to defeat the enemies of labor in next year's elections.

He told the delegates the CIO is launching an organizing drive among department store workers in the city.



CIO MARITIME UNION MEETS: Pres. Joseph Curran, center, gets a big laugh out of a New York newspaper story which said NMU members on the ship, the American Builder, want two bars of face soap for each man a week. The NMU eighth convention in New York was a victory celebration over the winning this year of the 40-hour work-week in the shipping industry. Others in the picture, left to right: NMU Attorney Herman E. Cooper, Hoyt Haddock chairman of the CIO Maritime Committee, Seaman Vittorio Ricciardi, and NMU Secy.-Treas. Neal Hanley. All sessions were harmonious.

There Once Was Union Maid And She's Proud Of CIO!

ONE OF THE three women among the 500 delegates attending the CIO National Maritime Union convention in New York last week was pretty Mildred Doltz from Rices Landing, Pa.

Mildred works on a river boat which tows barges up the Monongahela River to Nemicolan, Pa. and down the Ohio River to Steubenville, O. She is the only woman among the crew of 13.

She says she likes her job of cooking and working as a maid on board her ship, the M.V. Victory, owned by the Keystone Division of the Dravo Corp. of Pittsburgh.

"It is very interesting," she said. "I have been working almost six years on the same boat."

Is she a good union member? Here is what she had to say about the NMU and the CIO itself:

"The NMU and the CIO have done a grand job for the workers in the past and I know they will keep on looking out for us. I'm proud to be a member of my union."

Mildred comes by her unionism naturally. Her father, Michael Doltz, has worked in the captive coal mines of the Crucible Steel Co. for 29 years.

LOOKING more like a secretary than a sailor, Mildred Doltz, above, was a delegate to the CIO National Maritime Union convention. She has been a NMU member for almost six years. Her ship is the M. V. Victory, which tows sand, gravel and coal on the Ohio and Monongahela Rivers. Mildred was one of three women delegates attending the convention.

Congressman Macer Loses Court Appeal

Rep. Brehm, the Ohio Republican who was convicted on April 30 of charges that he maced one of his office employes for $1000 in campaign contributions, filed an appeal last week in the U. S. Court of Appeals in Washington.

He contended that District Judge Burnita S. Matthews erred on three specific counts in her handling of the trial, and that the indictment against him was invalid because the Jury Commission which selected the grand jury was "illegally constituted." Brehm was fined $5000 and given a suspended jail term of five to 15 months.

Congress Jammed Rifle In War On High Prices: Haywood

SPEAKING TO representatives of all 14 regions of the Wage Stabilization Board in New York Oct. 22, Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president, declared "you can't run an effective mobilization program in America unless you have equality of sacrifice."

"The 81st Congress gave us a rifle in the form of the Defense Production Act of 1950," he said, "but when you look at that anti-inflation rifle, you find the makers have put rust in the barrel, taken the snap out of the trigger and jammed the firing pin.

"The Defense Production Act of 1950 could no more control inflation than a child's water pistol could halt a stampede of elephants."

The New York meeting—a three-day session—was called in order to afford the public, industry and labor members of the 14 twelve-man regional boards an opportunity to discuss the details of present policies, current problems and plan for the future efforts of the wage stabilization program.

Approximately 9500 cases are currently awaiting board action, it was reported. Some 4500 of these are before the national board and about 5000 before regional boards. Indication was given that the log-jam of back cases has been broken and that decisions on pending cases should begin to flow at a "normal" rate soon.

Haywood pointed out that labor members of the WSB are working under a handicap: "We don't have a good inflation law. We don't have the sort of stabilization program that, in the long run, will stabilize our economy," he declared.

"YOU MEMBERS of CIO, as patriotic Americans, must function in a difficult situation. I know you will do it with honor, to our unions and to our country . . . .

"Your experience will always remind you that collective bargaining problems are human problems . . . . that each case is a case by itself and that it requires thinking in terms of the people involved. That means a flexible approach, not a mechanical approach that completely ignores human problems."

Protect Your Rights, Tobin Tells Learners Becoming GIs

SECY. OF LABOR Maurice J. Tobin had some advice last week for apprentices entering the armed forces.

He urged apprentices, when notified to report for duty, to—

1. Inform the employer, the union secretary and the secretary of the local joint apprenticeship committee, when under the supervision of such a committee, of their intention of going into the service, and ask the employer about military leave.

2. Notify the nearest office of the Veterans' Administration if receiving benefits under the GI Bill of Rights or Public Law 16; failure to do so may result in forfeiture of some of the rights given by law.

3. Make certain the apprenticeship record is up to date.

4. Obtain a certified copy of the apprenticeship record. Without it, full credit for experience might not be given if the apprentice, upon release, wants to resume his apprenticeship with another employer.

5. Present the apprenticeship record when asked about specialties and skills upon reporting for duty—it may mean a promotion.

Tobin's message is in a new pamphlet, What To Do When Apprentice Joe Becomes G.I. Joe, published by the U. S. Bureau of Apprenticeship and available by writing to the bureau in the U. S. Dept. of Labor, Washington 25, D. C.

Give A Buck To PAC

It's A Nine-To-One Chance

Taxes Will Take Bigger Chunk Out Of Your Pay Thursday

NINE-TO-ONE your pay envelope will be considerably thinner beginning Thursday, Nov. 1, when higher income taxes go into effect.

However, if your income is more than a half million a year you can be quite happy about the new tax law which Congress passed one day before adjourning. If you're in this group, you get nicked only about one-tenth as hard—percentagewise—as all the other poor taxpayers not "smart" enough to have your kind of "influence" on tax legislation.

In fact, under the new tax law, once the taxpayer's income hits the $50,000 per annum level, he gets off with a percentage increase about half, or less, that paid by persons earning less.

The biggest increases in the new law apply to persons earning between $3000 and $25,000, but don't let that mislead you into thinking that those earning $2000 or less are getting off easy.

SINCE 1944, taxes on this lowest group counting the increases in the new law, have increased 33.7%. That is several percent more than in any other group, except for those in the $3000 level, where the jump has been 32.5%.

Those earning more than $100,000 a year come off with a percentage increase since 1944 better than half that of all other taxpayers.

In signing the new $5689 million tax-increase bill, President Truman made it clear that he regarded it as unfair and inadequate. He said that he signed the bill, and knew that many Congressmen had voted for it, only because "we badly need these revenues to help pay for the strong defenses we are building."

The President, who had asked Congress to provide for increases totalling $10 bililon, said that the amount raised in the new bill was not enough. He added that he would ask for "legislation improving our tax laws" when Congress reconvenes in January.

THE CIO supported the President's request for the full amount on the grounds that it was necessary to balance the budget and to drain off excess funds as a check against inflation.

CIO spokesmen pointed out that the additional revenue could easily be obtained simply by closing tax loopholes through which corporations and individuals with big incomes avoid paying their fair share.

The Senate Finance Committee under the chairmanship of Sen. George (D. Ga.), which was largely responsible for the tax measure as passed, ignored completely the CIO plea for equality of sacrifice. It placed most of the new increases upon low and middle income families and reduced the excess profits taxes on corporations far below the level originally voted by the House.

As a result, you'll be charged somewhere between 11% and 12% more than you paid last year in personal income taxes if you earn less than $50,000. At that level and above, your increase in taxes diminishes rapidly so that you pay only a little more than 1% additional if you earn $500,000 or more.

These provisions directly benefit most of the members of the Senate Finance Committee responsible for them. With few exceptions, they are wealthy men; several are millionaires.

However, the increases in your income tax are only the beginning. Even after you get your pay envelope, the new law will take a big chunk of what remains.

Taxes on many of the things you buy also will go up Nov. 1. Cigarettes will go up 1c a pack, for example. New taxes will increase the cost of a $2000 car by $60, and they will up the gasoline required to run it by 1½c to 2c per gallon.

There are also increased excises on liquors, wines and beer, and there's a new 10% tax on many household appliances. On other items, such as fountain pens and cigarette lighters, the new tax is 15%.

THESE ARE the increases which Congress voted affecting wage earners and others already severely pinched by the inflation Congress refused to control.

Corporations, however, now showing the highest profits in history—more than double those of World War II—get off comparatively easy. The normal and surtax rates on those earnings has been increased 5%.

Moreover, the increase in corporation taxes is just about offset by an unprecedented "gift" in the form of an exemption from payment of the higher rate on the income during the first three months of the year.

SEVENTY-FIVE members of the CIO Furniture Workers who a year ago lost their jobs at the Longview Furniture Co., Hickory, N. C., were unjustly discharged because of union activity, a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has found. The firm is appealing, but the NLRB is gathering data on back wages due the victims. Here Reid Johnson, NLRB sub-regional director at Winston-Salem, N. C., and his aide, Mrs. Thelma Alley (seated at left), interview (left to right, seated), Williard Leatherman and H. D. Johnson, and (left to right, standing), Katy Miller, Martha Leatherman and Ollie Craig.

New Foreign Aid Bill Passes; 5% Cut May Hurt U. S. Allies

AN APPROPRIATION of $7328 million to finance the program of military and economic aid to non-Communist nations was passed by Congress in the closing hours of the first session.

The total represented a compromise $154 million below the amount voted by the House and about $120 million more than that approved by the Senate.

However, the increase was largely made up of a special appropriation of $100 million for aid to Spain, which the Senate insisted upon adding despite the fact that President Truman had not asked for it.

Despite its eagerness to make funds available to the Franco fascist government, the Senate insisted upon slicing 5% from all items in the original bill—most of it intended for democratic allies. In doing so, it ignored warnings that such a cut would seriously hurt the mutual defense program.

SENATE Democratic Leader McFarland recalled the Senate previously had cut the program heavily when it approved the authorizing legislation. President Truman originally asked for $8.5 billion.

However, while the new appropriations were nearly $1.2 billion below this amount, the measure also provided for reappropriations of unexpended balances of 1951 funds totalling more than $816 million, so that the total available actually will be only about $400 million below the full amount requested.

The rush to adjourn probably contributed to passage of the bill without further damaging cuts. The go-home mood unquestionably shortened debate and reduced opposition to a minimum.

SHORTLY BEFORE adjournment, Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), joined by 22 other Senators of both major parties, introduced a bill to create a non-partisan commission, similar to the Hoover Commission, to study and make as effective as possible the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The commission would be charged with studying and recommending improvements in the overall mutual security program as it affects the North Atlantic Treaty countries.

Under the new mutual security law, the program will be administered by a new Mutual Security Administration. President Truman's nomination of W. Averell Harriman as the head of the new agency won speedy Senate approval.

Commies Lose Votes In French, Norwegian Elections

THE COMMUNISTS lost a lot of ground in recent local elections in France and Norway, complete returns indicate.

But too much comfort shouldn't be taken from the results. For the most part, they reflect thinking and feeling on purely local issues. In both countries local election ballots are often marked on a personal rather than party basis.

In France rural voters broke with the Communists and Socialists they had supported in 1945 and swung toward the parties of the moderate government headed by Premier Pleven.

The swing was so sharp that the Reds lost more than half of the seats they held, and the Socialists about 30%. Gen. DeGaulle's Rally of the French People, on the far right, gained sharply, but did not do as well as its leaders had anticipated.

Interestingly, the Communists fared worse in sections where U. S. troops are bivouacked and where the campaign issues included the Atlantic Pact. If the results mean anything significant, it is that the great mass of French people favor Pleven's course of international cooperation and the Atlantic Pact.

In Norway, the Labor Party polled 43.7% of the vote compared to 38.8% in 1947, when the last local elections were held. The Communists, on the other hand, won but 6.4% compared to 10.5% in 1947.

The Laborites gained 591 seats, the Communists lost 493. The Conservatives, who polled 14.8% in 1947, ran their total up to 16.9%.

Although the Laborites did better in the cities than in rural sections, the Communists increased their vote in Oslo, the capital, from 6% in 1947 to 7.8%.

U. S. Employes Get 10% Wage Increase

Some 1.5 million federal government employes are getting a 10% wage increase, with a floor of $300 yearly and a ceiling of $800, under a bill approved by Congress shortly before it recessed.

Senate Resolution Demands Speed In U.S. Probe Of Smog

CITING THE tragedy of Donora, Pa., Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) last week demanded that Congress speed investigation of and legislation prohibiting industrial air pollution and thus protect "the security of the people's health."

It was at Donora, a heavily industrialized town near Pittsburgh, that almost 6000 of the city's 14,000 population were stricken ill and 20 killed by concentrated air pollution.

That was in October, 1948, Murray recalled. Three years have passed without effective federal corrective action.

Tired of waiting, just before Congress adjourned Murray introduced a joint resolution for intensified research on the causes, hazards, effects and correction of air pollution, particularly in industrial centers.

Such investigation, he recalled, was a major recommendation of the U. S. Public Health Service immediately after the Denora tragedy.

"The purpose of this proposed legislation," Murray said, "is to remedy a situation of ever increasing consequence to the health—even the lives—of American people, a condition which also is wasteful of the nation's assets of wealth and natural resources.

"Donora presented a case of overwhelming concentration of smog. But what about the effects of lesser concentrations of polluted air—the sort breathed in for years on end, day and night, hour after hour? How is that condition affecting the health of our people in highly industrialized areas? We must take steps to find out."

A Spy For Each Miner—That's Life In Hungary's New Democracy!

THE UNGRATEFUL workers behind the Iron Curtain have apparently confused their "liberation" by the Communists with the type of oppression they are told they suffered under capitalism at its worst.

The thankless proletariat of the "new democracies" apparently disdains the priceless opportunity of working itself into an early grave and steadfastly clings to the absurd belief that it should be paid a living wage and get enough to eat, according to a dispatch in the New York Times.

Things are so bad, says the article, that even the opportunity to be declared a "Socialist Labor Hero," complete with medals and uniform, hasn't worked. The result, it adds, is that industrial production quotas just won't be met this year.

The situation in Czechoslovakia and Hungary has deteriorated so that the party leadership has been shaken up, it goes on. The squawks from party spokesmen are so horrific that the Iron Curtain itself can't contain them.

In fact, things have become so tough in the big Hungarian coal field at Tatabanya that every miner has his personal spy, according to the Budapest newspaper Nepszava.

"People's educators," the Times quotes it as saying, have been ordered "to remain in the company of every absentee miner, not only inside but outside the mine; calling for them in the morning, take them home and see that they make good use of their leisure after-hours."

In the Varpalota coal fields, miners who are absent from work get their pay in an "envelope of shame." On it appears the amount of the alleged damage they have done to the "people's" economy and their own families.

MATYAS RAKOSI, head of the party in Hungary, thundered a bitter denunciation recently of sabotaging coal miners and "also of party leaders for having handled the miners with kid gloves." The minister of construction has been fired, the Times said, and other heads are due to topple.

What the Communists call Stakhanovite patrols, but which are really teams of speedup instructors, have been visiting Hungarian factories "to help workers reveal hidden reserves and to accomplish the plan."

Apparently they haven't done much in reconciling the workers to admittedly scanty meals, long hours and low pay, not even in the big machine shop named in honor of the party leader. The Budapest newspaper Vilagossag said that rejects were so great the plant "therefore used up last year's entire stock of certain materials."

IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA, Interior Minister Vaclav Nosek recently laid down the law to party functionaries and superintendents of mines in the Ostrava region after declaring what amounted practically to a state of emergency. He told them the huge Vitkovice iron works would be forced to cut production unless it got more coal, and denounced the miners for their efforts to retain the six-hour day on Saturday.

"What was revolutionary achievement in capitalist times," he proclaimed, "is in today's situation reactionary and even counter-revolutionary."

Which seemed to sum up things pretty well.

New Non-CP World Group Of Journalists Is Planned

PLANS for an international meeting to set up a new non-Communist world federation of newspaper editorial workers were made at a recent conference in Paris.

The Paris parley grew out of the initiative of Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild and three competing unions of French journalists.

The organizing convention will be held in Brussels, Belgium, from May 4 to 10, 1952. The new group will replace the Intl. Organization of Journalists, which is now part of the Communist World Federation of Trade Unions.

Twenty-three delegates attended the Paris meeting. They established an interim preparatory committee, consisting of one member of each delegation present, to complete plans for the Brussels session.

Gen. Sec. Clement Bundock, of the British National Union of Journalists, was named chairman and also served as chairman of the preliminary meeting; Marcel Stijns, of the Professional Journalists Union of Belgium, was chosen vice chairman, and Martin, head of labor information for the Economic Cooperation Administration in Europe, was elected secretary.

Represented at the Paris meeting were the three bona fide French unions of journalists—Journalist Trade Union (Force Ouviere), Union of French Journalists (Christian), and National Union of Journalists (independent); and the legitimate unions of journalists of Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Great Britain, Germany, Iceland, The Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and the United States.

Dixiecrats Block End Of D.C. Fire Dept. Bias

THREE Dixiecrats have succeeded in blocking racial integration in the Washington, D. C., Fire Dept.—at least temporarily.

Washington is governed by three commissioners, appointed by the President with Senate approval. The commissioners, John Russell Young, Brig Gen. Bernard L. Robinson and F. Joseph Donohue, voted three times within 18 days to assign 14 Negro firemen to understaffed white companies.

While Donohue—outspoken foe of continued segragation—was out of the city, the commissioners finally voted to postpone the order until Congress meets again in January.

The action was taken after a letter was received from Chairman McMillan (D. S.C.) of the House District Committee, which with its Senate counterpart proposes legislation for the city.

McMillan requested postponement of the order until January on the ground that the press of business forced him to cancel a meeting of the committee scheduled to be held shortly before Congress adjourned.

McMILLAN and two other Dixiecrat members — Smith (Va.) and Davis (Ga.)—opposed ending segregation. On one occasion they criticized the commissioners for their order at a private meeting at McMillan's office.

Unfortunately Local 36 of the AFL Fire Fighters, to which some members of the Fire Dept. belong, voted 664 to 35 against the order.

In a newspaper ad the local's majority membership set forth its opposition. The ad said that during many of their long hours in the fire houses, the firemen "play games and look at television."

Upon his return to Washington, Donohue for the third time in his weekly radio broadcast discussed integration and advised the firemen:

"They could well spend their game-playing and TV time reading the Constitution on the equal rights due all Americans."

He warned that Communist propagandists will make capital of the union's vote against integration.

"Other nations," Donohue said, "have lost their liberty because they did not love liberty enough to share it with all their countrymen. The price we must pay for liberty is to recognize that Americans must get equal treatment under the law."

He added that prejudice will probably always remain in the social and business worlds, but "has no place in government."

He called postponement of the order "unfortunate but not unreasonable," but to put the order into effect would be "silly," because Congress may later approve a segregation law.

Republican Leader Denounces Donohue

A Republican leader in Washington, D. C., last week attacked moves to eliminate senseless racial discrimination in the fire department of the nation's capital.

The anti-discrimination move had been pushed by District Commissioner F. Joseph Donohue.

After it was stymied by Dixiecrats in Congress, the president of the Washington Young Republican Club, Carl L. Shipley, denounced Donohue for having "aggravated" race relations.

Magnavox Hit For Firing Six

The National Labor Relations Board has issued complaints charging unfair labor practices to the Greeneville (Tenn.) Cabinet Co., a division of Magnavox.

The 600 employes, who make cabinets and assemble Magnavox radio and television units, are paid wages averaging 50c an hour less than workers in the firm's Fort Wayne, Ind., plant, according to Paul R. Christopher, Tennessee CIO director. The CIO organized the Fort Wayne plant some years ago.

The NLRB complaints were based on CIO charges that the company had discharged six employes to discourage union membership; had questioned workers about their union affiliation and had spied on union meetings; had threatened employes engaged in organizing activities on their own time on company premises, and had coerced and intimidated union members.

S.F. Radiomen Vote CIO

HOW CIO affiliation has quickened organizing radio and television workers and has brought substantial economic gains was told recently by a local officer of the National Association of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians.

NABET is CIO's newest affiliate.

C. F. Rothery, San Francisco NABET chapter president, said that since CIO affiliation last spring, the union has won four representation elections at ABC and NBC and at KPIX, an independent station.

Particularly on ABC in San Francisco, the CIO union is expanding from a craft group to an industrial union, with directors, television program and newsroom representation won recently. The technical staff was represented by NABET.

Contracts for the new units have been completed, with NABET in one case winning a 50% increase of from $250 to $375 a month. They are before the Wage Stabilization Board.

Los Angeles CIO Asks

How Can We Keep Impetus Of ULPC?

THE GREATER Los Angeles CIO Council has taken a long, hard look at its experience in the local United Labor Policy Committee.

It liked what it saw there. To help make use of that experience in the future, it has prepared a nine-page mimeographed report on its history and activities.

The report shows that the local ULPC was organized in April, 1951, by representatives of the CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhoods. First things came first: $5000 was pledged by the AFL unions, $3000 by the CIO—and all of it was eventually collected.

"Emphasis was placed on creation of an aggressive public opinion which would be felt by Congress," the report says. "Within two weeks a staff was organized."

The ULPC went on from there. Much publicity was secured in metropolitan and union newspapers, on radio and television programs. A half-hour live TV show on inflation, using professional talent, brought mixed reactions from union members but was generally well received by the public.

Literature was prepared and distributed to union members, along with posters for union halls and shops. A speaker's manual and set of fact sheets for union speakers on inflation and other mobilization problems were distributed.

THE Los Angeles Housewives Committee For Effective Price Control, exposed as a Communist front, was replaced by the innocent members with the ULPC-aided Consumers League Against High Prices.

The ULPC sponsored a Conference on Equality of Sacrifice, which was held on two evenings, and was well attended.

"Since the dissolution of ULPC," the report says, "this council has continued, with perhaps less enthusiasm but a great deal of determination, to push the anti-inflation, equality-of-sacrifice program in line with National CIO policy.

"All of the personnel, both AFL and CIO, which helped with the local ULPC were saddened by the ending of ULPC, and CIO local union leadership and rank-and-file membership were in some cases discouraged and resentful."

The CIO Council since the dissolution of ULPC has passed a resolution expressing willingness to work with the AFL "in a spirit of friendliness and cooperation" in those fields where pooled resources would help.

"POLITICAL action is the easy answer to the question of where do we go from here," the report concludes, "but the answer is not as simple as it sounds.

"A PAC program of itself will not provide solutions to several problems: how can we preserve and make use of the impetus which was gained under the ULPC banner, the many friends we made both within the AFL and the community, and the support which was developed within CIO circles?

"A conclusion to be drawn from our experience within the ULPC is this: the ULPC idea, which obviously satisfied a strong desire for friendship and cooperation long felt by many AFL and CIO people, plus inflation and the personal hardship which inflation involves, equalled enthusiasm, participation and support to a degree which is not usually found in any trade union activity, certainly not in political action.

"In other words, CIO members not only were aware of the actual problems and felt these problems in their own lives, but they liked and responded to the approach which the CIO presented.

"In trying to recapture and use this spirit in political action, we can perhaps evolve a similar equation, one which appeals to the intense economic problems which all workers and lower income groups now feel, and one which makes use of methods and techniques which are also satisfying in themselves."

"Say, Mister, can ya spare a coupla bucks for coffee and doughnuts?"

IN THE TRUE SPIRIT of CIO unionism, fellow members of various faiths and races pitch in to give a hand to Joe Blasen (far left) of Local 602, Auto Workers, in putting insulation siding on his home near Lansing, Mich. He has been rebuilding the house.

Tax Rebate Grants Cut Off After $10 Billions 'Stolen'

THERE WILL be less horsing around in the barn housing the public trough of special tax benefits under the "certificates of necessity" program after Nov. 1.

The door is being locked—but $10 billion has already been "stolen."

That is the total of rapid tax write-offs which have already been approved. Applications for an additional $34 billion which have been received won't get nearly as favorable a reception as those tax concessions already approved.

New standards aimed at keeping industrial expansion more in line with building material supplies will go into effect Nov. 1. They establish a kind of priority rating system based on the need for specific types of production expansion.

Machine tool production — the most critical defense bottleneck—will have top priority. Military items fall to fifth place.

The new standards also will give more attention than the old to manpower problems, plant dispersal and to the relative justification for allocating scarce materials, such as steel, for the new industrial expansion.

UNDER THE tax concession program, firms with projects approved by the Defense Production Administration can write off a large part of the cost of new facilities in five years instead of the usual 20 to 25 years.

This provision has been called a "bonanza" for big business, since firms getting the benefits escape excess profits taxation and the public at large ultimately foots the bill for their expansion.

The new rules, announced by DPA Administrator Manly Fleischmann, follow a 60-day moratorium on the "certificates," which ended Oct. 18. It had been imposed following criticism by some congressmen that too many big companies had been getting too many benefits, while the applications from smaller firms were being bypassed.

Among the industries which will find it harder to get tax benefits in the future are power, railroads, petroleum, shipbuilding and hundreds of others.

In the case of another industry, aluminum, the Justice Dept. has demanded that the "big three" be barred by DPA from any further plant expansion.

The Anti-Trust Division has urged that new independent firms be considered in the drive to produce 500,000 more tons of aluminum annually. It insists that if new production capacity is needed, the DPA must make sure that further monopoly does not result.

Open Speaking Tour At CIO Convention, HST Urged

PRESIDENT TRUMAN has been invited to address CIO's 13th national convention next week as "the beginning of a nation-wide tour dedicated to the strengthening of liberal government in America."

Calling at the White House recently were Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director, and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

On behalf of Pres. Philip Murray, they invited Truman to address the CIO convention banquet in New York City on Nov. 5, opening day of the convention.

After meeting with the President, Kroll said he told Truman that he has found "great and growing dissatisfaction with the 82nd Congress, whose record of constructive legislation on behalf of the people is negligible to say the least."

Kroll recently returned from a tour through many sections of the nation.

He said he found increasing popular concern "that Congress had been evading its responsibility to draft a liberal-minded legislative program in the spirit of equality of sacrifice, and that this failure is having a deleterious effect on many phases of the defense mobilization effort." Kroll said he found this concern both inside and outside of labor.

Kroll and Goldberg strongly urged Truman once again "to go directly to the people in a nation-wide speaking tour in order to bring to the people as a whole a renewal of faith in the liberal, effective and forward-looking program of the Fair Deal."

Levin Honored By 1000 At Banquet

One thousand labor, clothing industry and community leaders last week paid tribute to Sam Levin, retired international vice president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO, at a banquet in Chicago.

Greetings of CIO and Steelworker Pres. Philip Murray were presented by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, while speakers included ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky, Joe Germano, USA district director, Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, Gov. Adlai Stevenson of Illinois and Mayor Martin Kennelly of Chicago.

New 'Hate' Organization Formed In St. Louis

A new hate organization, the "Citizens' Protective Association," has popped up in St. Louis.

An off-shoot of Gerald L. K. Smith's Christian Nationalist Movement, it is campaigning for enforced segregation and white Christian supremacy. Heading it is John W. Hamilton, who often ran for public office as a Smith candidate.

Ruling Hits Reed & Prince

10 Years of Failing To Bargain Fairly

THE CIO Steelworkers last week won another victory —their second—over the Reed & Prince Manufacturing Co. of Worcester, Mass.

One more and the National Labor Relations Board ought to give them permanent possession of the firm, along with the right to bargain.

The NLRB upheld most of the intermediate report of Trial Examiner C. W. Whittmore finding the company guilty of failure to bargain in good faith and ordering it to do so.

The ruling was made by a three to one vote. Members John M. Houston, Abe Murdock and Paul L. Styles voted for it. Member James J. Reynolds, Jr., voted against it, on the ground that the evidence was not enough to sustain the charge of bad faith bargaining.

The majority, however, found the evidence ample. In fact, some of it was familiar, because the same charges were made against the company by the old Steel Workers Organizing Committee in 1937.

The story was substantially the same in both cases. In the older, the company forced a breakdown in negotiations. A strike followed. The firm got injunctions and finally broke the walkout. The NLRB found for the union. The company fought the decision all the way to the Supreme Court and finally lost, signing a contract in 1941.

THE LOCAL became dormant in 1945 but was reorganized early last year. It won an NLRB representation election, 449 to 304, and was certified as bargaining agent on July 20, 1950.

Then history started to repeat itself. The company stalled for six weeks before meeting with the union.

Then it stalled in negotiations for 13 meetings, offering nothing but a 10c an hour wage increase at a time when its minimum rates were 37c an hour less than those at the nearby plant of the American Steel & Wire Co. A strike followed.

The union invoked a seldom used State law under which the State Conciliation & Arbitration Board places the blame for an industrial dispute where it belongs. The company refused to attend the hearing and tried to block it by court action. But it was held anyway, and the board placed the blame on the company.

IT FOUND that the charge of failing to bargain in good faith was sustained by the company's delaying for six weeks before meeting union negotiators and in furnishing payroll data asked by the union which it never did get around to providing.

The NLRB also found the charge supported by the company's handling of the union's "trivial" requests; its insistence on having a stenotypist take a verbatim transcript of negotiation meetings, "a practice condemned by experienced persons in the industrial relations field;" its "hasty" granting of a 10c an hour increase while wages were still being negotiated, and its refusal to bargain on the checkoff.

"Although no one of the separate elements in this case," said the NLRB, "is in itself conclusive evidence of bad faith bargaining, when the entire bargaining pattern of the respondent (company) is viewed in its totality and the individual items are appraised together, the picture is clear.

"We . . . are convinced that the record, taken as a whole, demonstrates a lack of good faith bargaining on the respondent's part.

"The respondent is not experiencing labor relations difficulties for the first time. More than 10 years ago, a predecessor of the union sought recourse to the Board in a not too dissimilar situation, and it was not until the Board issued an order and the Court of Appeals enforced the order that the respondent negotiated a collective bargaining agreement."

"We have scrupulously avoided prejudging the respondent because of its rather unsavory labor relations history, but the Board is not required by law to ignore this history."

THE DISPUTE led to testimony several weeks ago before the Senate Labor-Management Relations subcommittee. At its conclusion Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), denounced the company's policies as "disgraceful" and said they were "the worst anti-labor relations" he had ever encountered.

"You ought to go to a school on industrial relations and learn the elementary principles of collective bargaining," he told the firm's vice president, Ernest Boyd.

Murray, Baruch Dubious Of Wage Curb Questionnaire

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Bernard M. Baruch, elder statesman, share a dim view of a questionnaire being circulated on whether workers should be "willing to accept a permanent program of wage and price control."

The questionnaire is being circulated by the Mid-West Debate Bureau of Normal, Ill. Baruch wrote Murray to tell him about the questionnaire.

Baruch commented that "any attempt to control wages permanently would be an entering wedge for the conscription of labor to which we are all opposed."

Murray replied that he had received the same type of questionnaire and was investigating the bureau to find out how the questionnaire was developed.

"It appears to me," Murray wrote, "that the choice of this subject is an extremely unfortunate one, chosen either by individuals interested in spreading propaganda, as you indicate, or by individuals who are merely innocent of the serious implications of such a subject."

4 Indictments Dismissed In Cicero Riots

INDICTMENTS charging four persons with conspiracy in connection with last summer's race riots in Cicero, Ill., were dismissed Oct. 22 by Judge Wilbert F. Crowley in Cook County Criminal Court at Chicago.

The grand jury had returned two indictments in connection with mob violence that took place when Harvey E. Clark, Jr., a Negro bus driver, attempted to move into what had been an all-white apartment building. His furniture was destroyed and the apartment building wrecked and burned.

One of the indictments named such ill-assorted people as Mrs. Camille DeRose, who sold the building to Negroes; George C. Adams, attorney who purchased it in trust; Charles Edward, the building agent; George N. Leighton, another attorney, and Norman Silverman, who was arrested while distributing Communist literature a month after the disorder.

The indictment against Leighton was dismissed earlier. In quashing it against the others, Judge Crowley said "there is no sufficient charge of conspiracy to injure property and it seems contradictory that unknown persons can suffer financial loss."

"THERE is an absence of facts to show incitment to riot," he added. "The indictment shows no affirmative acts on the part of the defendants. The mere passive conduct does not constitute incitment to riot. Tempting to crime is not inciting to crime."

A motion to kill the other indictment, which charged Police Chief Erwin Konovsky with malfeasance in office, was to be heard later.

While Judging Crowley was acting, a federal grand jury was being impaneled in another Chicago court house to determine if civil rights were violated during the disorder. It recessed for two weeks without receiving any detailed instructions.

Woodworkers Vote On Officers

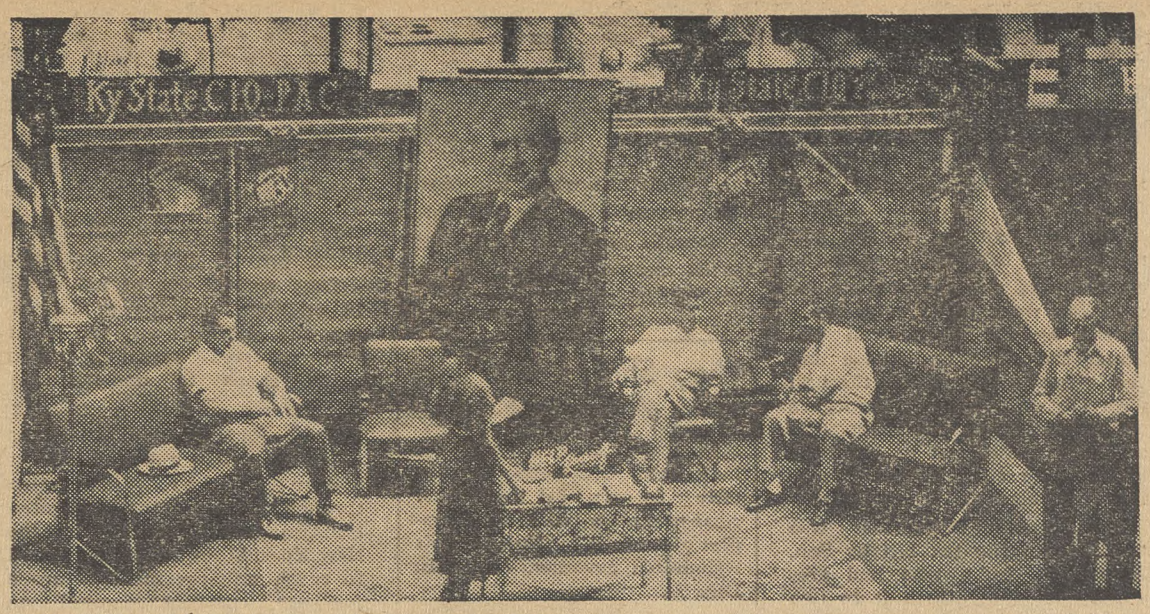
Ballots are in the hands of the locals and must be returned to the international union office in Portland, Ore., postmarked not later than Nov. 15. The ballot count will start at 9 a.m. on Nov. 20 and the results will be announced Nov. 26, according to J. D. Jolly, Laurel, Miss., chairman of the balloting committee.

Pres. E. J. Fadling is opposed for the office he has held since 1945 by Al Hartung, now first vice president.

Vieing for first vice president are Burke Christie, Olympia, Wash., and J. E. Dicey, Laurel, Miss.; for second vice president, Claude Ballard, Portland, Ore., and Tom MacKenzie, Vancouver, B. C.; and for trustee, Rae Eddie, Vancouver, who is completing a full six-year term, and Walter Belka, Seattle, Wash.

Sec.-Treas. Carl Winn was re-elected without opposition at the recent IWA convention in Denver, Col.



SEVERAL THOUSAND COPIES of CIO literature were distributed from this booth of Kentucky CIO Council and PAC at the Kentucky State Fair at Louisville.

Shipbuilding Workers Pledge Support For Better Wage Drive

By A. G. DELMAN

CIO SHIPBUILDING Workers will continue their drive for living wages and better working conditions in all the nation's shipyards, and for building up of the U.S. Merchant Marine.

Such were decisions reached by 150 delegates at the IUMSWA's second national policy conference, held Oct. 18-19 in Baltimore.

Unanimously the delegates protested cuts in shipbuilding steel allocations which suspended construction of 14 fast Mariner ships.

In a wire to President Truman, Shipbuilders Pres. John J. Grogan charged the steel cutback "will jeopardize the national defense of the country" and urged a "proper coordination of the shipbuilding and ship repair program that has not been made."

With 4000 ship union members nearing the 100-day mark in their strike at Alabama Drydock, Mobile, and the Todd-Johnson yards at New Orleans to win the IUMSWA's wage policy goals, the conference reaffirmed its demands for uniform, standard mechanic's rates in all yards.

"Unstinting and unremitting" financial support was pledged to members of the two striking Southern local unions.

Long strides in winning the wage policy goal have been taken in the Atlantic, Pacific, Great Lakes, and inland yards, the delegates reported. Eradication of the Gulf shipyard differential is the last barrier in establishing the nation-wide policy.

The conference scored American companies for building some 100 new ships in foreign yards.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE WRITER just returned from New York where he attended the National Wage Stabilization Board's conference of its regional members. I met with the labor members, their alternates, and the executive secretaries of the regional boards.

Allan Haywood

CIO representatives on the National Board, Emil Rieve, Joseph Beirne and John Livingston, as well as John Brophy and Ben Wyle, were in attendance. The briefing sessions of the Board proved to be very informative. While in New York, I was invited to attend the National Maritime Union's convention. This organization is made up of a real bunch of guys who are trade unionist to the hilt. One thing of note was that for the first time in years the Communist were conspicuous in their absence. Real trade union issues were discussed and decided upon. Pres. Joe Curran and his associate officers are to be complimented on the fine job done for the membership of the Maritime Union. These men are our world couriers and are the salt of the earth.

Preparations for the coming CIO Convention in New York are being completed. Beginning this week the Executive Board and the vice presidents will meet, as well as the various convention committees.

The CIO is about to enter another phase of its growth. We are determined to continue building our union and bringing its benefits to more and more people. The unwarranted break-up of the United Labor Policy Committee has only inspired us of industrial unionism in our determination to further the fight against the captains of industry.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE-CIO reports the following NLRB representation election victories: Smith Welding Equipment, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 83, no union 46; A. W. Franklin, Long Island, N. Y., IUE 114, UE 0, UIU 90; General Electric, Huntingburg, Ind., IUE 254, no union 246; Pitney Glass (GE), Cleveland, O., IUE 166, UE 138, no union 1; Connecticut Telephone and Electric Co., Meriden, Conn., IUE 317, no union 11, UAW-AFL 187; Wirt Electric Co., Philadelphia, Pa., IUE 109, no union 6; General Electric Supply Co., Los Angeles, Calif., IUE 20, UE 12, no union 1; True Temper, Bowling Green, Ky., IUE 30, no union 10; General Register, Long Island, N. Y., IUE 38, no union 2.

Acting Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports that in a representation election at the Rocky River Paper Mills, Three Rivers, Mich., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Paperworkers by 49 to 19. UPA Rep. Darrell King was in charge of the campaign, assisted by Rep. Elsie Bush.

A. F. Hartung, vice president, CIO Woodworkers, reports the following union authorization elections held recently: E. C. Olson Co., Spokane, Wash., eligible 80, for union shop 47, against 13; Keystone Frame Co., Spokane, eligible 25, for 23, against 0; Western Cedar Lumber Co., Spokane, eligible 165, for 129, against 3, void 1; Bierd-Nundorf Lumber Co., Spokane, eligible 51, for 40, against 7; Brewer Lumber Mills, Spokane, eligible 22, for 21, against 0; National Pole Co., Spokane. eligible 56, for 48, against 0; Deer Park Pine Industry, Deer Park, Wash., eligible 200, for 177, against 9.

IN A representation election at the B. F. Johnson Sawmill, Lebanon, Ore., the workers favored the IWA-CIO by a vote of 19 to 3 for no union. The R. A. Thompson Trucking Co., Prineville, Ore., was organized and recognized without an election.

Reg. Dir. August Scholle reports that Local Industrial Union 1064 won a union shop election at the Cadillac Motor Co. cafeterias, Detroit, operated by the Nationwide Food Service, Inc.: eligible 49, 36 for union shop, 5 against, 1 void. In a representation election at the Thompson Products cafeteria, operated by the Fred B. Prophet Co., the workers favored LIU 1064 by a vote of 6 to 0 against.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that CIO-LIU 78 won a representation election at Paul Schmidt, Patterson, Cal., by a vote of 9 to 5. CIO Rep. Ken Gillie and Local Rep. Lum Moorhead were in charge.

Flip-Flops Of Smith Hit By Jersey CIO

THE FLIP-FLOP voting of Sen. Smith (R. N.J.) in the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee last week brought sharp criticism from Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council.

"Last week," he wrote Smith, "you voted against the confirmation of Chester Bowles as Ambassador to India on the specious grounds that he lacked experience in diplomacy, especially in Asia.

"This week you voted against confirmation of Philip Jessup (as a U. S. delegate to the United Nations) on the equally specious grounds that he had so much diplomatic experience, particularly in Asia, that he was responsible for our foreign policy there."

HOLDERMAN told Smith he had done the State and the nation a "disservice" in voting against Jessup and thereby blocking his appointment. Jessup, however, will serve as a UN delegate under a recess appointment by President Truman.

"The only issue raised before your Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and Harold Stassen," he wrote, "related to Jessup's loyalty.

"While every impartial observer agreed that Jessup has been fully loyal to his country and while you stated you had absolute confidence in his integrity, ability and loyalty to his country, you bowed to miserbable McCarthyism and voted against confirmation."

Ben Shahn, Artist, Was Happy At CIO

BEN SHAHN is one of America's great artists, and he is one of labor's great friends in the artistic world.

The work of Ben Shahn and his warm sympathy for workers and their unions are discussed in a handsome new book, "Portrait of the Artist as an American," by Selden Rodman. (Harpers, $6.50 a copy.)

Shahn may be remembered by many union members as the art director for the CIO Political Action Committee in the 1944 campaign. His bold, colorful and imaginative posters found a welcome place in hundreds of union halls throughout the country.

As the author of his biography notes, "Shahn's memories of the CIO are almost wholly happy." Shahn plunged into the campaign to re-elect President Roosevelt to a fourth term with enthusiasm and his work showed his love of the task. In fact, the author indicates that Shahn's year or two at PAC were among the happiest of his life.

Ben Shahn, however, is more than a poster artist. The book is dotted with photographs of many of his paintings done during the last 20 or 30 years. All of them show a deep love of humanity and a moving sadness concerning man's inhumanity toward man and the poverty in which so many people live.

If you happen to come across "Portrait of the Artist as an American," you will find it interesting and inspiring. H.C.F.

Georgia Opens "Shame List" Of Relief Recipients To Public

THE FACE of poverty and misfortune is once more a common thing in some parts of America. The irony is that a tax bill—which didn't tax enough—is the cause of it all.

Barely two days after the new tax law had been passed by Congress and signed by the President, the State of Georgia opened the names of 152,750 persons on its welfare rolls to public inspection. Indiana had previously passed a law making the 73,000 names on its relief rosters public.

A prediction that four more states will outlaw welfare roll secrecy next year was made by Rep. Brownson (R. Ind.), who said that he expected laws similar to that passed by Indiana to be enacted in New York, Kentucky, South Carolina and Virginia.

Altogether about five million people now on relief are threatened with publicity and embarassment because a rider to the tax bill permits states to once more publish their relief rolls without losing their share of federal welfare funds.

Not all states, of course, will make their lists public, but the campaign to make it possible for any who want to do so was endorsed by the Republican National Executive Committee and the rider was pushed through with Dixiecrat support. Georgia's action indicates that secrecy is seriously threatened in all those states under either Republican or Dixiecrat control.

The "shame list" rider was tacked onto the tax bill by Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), who had previously tried to attach it to two other bills dealing with social security legislation.

IN THOSE previous attempts, the rider was thrown out by the conferees on the grounds that it was too important a decision to be acted upon except as separate legislation.

In the House, the Ways and Means Committee later voted down the proposal. The conservative Dixiegop coalition responsible for the tax bill used the old parliamentary trick of attaching an unpopular provision to essential legislation which would not be vetoed to push the rider through despite its previous defeats.

The tax conferees' action and the subsequent enactment of the rider into law came just as the Indiana State Legislature was acting in special session to try to straighten out the mess it had created by voting to make the names public. Some $20 million annually in federal welfare funds for Indiana had been cut off Aug. 1 when the "shame list" law went into effect.

The Republican controlled Indiana Legislature, which had passed the measure over the veto of a Democratic governor, split at the special session and had been unable to decide whether to repeal the law or to set up a "home rule" welfare system. Then the action of Congress on the tax bill took the Hoosiers off their own hook.

Those favoring "shame lists" argue that publicity will expose graft. Rep. Denton (D. Ind.) answered this excuse by saying:

"There are abuses, but there also are officials charged with ferretting out the abuses. They are the ones to be held responsible, not the great numbers of innocent recipients who receive help."

They Should Get New Argument

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council has bitterly denounced the Jenner rider to the tax bill and the support given to it by New Jersey's Republican governor, Alfred E. Driscoll.

"It is not surprising," Holderman said in a letter to all New Jersey Congressmen, "that some of the proponents of the Jenner rider to publish the names of relief recipients are the very people who oppose national health insurance partly on the false grounds that the personal health problems of those insured would not be kept confidential."

He added: "In both cases, the names and problems of those unfortunates involved should be kept from the public eye."

N. Y. Barbers Strike For 40-Hour Week, Better Pact

FIGHTING FOR a 40-hour week and wage, pension and welfare improvements, some 2000 members of the CIO barbers union last week struck in New York City.

They walked out of 900 shops in midtown and lower Manhattan, and at week's end the strike was reported spreading from union shops to non-organized shops.

The walkout came after the union had been rebuffed by the Master Barbers' Association through seven months of negotiations, and futile efforts by the New York State Mediation Board to reach an agreement before a five-year contract expired on Oct. 20.

Full support for the striking barbers quickly was pledged by Pres. Ernest Hebert of the CIO Barber & Beauty Culturists Union and by Mike Quill, president of the Greater New York CIO Council and of the Transport Workers.

"We are on strike for just and long-overdue economic improvements," said Adolph Rosenbaum, president of the Greater New York Joint Council of the barbers union and strike leader. "We are on strike because the master barbers adamantly refused to meet with us in true collective bargaining."

Major contract gains sought by the striking barbers are an $8 weekly wage boost, a 5-day, 40-hour work week instead of the present 48 hours, establishment of a pension program, an increase in employer contributions to the welfare fund, and one more paid holiday.

Wetback Slave Masters Face Probe Of 'Plot' Against Law

THE LAWS of the United States, as well as those of a foreign government, seem to be regarded only as scraps of paper by big plantation owners employing illegal Mexican farmhands at slave wages.

Rep. McCarthy (D. Minn.), leader of the fight to write a stronger Migratory Labor bill, has placed in the hands of the Justice Dept. evidence that some Southern plantation owners are "combining to block effective enforcement of the laws of the United States."

He asked Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath to investigate and take "whatever action may be required by law" against the South Texas Association, lobbying group of the big farmers in that area.

According to reports in Texas newspapers, the association was set up (1) to prevent the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization from fully enforcing immigration laws along the Mexican-Texas border, and (2) to attempt to influence the Mexican government with regard to the contracts and international agreements affecting the importation of Mexican agricultural workers.

McCarthy said that he believed the second part of the program is a violation of the Logan Act. This law prohibits any U. S. citizen from trying to influence a foreign government to defeat measures of the U. S.

The association is raising $50,000 fund to carry on its activities. Assessments are being fixed at 10c an acre, or higher if necessary. Local chambers of commerce, Farm Bureau units and the Texas Citrus Commission, a State agency, are affiliated with the movement.

Enforcement of the new migratory labor law, under which the government subsidizes big agricultural corporations competing with small family farmers, has already been dealt a grave blow by Congress.

Instead of keeping its promise to strengthen the act, Congress chopped the appropriations needed for its enforcement by more than half. It also failed to pass the legislation promised President Truman when he signed the law which would penalize farmers for hiring illegal workers.

Railroads Now Want Rate Hikes

THE NATION'S railroads, which—as The CIO News disclosed last week—have just been granted hundreds of millions of dollars in special tax concessions, have applied for a freight rate hike.

Only last August the railroads won rate increases of as much as 9%.

Spokesman for the industry have asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to hold hearings in the near future and to grant the railroads authority to increase their rates an average of 7.2% more for the country as a whole.

Since freight costs are usually passed directly on to the consumer, any additional hike would mean still higher prices on nearly all items sold in interstate commerce.

The freight hikes which the commission granted last August amounted to an average increase of 6.6% for the country as a whole. However, the increases were 9% in Eastern territory and 6% in the South and West.

The eastern railroads which received the highest boost, recently lobbied most strongly against the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

American taxpayers, who ultimately foot the bill for the tax write-off, are now being told that they must also pay higher freight rates to help operate and equip the railroads and "to pay dividends."

Guild Fights Firings By N. Y. Publisher

The CIO New York Newspaper Guild has filed charges of unfair labor practices against Hillman Publications, publishers of several national magazines, growing out of the discharge of 10 employes as the climax to an organizing campaign.

At a hearing on the union's petition for a National Labor Relations Board representation election, the management flatly refused to furnish employe data essential to setting up voting machinery.

Fear Use Of Troop In Uruguay Strike

Military invention of the Uruguayan government in a nationwide strike in that country is feared by the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee.

A protest against such action has been wired by Jacob S. Potofsky, committee chairman and president of the CIO Clothing Workers, to Sec. of State Dean Acheson and by Dr. Ernst Schwarz, committee secretary, to the Uruguayan Ambassador in Washington.

The strike started 11 days ago at a government-owned oil refinery in Montevideo harbor, according to information received by the committee. All of the organized labor movement in the nation is on a sympathy strike, except the Communists, who are attempting to act as strikebreakers.

Canal Zone Workers Exempted By WSB

The Wage Stabilization Board has exempted the Panama Canal Zone from wage stabilization regulations.

The board based its ruling on the fact that all workers in the area are employed either by the government or on government projects, and do not produce goods either for local consumption or export to the United States. Hence their wages cannot have any effect on prices either in the Canal Zone or in continental U. S., WSB said. Besides, the board said, wages are "substantially below" those paid in the U. S.

N.Y.C. CIO Backs City Wage Boost

The New York City CIO Council has called for a $500 annual pay raise and establishment of a five-day, 40-hour work week for the city's 177,000 employes.

At a special meeting, the Council said the wage boost was necessary to make up for increased living costs. It also said the city was long overdue in putting its workers on a 40-hour week. Most city employes are now on a six-day, 44-hour week. The council also pledged help to the newly-formed United Department Store Workers in its efforts to organize major department stores.

CIO Adopts 'Family Plan' On Jurisdictional Disputes

A "STATESMANLIKE" program for eliminating jurisdictional friction within the CIO was adopted by the CIO Executive Board at its Oct. 31 meeting in New York.

The board's action establishes six rules to govern the settlement of organizational disputes within the CIO.

Under the resolution setting forth the program, each CIO affiliate is urged to enter into an agreement with all other CIO affiliates and with the CIO itself "to adhere to its terms and scrupulously to abide thereby."

In acting to establish sound machinery for the settlement of jurisdictional disputes, the board pioneered in the comparatively unexplored field of inter-union relations.

WHILE ON the whole the CIO has been free from the type of jurisdictional dispute which has weakened other segments of organized labor, certain practical organizational problems have arisen from time to time because of the closely related jurisdictions of several CIO unions.

"Many of these cases have been amicably settled by agreement between the parties with the aid of the National CIO," the board pointed out. "In other cases there have been open campaigns in which one CIO affiliate competed with another in NLRB elections."

Such disputes, the board said, "should be settled within the family of the CIO."

The rules adopted by the board provide general principles to guide CIO unions in their organizing drives as they affect other CIO affiliates.

They also provide for the establishment, as a court of final appeal, of the office of CIO Organizational Disputes Arbitrator and define his functions.

Under the procedures established, representatives of the unions concerned in any jurisdictional dispute will meet promptly and attempt to resolve it. If they fail, the National CIO Director of Organization will convene the national officers or representatives of the unions in an effort to settle their differences.

As a third and final step, any union concerned or the CIO Director of Organization may submit the dispute to the CIO Organizational Disputes Arbitrator, to be selected by the executive officers of the National CIO subject to the board's approval.

THE ARBITRATOR will make his determination "on the basis of what will best serve the interests of the employes involved and will preserve the good name and orderly functioning of the CIO."

The resolution was adopted by an unanimous vote and the signatures of 34 of the 41 were affixed immediately.

The seven other board members plan to sign but had to delay their signatures for various reasons. Some need executive board or convention clearance. It is expected that the plan will be in operation by January, 1952.

The CIO Constitution provides that where disputes arise between affiliates which cannot be settled by mutual agreement, the executive board shall make recommendations as to the appropriate methods of settling such disputes.

Haywood May Be Executive Veep

Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood will become the first CIO executive vice president—if the CIO Convention adopts a constitutional change proposed by the vice presidents last week.

The latter recommended to the constitution committee that the constitution be changed to provide that the director of organization be also executive vice president. Haywood is director of organization.

Murray Calls Program 'Practical Solution'

CIO Pres. Philip Murray issued the following statement on organizational problems:

"The CIO Executive Board has approved a statesmanlike program for eliminating jurisdictional disputes within the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

"The program adopted today has the wholehearted support of CIO affiliates. It is indicative of the vigorous desire of the CIO to meet each problem effectively and forthrightly in the interests of our members.

"As an organization of industrial unions, the CIO's jurisdictional problems have been relatively minor. We do not have the incessant type of jurisdictional dispute which craft unionism seems inevitably to produce in almost every industry.

"The jurisdictional problems of the CIO affect the borderline areas of the jurisdictions of our national unions. We are anxious to avoid any difficult situation in these areas where jurisdictions have not been clearly defined.

"So far as I know, there has never been a jurisdictional strike involving members of two or more CIO unions. There have been a small number of Labor Board election contests between two or more CIO unions.

"This program is designed to avoid such duplication of effort and confusion as tends to arise from these intra-CIO organizational contests.

"The CIO jurisdictional program is a practical one. It seeks to apply rules of common sense to these problems. It will work to prevent CIO unions from competing with each other in National Labor Relations Board elections.

"In arranging for the appointment of an outside arbitrator to handle such case as may arise, the CIO jurisdictional program insures that every jurisdictional problem in our organization will be handled fairly and on its merits.

"I am proud of this constructive step which I know will lead our unions to more effective representation of the workers in American industry."

Executive Board Resolution On Inter-Union Disputes

WHILE ON the whole the CIO has been free from the type of jurisdictional dispute which has weakened other segments of organized labor, there have been, nevertheless, certain practical organizational problems arising from the closely related jurisdictions of many CIO unions.

Cases have arisen in which CIO unions have found themselves engaged in competitive organizational campaigns against other CIO unions. Many of these cases have been amicably settled by agreement between the parties with the aid of the National CIO. In other cases there have been open campaigns in which one CIO affiliate competed with another in NLRB elections.

The Executive Board believes that such disputes should be settled within the family of the CIO.

We are convinced that a raid or invasion of the established jurisdiction of one CIO affiliate by another is contrary to the best interests of the workers we are privileged to represent. We are also convinced that competitive organizational drives between different CIO affiliates are injurious to the workers' interest and to the good name of the CIO.

THE CIO Constitution provides that where disputes arise between affiliates which cannot be settled by mutual agreement, the Executive Board of the CIO shall make recommendations as to the appropriate methods of settling such disputes.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED by the Executive Board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations at a meeting of the Board duly held at New York, New York, on the 31st day of October, 1951, that the following rules governing the settlement of organizational disputes are hereby adopted by the Board as its recommendation to all CIO affiliates.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Board urges each CIO affiliate to enter into an agreement with all other CIO affiliates and with the CIO itself embodying the terms of this recommendation, which agreement when made shall constitute a legally binding contractual and moral obligation on the part of the signatories thereto to adhere to its terms and scrupulously to abide thereby.

RULES

1. No CIO affiliate shall attempt to organize the employes in any plant or property if any other CIO affiliate has been recognized by the employer or has been certified by the NLRB as the collective bargaining representative of such employes.

Any dispute involving a claim of violation of this principle may be referred by the party making such claim, or by the CIO to the procedures set forth in Paragraphs 4 and 5, provided, however, that in any case arising under this paragaraph the jurisdiction of the arbitrator shall be limited to the enforcement of this paragraph.

2. In the conduct of organizing campaigns among employes as to whom no CIO affiliate has been recognized or certified as provided above, all other CIO affiliates shall respect the jurisdiction of the particular CIO affiliate which is the appropriate union to conduct such organizing campaign.

In the event that a dispute shall arise between two or more CIO affiliates as to which is the appropriate union to conduct an organizing campaign, the dispute shall be resolved under the procedure set forth in Paragraphs 4 and 5.

3. No affiliate, or its agents or representatives, shall issue derogatory statements or publications concerning any other CIO affiliate during the course of an organizing campaign.

4. All organizational disputes shall be resolved as follows:

a. Responsible representatives of the different CIO affiliates concerned shall promptly meet and earnestly attempt to resolve their dispute. Each affiliate shall file with the National CIO Director of Organization the names of the representatives authorized to attempt to settle organizational disputes at this step.

b. In the event these representatives are unable promptly to resolve their organizational dispute, the National CIO Director of Organization may, on his own motion or at the request of any party, invoke the next step by promptly convening a meeting between the duly designated national officers or representatives of the CIO affiliates involved in the dispute, and of any other affiliate deemed by him to have an interest in the dispute, for the purpose of attempting to resolve and settle the matter.

c. In the event the national officers or representatives of such CIO affiliates are unable, with the assistance of the National CIO Director of Organization, promptly to resolve the dispute, any such affiliate or the National CIO Director of Organization may submit the dispute to the CIO Organizational Disputes Arbitrator in accordance with the procedures set forth in Paragraph 5.

5. The CIO Organization Disputes Arbitrator shall decide all disputes submitted to him subject to the following provisions:

a. The arbitrator shall notify all unions affiliated with the CIO of pending arbitration proceedings, and any interested unions shall have the right to intervene in the proceedings before the arbitrator.

b. The arbitrator may establish and shall distribute to all affiliates of the CIO such rules of procedure as he deems appropriate to assure a proper investigation of the merits of any dispute submitted to him.

c. In deciding which union is the appropriate union to conduct an organizing campaign, he shall make his determination on the basis of what will best serve the interests of the employes involved and will preserve the good name and orderly functioning of the CIO and shall give due consideration to all of the relevant facts and circumstances including the following factors where he deems them relevant:

1. The charter of customary jurisdiction of each of the unions involved.

2. The extent to which each of the unions involved have organized:

a. The industry.

b. The area.

c. The particular plant involved.

3. The ability of each of the unions to provide service to the employes involved.

d. If time will not permit the settlement of any organizational dispute through the steps above provided because of pending NLRB representation proceedings or other valid reasons, then at the request of any interested CIO affiliate or the National CIO the dispute may, without recourse to any prior intervening step, be referred immediately to the arbitrator for his award and the decision.

THE ARBITRATOR in such case may summarily resolve the dispute by rendering a prompt award as to which CIO affiliate is properly entitled to jurisdiction and is entitled to go on the NLRB ballot to the exclusion of the other CIO affiliates involved, or the arbitrator may determine that the National CIO shall go on the NLRB ballot in lieu of all of the disputing CIO affiliates pending final award by the arbitrator as to which CIO affiliate is properly entitled to jurisdiction, after which the National CIO shall transfer jurisdiction to this affiliate, or the arbitrator may make such other interim award as he deems appropriate.

e. In all cases referred or submitted to him as herein above set forth the decision and award of the arbitrator be final and binding.

6. The CIO Organizational Disputes Arbitrator shall be selected by the Executive Officers of the National CIO subject to the approval of the CIO Executive Board upon such terms and with such compensation as shall mutually be agreed upon by the arbitrator so selected and the national CIO.

Murray Says Left And Right Reaction On March

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A SOLEMN warning that all Americans must preserve, in a world of tension, their democratic ideals and rights was sounded by Pres. Philip Murray in his report to the 13th Annual National CIO Convention.

He pointed out that the convention opens at a time of "unparalleled crisis" throughout the world. And on all sides, he added:

". . . We witness a continual and increasingly bitter struggle between democratic-minded people craving for freedom, security and economic advancement, and the totalitarian forces of both left and right, which would pervert the universal aspiration for a better life.

"As we gather in convention, we of the CIO must reaffirm our faith in democratic institutions and our constitutional rights and privileges.

"We must constantly strive to protect them and to strengthen them. We cannot for a moment ignore the fact that reaction is seeking world-wide domination—the reaction of the Soviet-dominated Communist totalitarians on the one hand, and the forces of entrenched greed and power on the other."

Murray's report was largely devoted to a review of the problems that have beset the CIO and all Americans as the lines tightened over the last year in the struggle between democracy and totalitarianism. He also touched on the problems that always confront American workers.

IN THE ominous year, he recounted, the CIO continued its fight against communism wherever it raised its ugly head. It continued to support the United Nations and the United States in Korea—and it raised the warning which Murray restated, that communism cannot be stopped by guns alone.

"Military power is, in the long run, no stronger than the economic machinery that supports it," he explained.

"Living standards of peoples in other countries must be raised from their too-low levels; to permit a lowering of those levels—whatever the excuse—will injure, not improve, the effective strength of the democratic world.

Murray warned against "myopic misleaders" who seek to turn the country back to isolationism and who at the same time preach a "spurious brand of 18th century economic philosophy" that would harm workers and most other Americans under the guise of "economy in government."

"THE CIO, of course, believes in economy in government, in reasonable economy that will eliminate waste," he explained.

"But we do not believe that the cutting out of essential government services, required by the American people for their security and well-being, will save money or promote national strength."

He also repeated the CIO's oft-voiced demand for equality of sacrifice in meeting the costs of defense mobilization, then swung into comment on the United Labor Policy Committee.

"Despite the successes achieved by the United Labor Committee in the few months of its existence," he said, "the leaders of the American Federation of Labor, for reasons still not completely clear to thinking observers, decided last summer to scuttle the ULPC.

"When that action first became known to us, I described it as 'regrettable'; nothing has transpired since that announcement which leads me to change my viewpoint.

"The CIO and its leaders have always believed in the principle of labor unity.

"We entered the ULPC in December 1950 with the profound belief that it constituted a dramatic and worthwhile step toward labor unity. We believe, that, had the ULPC continued to function, it would have lead almost inevitably to the strengthening of unity among the various branches of the democratic labor movement of the U.S. and to eventual merger of these various groups.

"But the sudden destruction of the ULPC by the leadership of the AFL raises grave doubts as to whether the Federation is truly interested in an honorable unity in the ranks of American labor.

"THE REPEATED expression of belief in organic unity by various leaders of the AFL since the disruption of the ULPC does not blind us to the fact that they are directly responsible for the destruction of the most hopeful display of labor unity this nation has ever seen.

"Their statements cannot hide the misconception of the AFL Executive Council which has led them, with no scintilla of evidence, to conclude that the CIO is ready to be swallowed by the craft unions which dominate that federation.

"The CIO was built on the philosophy of industrial unionism. For nearly 16 years, we have built up our industrial unions; they have grown strong; and they have rendered inestimable service to our millions of members, to whom the craft philosophy of the AFL offers only the fear of internal disruption and ineffectiveness.

"I do not believe that the leaders and members of the unions of the CIO want organic unity on the terms which the leaders of the AFL are apparently ready to offer—an organic unity in which the glorious record of industrial unionism will be subject to overriding by the craft union philosophy which still dominates the AFL. That is the issue involved here."

PHILIP MURRAY

The CIO leader in blunt language paid his compliments to Congress for its "unparalleled refusal to face the realities of economic life."

"The 82d Congress," he said, "has betrayed the heritage of belief in sympathetic understanding of the people's problems by the government . . .

"The majority of reactionary Republicans and reactionary Democrats who dominate the 82d Congress have demonstrated—not only through their handling of the challenge of spiralling inflation but on scores of other issues—that they are serving in Washington not as representatives for the people of this country but as ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary for a host of venal special interests."

He noted some of the legislation Congress failed to consider, and added:

"We cannot wait forever to catch up with this necessary legislative business. America deserves a better Congress than it has had this year. 1952 is the time to improve it."

THE CIO, he said, will not have a "purge" list of reactionary congressmen and senators.

He discussed in detail the impact of international affairs and defense mobilization on the U.S. economy. He mourned the lack of an over-all defense production plan and an effective economic stabilization program, and warned that the deficiencies "will continue to plague us for years to come." He offered a 10-point economic program:

"1. The Defense Production Act should be amended to strengthen anti-inflation controls.

"2. Within the limits of present government expenditures, we should pay-as-we-go on the basis of fair and equitable taxation.

"3. An over-all economic stabilization program should be established as our economic policy for the duration of the rapid military build-up.

"4. All sections of the civilian population should equitably share any sacrifice involved in the defense effort.

"5. The government should establish an over-all defense production program as the basis for our industrial mobilization effort.

"6. Key industries — steel, copper, aluminum and electric power —should be expanded as rapidly as possible.

"7. Defense production should be planned and dovetailed with material curtailment orders in order to prevent the irretrievable waste of manpower, plant and equipment.

"8. All possible protection should be given to living standards and basic requirements of the people during the period of defense build-up.

"9. Opportunity should be taken now to lay the basis for a sound economic future.

"10. Rents must be controlled in the many areas now without such controls."

In a section devoted to "Labor and the Defense Effort," Murray recounted in detail organized labor's up-hill fight to win a proper voice in framing defense policies. This victorious fight, he indicated, grew out of the CIO's dismay at failure of Congress to enact effective anti-inflation legislation and the general disregard of the principle of equality of sacrifice it felt and still feels should be a major guide.

This Is No Time To Harm Labor

In his report to the CIO Convention, Pres. Philip Murray warned American workers against giving up, because of the emergency, "the economic and social progress" they have made.

"This . . . is no time," he said, "to weaken institutions of free labor, or to undermine the great, praiseworthy economic advances that have made our country strong and have given our people a new, profound sense of personal security and human dignity.

"American workers are ready . . . to make any necessary sacrifice to protect the security of their country and its institutions. But they are not inclined, and they never have been, to cut their standards for the benefit of monopoly corporations, profiteers and other owners of great wealth who would use this period of crisis for their own selfish interests."

Murray: CIO Stops Reds

"Events have fully clarified the issues we face," CIO Pres. Philip Murray reported.

"There can be no doubt concerning the true role of Communism. It is not a liberal movement; it is not a liberating movement; it is not a movement to bring peace or security to the world.

"Communism, whatever it may profess to be, is, as it has been practiced in the Soviet Union and in the Soviet satellites, nothing more or less than a movement of reactionary oppression.

"Thus, it is no accident that the Communists, like every other brand of reactionary, seek to destroy or capture the labor movement wherever they gain power.

"The CIO is an organization that belongs to its members. We have repulsed the efforts of outside groups to capture it and pervert it to their own diabolical purposes. Communist influence in the CIO has been wiped out.

"It will never again gain a foothold, so long as our members are alert to the dangers of its infiltration. And we will remain on the alert to guard against any future effort to capture of our own trade unions by any outside force."

'Statesmanlike Approach'

In referring to the new program for eliminating jurisdictional friction within the CIO, Pres. Philip Murray summed up its significance in one word: "Statesmanlike."

The term is apt.

For historians of the American labor movement will hereafter, we predict, point to Oct. 31, 1951, as one of the dates which landmark major events in its chronology, and, inevitably, they will have occasion to refer to, and to pay tribute, to the statesmanship which was exhibited by the 41 members of the CIO Executive Board who acted that day, in unanimous agreement, to place the common good above their own special organizational interests.

"Jurisdictional dispute" has long been one of the ugliest terms in labor's vocabulary. The CIO, as an organization of industrial unions, has never had the incessant type of jurisdictional dispute that accompanies craft unionism. Nor has there ever been a jurisdictional strike within the CIO. The CIO has suffered the weakening effects of jurisdictional friction to a far less degree than other labor organizations.

Nevertheless, as the Executive Board pointed out in its resolution, "certain practical organization problems" arose from the closely related jurisdictions of several CIO affiliates. Competitive organizational drives, the board declared, are "contrary to the best interests of the workers we are privileged to represent."

This, after all, is the heart of the matter, and it indicates the far-seeing viewpoint taken by the board.

It is the workers involved who inevitably lose a good deal of their bargaining strength when caught in the rivalry between industrial unions. While "big unions" may win such jurisdictional fights through sheer force of resources, it does not necessarily follow that they are the unions which would best serve the interests of the employes concerned.

There have been few such jurisdictional problems in the CIO, composed as it is of industrial, rather than craft, unions.

Nevertheless, the CIO Executive Board found it more sensible to take steps to avoid the possibility of any difficult situation arising in those areas where jurisdictions of national unions impinge and overlap.

In arranging for the appointment of a distinguished outside arbitrator to serve as a court of last appeal in settling any jurisdictional questions which may arise, the CIO leaders voluntarily placed the welfare of the entire organization above any special union interest.

It is all the more "statesmanlike" that their action came without a single dissenting vote.

The CIO can well be proud that it has pioneered in establishing new patterns of union organization and administration for the direct and immediate benefit of American workers and, indeed, the entire nation.

Murray On Congress

(Excerpts from Pres. Philip Murray's comment on Congress in his report to the CIO National Convention follow.)

IN TOO many state legislatures and in the national Congress, the American people are confronted by a conservative coalition which sneers at the people's interest and blocks the enactment of statutes essential to the common welfare.

The record of the 82nd Congress on so vital an issue as the control of inflation will go down in history as an unparalleled refusal to face the realities of economic life.

Inflation is still mounting its forces throughout this country. Personal hardships are accumulating. Economic strains and tensions are being constantly aggravated. In times like these, Americans have traditionally looked to their government for action to protect the common good.

The 82nd Congress has betrayed the heritage of belief in sympathetic understanding of the people's problems by the government.

In all but demolishing the farsighted economic program set forth by President Truman, the dominant conservative coalition in Congress has produced cynicism and lawlessness at a time when patriotic sincerity and economic cooperation are essential.

The majority of reactionary Republicans and reactionary Dixiecrats who dominate the 82nd Congress have demonstrated—not only through their handling of the challenge of spiralling inflation but on scores of other issues—that they are serving in Washington not as representatives for the people of this country but as ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary for a host of venal special interests.

These special interests have been so blinded by the lure of super-profits and of special advantage over the interests of the general public that they brazenly ignore the terrible challenge faced by America and the rest of the free world.

It has failed to take adequate steps to control inflation.

It has failed to enact a decent housing program when hundreds of thousands of workers and members of the armed forces face the acute problem of finding a place to live while they serve their country.

The coalition has not lifted a finger to strengthen our civil rights program—when hundreds of millions of people beyond our borders are looking to us for guidance in the democratic handling of minority problems.

The evil Taft-Hartley Act, whose effects are even more damaging to the institutions of free labor in time of national emergency than in time of peace, remains on the statute books and there has been no serious effort in the Congress to repeal this outmoded, ill-considered law.

In fact, the Lucas Bill that would have permitted no method for solving major disputes in defense industries except the punitive and unworkable provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, almost was passed by the Congress.

SOCIAL WELFARE programs involving the health of our citizens and the education of our children have been given no thoughtful consideration.

Decent tax legislation and efforts to curb the steadily accumulating power of corporation monopoly have been all but ignored. The tax bill considered by the 82nd Congress perpetuates and broadens the loopholes used by the wealthy while placing even heavier burdens on the millions of people in the lower and middle income brackets.

And even a great national calamity—the Missouri Valley flood, with its accompanying distress for hundreds of thousands of American workers and farmers—has failed to prod the Congress into long overdue action to utilize fully and sensibly our river resources.

I do not know what legitimate alibi the members of the conservative coalition which controls our Congress can offer for this failure.

Can anybody reasonably say that we should not embark on a Missouri Valley plan, or on similar plans for other great river valleys, when tomorrow or next week other preventable disasters can occur?

The bills for a Missouri Valley Authority, a Columbia Valley Authority, and other river development projects must be yanked out of the congressional pigeonholes and translated into immediate constructive programs.

UN Action In Korea Seen As Safeguard

THE CIO kept its eye on the troubled world last year through its Intl. Affairs Dept., which functioned jointly with the CIO International Committee and the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee.

It has closely followed all international developments and supported policies designed to achieve a lasting peace in a free and democratic world, the joint report to the National CIO Convention said.

"Our government and the United Nations have continued to resist successfully the Soviet imperialist aggression in Korea," said the report.

"Thereby collective security of the democratic world has ceased to be an idea, it has become a fact.

"This successful action has been of enormous importance throughout the world. If aggression had succeeded in Korea, Soviet pressures in a number of other weak spots would have increased and friends of democracy and freedom might have lost hope. It was and still is an example closely watched by all free countries close to the Iron Curtain.

"There is abundant evidence throughout the world, in Asia, the Middle East, and Africa that the Soviet Union is vigorously pursuing by every conceivable means its pro-- gram of expansion fanatically bent on imposing its system and pattern on all mankind.

"The United States has lived up to its responsibility of world leadership by initiating plans for the rearmament and mutual defense of the free world against totalitarian aggression.

"The CIO has continued its support of the policy of preserving and advancing the safety of the United States by using American strength and power for the steady progress of peoples toward freedom and the better life.

"We are convinced that the free nations must unite to prevent another war. We must build up our own military power and assist our allies to rearm and regain that strength while they recover their economic health and advance their economic well-being.

"The CIO believes that the newly-signed peace treaty with Japan should be ratified by the Senate. At the same time all influence must be exerted to ensure the continuation and the strengthening of the young democratic institutions in Japan.

"The tactics of the Soviet Union, as one of the occupying powers in Germany, have continued to block the reunification of Germany on a sound democratic basis, and the authorities in the Eastern Zone have continued to prevent a democratic election for the whole of Germany under suitable guarantees.

"In these circumstances we believe that, despite Soviet obstruction, our government should continue its policy of working toward the return of governmental powers to the German Federal Republic and for West Germany's acceptance in the community of free nations. The sound growth of the German trade union movement and its continued strength is necessary to offset the real danger of revival of Nazi thought and activity."

The report recalled the CIO's welcome of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the proposals for the defense of Western Europe, and renewed the CIO agreement with the U.S. policy of helping other countries to help themselves.

"(This) . . . can be done," it adds, "without injury to their civilian economics. Our government should be sympathetic to revisions in present arrangements when it can be clearly established that these are necessary to ensure that serious harm is not done to living standards of the working people."

During the past year, the report went on, the CIO continued its support of the mutual security program, including mutual defense, the Economic Cooperation Administration, Point Four, the Organization of American States and other bilateral programs. It also called for a program of land reform in the underdeveloped parts of the world in the belief that ownership systems and other institutions affecting land work "are formidable obstacles to raising production and to higher standards of living."

The report pointed to CIO participation in the ECA and the service of Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers and chairman of the International and Latin-American Affairs Committees, as a member of the President's Advisory Board of Point Four.

"We have continued to urge," it went on, "the necessity that the skills and knowledge of trade unionists should be used in the promotion of U.S. interests throughout the world.

"Their absence is particularly noticeable in the U.S. Information Service and many of the weaknesses of the service arise from this lack . . .

"A serious defect in American foreign policy is, however, the absence of American labor from its highest councils. Leaders of American labor, in urging greater participation for the trade unions in the foreign affairs agencies of government, are seeking the preservation of the things that are dear to every American citizen—democracy, freedom, liberty."

Through representation on the Trade Union Advisory Committee on international affairs set up by the U.S. Dept. of Labor, the report said, the labor movement "has become increasingly influential in the development of the labor attache program and in the exchange programs for foreign labor leaders, pressing for labor's point of view in connection with Point Four, the occupation policies in Germany and Japan, and numerous other activities.

The report also noted the continued work of the CIO with European trade unions, through Victor Reuther of the Auto Workers as CIO European representative.

"Up to this point," it explained, "the extended CIO activity in Europe has been financed by special contributions from the Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Amalgamated Clothing Workers. It is hoped soon to broaden this support to all CIO unions and membership so that this work which is necessary for the survival of the free democratic world can be carried on effectively."

The second world congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at Milan, Italy, in July was briefly reviewed, with the congress assignments of CIO delegates listed. The high degree of cooperation with the AFL delegation was particularly cited.

In Latin America the efforts of reaction to suppress human and civil liberties and labor unions in no wise abated during the year, the report said.

In Argentina, Venezuela, Peru, Colombia, Nicaragua and the Dominican Republic oppression was particularly heavy. Encouragement was taken, however, from the overthrow of the Arias government in Panama and the nomination of former Pres. Vargas for the presidency of Brazil.

Shortly after the last convention the CIO participated in formation of an ICFTU hemisphere regional organization, the Inter-American Regional Confederation of Workers (ORIT), at a meeting in Mexico City.

In Puerto Rico and the Panama Canal Zone, the department worked closely with the CIO Organization Dept.

"We supported the department and Puerto Rican labor," it noted, "in their activity against the freezing of Puerto Rican wages at their present low level. In addition, we continuously promoted the aims and policies of our organizations in the Zone as well as Puerto Rico and gave them ample space in the columns of our Spanish language bulletin."

In all places where its influence might be felt, the report added, it "has been used to help our Latin-American brothers in their struggle for better conditions and union freedom."

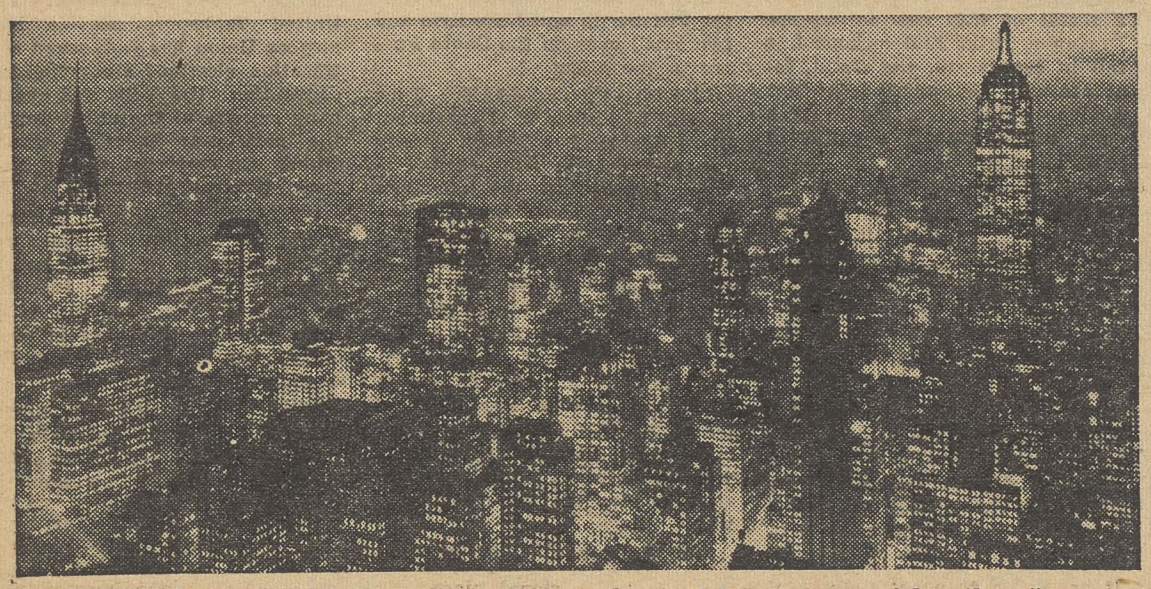
There Just Isn't Time To See All Of New York's Wonders

ASK A New Yorker, "What's new in 'The Big Town,'" and you'll find that there isn't time to tell it all, or see it all—not in one session. And that's the way it will be with CIO convention delegates.

New York City is in itself a liberal education, a trip around the world, a World's Fair 365 days of the year.



"A thousand lights they glitter there, a thousand hearts beat quicker there."

Within Manhattan are all known nationalities, each with its own array of tempting restaurants, many with special amusements to charm the visitor.

Chrysler Building — Lexington Ave. & 42nd St. 77 floors. 1046 feet high.

Cooper Union — Cooper Square, Third and Fourth Aves. at Eighth St. The Art School is one of the oldest in the city.

Empire State Building — Fifth Ave. and 34th St. The tallest structure in the world. 102 stories, 1248 feet high. Observation terraces on 86th and 102 floors. Open 9:45 a.m. to midnight daily. Admission: $1.20.

Greenwich Village — West of Washington Square and south of 14th St. Center of artists and writers. "Bohemian Section."

Madison Square Garden — 50th St. and Eighth Ave.

Rockefeller Center — 48th to 51st St., between Fifth and Sixth Aves. World's greatest private undertaking. The tall RCA Building has the largest floor area of any existing skyscraper. In the north block is the Radio City Music Hall, one of the world's largest theatres, seating 6100.

St. Patrick's Cathedral — Fifth Ave. between 50th and 51st Sts. Completed in 1879.

Temple Emanu-El — Fifth Ave. and 65th St.

Cathedral of St. John the Divine—Amsterdam Ave. and 112th St. Open to visitors from 7:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.

Central Park — 59th to 110th Sts., Fifth Ave. to Eighth Ave. 832 acres. 2½ miles long, ½ mile wide. The zoo for animals, birds, and reptiles is near the southeast corner at 64th St.

Grant's Tomb—Riverside Drive and 123rd St. Open 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. daily.

Hayden Planetarium—81st St. and Central Park West, where the Drama of the Heavens is unfolded on an artifical sky. Six showings daily.

Metropolitan Museum of Art—Fifth Ave. between 80th and 84th Sts. Finest and largest art museum in America.

Museum of the City of New York — 103rd St. and Fifth Ave. Open 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. weekdays, 1:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. Sundays. Monday, admission day, 25c; free all other days.

All CIO Unions In Organizing Gains: Haywood

THE PAST YEAR has been marked by organizational gains in practically every established CIO union.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, reported that during the year ending June 30, the CIO participated in 2276 elections. A majority was won in 1361 cases and 862 were lost. Results were indeterminate in 53. Out of 2008 union authorization elections, 1966 were won in the 12 month period.

Heading the organizing victories were three elections won by fruit and vegetables packing workers in California and Arizona, who rebelled against the Communist-line leadership of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers.

As result of these elections, nearly 8000 "fruit tramps" employed in the Salinas-Watsonville and the Imperial Valley areas of California and the Yuma and Phoenix areas of Arizona are now members of the CIO United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Workers, Local Industrial Union 78.

The hand of welcome was extended in May to the CIO's newest affiliate, the National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians, when a charter was issued by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

The United Department Store Workers Organizing Committee was also established during the past year.

This new group, headed by Chairman R. J. Thomas, is conducting an intensive organizing campaign among the department store workers in New York and a number of other areas. A large local has been established at the R. H. Macy Co. in New York, a charter affiliate of the new committee.

A second organizing committee chartered during the year was the United Railroad Workers of America, formerly a division of the CIO Shipbuilders. The URRWA, under the chairmanship of John Green, was established with the belief that the needs of the nation's non-operating railroad workers could best be served by a separate CIO affiliate.

The Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee firmly established itself as a collective bargaining agency in the insurance field by a smashing victory at the John Hancock Insurance Co.

Overwhelmingly defeated in this National Labor Relations Board election was the former United Office and Professional Workers, expelled from the CIO for Communist domination. The resulting contract, bringing substantial improvements for Hancock agents, will be used to good advantage by IAWOC representatives in other campaigns.

Another bright spot in the organizational picture is in Puerto Rico where the CIO has worked consistently to help the interests and welfare of the members of the CGT-CIO in their efforts to win badly needed improvements in living standards.

With changes in the CGT leadership and a firm adherence to democratic policy, CIO affiliates in Puerto Rico have won many elections and show great promise of continued success, Haywood reported.

There are now 31 international and national unions and four organizing committees making up the CIO. In addition, there are 214 affiliated local industrial unions, including 23 LIU's chartered during the past 12 months.

Here's How We're Moving Ahead For Better Wages

UNION BY UNION, here is a digest of organizing and collective bargaining gains of CIO national and international unions and organizing committees, as reported by Allan S. Haywood, director of organization.

AUTO: Cost-of-living escalator and annual improvement wage clauses now give protection to more than a million UAW members. Since the union signed its first such contract with General Motors in 1948 containing these features, wage increases have amounted to 37c an hour.

Pensions and other fringe benefits, estimated at 15c hourly, bring the total economic gain for UAW members to approximately 52c an hour for the three-year period.

BARBERS: The Barbers and Beauty Culturalists Union chartered six more locals during the past year. The union now has 45 local unions in 17 states.

BREWERY: The Intl. Union of Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink & Distillery Workers report a membership gain of 4150. The union participated in 30 representation elections in this period, winning 23.

BROADCAST ENGINEERS: The National Association of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians is solidifying its position within the radio and television industry and the film production industry.

Coverage of employes at both the American and National Broadcasting Companies has been expanded.

CLOTHING: The Amalgamated Clothing Workers have virtually completed organization of the men's clothing industry. Notable advances during the past year were achieved by the combination of an intensive union label campaign and a sustained organizing drive which brought thousands of new members into the ACW.

COMMUNICATIONS: The Communications Workers changed its structure to conform with that of other industrial unions. This was accomplished by dropping one policy making level.

The union has carried forward its organizing work in Canada.

DEPARTMENT STORES: The United Department Store Workers Organizing Committee won a great victory by bringing into the CIO the 8000 workers of Macy's Department Store in New York City. Under the leadership of Chairman R. J. Thomas, UDSW is about to launch an all-out organizing drive at several other large New York department stores.

ELECTRICAL: The Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, in existence a mere 22 months, now represents more than 350,000 workers in the U. S. and Canada. The economic gains registered by IUE during the past year were among the largest won in any American industry.

The union negotiated the nation's first major contract containing a one-way escalator clause in 1950. Since the first of the year, IUE has won 56 representation and 29 union shop elections.

FURNITURE: The United Furniture Workers Union has concentrated all its energy toward negotiations of wage increases, health insurance gains and pension benefits, as well as organizing the unorganized in furniture plants throughout the country.

UFWA won more than 50 NLRB representation elections covering more than 7000 workers despite a prevalent unemployment situation in the industry.

GAS, COKE: The United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers Union showed a membership gain of 7135 and an increase in the number of locals from 286 to 297. Elections are pending in several plants which will bring more than 3000 additional members into GCC.

GLASS: The Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silicia Workers Union has increased its membership by 2000 workers. The union recently concluded negotiations with Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Libbey-Owens-Ford, the two giants of the industry, providing an increase in base rates and a guaranteed minimum of $1.40 an hour.

GOVERNMENT: The Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, since its establishment Mar. 1, 1950, has enrolled more than 60,000 members, chartered 228 local unions and established itself as a growing force in 29 states, Panama and the District of Columbia.

INSURANCE: The gains achieved by the Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee during the past year represent a milestone in the welfare and security of insurance employes.

During 1951, eight insurance companies were brought under contract with IAWOC. These resulted in decided economic gains for the membership and revolutionary extensions of welfare and security practices in the industry.

LITHOGRAPHERS: The Amalgamated Lithographers show an increase of 2000 members during the past year. The great majority of these are skilled lithographers. The union has continued its drive for a shorter work week.

The inter-local pension funds cover 7000 members; and 22,000 are covered by welfare plans.

MARINE ENGINEERS: The Marine Engineers Beneficial Association during the year registered important gains and improvements for its membership.

New and improved contracts were negotiated with the steamship companies operating dry cargo and passenger vessels on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific coasts.

MARINE AND SHIPBUILDING: The Intl. Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers has several large organizing drives in progress at the present time, due largely to the increase in employment in the industry.

IUMSWA representatives have been engaged in reorganizing yards where employment has risen from skeleton forces to near capacity. A new contract was recently negotiated with the Bethlehem Steel Corp., setting a minimum of $1.80 an hour for mechanics.

MARITIME: The National Maritime Union was successful in securing agreements providing, for the first time, the 40-hour week for seamen at sea. Significant wage gains were registered in all areas, and progress was made in wiping out a long-standing cause of dissatisfaction, the existence of discrepancies between the contracts and those of other sea-going unions.

NEWSPAPER: Membership of the American Newspaper Guild surpassed all previous peaks as a result of 4338 new initiations. During a strike and lockout last fall in Pittsburgh, the Guild, together with AFL and independent unions in the area, published a daily which showed a profit of $50,000.

OIL: During the past year the Oil Workers Intl. Union participated in 119 representation elections and won 85 of them. The union enjoyed a net gain of better than 10% in membership, and has more members at the present than at any time in its history.

OPTICAL: The United Optical & Instrument Workers has made forward strides to see that the wages of its members keep pace with the rising cost of living. Good progress has been made in an effort to bring the office workers of the optical industry into the UOIW.

PACKING: The United Packinghouse Workers have added 44 new locals in the U. S. and Canada during the past year. Membership figures show an increase of 6000 over last year, despite the organizational loss suffered due to the recent disastrous floods which caused two of the union's major units to be abandoned. A flat 9c hourly wage increase and an additional 2c for various classifications were negotiated.

PAPER: The United Paperworkers report good organizational progress during the year since the last convention.

Charters covering 35 additional plants, employing over 5000 workers, have been issued. As a result of successful organizing drives, the union shows an increase of almost 10% in net membership.

PLAYTHINGS: The Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers Intl. Union has undergone a challenging year but nevertheless is in a position to show a small gain in total membership. Material shortages and the increasing inability of consumers to buy luxury items depressed the industry within the union's jurisdiction.

RADIO: The American Radio Association increased the number of companies under contract from 128 to 179 during the past year. This was due in large part to the expansion of the maritime industry as a result of the Korean hostilities and the resulting defense preparations.

RAILROAD: The United Railroad Workers separated from the Shipbuilders last January and was established as a distinct CIO organization. An election is now in progress on the Pennsylvania Railroad and three more—one on the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie and two small ones on the Santa Fe—are in the offing.

RETAIL-WHOLESALE: The Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union has shown steady progress despite a marked economic recession in the industries where the RWDSU has jurisdiction. During the past 12 months, the union has won more than 80 representation elections.

RUBBER: The United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum & Plastic Workers Union increased its dues-paying membership for the fiscal year by an average of almost 17,000 per month. The union participated in 68 representation elections and won 44 of them. Fifty-two union security elections were held and won.

SHOE: About 90% of the membership of the United Shoe Workers received wage increases last year. The union has put up a terrific battle with the Wage and Hour Division of the Dept. of Labor over the issuance of learners certificates which permits companies to pay less than the 75c hourly minimum wage. As a result, less than 1% of the members are receiving less than 75c an hour.

STEEL: The United Steelworkers now has a membership in excess of 1.25 million. The union has a total of 2058 collective bargaining agreements in effect with employers throughout the U. S. These contracts cover 1596 individual companies. In addition the union holds a substantial number of agreements in Canada. Over a million USA members are now covered by check-off provisions.

STONE: The United Stone and Allied Products Workers have issued charters to 13 new local unions, four new groups have been added to established unions, and one new group affiliated directly to headquarters. The union won 14 out of 16 representation elections.

TEXTILE: During the past year, the Textile Workers Union won 147 certification elections with 14,639 workers involved. In the U. S., 146 new agreements were negotiated, involving 12,081 workers, and in Canada eight new agreements covering 711 workers were negotiated.

TRANSPORT: The Transport Workers Union has made important gains in ground transportation all over the country and in domestic and international air transportation. TWU won a 40-hour week with 48-hour pay for 40,000 subway, bus and elevated workers employed by the City of New York.

TRANSPORT SERVICE: The United Transport Service Employees Union has won seven certification elections since the last convention. The principal organizing activity of the union during the past year centered among dining car employes of the New York Central Railroad.

UTILITY: The Utility Workers Union has continued to make appreciable gains in the organization of the utility industry throughout the country. The present major campaign is presently being conducted among the employes of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. in California, and involves some 15,000 workers.

WOODWORKERS: The Intl. Woodworkers report a gain in average membership of 14,274, equal to an 18% growth. The largest gain was in British Columbia where the union added 7595 members.

High Court Rulings On T-H Blasted

IN 1951 AS IN recent years, the U. S. Supreme Court increasingly is interpreting the Taft-Hartley Act "in the most restrictive sense possible," the CIO's Legal Dept. reported.

Most noteworthy was the high court's decision in the Highland Park case—involving the filing of non-Communist affidavits by CIO national officers—which resulted in NLRB rulings endangering union security contracts of thousands of CIO local unions, and tossing out of unfair practices charges brought on behalf of hundreds of CIO members.

But there were other fields, the report pointed out, in which the Supreme Court is building up a record of stringent interpretation of Taft-Hartley to the detriment of free unionism.

One category was decisions widening the field for employer resort to the courts to block orders of the NLRB. Another concerned secondary boycotts, a Taft-Hartley prohibition which has received anti-picketing interpretations.

ONLY IN one category of labor law developments—the constitutionality of state anti-strike laws—were Supreme Court decisions in any way favorable to unionism, the report noted. Following up previous decisions on state legislation, the court in the past year declared unconstitutional a Wisconsin law banning strikes in public utilities and requiring compulsory arbitration. The case was initiated by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, and CIO took the appeal to the Supreme Court.

In ruling the state anti-strike law unconstitutional, the court said "Congress occupied this field and closed it to state regulation."

The report indicated that other states' anti-union legislation may be challenged on the basis of such recent Supreme Court decisions. The report said:

"By restating again the proposition that Congress occupied the field of regulating peaceful strikes for higher wages and closed it to state regulation, the Court seems to have firmly established this proposition as one which can be firmly relied upon in future litigation.

"Furthermore, the myriad provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act covering matters other than strikes—for example, the provisions regulating the check-off—would seem to provide bases from which it can be contended . . . that state regulation covering the same subject matter is void."

SHARPLY IN contrast was the court's decision in the CIO non-Communist affidavit cases, which upset thousands of collective bargaining contracts until Congress, late in the recent session, amended Taft-Hartley to legalize the disputed union security clauses.

Decision of the court was that officers of CIO, as officers of a national labor federation and entirely apart from what action they had taken as officers of international unions, must file non-Communist affidavits as required under T-H.

Otherwise, the court declared, no services of the National Labor Relations Board—in representation or union shop elections or unfair labor practice cases—would be available to CIO-affiliated unions, even if those unions were properly qualified.

This was the Supreme Court's decision in the Highland Park case, involving the CIO Textile Workers, last Spring.

In so deciding, the court reversed a decision of the NLRB soon after enactment of Taft-Hartley, that CIO or AFL as such need not file non-Communist affidavits.

Immediate effect of the court's decision was to cloud all NLRB operations affecting CIO unions during the more than two year period after Taft-Hartley became effective before CIO national officers qualified.

Status of some 4650 union security elections, certified by the NLRB as won by CIO unions, was in question.

For one union, the CIO Auto Workers, 1200 union shop agreements covering 800,000 workers were open to challenge.

The Supreme Court's non-Communist affidavit decision also struck hard at rights and protection of individual workers through NLRB unfair labor practices proceedings.

For one union, the CIO Oil Workers, the court decision was followed by an NLRB order tossing out unfair practices cases by which the OWIU sought to regain the jobs and lost wages of hundreds of veteran union members who had been blacklisted by big oil companies ever since the 1948 oil strike in California.

In this connection, the report commented:

"The dismissal of some 40 unfair labor practices complaints has been a source of considerable distress to the unions and individuals affected. Many of these cases had been pending for years, and in most of them no issue of CIO compliance had ever been raised by the employer.

"It seems highly inequitable that employes illegally discharged years ago for union activities should have their proceedings looking to the redress of their rights dismissed because of a legal technicality never raised in their case. It seems clear that the NLRB General Counsel has the legal authority to issue new complaints and proceed afresh, but thus far none of the dismissed complaints have been reissued."

FOLLOWING the Supreme Court's decision on the CIO non-compliance case, the NLRB itself issued two important—and somewhat contradictory—rulings regarding union security.

Both of these NLRB decisions involved the UAW and Ford Motor Co.

In the first Ford Canton Forge decision (last July 13), the board tossed out an existing UAW contract on grounds it contained an illegal union shop provision (since the election was held while CIO itself was not in Taft-Hartley compliance).

That decision, if it had stood, could have opened the way to widespread attacks on CIO industrial unions.

This decision, the report pointed out, "was entirely unwarranted and went far beyond any necessary implications of the Highland Park case."

A few weeks later, however, the board changed its mind.

"Fortunately," the report said, "the Labor Board, after its first decision in the Ford case, granted the UAW's request for oral argument of the issue, and it was fully argued (and for the first time) both by counsel for the UAW and by counsel for the CIO . . . On reconsideration the Board vacated its original decision, and on Aug. 3, 1951, issued a new decision.

"Unfortunately, however, while the new decision eliminated some of the disastrous consequences which would immediately have ensued from the first decisions, its long range consequences threatened to be much the same as those of the first decision."

WHILE THE second NLRB decision "eliminated the danger of widespread and immediate raiding" in thousands of CIO contract plants, the report said, it still left open "several difficult and doubtful decisions concerning enforceability of union security clauses.

"In the interests of justice and of maintaining industrial stability," the CIO thereupon supported—and Congress finally approved shortly before adjourning—amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act which not only validated the disputed union security elections but also wiped out the previous T-H requirement for union security authorization elections."

T-H Confuses Lawyers, Too

No fooling, it's confusing—you're not alone, brother, if you can't make heads or tails of the Taft-Hartley Act!

Not even lawyers can figure it out at times.

As CIO's Legal Dept. reported:

"While laymen, and especially workers, are aware of the vicious effects of Taft-Hartley, many of them are unable to cite 'chapter and verse' as to what is wrong with the statute.

"This is quite understandable. The Wagner Act is a relatively simple document of 12 pages. Taft-Hartley is nearly three times as long.

"More important is the fact that Taft-Hartley was written by lawyers in a deliberately technical and complicated manner, and it is full of double talk. Thus in one part it talks of aiding self-organization and free collective bargaining, but many legal phrases are included in other parts which can be used to defeat those noble purposes.

"As a result, Taft-Hartley is confusing not only to laymen but to many lawyers as well."

You Can't Live With T-H Act, CIO Attorneys Declare

YOU CAN'T fix it! The only thing to do is to junk it—and restore free and democratic industrial relations along lines of the Wagner Act.

That, in effect, is CIO's stand today on the Taft-Hartley Act, after four years of living with it and watching it restrain the growth of the American labor movement.

The full story, from the legal point of view, of how the Taft-Hartley Act has hog-tied unions in judicial red-tape was told in the annual report of the CIO Legal Dept.

Events of the past year—particularly the Supreme Court decision in the Highland Park non-Communist affidavit case, and interpretations of the National Labor Relations Board—reinforce the past arguments of CIO against the act, the report indicated.

But the basic argument against the act—that it is a law designed to curtail, restrain and chop down the labor movement—is as true today as when the bill was enacted over Pres. Truman's veto in 1947.

HERE ARE the developing consequences of the law, as the CIO report summarizes them:

"The record shows that organization of unorganized workers has been seriously hampered. NLRB statistics indicate that far fewer elections have taken place under Taft-Hartley than under the Wagner Act.

"Moreover, unions have been losing more elections, and more votes have been cast against unions than before Taft-Hartley . . . These statistics give the true story.

"With two-thirds of the American workers unorganized and badly in need of unionism, the backward steps in organization brought about by Taft-Hartley must be considered among its most vicious effects.

"Taft-Hartley proponents also claimed that the law would prevent strikes. However, in 1949, the number of workdays lost on account of strikes exceeded 50 million, the second highest on record.

"In addition, NLRB statistics show that the number of reinstatements of workers fired for union activities has been sharply reduced. The amount of back pay awarded to those reinstated likewise has been sharply reduced."

At the heart of Taft-Hartley, the report pointed out, is not the announced policy of "equalizing" labor and management, but rather the policy to "restore the imbalance in favor of employers" which existed in the open shop decades before the New Deal.

This is indicated, the report said, in the contrast between purposes of the Wagner Act and T-H.

"The Wagner Act attempted to equalize the strength of workers . . . by encouraging free collective bargaining between unions and employers," the report noted, while "however, it is the announced policy of the Taft-Hartley Act to encourage individual bargaining."

In some detail, the report considered various proposed Taft-Hartley amendments, including those suggested by Sen. Taft (R., O.) which would introduce "new repressive features," and concluded:

"The Taft-Hartley law cannot be salvaged by amendments proposed by its author. The time is past due for a return to a constructive labor relations policy based upon the principles of free collective bargaining."

Eight Basic Flaws In 'Mr. Republican's' Law

HERE'S what's wrong with the Taft-Hartley Act, as summarized by the annual report of CIO's Legal Dept.:

1. Serious restrictions through injunctions on the right to strike, "this most basic of all labor's rights . . . without which there can be no real collective bargaining."

2. Interference with normal collective bargaining through "cooling off" clause.

3. Ban on "concerted activities which have long been recognized as necessary to free trade unionism," such as secondary boycotts and picketing.

4. The "confusing and technical" 60-day strike notification clause.

5. Penalizing of economic strikers, who are banned from voting in NLRB elections.

6. NLRB General Counsel given a free hand to obtain court injunctions against unions for "unfair labor practices."

7. Outlawing of effective union security contract clauses; "the type of union security permitted by Taft-Hartley is practically worthless."

8. The so-called employer "free speech" clause; "under this technique, employes are assembled together in the plant on working time and are forced to listen to anti-union speeches by the employer."

9. The "absurdity" of the "ill-considered and one-sided" non-Communist affidavits; "virtually every Communist and fellow traveler in the labor movement has signed a non-Communist affidavit."

NABET Gains Pact On Eve Of Strike

On the eve of a strike deadline, CIO Broadcast Engineers last week reached an agreement on wage and other contract improvements with the American and National broadcasting chains.

Terms of the agreement were withheld by Federal Mediator J. R. Mandelbaum in New York City, pending ratification by NABET-CIO memberrs.

Housing Grows Worse, CIO Group Reports

A "SWISS cheese rent control law with more holes than cheese" and a "trickle down" theory of housing that will not stand analysis are both hit hard in the CIO Housing Committee's report to the National CIO Convention.

After trying for a year to stir a Congress that is either bemused by or indifferent to conditions throughout the country, the committee came to this conclusion:

"Today, housing conditions for all but a minority of high income families are growing worse, not better. They will continue to become worse until this Congress changes its attitude or the American people change the make-up of Congress for the better in the 1952 elections."

The committee is proud of its front rank position in the fight against "the billion-dollar coalition of landlords, real estate operators, speculative builders and private lending agencies" bent on blocking rent control, public housing and cheap housing credit.

PAST experiences, when hundreds of thousands of temporary dwellings, shacks and trailer camps had to be built to house defense workers and their families, are being ignored, the report continues.

"In no phase of (the present) defense mobilization is profiteering at the expense of the American people and the defense effort itself more shameless or more successful than in the field of housing," the report charges.

Specifically, the CIO has tried to work with the "complex procedure" of the painfully inadequate rent control law. Industrial union councils have helped local governing bodies through the maze of regulations to a point where resolutions asking for rent control can be passed.

In spite of all effort, however, only 6½ million families out of a total of 19 million families who rent their homes are protected from rent gouging.

The fallacy of the "trickle down" theory—the fond hope that as new houses are built, older houses will become available at modest rents to families of lower incomes—is clearly demonstrated:

"During the same period in which the Chicago Metropolitan area built 15,750 homes, various city departments arranged to demolish 20,000 homes to make way for 'civic improvements'."

THIS pattern, the report says is duplicated in many centers of population. The only "trickle down" that comes about is congestion in the remaining housing at exhorbitant rents.

The committee promises to continue to make this the issue:

"Shall we have first priority on housing for those who need it least or for those who need it most?"

CIO Unions Push Safety Education

Through its Health, Safety and Welfare Committee, the CIO has worked steadily and consistently during the last year to prevent or reduce the frightful toll of occupational accidents and diseases.

Last year 15,500 workers were killed on the job, an increase of 500 deaths over the previous year. Lost time injuries rose to 1,950,000 in 1950, an increase of 100,000 over 1949.

The committee reported that CIO unions are extending their safety education programs, and are supporting efforts to restore physically handicapped persons to useful employment.

Committee members: James B. Carey, chairman; Emil Mazey, secretary; Harry Read, director; David McDonald, Ernest Weaver, James E. Fadling, T. M. McCormick, William Pachler.

BLIGHT ON AMERICA: Almost under the Capitol's dome are the ancient, reeking slums (like these) of Washington. But scenes like this could be photographed in ten thousand U. S. towns and cities and will continue until Congress provides for more public housing as advocated by the CIO National Housing Committee.

Seamen Aided By Maritime Committee

THE CIO Maritime Committee has continued to work toward improving the welfare of merchant seamen and shipyard workers through both legislation and administrative action.

While the committee has met with notable success with problems requiring administrative action by government agencies, the matter of getting favorable congressional maritime legislation has proven more difficult, it reported to the National CIO Convention.

Attention is called to the fact that employment in the merchant marine sharply rises in times of national emergency and falls in periods of world peace.

The current problem confronting the maritime unions is to recruit enough skilled seamen to man vessels as they are being reactivated from the national defense reserve fleet.

The recruitment problem is different from that of World War II, the committee said. At that time there was not a large potential pool of skilled seamen, therefore the stress was on recruiting young, inexperienced men and training them.

TODAY there are thousands of skilled seamen who have left the industry in the last five years. A sufficient number of them must be enticed back into the industry.

The committee took the lead in urging the government to accept a realistic draft deferment policy for bona fide merchant seamen. After several meetings with the top Manpower Policy Committee, the Director of Selective Service was asked to inaugurate a uniform deferment policy for skilled seamen.

The committee reported that Tripartite Maritime Security Appeal Boards are now functioning in all ports and in Washington, D. C. The Coast Guard, maritime labor and management are actively engaged in screening subversives from the maritime industry.

Social Security Progress Scant

The CIO has continued to press for improvements in social security benefits although Congress was deaf to all such requests, the CIO Committee on Social Security reported to the CIO Convention.

The committee pointed out that in a defense period, "the nation has a greater obligation than ever before to provide adequate social security benefits to all the people."

The CIO worked for improvements in unemployment insurance; passage of a national health program; development of an adequate program of jobless benefits for veterans, and other measures which Congress failed to act upon.

War Changed Work Of CIO Research Dept.

WORK OF the CIO Dept. of Education and Research has "substantially changed and increased" in the past year as a direct result of defense mobilization.

Because "government decisions on wages, prices, production and manpower since the Korean invasion have more and more determined the conditions under which CIO members work and live," the responsibilities of CIO's education-research staff have grown, according to the officers' report to the CIO convention.

In co-operation with other CIO divisions, the department during the past year has:

1. Given technical information and analysis to CIO officers and standing committees.

2. Worked closely with CIO representatives in defense agencies, particularly the Wage Stabilization Board and the Defense Manpower Administration.

3. Assisted CIO representatives on the United Labor Policy Committee before it was dissolved by the AFL.

"With wage stabilization policies tied closely to the government's Consumers' Price Index," the report pointed out, "the long-time effort of CIO to improve the Index has become even more important."

THE department continued efforts "to build understanding and support for CIO economic programs and policies" through its information services to CIO unions and councils and publication of the Economic Outlook (which focused on price control, rent ceiling, tax and production issues).

In the labor education field, the department reported it is "expanding our school program to a year-around basis and working more directly with the CIO Councils Dept. in helping local and state councils to develop year-around educational programs."

Publicity Dept. Acts To Stem Increased Attacks On Labor

PRESS AND public relations are assuming new importance to the labor movement, because the past year has brought "an increase in anti-labor propaganda," the CIO's Publicity Dept. reported.

"An unrelenting campaign was directed" the report continued, "against the programs of labor in such widely varied fields as wages, economic matters, political action, civil liberties and social welfare programs.

"The department has attempted to meet this attack by factual presentation of the positions of the CIO and by constant explanation of its aims and aspirations.

"But it is obvious, nevertheless, that the CIO for some time to come will be functioning in a climate of unceasing efforts to direct hostility towards the activities of this organization . . . With labor's enemies thus dedicated to seeking to neutralize the strength of the CIO, it is obvious that careful thought must be given to broad public relations campaigns in order to tell the CIO's story to the public, and to advance our democratic program."

One public relations development was the issuance of a well-illustrated pamphlet, "This Is The CIO," for popular distribution.

The department made the best possible use of sustaining program time by conducting a series of economic discussions by Robert R. Nathan over the American Broadcasting Co. network, and by arranging for the participation of CIO officials in the Columbia Broadcasting System's Saturday afternoon program, "Cross Section—USA."

ALSO A number of discussion programs were arranged for the National Broadcasting Co. network. Speakers were provided for the Voice of America overseas broadcast.

Weekly publication of the CIO News was described as playing "an important function in publicizing the activities of all branches of the CIO." Additionally much of the work of the department concerned relations with press and radio correspondents.

During the past year Henry C. Fleisher was named director of the department, succeeding Allan L. Swim, who resigned to accept a position with the Economic Cooperation Administration in Paris.

Red Caps' Wages Increase 81%

Since red caps employed by the Intl.-Great Northern Railway at San Antonio and Palestine, Tex., joined the CIO Transport Service Employees Union, they have received the greatest percentage-wise wage increase known to have been authorized by the Wage Stabilization Board, according to union officials.

They were being paid but 75c an hour when they chose the UTSE to represent them. A contract was negotiated calling for wages of $1.36 an hour—an increase of more than 81%—and has been approved by the WSB. Pres. Luther Sullivan of Local 804, Houston, who organized the new local, reported that back pay checks were running around $300 each.

Rent Lids Set In 4 Defense Areas

Rent ceilings were restored Nov. 1 on every type of housing accommodation in four defense areas, Rent Stabilizer Tighe E. Woods announced last week.

Those communities affected are:

Norfolk-Portsmouth, Va., area, where military and defense personnel have crowded in and where the roll back date was July 1, 1950.

Alamogordo, N. M., site of the recently expanded Holloman Air Force Base, rolled back to Oct. 1, 1950.

Dover, Del., area, including Milford, because of expansion of the Dover Air Force Base, with rents rolled back to Aug. 1, 1950.

Mineral Wells, Tex., area, including Palo Pinto and Parker counties, rolled back to Mar. 1, 1951, because of the housing demand caused by added personnel at Wolters Air Force Base.

CIO Fights 'Holding Operation' In Congress

MOST OF THIS YEAR'S efforts by the CIO Legislative Dept., which brings the CIO viewpoint on pending legislation to the attention of Congress, were limited to "a holding operation" against reaction, the department reported.

"The first session of the 82nd Congress has brought a renewal of the postwar wave of reaction that has checked, and temporarily reversed, during the 81st Congress," the report said. It conceded, however, that the 82nd Congress "did not move quite as far to the right as the ill-fated 80th|"

The department charged that Congress has shown an almost complete lack of understanding and concern for domestic problems. Also, by its failure to understand "the delicate inter-relationship" of American foreign policy with national defense, Congress has hampered the mutual security program of the democratic world.

Pointing out that Congress continues to be dominated by a reactionary coalition of conservative Northern Republicans and conservative Southern Democrats, the department said:

"Not even the scare headlines evoked by the coalition's 'investigations' and statements of policy can obscure its miserably inefficient record on numerous essential legislative matters."

Coalition control made it "inevitable that lobbyists for monopoly and big business should call the turns on those pieces of legislation which did emerge."

The small group of CIO legislative representatives in Washington "cannot hope to compete with the horde of special interest lobbyists who are constantly active in Washington," the department pointed out.

"Labor's strength and influence comes from the interest and activity of our members 'back home,'" the report said. "Only to the extent that they register, vote and show continuing interest in our national problems, can we hope to achieve our democratic legislative goals."

With this in mind, the department warned that the 1952 elections will be "most crucial," and that "only at their peril" can the American people pass up "that opportunity to change the make-up of the Congress."

"Labor's failure to achieve any of its more important legislative goals—even at a time of great united action by the CIO and AFL—should convince even the most skeptical that effective political action is a necessary preliminary to the development of a sound legislative program," the report said.

"The time to make an effective legislative program possible in the 83rd Congress is before it is elected—that is, in the 1952 elections."

Until there is a liberal majority in Congress, the report warned, labor's legislative efforts must remain, at best, "a holding operation against more reaction."

LABOR BILLS: Although several bills calling for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act were introduced, "that evil statute" is still on the books. "Only outright repeal will eliminate the many obstacles to sound labor-management relations that the Act imposes," the department made clear. The CIO supported the Taft-Humphrey Amendment only because an NLRB ruling, based on a Supreme Court decision, had created a situation which threatened industrial stability in thousands of plants.

The amendment, which was enacted, validates union shop elections won by CIO unions before the CIO officers signed affidavits and eliminates the need for future elections to authorize the union shop.

LUCAS AMENDMENT: The defeat of the Lucas Amendment to the Defense Production Act is regarded as "perhaps the only major victory scored by organized labor in connection with labor legislation in the 82nd Congress."

This measure, which would have destroyed the tripartite nature of the Wage Stabilization Board and stripped the board of its present limited powers to handle non-wage disputes, was defeated 217 to 113 after an intensive CIO campaign.

EXPLOITATION OF MEXICANS: Despite vigorous protests from the CIO and other labor groups, Congress passed the Ellender-Poage "wetback" labor bill which permits the importation of thousands of poverty-stricken Mexicans for exploitation in industrialized agriculture in the Southwest.

The CIO pointed out that the bill would intensify the evils deplored by the President's Commission on Migratory Labor and asked for its veto. The President signed the measure "reluctantly" and called upon Congress to pass supplemental legislation to correct the evils, which it failed to do.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT: In renewing the Defense Production Act for another year, Congress not only failed to correct its many shortcoming but actually added many crippling amendments.

The CIO sought a stronger act to provide adequate checks against inflation and later supported the President's requests for repeal of the inflationary amendments written into the law by the 82nd Congress. None of these was repealed before Congress adjourned.

TAXES: Congress showed "a complete lack of realism" on tax matters and voted a rich man's tax revision which fell about $5 billion short of the additional revenue needed to pay for the defense program. The Senate Finance Committee, made up of conservative and wealthy Dixiegops, was largely responsible for the final bill.

The act places most of the additional burden upon low and middle income groups while giving additional loopholes to corporations and wealthy individuals.

CIVIL RIGHTS: Highlight of the sessions civil rights developments was the introduction of a comprehensive program of civil rights legislation by a bi-partisan group of Senators. No progress was made, of course, toward its adoption, but the program offers a rallying point for future efforts by civil rights supporters. Throughout the session, shilly-shallying on civil rights legislation was obviously a calculated policy of Republican leadership.

HOUSING AND RENT CONTROL: The measures which Congress enacted on housing and rent control fell far short of the critical need. In general, all of the laws enacted in this field suffered from the dominant influence of the powerful real estate lobby. Landlords and builders won disproportionate benefits at the expense of tenants.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE: While there was no forward progress in social welfare legislation, a shameful effort to turn the clock back to days of the old poor laws finally succeeded after receiving initial setbacks.

Sponsored by Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), the proposal was twice beaten as a rider to two different social security bills and it was turned down on its merits as separate legislation by the House Ways and Means Committee. It finally was enacted into law when the reactionary group controlling tax legislation accepted it as a rider to the new "rich man's" tax law.

FOREIGN POLICY BILLS: Under the guise of "economy" many Republicans and Dixiecrats made a strong effort to replace the Administration's foreign policy program with the discredited isolationism that marked GOP policy in the 30's. Congress hacked more than $1 billion from the appropriations requested by the President to carry out the mutual security program of economic and military aid to friendly nations abroad.

The report was also critical of the Congress for its failure to act on other important matters including proposals for public power development, control of monopoly, and statehood for Alaska and Hawaii.

A FORECAST concerning the second session of the 82nd Congress beginning next January was made by the CIO Legislative Dept. in its report.

"On its record so far," the report said, "the coalition controlling the 82nd Congress has made it clear that the people can expect no basic reforms nor really significant social legislation to win passage."

It pointed out that the American people are now paying the penalty for their failure to vote in adequate numbers in the "off-year" 1950 election and added:

"This means that the great majority of people will be forced to continue to shoulder a disproportionate share of the cost of the defense program, not only through added taxes unfairly imposed, but also through paying the runaway prices which the 82nd Congress in its first session guaranteed to big business."

UAW Rejects Plea On Borg-Warner

The CIO Auto Workers last week reaffirmed their demand for a single contract covering 10 plants of the Borg-Warner Co. before the union will call off the strike of 6300 workers.

A second appeal to call off the walkout from Nathan P. Feinsinger, chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, was turned down by the union's Policy Committee in Detroit, according to daily press dispatches.

The main issue in the strike, which began Oct. 10, is a company-wide contract.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said "the Policy Committee agreed unanimously that it would be prepared to recommend to the Borg-Warner workers in the 10 plants on strike that they return to their jobs, provided it first can be agreed that the dispute is single in nature and that one final agreement shall cover all 10 plants."

Borg-Warner manufactures automatic transmissions, clutches, gears and other auto products.

PAC Warns Of 'Big Lie' In '52 Campaign

"GUTTER POLITICS" on the Hitler-Stalin model is moving to the fore in the U.S. political scene, and will make next year's elections "a time of trial for democracy all over the world," the Political Action Committee reported to the CIO Convention.

"Victory for reaction" in '52, the report said, "will bring joy to the Kremlin and gloom to the hearts of men everywhere who fight for freedom.

"Reaffirmation of America's determination to achieve social justice at home and to continue to lend her great strength to those striving for social justice abroad will, on the other hand, bring rejoicing to the down-trodden and misery to Moscow," PAC said.

The PAC report said "gutter politics"—identical with the "Big Lies" of Nazis and Communists—blossomed in several states in the 1950 congressional elections, and will be exploited even further next year.

Their purpose, PAC emphasized, is "the obscuring of the real economic and social issues which confront the American people. It proposes to substitute for genuine democratic discussion of the nation's problems, appeals to racial prejudice, groundless fears . . . and personal slander on a scale seldom before seen in American history."

PAC demanded "complete repudiation of this un-American form of political campaigning by the leadership of both parties," and added this warning:

"But we are aware of the recent unfortunate successes of the 'Big Lie' technique of Hitler and Stalin. We must be prepared to meet it when it will be uttered in next year's presidential and congressional campaigns."

PART AND parcel of the "gutter politics," the report noted, is a "stepping up of the tempo of reactionary attacks" on the CIO, which also reflects "labor's increasing political influence and power." To such attacks, PAC replied:

"The CIO-PAC is unshaken in the belief that its work of political education and activity constitutes an outstanding contribution to the democratic life of our nation.

"We are unafraid of the attacks by Senator Robert A. Taft and his cohorts and the minions of Joseph Stalin; and we solemnly pledge that they will both fail equally in their evil attempts to destroy the free American labor movement.

"The CIO-PAC believes that the unprincipled attacks upon it can only be met by a firm, continual restatement of the principles of CIO and by constant demonstrations of our interest in candidates and programs, regardless of party affiliation, that will advance the public welfare."

WARNING THAT this is no time for political isolation by any labor or liberal organization, in the face of the reactionary offensive," the PAC report urged continued efforts by CIO affiliates to build up city and state united labor political committees and to co-operate with non-labor liberal community organizations.

PAC organization, it was reported, "is better prepared than ever before," with more attention given in the past 12 months to voter registration, fund collection "on a sounder footing" and full-time political work.

Setting a goal of "placing PAC blockworkers in each of the nation's 137,194 precincts," the committee report concluded with this prediction:

"The officers of your CIO-PAC are confident that the political forces of labor will not fail in next year's election."

Members of the committee are: Philip Murray, chairman; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer; Jack Kroll, director; Joseph Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, James B. Carey, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Jacob Potofsky, Michael Quill, Walter Reuther, Emil Rieve, Al Hartnett, Emil Mazey, T. M. McCormick, William Pollock, Frank Rosenblum, Desmond Walker and Carlton Werkau.

CIO Aids In Suit To End Segregation

CIO has joined with several civil rights organizations in a federal court suit designed to establish "that racial segregation is per se unconstitutional."

The suit, according to the annual report of CIO's Legal Dept., was brought in Arizona to prohibit discrimination in that state's public schools.

Joining with National CIO as direct parties in the suit are the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Council for Civic Unity, Anti-Defamation League and Mexican groups.

Civil Rights Advance Blocked In Congress

ALL PROGRESS in civil rights legislation in the present Congress was blocked by a coalition of reactionary Republicans and Dixiecrats, the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination reported to the convention.

Such legislation, traditionally opposed by the Dixiecrats, "has now been made a political bargaining pawn between them and the reactionary Republicans in order to embarrass the administration," the committee stated.

JAMES CAREY

Measures were introduced dealing with fair employment, the poll tax, lynching, segregation, and general civil rights.

"Not one of these bills has progressed in the slightest through the committee to which it was referred," the committee reported.

It condemned the "vicious obstruction to enactment of programs that were solemnly pledged to the people by both political parties," and urged President Truman to set up by executive order a Fair Employment Practices Commission in conjunction with the defense program.

The committee outlined the work of CIO local civil rights conferences already held and mentioned plans under way for holding two others—in New York and California.

Progress was reported in the elimination of racial discrimination in the armed forces. Excellent programs started in the Navy and Air Force are operating fully, the committee stated, although segregation is still practiced to some extent in the Army. But even in the Army, we are on "the eve of seeing discrimination completely and totally eliminated," said the report.

Southern Campaign Is Paying Dividends

THE CIO Organizing Committee's Southern drive, after five years of building and planning, has begun to pay off dividends.

Operating in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Texas, the committee last year won 179 elections covering approximately 80,000 workers, it reported to the National CIO Convention.

In addition, there are at present, 101 petitions before the National Labor Relations Board involving an estimated 42,000 employes. There are also 104 other mills or plants in the process of organization with a potential membership of 126,000.

The committee has been instrumental in developing an attitude of acceptance of the CIO within the important framework of the economic, social and religious life of the South.

Apart from organizational activities, the committee has used extensive newspaper and radio public relations, supplemented by personal contact, to advance the program of the CIO.

In the field of community relations, committee representatives have made lasting contacts in every professional group, with emphasis on church people. Large mailing lists of ministers and lay people in every city of any importance in the South are maintained.

CIO-CSC Report Marks Decade Of Activity

THE CIO Community Services Committee, just completing 10 years of activity, summarized its work for the past decade in its report to the convention.

During the past 10 years, the committee reported that: More than $300 million has been contributed by CIO members to social welfare agencies; $15 million has been given to aid trade unions in 17 foreign countries; and 8000 union counsellors in 54 communities have been trained.

The CIO has also sponsored hundreds of conferences and institutes, and distributed millions of copies of printed materials in both this country and abroad in addition, it has contacted thousands of servicemen and women in camps, USO centers, hospitals and other places. Funds raised from CIO members have been used to ship packages to the fighting forces in Korea.

In 1951, the committee helped organize the United Defense Fund and also the United Community Defense Services, CIO officers serve on the boards of both organizations.

The Philip Murray award, given in 1947 and 1948, was this year presented to Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.), as an outstanding fighter for the people.

The committee: Irving Abramson, chairman; John Brophy, treasurer; Ted Silvey, secretary; Leo Perlis, director; George Baldanzi, Joseph Beirne, Harry Boyer, Joseph Childs, Harold Garno, John Grogan, Bessie Hillman, Louis Hollander, Emil Mazey, David McDonald, August Scholle, Milton Weihrauch.

Reform In Europe

Victor Reuther Asks Action To Block Reds

FIVE MILLION Frenchmen vote for Communist candidates because democratic forces have done too much talking and not enough acting, Victor G. Reuther, CIO representative in Europe, recently told the American Club of Paris.

"The overwhelming majority of the five million, we in the CIO believe, are just desperate men and women," he said, "trying to get off the treadmill of rising prices and lagging wages; men and women who have made the very bad mistake of believing that communism will put a decent roof over their heads, new clothes on their backs and three square meals a day on the table.

"The fact that the democratic forces in France have failed to do that job themselves constitutes the greatest road-block barring return of those five million people to the democratic camp."

REUTHER told why the CIO is interested enough in Europe to send him there to work with European unions and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"It is the view of the CIO," he explained, "that we, as Americans, had better take a closer look behind and beyond our anti-Communist slogans and look at the social and economic conditions that make Frenchmen, Italians and a good many other Europeans vote Communist and act Communist, despite over three years of Marshall Plan aid and the expenditure of billions of dollars for Europe's economic recovery . . .

"In our struggle to build a peace and make it secure, we must first reckon honestly with this fact: that democracy in the crisis countries of western Europe, particularly France and Italy, is unsure of itself in the face of potential aggression from without and actual aggression from within because social and economic justice has not been granted to the working people."

Reuther paid tribute to the Marshall Plan as a high example of democratic statesmanship.

"There probably would not be an even shaky peace left in the world today to worry about and try to nourish and make strong," he said, "if Europe had not been provided with the economic means of survival. As Americans, we can all take pride in this contribution."

The Marshall Plan helped restore the "normal" productive mechanism, said Reuther, but it isn't enough. There must be continent-wide, sweeping social and economic changes, he emphasized, "to pick up those five million votes for democracy."

"OUR FINE speeches of freedom and democracy," he continued, "must be matched by action even more appealing.

"We have been too ready to come forward with expert arguments to prove that workers' housing is inflationary, and so we have missed the boat on more than one occasion when a project in low-cost housing in the mining districts of St. Etienne or in the Pas-de-Calais area would have spoken much more eloquently than the Voice of America about America's democratic values."

Reuther pointed out that in countries where the free labor movement is strong, the Reds are a negligible factor.

For that reason, he went on, the CIO is working with the free unions of Europe and the ICFTU to combat communism not by slogans, but by helping "make free labor's voice and arm stronger in the continuing job of making democracy work better."

"PRODUCTION is not enough," Reuther continued "Productivity is not enough. Agreements with governments aren't enough. We must close ranks with the people. . . .

"What I propose is a counter-campaign at the grass roots level, putting our democratic ideals to work in practical 'bread and butter' terms, putting them to work in cleaning up the remaining cesspools of insecurity and want.

"The resources required to effect such an immediate and substantial rise in the standard of living of the people in the crisis countries represents but a very small amount when compared with the heavier cost of physical defense."

Murray Praises Progress Of CIO Maritime Union

CIO PRES. Philip Murray, addressing the CIO National Maritime Union convention in New York, told the delegates the economic gains registered by the NMU in the past 15 years have outstripped those of many other workers.

Murray, speaking on the final day of the convention, said the seamen have come a "long, long way" from the days when an able bodied sailor on shipboard earned $62.50 a month.

He contrasted the "old days" with the present times of high pay, shorter hours, good living conditions, life and health insurance and welfare programs.

Terming the NMU "representative of the human element that provides the fortifications for the American way of life," Murray declared that seamen are employed in the most important job that must be done in the fulfillment of the nation's international commitments.

He recalled the union's five-year fight to purge itself of a Communist clique, and paid "unhesitant tribute" to it for driving out "these disrupters who would have destroyed your union."

In a tribute to NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, Murray termed him "an outstanding leader, big of stature and big of mind" who had grown in importance not only in his own union but also in the CIO.

Murray was elected to honorary membership in the NMU by thundering acclamation at the conclusion of his address.

Control Need Underscored By Big Floods

RECENT disastrous Missouri Valley floods have given new urgency to CIO's campaign for comprehensive flood control, power development and conservation through a Missouri Valley Authority.

The CIO Regional Development & Conservation Committee so reported to the convention.

The committee, headed by Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, is concerned with safeguarding "the living and renewable resources of the country, which have been subject to such violent and wasteful destruction in the past."

EMPHASIS OF the committee's report was on the Missouri Valley, where long years of wrangling between the Army Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation resulted in adoption of the inadequate Pick-Sloan program.

"Perhaps the most serious deficiencies of the Pick-Sloan Plan relate to flood control," the report said. "This fact has been made very clear by the recent disastrous floods in the basin. The CIO raised in the neighborhood of $135,000 in relief funds drawn from union treasuries for assistance to flood sufferers . . ."

In place of the Pick-Sloan Plan, the report reaffirmed support for a Missouri Valley Authority—backed by CIO since it was first proposed in 1945.

Such an authority, the report suggested, would shelve "doubtful" irrigation programs and concentrate emphasis on flood control and development of electric power resources.

Recalled by the report was the exchange of correspondence, at the time of the Missouri floods, between CIO Pres. Philip Murray and President Truman, in which Mr. Truman urged vigorous political action to send to Congress men who will work for an MVA.

THE REPORT also concerned itself with the Columbia River basin in the Pacific Northwest and the long-pending St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

All such programs should be based "on the observance of the principles of the TVA," and the report added:

"We have made it clear on every occasion that the principles of the TVA, as endorsed by us, include full recognition of the right of the workers in all publicly owned or operated electric power agencies to organize and bargain collectively and to engage in concerted action for mutual aid and protection through unions of their own choosing."

Also, Harold Garno, New York IUC; J. J. Hickman, Texas IUC; Rodney C. Jacobson, Minnesota IUC; Chester Dusten, CIO regional director, Oregon; Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO regional director, California; A. J. Kojetinsky, Steelworkers; Tom Jones, Communications Workers; James Davis, Missouri IUC.

ACWA Gains In Drive To Boost Union Label

CIO CLOTHING Workers have begun the second phase of their nation-wide union label campaign which already has speeded organizing of the few remaining unorganized segments of the men's clothing industry.

ACWA last week announced it had opened a new national advertising campaign. Daily and labor newspapers, magazines, trade papers, and radio and television are employed.

And the Amalgamated story is:

"Whatever the price range, dollar for dollar, clothes bearing the Amalgamated union label is a better buy."

Trade unions, labor committees and consumer organizations have given the ACWA a "big hand" in the union label campaign, which was opened some two years ago.

At present, Amalgamated is picketing the 67 retail stores of the Richmond Bros. Co., which refuses to deal with ACWA and sells non-union clothing.

Union assistance to the Amalgamated was demonstrated recently in Pittsburgh.

There members of the CIO Steelworkers District 17 joined in a demonstration at a Richmond store, and the picketing got on television to a wide audience.

Other recent backing for the union label drive came from conventions of the CIO Rubber Workers and the Canadian Congress of Labour.

Economic Policy Committee Fought For Basic Welfare

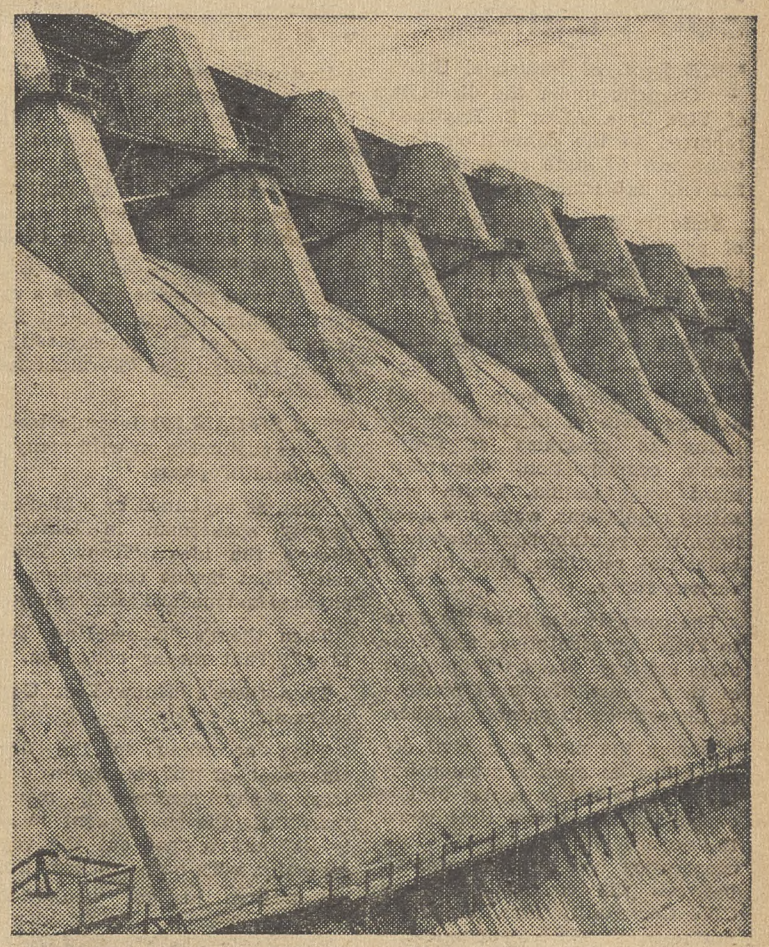
PENNY-pinching attempts to undermine basic social welfare programs during the mobilization period were strongly opposed by the CIO Committee on Economic Policy in a statement to the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

The mobilization effort will not be aided "by a policy which robs the common people of the social gains of the last two decades," the committee stated, "and deprives them of hope that other necessary programs for the development of human and physical resources will ever be fulfilled."

The committee in its convention report urged the need of such measures in the stabilization program as effective price controls, fair wage stabilization, equitable taxes, credit controls, a savings program and a concerted effort to expand our productive capacity.

It pointed to our productive ability "as one of the major sources of strength in the free world," and called attention to the need for over-all planning "as essential for meeting our production obligations."

The committee: Philip Murray, chairman; Emil Rieve, administrative chairman; Joseph Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Arthur Goldberg, O. A. Knight, Jacob Potofsky, Walter Reuther, Stanley Ruttenberg, Nat Goldfinger, executive secretary.



POWER FOR A BETTER AMERICA: Like this huge dam of the Tennessee Valley Authority, comprehensive water conservation and public power projects on the Missouri, Columbia and St. Lawrence got strong backing in annual report of CIO's Regional Development and Conservation Committee.

The Story Of Pvt. Duckworth, His Griefs And His Chant

By W. P. WELSH

WHEN YOU hear men marching to "Sound off; sound off; one, two, three, four; one, two—three-four." think of Pvt. Willie Lee Duckworth.

Pvt. Duckworth was a recruit in 1944, stationed at Fort Slocum, N. Y. He was something more than that one cold spring night; he was a foot slogger 13 miles from camp. Like all soldiers he needed a lift and probably would have been glad for even a camel.

But there was no lift, not even in the hackneyed marching chants. So Pvt. Duckworth listed his gripes in a soft voice to the cadence of close-order drill—and a new song was born.

It didn't happen all at once because the Georgia soldier "made it up in my head" as he went along. He and the rest of his company were not exactly carried back that night on the wings of song.

But during the next few days Fort Slocum soldiers were picking them up and putting them down with a good deal more snap than usual. A colonel who appreciated such things listened in and found it good listening. So the colonel and the private got together and came up with "The Duckworth Chant" . . . one, two, three, four; one, two—three-four.

There was more to it than that, of course. Musicians from the post had to set the thing to music. That really wasn't hard since it was a "natural." Somebody, probably the colonel, had to clean it up. That took a bit of doing. But it was done somehow and finally added to the drill manual.

IT WAS used for background music in the motion picture 'Battlefield." Then a band here and an orchestra there picked it up. Today, baritones who never got any closer to combat than a night club brawl lift the customers to their feet with verses Pvt. Duckworth never heard.

Everybody thinks it's great. So does ex-Pvt. Willie Lee Duckworth. He is back home in Georgia counting the royalties: one, two, three, four; one, two—three-four.

Buffalo CIO Backs St. Lawrence Plan

Renewed support of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project was given by the Buffalo CIO Council which authorized its officers to press for congressional action on construction by the U.S.

Oil Caravan Pushes Drive In California

THE "CALIFORNIA Organizing Caravan," consisting of members representing every CIO Oil Workers local in California, will travel across that state soon in a month-long campaign to organize free riders.

Beginning in the Los Angeles area on Nov. 25, the caravan will move up through the state to the East Bay area, then back to Los Angeles on Dec. 22.

Scores of Oil Workers are expected to participate. They will stage rallies at plant gates at shift-change hours. At these rallies the union will be talked up, members will be asked to show their union cards, and non-members will be asked to join.

DURING THE HOURS when activity is slow at plant gates, caravan members will break up into teams of two and call on non-members in their homes, urging them to join.

It will be a mass-production organizing drive such as only Californians can produce. The union expects to gain hundreds of members during the caravan's tour and to lay the groundwork for further organization.

The caravan will visit virtually every oil refinery, pipeline station and producing field in the state—and these are spread over an area 500 miles long.

CIO Councils Approaching 300 Figure

THE Dept. of Industrial Union Councils under the direction of Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood reported to the convention that there are 40 state councils, and 239 city and county councils.

State legislation continued to be of primary concern to the state councils. Most of these bodies now have permanent offices and have accumulated a great deal of experience in working with state legislators.

Council officers have acquired a large store of information relating to programs of workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation, health and safety regulations, wage and hour laws, race relation legislation and industrial relations laws in the various states.

The councils also have the duty to keep Representatives and Senators informed about the opinions of their constitutents in matters of importance to organized labor.

During the past year, civil defense has assumed a greater importance in the activities of the councils than at any time since the days of World War II. Close cooperation has been maintained between the councils and the CIO Community Services Committee in an effort to assume the primary responsibility for making a success of the undertaking.

The steady work of the councils in connection with labor education, public education, public relations, publicity and newspaper publications has continued.

Michigan Medicos To Wage War On 'Creeping Socialism'

"KEEP POLITICS Out of Medicine" is an old war-cry of the American Medical Association.

A good place for the "doctors' lobby" to begin practicing that would be in the AMA itself.

Last week one AMA affiliate, the Michigan State Medical Society, revealed that it's engaged in politics up to its ears—not just in opposition to prepaid national health insurance, but in fighting all measures of social progress supported by CIO and the U. S. labor movement.

"Approved in principle" by a recent Michigan State Medical Society House of Delegates meeting was a fancily-titled "Formula for Freedom."

THE SO-CALLED formula leads the customers on with many a high-fallutin' phase.

First, as explained by a Medical Society spokesman in Lansing, there's the idea: "Know Yourself." That means comprehensive physical and medical examinations.

Then there's "Know How You Live." That means education.

Then there's "Know Your Government."

That, according to the first statement of the Michigan doctors' lobby spokesman, means "scrutinize the government on all levels" and a "get out the vote campaign with no party in mind."

But then he got wound up about the "Formula for Freedom," which is in the stage of being "implemented."

The "Formula for Freedom" is—quote and unquote—"a Michigan movement to stop creeping socialism."

So that's the latest step by AMA organizations in the political field, and if the purpose of the "Formula for Freedom" needed any more explanation, the Michigan doctors got it from John B. Martin, Jr., state attorney general and U. S. senatorial candidate.

Martin berated "bureaucracy, corruption and socialism" while the "Formula for Freedom" was before the Michigan doctors' meeting. As a story in the Detroit News noted:

"The delegates appeared puzzled by the somewhat nebulous character of the proposal (Formula for Freedom) until Martin provided the tip-off. He is a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Senate . . ."

And that's how the organized doctors are "keeping politics out of medicine" these days!

UAW, Ford Push Blood Donor Plan

In line with CIO's program of supporting blood donations for the armed forces, CIO Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co., last week agreed to establish blood donor programs in Ford plants throughout the U.S.

Under the program, announced in Detroit, special Red Cross stations will be set up in the various Ford plants and workers will donate blood during working hours and on company time.

Along with channeling blood to the armed forces, the Red Cross also will maintain a blood bank for use of Ford workers and their families.

CIO's Jobs In '52:

. . . Organize the unorganized.
. . . Protect our gains, advance our economic standards.
. . . Defeat reaction at the polls.
. . . Build a better democracy at home.
. . . Help our friends overseas, to win a world of real peace, free of war and aggression.

CIO Rail Workers Wallop AFL In Pennsy System Election

THE CIO Railroad Workers recently rang up a resounding victory over a combination of AFL craft unions in an election conducted among the non-operating employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The election, held by representatives of the National Mediation Board over a 30-day period, had been petitioned for by the Railroad Employees Dept., AFL, and was the fourth election won by a CIO union at PRR since 1945.

There were 37,447 eligible workers of which 18,671 voted for the CIO union and 10,321 for the AFL.

In the first election in 1945, the CIO Shipbuilding Workers won bargaining rights for three crafts; boilermakers, laborers and moulders.

Two years later IUMSWA petitioned for all eight crafts and the AFL intervened. The CIO union won three crafts and in a runoff, the electricians, carmen and sheetmetal workers also came into the IUMSWA.

In 1949, the AFL petitioned for elections in all eight crafts and in the ensuing balloting, IUMSWA was the winner in five and lost the sheet metal workers. Previously, the machinists and blacksmiths had voted AFL affiliation.

FOLLOWING the 1949 defeat, AFL organizers have constantly been trying to obtain signed cards which would enable them to petition again. They received the cooperation of the company in their efforts, according to John Green, formerly IUMSWA president but now president of the Railroad Workers.

Following the disaffiliation of the Railroad Workers from IUMSWA last year, the AFL petitioned on the grounds that because of the disaffiliation move, the URW was no longer represented the workers.

On July 31 of this year, the company notified Green that they would no longer recognize the Railroad Workers as bargaining agents.

Balloting began on Sept. 24 and mail ballots were accepted until Oct. 29. The election covered PRR employes in 11 states who work in the Maintenance of Equipment Dept. of the railroad. There are approximately 45,000 other non-operating workers on the road.

New York Barbers Settle In Time To Beautify CIO

SETTLEMENTS in the CIO Barbers' strike in the New York reopened most of the big city's struck tonsorial parlors in time to accommodate convention delegates who failed to get haircuts before leaving home.

More important, however, it brought real gains to New York barbers. The settlement came in the form of a package which included a $4 pay boost, an increase of 1% in welfare contributions, and a reduction of the work week from 48 to 45 hours, to be worked five days instead of six.

The break in the two-week-old strike, which had affected 2000 barbers in two local unions covering shops from 59th St. south to the Battery, came Nov. 5.

It followed membership approval of the strike committee's decision to accept individual settlements after the Broadway Master Barbers' Association still refused to sit down with the union. Within three days more than 60% of the more than 900 shops affected signed individual agreements.

Meanwhile, the membership agreed that the striking members would continue to picket their own shops until a final settlement was reached.

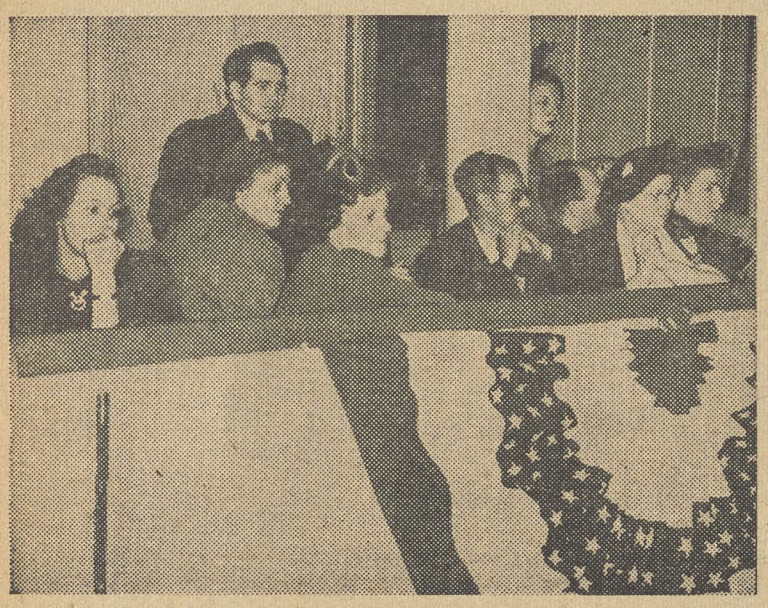
"We have no intention of keeping the rest of our people out, once the master barbers come to their senses," declared CIO Barbers Pres. Ernest Hebert. "We are still willing to sit down with their big association and discuss the situation."

Hebert pointed out that each member of the oldest master barbers association on the East Side had entered into individual agreements, and called upon the Broadway group to follow suit.

A UNIQUE feature of the agreements, resisted by the holdouts, was a failure to stipulate prices to be charged. The union has long insisted that responsibility for price increases belongs with the management.

"In the past," Hebert pointed out, "the master barbers holding contracts which stated prices have said that the union has been responsible for boosting barbershop costs. It's about time that the public should have an opportunity to know who is really responsible."

He said that the union this time has refrained from asking for a price increase, and that its sole interest was better working conditions for its members.



THE CIO CONVENTION holds the rapt attention of visitors in the balcony.

Farmers Yield Big U.S. Role To Unionists

TRADE UNION members, now more than 16 million strong, have replaced farmers as the leading group in a determining position in society, Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R., N. Y.) told the convention.

"The kind of national leadership the trade unions will give in the next few years," he said, "will probably determine our whole capability to carry the vast financial and production burden of defense mobilization and world leadership, as well as the leading role in bringing about world peace and higher standards of living which is ours."

The speaker pointed out that a new responsibility was imposed by this leadership. He said that it is now being tested in both domestic and foreign affairs.

"Organized labor," he added, "has taken the position that there can be no sacred cows in an anti-inflation program be they farmers, distributors, or manufacturers, but while refusing to let its own position be prejudiced by events it must continue to lead the fight for what is the right program for the country."

HE URGED that organized labor continue to be "the mainstay in the fight for an effective stabilization program." He said that labor's long range objective calls for its support of "a consumer's economy" as the central theme of our society.

Javits said that the CIO "at this very convention" had shown "marked examples of labor leadership and statesmanship."

Referring to the CIO's action in "casting out Communist dominated unions which would exploit labor as a political tool," and to the convention's action to correct moral and ethical laxity in high places, he declared:

"You have shown your public responsibility in this field by adopting machinery to deal with jurisdictional disputes and to drive racketeers out of the labor movements."

"This you have done," he continued, "after full trial and hearing according to democratic processes." This, he pointed out, "contrasted with the kind of reckless charge based on surmise, suspicion and association we have seen in some government circles."

All of these actions, he said, "have shown your understanding that democracy is not just for governments but that democracy is for any organized group in a democratic society."

Murray Warns:

Control Shortcomings May Cause Strikes

THE PRESENT program of wage controls without adequate controls on prices and profits may force labor into strike situations through no fault of its own, Philip Murray told the convention in supporting the wage stabilization and equality of sacrifice resolution.

The resolution adopted by unanimous vote, restated the CIO's demand for "equality of sacrifice" in the defense mobilization program.

It made clear, however, that labor will "never submit to discriminatory wage freezes or unfair policies of any other kind which will threaten the standard of living and the hard-won collective bargaining advances of free American labor."

Murray declared that it is "foolish" for the Wage Stabilization Board to exploit "a type of reasoning calculated to create the impression in the minds of the public that we still have free collective bargaining in the United States."

"Such," he added, "is not the case."

HE EXPLAINED that this has been demonstrated since the board issued its 10% wage increase formula.

"That is the board's yardstick and its reasoning for the moment evidently does not permit it to go beyond the amount provided in the formula contrived by the public and industrial members of the Wage Stabilization Board," he said.

In contrast, "no such device has been contrived by any agency in the federal government to control prices," he pointed out.

"You can't stabilize prices and you cannot stabilize wages unless the government of the United States of America attempts a system of all-out control. And that evidently is not in the offing," he continued.

"The working population of the United States of America is in no mood to accept a one-sided discriminatory system of regulation that operates only against those who work and work hard for a living."

Murray said that the soundness of the resolution was evidenced by the speeches which had been made to the convention by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers and by Pres. Joseph C. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, both members of the WSB.

PUTTING the question "in very simple fashion" and "very understandable language," Murray declared:

"The CIO recognizes the fact that our nation is undergoing the rigors of a grave national emergency. It is prepared to go all-out in its effort to protect the interest of the American consumer, and by so doing protect our nation and its democratic institutions. That is the position of the CIO."

He then stated the simple fact:

"No one in the Federal administration that has to do with defense mobilization has suggested to the American people that there ought to be a definite stipulated form of profit control in the United States."

On the other hand, he continued, there is ample evidence . . . to prove "that we have and are now prepared to fix wages and provide yardsticks and regulate wages." This makes real collective bargaining impossible, he pointed out.

"I do not believe that the average wage earner in the United States is prepared to accept the type of wage reasoning that has been offered them by government at this moment," he declared.

(See additional stories on pages 5 and 14.)

Murray Re-Election Was Really Noisy

A RIP-ROARING old-fashioned CIO celebration crackled off the walls of the Commodore Hotel ballroom when Philip Murray was unanimously re-elected to his 12th term as president.

No sooner had Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers placed his name in nomination than sheer, concentrated din broke forth.

"For five years," Potofsky said, "I have had the privilege of nominating the man we all revere. I hope to have that privilege for many years to come.

"He is a great spiritual force . . . we all have complete confidence in him . . . It is a great honor and a privilege to place in nomination one who is not only one of us, but who is also one of our country's great men.

Then it came.

Delegates who had been carefully hoarding every bit of paper they could lay their hands on—and painstakingly tearing it into small bits—let go all at once. Guests joined in from the balcony.

They whistled, they cheered, they clapped, they stamped, they pounded the tables and in every way roared their approval. A band struck up "Loch Lomand," and the celebrants timed their hand-clapping to its lilting cadence.

Photographers clambered over the stage and the tables on it, their flash bulbs throwing an eery glare over the whole end of the auditorium.

PANDEMONIUM reigned as the band swung into other Scottish and Irish numbers. Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood led in singing. Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey danced a jig. The bits of paper still went up and down, and streamers of colored paper began to appear.

Murray, smiling and slightly ill at ease at the ovation, viewed it all from a chair just back of the speaker's stand.

The tempo increased as a long line of delegates, staff members and guests marched across the stage to present their felicitations to him.

CIO 1951: Aggressive, Practical, Idealistic

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IT WAS the convention that showed the world the Congress of Industrial Organizations has the same stuff on the ball it always had—the convention that showed the doubting that the spavins and creaks they had mistaken for its old age existed only in their own minds, the convention that showed that the crusading spirit, the enlightened vision and the practical idealism which have always been part and parcel of the CIO are still there.

Still there in full force, working not alone or even primarily for the members themselves, but for the good of the country, the betterment of the world, the promotion of social and economic justice wherever it has lagged.

It was a feet-on-the-ground, heads-in-the-air convention, last week's 13th constitutional gathering of the National CIO in New York. It was a convention in the best and finest traditions of the CIO, the one they held there in the grand ballroom of the Commodore Hotel.

It was a convention that made firmer the place of the CIO in the forefront of the fight for equality of sacrifice in the country's defense mobilization effort.

No Surrender

It was a convention that served notice upon the government, upon Congress and upon the Wage Stabilization Board that "we shall never submit to discriminatory wage freezes or unfair polices of any other kind which will threaten the standard of living and the hard-won collective bargaining advances of free American labor or will undermine the fundamental rights of workers to organize, to bargain collectively, and to take concerted action for their mutual aid and protection."

It was a convention that served notice upon the Communists in all parts of the world that in the CIO they have a foe of sterner mold than they usually meet.

It was a convention that served notice on the chisellers in public life and the petty larceny racketeers who occasionally try to worm their way into the labor movement that the CIO wants no part of either of them—and that if they raise their ugly heads in any CIO union, they're more likely than not to end up in jail.

It was a convention that went to bat for the civil liberties weakened by the Smith Act—because "we insist that the prosecution of men for the advocacy of ideas, however repulsive, does not benefit the cause of freedom." At the same time it called for safeguards against subversion.

It was a convention that laid down CIO policy on many issues. And it was a convention that offered, on behalf of the six million workers the CIO represents, not only steadfast opposition to the evils that beset the world, the United States and the American people, but which laid down constructive programs for the solution of these problems

Its down to earth idealism was voiced best by Pres. Philip Murray in his opening address, and restated in other words in the speech of thanks he gave after the enthusiastic delegates unanimously re-elected him to his 11th term.

"This great organization of ours," he said at the outset of the convention, "always has an alternative, an affirmative suggestion and affirmative solution for any of the troubles that may afflict our country.

"We, therefore, in the course of this convention, will offer a substantial number of constructive resolutions designed to promote the well-being of not the CIO alone, but America, because America is great and because our country must forever come before our personal, selfish interests.

"In the estimation of the CIO it is God, it is country, it is our families and our trade union movement in the order in which I have given them. The interest of our country must never be forgotten."

And near the close of the convention, when he had just been given a tremendous demonstration of affection and respect by delegates and guests alike, he said:

"The duties and functions of the CIO do not rest in the office of the president . . . or in the president himself, who is the most limp, weak individual in the United States of America.

People Give Strength

"Whatever strength he possesses comes from you. If his picture appears in the paper, if there is a parade on the platform, if there is a hullaballo on the floor when he is nominated, it is not he. It is an evidence of the spirit of the people.

"And it is indicative of the true spirit of this great organization that no officer, I don't care who he may be, in a national union or in the CIO, can portray himself as an important man. He is not. The thing that is important is the people, the people in the mills and mines and factories and offices. They are important.

"That is the kind of an organization this must be. It must be a workers' organization, not a club for old or fat or bald-headed or gray-headed men like me . . .

"It must be a crusading organization that has dedicated its life, its soul, its spirit, its mind and its heart to serving human beings.

"And, you know, that is why you are strong. That is why you are going to grow stronger. Because the millions of people back home you are privileged to represent are your life's blood, they are your sinew, they are your muscle, they are your counsellors, they are your advisors.

"And you, my friends, just happen to be their servants.

"If we keep those things in mind, as I am quite sure we will—we always have—we will get along, this organization will survive. I know of no power on earth that can either divide or conquer the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

Murray in his opening talk touched on many phases of the life of the CIO in the last year. He discussed in some detail the withdrawal of the AFL from the United Labor Policy Committee. He made no attempt to explain it, describing it as "due to a set of circumstances about which I have no knowledge, nor do my colleagues have any knowledge." There was no consultation and no discussion with the CIO, he said, "merely a formal announcement to the nation."

"Unfortunately, the representatives of the AFL, by taking precipitate action, destroyed the ULPC." he said.

Won't Be Swallowed

"And when it succeeded in securing its ultimate destruction, then the AFL, through a convention resolution adopted just a month ago in the City of San Francisco, said. 'When we meet you again, we will meet you for the purpose of bringing you into the AFL,' or words to that effect.

"Well, the CIO is a pretty big organization, very big. It cannot and must not and will not yield in the field of organic unity discussions to any process of coercion or intimidation.

"When the AFL took upon itself the right to destroy the ULPC, it later addressed a communication to the CIO saying now that we have wiped out the only machinery that has ever been created, since the original split took place, to further the interests of labor in the United States, now that we have destroyed that, we will meet you for one purpose, and one purpose only, and that purpose is to absorb you—that purpose is to swallow you.

"Well, let me say that Mr. (William) Green (AFL president) has got to have an awful big bite to swallow the CIO.

"We do not intend in any discussions that may be had with AFL or with any other group to forfeit the rights and the privileges of any organization affiliated

1952 CIO Convention Set For Los Angeles

The 1952 National CIO Convention will be held Nov. 17-21 in Los Angeles, Cal.

Convention headquarters probably will be in the new Statler Hotel, in downtown Los Angeles, which is still under construction but is expected to be completed in time for the meeting. The sessions will be held in the Shrine Auditorium.

Pres. Murray Speaks

ETHICS: "We want the position of the Congress of Industrial Organizations to be understood. This resolution becomes a standard policy of the CIO after its passage . . .

". . . As a labor movement separate and apart from the political organizations and the business organizations, we believe that we can . . . establish a precedent in the sense that we warn our officials, that we warn our members, that wherever they engage themselves in so-called unethical practices it should be a high resolve of the international unions affiliated with the parent body to use the provisions of their separate constitutions to prosecute and punish the guilty unions . . .

"And it will be the high resolve of the CIO, particularly the international unions affiliated with the CIO, that wherever we find practices of this description going on, to . . . have these types of individuals not only barred from membership but really sentenced to jail, if need be, for engaging themselves in these illegitimate practices."

CIVIL RIGHTS: "I know of no situation in the U. S. that has thrust our country into more really embarrassing situations in our nation's relationships with other countries . . . than has this question of civil rights at home . . .

"We have got to practice what we preach. We have to respect the people of the colored race as God's creatures. If there is a Heaven above, and I am charged with the obligation of believing that there is one, and I do believe there is one—and there is a God, I believe—and I believe that He created all people to be equal in the eyes of each other and certainly in His eyes . . .

"We had our riots in Cicero. We had a poor colored fellow shot in the back on his way to jail the other day . . . by a sheriff down in Florida. We read in the newspapers of many things that transpire in this great big field of civil rights.

"We understand that it is an educational job and we understand also that it is a trade union responsibility to impart knowledge, to provide education, to teach people that they should not be biased, that they should not hate their neighbors—for any reason, they should not be possessed of hatred . . ."

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY: "I do not believe the development of the St. Lawrence Seaway will throw any considerable number of people out of work. If it does, it will necessarily be temporary dislocation. But for every individual that may be cast out of employment, it is reasonable to believe five or six more people will be given employment . . .

"I do not know of a single, solitary instance where a great technological change has taken place in the United States of America that it has actually thrown people out of work."

Legislative Program For American People

A detailed legislative program, based on the aspirations of the American people for a better life and designed to strengthen the nation, was adopted by the convention. A partial text of the program follows:

1. Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and enactment of an equitable labor relations law based on the principles of the Wagner Act.

2. Improvement of the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide a minimum wage of at least $1.25 an hour to cover all workers in commerce or in industries affecting commerce; strengthen the overtime provisions; remove discriminatory exemptions, and restore to the Secretary of Labor power to sue on behalf of workers for unpaid wages due under the Act.

3. Amendment of the Defense Production Act as follows:

a. Repeal of the Capehart, Herlong, and Butler-Hope amendments;

b. Provide authority to the government to use, when necessary, subsidies to control retail food prices;

c. Require that OPA use uniform dollars-and-cents ceiling prices;

d. Provide authority to use grade labeling and quality control of price-controlled goods and authority to protect the continued production and sale of low-priced products;

e. Authorize government regulation of margins on the commodity exchanges.

4. Enactment of civil rights legislation recommended by the President's Committee on Civil Rights. Specifically, we call for:

a. Passage of an FEPC bill;

b. Passage of legislation outlawing poll taxes and other undemocratic restrictions on the right to vote;

c. Enactment of a federal anti-lynching bill;

d. Passage of measures to bar segregation in interstate travel;

e. Enactment of safeguards against segregation in federal appropriations for state aid;

f. Reform of the procedure of congressional committees to insure fair treatment of witnesses and of persons and organizations who are made the subjects of testimony before such committees.

5. Adoption of a progressive tax program that equitably levies the burden of taxes on the basis of ability to pay, closes tax loopholes, and includes an effective excess profits tax. We vigorously oppose any type of sales tax.

6. Revision of the Rent Control Act to provide for stabilization of rents throughout the United States as long as the defense mobilization program continues and the housing shortage prevents normal bargaining between landlord and tenant; and to provide that decontrol be permitted in a local community only when the vacancy ratio equals 10% of the housing supply.

7. Enactment of an adequate Defense Housing Law to supply necesary housing for families at military installations and defense production centers.

8. Improvement of the social security laws to establish a well-rounded adequate national system of social insurance for all Americans covering the hazards of old age, survivorship, permanent and total disability, temporary disability, unemployment, and the costs of medical care.

9. Enactment of the National Health Program, including national health insurance, expanded federal aid to medical research and to state and local public health units, federal aid to medical and nursing education and to medical cooperatives and more generous federal grants for hospital construction. We reaffirm our support for other related measures.

10. Establishment of uniform federal standards and codes for industrial health and safety and for workmen's compensation.

11. Adequate appropriations for enforcement of the Public Contracts (Walsh-Healey) Act, the Wage-Hour and Bacon-Davis Acts, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Women's Bureau, the Bureau of Labor Standards in the Dept. of Labor and the aid and administrative funds of agencies of the Federal Security Agency.

12. Enactment of the major recommendations of the President's Commission on Migratory Labor, including a minimum wage for agricultural workers and a constructive program for recruiting domestic workers, including Puerto Ricans, under decent conditions of employment and living.

13. Repeal or drastic amendment of the Subversive Activities Control Act to do away with unworkable "registration," dangerous listing of defense facilities, discrimination against aliens which daily makes our international position ridiculous, and elimination of other evils.

14. Granting of statehood to Alaska and Hawaii, and of home rule for the District of Columbia.

15. Adjustment of veterans' benefits to meet rising costs and enactment of an adequate veterans' readjustment allowances program.

16. Federal aid to education and an effective Labor Extension Service in the Dept. of Labor.

17. Provide for the integrated regional development of rivers and natural resources, utilizing the experience gained in TVA.

18. A comprehensive forestry program, including direct federal regulation of timber cutting on all timber lands.

19. A farm program geared to a full economy, including reasonable price and income support, farm credits, soil conservation, improvement of rural living standards, and protection of consumers.

20. Speedy construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project.

21. Defeat of proposals to remove submerged oil resources from federal control or to protect monopolistic basing-point practices.

Adequate appropriations to:

a. Increase our own military strength and that of our allies in the United Nations;

b. Effectively carry out the purposes of the Mutual Security Agency, which includes the former functions of ECA and the providing of aid to people in underdeveloped areas of the world to help themselves.

23. Enactment of legislation to develop and maintain a U. S. merchant marine of size and status commensurate with this country's role of leadership in world affairs.

24. Assure majority control in Congress, greater efficiency, and more responsiveness to the will of the people

25. Abolish the outmoded electoral college and provide for direct election of President and Vice President.

Europe's Will To Resist Red Aggression Gains

THE WILL of western European nations to resist Communist aggression has increased in almost direct proportion to their ability to resist it, Mrs. Eugenie Anderson, U. S. Ambassador to Denmark, told the convention.

"People cannot be expected to fight if they have nothing to fight with," she maintained.

"People can hardly be expected to want to resist if they haven't some possibility for successful resistance; and as our economic and military aid have given the free peoples something to resist with and some possibility for successful resistance, there has been a great increase in the morale and spirit of self-defense."

The U.S. effort to get free Europe back on its feet has accomplished much, Mrs. Anderson said, although much remains still to be done.

"We want to remember that the situation is not static," she cautioned. "We are still working out these problems. We are not imposing our way on them, the way the Soviet Union imposes its will on its satellites. We want to work with our friends and work out our problems together."

She described the situation in France and Italy as "still critical" because Marshall Plan aid "has not reached throughout society in the degree to which it is intended."

Mrs. Anderson was a housewife in Red Wing, Minn., when she was named ambassador, the first woman ever to hold such a post. Before her appointment, in October 1949, she had worked closely with CIO leaders in Minnesota in the State's Democratic-Farmer Labor Party.

A free trade union movement is as important to every free western European country as it is in the United States, she said.

"I know," she continued, "we Americans feel a deep sense of responsibility for these common values we are pledged to protect.

"I HOPE WE also feel as well a sense of pride and a sense of accomplishment in the things we have already achieved.

"We have come a long way in the last six years. Only six years has the U.S. been aware of the fact that today it is in a position of world leadership. What have we done during those six years?

"We have given the world a great deal of post-war aid, from the United Nations Rehabilitation & Relief Administration, largely financed by American aid.

"We have given the world the Truman Doctrine, the first time the U.S. declared aggression would not be tolerated.

"We have given a significant amount of aid to Greece and Turkey, and today the Communists could not take over those areas.

"We have given the world the Marshall Plan, the first time a nation in a position of power has recognized that economic help to its friends is of such importance.

"We have given the world the North Atlantic Treaty and leadership in the United Nations, the Japanese Treaty, the Far East Treaty. In Korea for the first time the principle of collective action has been upheld.

"No nation in a position of world leadership has ever before acted with such a deep sense of responsibility, with such a deep sense of humanitarianism and with such a deep support of the American people, such a broad, democratic understanding of our foreign policy."

THE CONVENTION DELEGATES were "captured" by Mrs. Eugenie Anderson, U. S. Ambassador to Denmark, who said that a free trade union movement is as important in western Europe as it is in the United States.

WSB To Keep Hands Off Steel Talks

A PLEDGE that CIO Steelworkers and big steel companies can open negotiations shortly without preliminary judgment or interference by the Wage Stabilization Board was made by Nathan P. Feinsinger, WSB chairman, to the convention.

Noting that "some of the experts from Washington have been here . . . arguing in behalf of wage stabilization," Feinsinger told CIO and Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray and the delegates:

"Speaking of collective bargaining, Phil, I understand from the newspapers that a lot of people have undertaken to do the bargaining for yourself and for the steel companies even in advance of the opening of your negotiations.

"As far as the WSB is concerned, we are determined to stay out of your collective bargaining room and to refrain from giving you gratuitous advice. You can be sure of one thing, and that is, the board will not prejudice the steel case or any other case . . ."

FEINSINGER congratulated the convention on its wage stabilization resolution which denounced "discrimiatory wage freezes." He said:

"In our great democracy, the representatives of a free labor movement should always be expected, whether the nation is at peace or war, to tell the government what the workers are thinking."

Feinsinger had this to say regarding wage increases in line with cost-of-living gains—which had been approved by the WSB—and in line with productivity increases—on which the board still has to act:

"There is a good deal of loose thinking, just as there was in World War II, that any wage increase is inflationary, and that the number of applications denied by the board is the only true measure of stabilization. This is at best an over-simplification.

"It has been our traditional boast that the American worker receives the highest wages in the world because he is the most productive.

"If it can be shown that he has contributed to more or better production, then simple equity requires that the board not arbitrarily rule out an attempt by the employer to share with the worker the savings which result."

THE WSB chairman also suggested that "the possibilities in the use of collective bargaining to increase production or to improve quality with a net gain to the employer, to the worker, and to the general public have scarcely been tapped."

"The question," Feinsinger said, "is not whether we can afford this kind of collective bargaining in a defense economy, but whether we can afford not to have it."

"Some latitude even under wage stabilization" was suggested as necessary, both in direct bargaining and in WSB actions.

Feinsinger praised the "important contributions" of the CIO members on the WSB—Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Vice Pres. Jack Livingston of the Auto Workers, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, and John Brophy, recently named alternate.

Delegates Hit 'Injustice And Inequity' In U. S. Mobilization Program

THE "INEQUITY and injustice" of the mobilization program were sharply attacked in three resolutions adopted by the CIO convention.

A resolution on wage stabilization and equality of sacrifice pointed out:

"Prices have jumped to new peak levels. Price controls, weak from the start, were deliberately weakened further by the last Congress.

"Loopholes and exemptions free thousands of businesses from all control. Landlords not entirely exempt from control have been given the right to raise rents by 20%.

"Price rollbacks have been stopped. Retailers and wholesalers' margins have been guaranteed; and the manufacturers have been told they may pass cost increases on to the consumers.

Bows To Lobbies

"Even the recent increases in excise taxes on various commodities may be passed on to consumers in pyramid fashion. Congress had proven itself subservient to the meat, cotton, landlord and retail lobbies, and the NAM and the United States Chamber of Commerce. By arraying the propertied interests against the people's welfare, such a coalition endangers democracy itself . . .

"We reject any system of controls which places the burden of sacrifice solely upon the workers of this country. Instead of an effective and well-rounded program for stabilizing the national economy we have only wage stabilization. Collective bargaining agreements entered into by the parties are tampered with; benefits are nibbled away.

"The Wage Stabilization Board has announced several general wage policies to approve some of the gains already secured by the workers in 1950. But it has been delinquent in developing policies on numerous other benefits commonly adopted in 1950, with the result that thousands of petitions for the approval of collective bargaining agreements have been pending for months without action.

Lose On Benefits

"While the board tarries in its deliberations, workers throughout the country are being deprived of the benefits of health and hospitalization insurance and retirement plans provided for in collective bargaining contracts.

(In Washington, the WSB announced an interim policy to permit approval of some changes in existing health and welfare plans. This action was prompted by the fact that the board is considering a majority report, which would virtually eliminate government controls of the plans, and a minority report, which favored continued controls.

(The majority report was submitted by the labor and public members, while the minority report was that of the industry members.

(The interim policy allows a subcommittee to approve by unanimous action extension of a health and welfare plan to other geographical units of the firm not covered by the plan, and to smaller groups of employes in the same plant, and relative small changes in the benefit levels.)

The delegates, by approving the resolution took a stand similar to that of the WSB majority report.

"Pensions and health-welfare plans, since they are non-inflationary, should not be subject to stabilization controls. Wage stabilization policy should be flexible as regards other fringe issues—such as paid holidays, shift differentials, call-in and reporting times, etc.

"The policy should be flexible enough to permit the elimination through collective bargaining of substandard wages, discriminatory wage practices against women, Negroes and other minority groups, and inequities in wages and fringes."

"Substandard wages are being hardened by the failure of to announce a policy," the resolution said. "Discrimination against women is being perpetuated as board policies remain unformulated.

"Permission for workers to share in the benefits of increased productivity is being withheld while employers arrogate all of these benefits to themselves. Workers in industries exempt from price control continue under wage controls, while their employers indulge in an endless stream of price increases . . .

"Wage stabilization does not mean wage freezing. The American standard of living must be safeguarded and its continued improvement protected. That has been the strength of America.

"Wages and salaries must be permitted to keep pace with the rises in the cost of living. Cost of living-adjustments are essential if wage and salary earners are to maintain their standards of living . . .

"To deny wage adjustments based upon industrial progress—would represent intervention in the distribution of the shares of national income, to the detriment of the workers' share and for the benefit of business and management income . . ."

A resolution on mobilization also was critical of the government's defense production efforts.

"Procurement policies for the effective execution of the mobilization effort should flow from planned defense production programs," the resolution said.

"They should be based on the placement of defense contracts in the areas of existing plants and manpower, with special attention given to the prevailing labor standards.

"Areas of substantial unemployment at present must be given priority by procurement authorities for the placement of government contracts. Procurement policies must be adequately implemented by the effective rules and regulations at all levels of the mobilization set-up.

"The morale of American workers, subject to sacrifice, must be sustained by the adoption and implementation of proper procurement policies . . .

"The CIO recognizes that it is impossible to achieve perfect production balance during this military build-up. But the defense production effort has not matched our ability nor has it squarely faced the emergency posed by the Communist imperialism.

"A sense of urgency is lacking. There has been a continual lag in the program. Precautionary measures, planned in advance, rather than the attempt to put out fires after they have begun, are essential to minimize economic strains and dislocations . . .

"We should not be complacent about achieving limited expansion of American industry. Much of the expansion has been of our steel and aluminum capacity in the build-up period, but rather should we plan now for a continuing expansion of our productive capacity to meet the demands of the years ahead.

"We have been witnessing an expansion of American industry. Much of that expansion has been underwritten by a subsidy to industry—a tax measure that permits writing off the cost of the authorized expansion in five years, instead of the normal 20 years . . .

Monopoly Gains

"The bulk of the sum authorized for rapid write-off has been granted to big business and authorizations have been approved for the construction of non-essential facilities and for plants with long-range post-defense use.

"The government agencies should not grant rapid write-off authorization for the construction of non-essential facilities or for plants with post-defense use . . .

"The mobilization effort should be alert to the danger of monopoly. Two-thirds of the dollar volume of prime defense contracts, according to the Senate Small Business Committee, has been placed with 50 companies. This trend, if unchecked, will result in the monopolization of large areas of our economy, thereby undermining the very principles of democracy that we are mobilizing to defend."

The resolution concluded:

"The CIO welcomes the opportunity to participate in the mobilization agencies and we urge mobilization officials to utilize fully the experience and the knowledge of workers and their unions in preparing and administering the mobilization policies."

Changes Needed To Improve Defense Production Act

1. The Defense Production Act must be strengthened. The Act should be amended to repeal the following provisions:

A. The Capehart amendment which permits manufacturers and processors to pass on to consumers all increases in costs that occurred before July 26, 1951 and establishes a sky-high floor for future ceiling prices on manufactured goods.

B. The Herlong amendment which declares that future OPS ceiling prices for wholesalers and retailers must be based on customary percentage mark-ups for the May 24-June 24, 1950 period.

C. The Butler-Hope amendment which prohibits the use of quotas on the number of livestock to be slaughtered by any meat processor, thereby undermining the entire beef price control program.

2. The Act should be amended further to provide:

A. A grant of authority to the government to use, when necessary, subsidies to control retail food prices as the only effective, practical means of controlling the prices of this major item in the consumer's budget.

B. A requirement that OPS use uniform dollar-and-cent ceiling prices wherever possible.

C. The authority to use grade labeling and quality control of price-controlled goods and the authority to protect the continued production and sale of low-price products.

D. The authority for government regulation of margins on the commodity exchanges.

3. The Office of Price Stabilization should use its statutory authority with vigor and courage to curb further price rises and to protect consumers' interests.

4. Federal rent control should be established throughout the country.

5. The present voluntary restraint program to curb bank credit extension, which is supervised by the financial community itself, should be replaced with firm controls over bank credit.

6. A fair and equitable tax policy should be adopted to raise sufficient revenue so that the government under present conditions can operate on a "pay-as-we-go" basis.

7. A voluntary savings campaign program should be adopted.

'Family Plan' On Jurisdiction Gets Convention Okeh

Fully endorsed by the convention was CIO's "family plan" for prevention, arbitration and settlement of jurisdictional disputes among affiliated unions.

The plan, adopted by CIO Executive Board members in a pre-convention session, establishes a program for settlement of such disputes within CIO. It also sets up a CIO Organizational Disputes Arbitrator with final settlement powers.

The convention hailed the program as a "constructive step which will lead our unions to more effective representation of the workers in American industry."

Halt Retreat On Civil Rights, CIO Demands

"THE ROLL CALL of the retreats from civil liberties" was sounded by the CIO convention in a strongly-worded resolution denouncing reactionaries who seek "to discredit all progressive ideas and defeat all progressive measures, using anti-Communist hysteria to cloak and justify their drive for power."

The "twin brothers of 'fear' and 'smear' run rampant in the land," the convention said. It blamed "reactionaries in both parties" for the accelerated retreat in civil liberties.

With a slashing attack on the McCarthys and the McCarrans, CIO warned:

"No more serious problem faces the American people today than how to combat communism at home and abroad without endangering the basic freedoms upon which our great democratic nation was founded."

In exploring the growing threat to civil liberties, the convention resolution pointed out: "We in the CIO have won the right to speak out for freedom. We have demonstrated our anti-communism in deeds."

Referring again to "the McCarthys and the McCarrans," the convention added:

"We shall not be moved by these attempts to smear and destroy all that is liberal and progressive. Our program is sound. It cannot and it will not be defeated by the false outcries of men who have no real faith in our democratic way of life."

Condemned by the convention in "calling the roll" on the retreat from civil liberties were:

1. The Supreme Court decision upholding the convention of Communist leaders as "a grave blow to America's precious heritage of freedom of speech."

2. The "reckless charges" of the House Un-American Activities Committee and the Senate (McCarran) Internal Security Subcommittee as "in the tradition of foreign dictators."

3. The "pernicious activities of Senator McCarthy."

4. The "unfair" federal employe loyalty program which has been made even more arbitrary."

5. Spread of so-called security measures to private industry; "We must be eternally vigilant to prevent the use of loyalty and security provisions as a vehicle of anti-unionism."

6. Enforcement of the McCarran Act, which "has made the U. S. ludicrous in the eyes of the world."

Following is the text in large part of the civil liberties resolution:

Freedom of speech is our most cherished heritage; its exercise down through the years has brought progress and happiness to our nation. Yet year after year we have seen a retreat on the civil liberties front.

Reactionaries in both political parties must share the blame for this retreat. During the past year the trend has been accelerated. Today the twin brothers of "fear" and "smear" run rampant in the land. We deem it useful to call the roll of these retreats since our last Convention:

1. The Supreme Court's decision upholding the conviction of the Communist leaders was a grave blow to America's precious heritage of freedom of speech.

We detest the men who were convicted under the Smith Act and we despise the ideas they spew forth, but their conviction and imprisonment, not for conspiring or attempting to overthrow the government by violence, but solely for conspiring to "teach and advocate" the "propriety" of such overthrow, is a threat to the free speech of all men.

2. The reckless charges made by the House Un-American Activities Committee over the past decade have been rivaled, if not exceeded, by the actions this year of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

The efforts of this Subcommittee to rewrite the history of our foreign policy through the testimony of discredited ex-Communists are in the tradition of foreign dictators, not of the great American democrats who founded our nation.

3. The pernicious activities of Senator McCarthy have continued unabated during the past year. He has sought to avoid the examination of his unfounded charges against the State Department by slippery evasion and brutal intimidation .

4. A most regrettable result of the hysteria during the past year has been that those unjustly accused of pro-Communist leanings become overwhelmed by repeated attacks and fail to make forthright defense of their actions for fear of bringing further wrath down upon their heads . . .

5. The federal loyalty program, unfair as it was to government employees in previous years, has been made even more arbitrary by an order issued earlier this year requiring the discharge of any employee as to whom there is any "reasonable doubt" concerning his loyalty.

This change in standards is resulting in the reopening of many hundreds of cases of loyal employees already once cleared after months of worry, effort and expense . . .

6. The continually overhanging threat of dismissal as a "security" risk, in many agencies without any procedural protection whatever, compounds this deprivation of civil liberties of government employees. Once cleared under the loyalty program, federal employees in many agencies are confronted with even greater perils in the name of "security." . . . The so-called program for security has become a pretext for getting rid of persons who have been or might be criticized by some member of Congress or some irresponsible individual or organization.

7. The federal employees loyalty program and security measures have spread to private employment in the defense plants of the nation. Earlier this year, the Industrial Employment Review Board of the Department of Defense arrogated to itself the right to determine that an employee's activities in collective bargaining and on the picket line made him a risk to our national security.

Vigilant action by our organization obtained a prompt reversal of this action. But the lesson for organized labor is clear; we must be eternally vigilant to prevent the use of loyalty and security procedures as a vehicle of anti-unionism.

8. During the past year the McCarran Act, the so-called Subversive Activities Control Act, has accomplished one thing and one thing only. It has made the United States ludicrous in the eyes of the world by barring from this country decent citizens of the world whose youthful indiscretions or involuntary acts had resulted in their being considered members of totalitarian organizations.

Senator McCarran himself was forced by public opinion to push through Congress an amendment to his own law seeking to cure this tragic situation . . .

This roll call of the retreat from civil liberties during the past year is not a happy one. Yet, though battles have been lost, the basic struggle for freedom and decency can still be won by the united efforts of all persons of good will.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

This Convention of the CIO commends President Truman for his statesmanlike action in creating the Nimitz Commission, as proposed by our Convention last year, to report and recommend measures fully to protect the democratic rights of every individual while guaranteeing the necessary measures of national security. We call upon the President to reconstitute this Commission, and we condemn the action of Congress in seeking to scuttle it.

We urge the Congress to review and revise existing security legislation, and especially the Smith Act and the Subversive Activities Control Act, with the following objectives:

(1.) To give full protection to the civil rights of all persons, recognizing that freedom of speech is the foundation stone of democracy. Provisions of existing law which permit prosecution on the basis of speech or advocacy alone should be stricken out.

(2.) At the same time to guarantee the internal security of the nation and to safeguard our country fully against sabotage and espionage.

We urge the Senate to reconstitute its Internal Security Subcommittee so as to include among its members Senators who believe in the dignity of the individual and the right of all men to a fair hearing.

We call upon Congress to adopt a Code of Fair Procedure so that every man accused of wrongdoing can tell his side of the story to the public.

We support the Benton Resolution for the expulsion of Senator McCarthy whose pretended crusade against subversive activities has in fact been an effort to subvert our great democratic principles and we commend the decision of the Subcommittee of the Senate Rules Committee to proceed with a thorough investigation of the charges against Senator McCarthy.

Convention Urges Unions To Seek Fair Practices Clauses In Contracts

Increased efforts by all CIO union members in the economic, political and legislative fields "to develop and extend real democracy" were suggested by a comprehensive convention resolution on fair practices and civil rights.

In the collective bargaining field, the convention urged each CIO affiliate to form human rights committees and that each union "seek to have incorporated in its collective bargaining agreement clauses that will insure non-discrimination in hiring, in the payment of equal wages, in job tenure, and in promotion based on skill, merit, and ability."

The CIO called upon the President by executive order to establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission with enforcement powers, to insure full utilization in the present national defense emergency of the nation's manpower at its highest skills."

Renewed efforts to win enactment of fair practices legislation at federal, state and local levels also was supported.

The convention-approved civil rights legislative program also called for:

- Repeal of Senate Rule 22, the Wherry filibuster measure.
- Adoption of a Federal anti-lynching bill.
- Anti-segregation safeguards in all Federal appropriations to the states.
- Modernized and strengthened civil rights laws.

"We of the CIO," the convention resolution said, "are determined to carry out our commitments to strive for economic equality, political equality, and an equal share in the facilities afforded by the community, for all persons, regardless of race, religion, color or national origin."

'Militant Crusade' For Civil Rights Asked

CIO PRES. Philip Murray called on CIO's five-and-a-half million members "to continue militantly crusading" for fair, equal treatment for all Americans.

Speaking in support of a comprehensive resolution on civil rights, Murray demanded eradication of "this filthy evil that exists in our midst, bias and discrimination." The resolution was approved by standing, unanimous vote of delegates.

"I appeal to the Negro workers of the United States here this very minute," Murray said, "if they want to help themselves, then help us, join our unions with us towards the attainment of these goals towards which we all aspire.

"I know of no situation in the United States that has thrust our country into more real embarrassing positions in our nation's relationship with other countries than this question of civil rights at home.

"Our CIO, founded upon the sound, fundamental doctrine of equality, has since its very inception invited the Negro workers of America to join our unions and . . . this mighty institution of ours is forever at the forefront in the fight for real, true economic and political emancipation. No union anywhere in the world has gone to greater extremes in an effort to protect the rights of all the people, including Negroes, than has the CIO. That seems to me to be a part of our mission in life."

Murray said "the Negro problem in the United States is a human problem." Striking at prejudice in all forms, he said:

"We have got to be bold and we have got to be courageous about those things. We have got to be forthright about it. We have got to practice what we preach."

TWO PULLMAN LAUNDRY WORKERS from Long Island City, N. Y., were among the delegates to the convention from the United Transport Service Employees. Christabel Nixon, left, has worked for the Pullman linen servicing dept. for 10 years, Mrs. Ora Allen for 8½ years.

Murray Praised For 'Wise Leadership'

Pres. Philip Murray's eleven years of leadership of CIO "on the road to industrial democracy" were hailed by the convention in this resolution:

Philip Murray has completed another year of outstanding service to labor, America and the forces of free world democracy.

For the eleventh year, he has given the CIO the benefit of his wise leadership, his broad outlook and his humanitarian guidance.

Under the leadership of Philip Murray, our CIO has continued its splendid tradition of service. Our unions have grown; they have developed new strength; they have pioneered new social and economic developments on the road to industrial democracy.

Philip Murray was first elected President of the CIO in 1940, a year of world crisis. Through the intervening eleven years of crisis, war, postwar adjustment and new crisis, Philip Murray, as president of the CIO, has shouldered tremendous burdens.

His leadership has constantly been forward-looking and progressive. He has never permitted our organization to rest on past victories. Philip Murray knows that a great militant, democratic organization such as ours must constantly move forward in concert with the times.

During the past year, the world crisis engendered by Soviet-inspired threats to world peace and world stability has placed new burdens and new responsibilities on labor in America.

To these new challenges our President, Philip Murray, has responded with a deep sense of patriotism, a great concern for the welfare of workers in America, and with the courage inspired by faith in the eventual victory of democracy over every form of totalitarian threat.

In the year since our last Convention, Philip Murray has served our people well. To our unions, faced with great and complex economic problems, his guidance and advice have been throughtful and inspiring. In promoting the cause of united labor action, Philip Murray played a peerless role.

As a member of the President's National Advisory Board of Mobilization Policy, Philip Murray has helped to guide our nation through the difficult channels of defense mobilization and industrial conversion so that our United States may quickly emerge once again as the arsenal of democracy on a level never paralleled in history.

We are conscious of the great burdens and the great responsibilities placed on our beloved President Philip Murray during this time of international crisis.

We are proud of the leading part he plays in American national life as a representative of our great organization of democratic industrial unions.

We believe that Philip Murray should and will continue to serve the people of the democratic world for many years to come as head of this organization devoted to democratic institutions, economic advance and social betterment.

We congratulate him for the magnificent part he has played. We look forward to the continued leadership of Philip Murray, one of America's truly great citizens.

Statement On Ethics Backed By Murray

A STRONG plea on behalf of the adoption of the statement on ethical practices was made to the convention by CIO Pres. Philip Murray. The proposal, the first of its kind ever submitted to a CIO convention, was adopted shortly afterwards.

Pointing out that the ethical practices of politicians, business men and labor have recently been investigated by Congressional committees, Murray said that the present resolution had been proposed because:

"We want the position of the Congress of Industrial Organizations to be understood."

Murray said that it was fortunate that the CIO has not been troubled with "the same type of unethical situations ascribed to other segments of our national population."

"We have tried to keep our house clean," he added, "and we have constantly advised our affiliated unions to practice honesty in the administration of their affairs."

Murray referred to reports that responsible labor officials not affiliated with the CIO have engaged in illegal practices.

"We regret that conditions of that description should prevail in any labor organization, and we have noted with alarm in some instances the resort to unethical practices by businessmen, who have used Federal funds through the RFC and other governmental agencies to the detriment of sound business institutions here in the United States.

'Clean, Decent, Honest'—

CIO Condemns All Graft, Corruption

"CORRUPTION whether it be in government, in industry or in the labor movement itself" was strongly condemned by CIO's national convention.

"We in the CIO," a resolution on ethical practices said, "are determined that our organization will remain clean, decent and honest.

"We call upon other elements in our American society to move with equal vigor against the racketeering or dishonest elements in American life, who seek to corrupt our population and to weaken our established position throughout the free world."

The resolution said, in part:

Our democratic institutions were established on the principle of honesty. Americans have looked upon high ethical standards as essential to our way of life, to the improvement of our society, and to the well being of our people.

At various times in our country's history, the high ethical standards to which all Americans subscribe have been flouted by individuals or groups of individuals. As a nation, we have always deplored these departures from the standards of honesty which we consider essential . . .

WE ARE NOW unfortunately witnessing all too frequently departures from the high moral standards by which every American should live.

This flouting of high ethical conduct is not limited to any one political party nor to any one section of the population. Some newspapers, some politicians with special axes to grind, some corporations, have sought to convince the public that evil is the exclusive property of its opponents or its enemies.

We in the CIO, representing a cross-section of American workers, recognize that honesty is both a personal and public matter. No organizations, no statute can keep any single individual from an act of dishonesty; the decision must be the individual's own.

We recognize, however, that for every bribe-taker, there is a bribe-giver; for every tax-fixer, there is a tax-evader; for every "five percenter" in the nation's capital, there is a special interest seeking special favors; for every racketeer and gangster, there is an individual or corporation willing to use his service for their own ignoble ends or to knuckle under without moral stamina to illicit propositions.

The CIO deplores corruption whether it be in government, in industry or in the labor movement itself.

Each dishonest or unethical act by any public servant—whether he be in the legislative, judicial or executive branch of government—deprives other Americans of fundamental rights, of property, of due process, and of confidence in his government.

WE IN THE CIO have constantly been vigilant to purge our ranks of subversives and corruption, wherever they appear. Our organization, in expelling eleven Communist-dominated unions with a membership of almost a million, demonstrated its devotion to decency and democracy.

We are ready to act with similar firmness against any evidence of corruption that may ever arise within our ranks. There is no place in the CIO for racketeers, for agents of racketeering interests, or for any criminal elements.

It is the policy of the CIO that every affiliate act with dispatch to stamp out any infiltration whatsoever that may develop from criminal or racketeering elements anxious to prey upon our members.

We likewise urge our affiliates to beware of racketeering operators, who, under the guise of providing legitimate advertising for the labor press or union publications, or of providing "easy money" through slot machines or other gambling devices, seek to use our unions for illegal purposes.

We in the CIO are determined that our organization will remain clean, decent and honest.

Tobin Hails Jurisdiction Plan, Urges New Organizing Drive

SECY. OF LABOR Maurice J. Tobin, termed the CIO's recently announced agreement on the handling of jurisdictional disputes "a landmark in the history of the American labor movement."

Marking his sixth appearance before a CIO convention, Tobin called Pres. Murray "one of the greatest living Americans of our time," and said his name has become a symbol of patriotic service "all over the land."

The agreement on jurisdictional disputes provides a "fair and effective way for dealing with internal problems," he said.

"Certainly labor has enough to do to fight its enemies. It cannot afford to waste its strength on internal quarrels. Your new agreement will lessen industrial strife and will strengthen the unity and cohesiveness of your great organization."

Declaring the American labor movement has its heart and soul in the struggle of the free world against communism, Tobin said:

"The toil and sacrifices will have to be shared by all of us," he said. "Labor has got to see some evidence at the meat counters and the grocery shelves that someone else is willing to make some sacrifices too."

Tobin said that while workers have won wage increases that "either equalled or exceeded" the rise in prices, nearly 45% of the wage earners in the country failed to keep pace with the cost of living from January, 1950, to June, 1951.

He said the 20 million workers who find themselves in this position "belong to that segment of the American labor force that has not been organized by trade unions."

MAURICE J. TOBIN
Secretary of Labor

"This fact should serve unions as an additional motive for rededicating themselves to the mission that is summed up in three words: Organize the unorganized."

Wages that adjust to economic change contribute to the economic wealth of the country, Tobin pointed out. He said the adjustment processes where unions are involved "is accomplished through the machinery of collective bargaining."

"It is because collective bargaining is so important that we ought to have a law that strengthens it instead of weakening it," he added.

"If we are to strengthen collective bargaining and improve labor-management relations in the U.S., we must substitute a fair labor law for the oppressive Taft-Hartley law that is now on the books."

He called that statute, "a roadblock in the path of progress."

62-Million Vote Goal Set For '52 Election

THE importance of the 1952 elections was the theme of the PAC resolution adopted by the convention.

"Each election," the resolution declared, "constitutes a test of the desire of the people to maintain an open highway to progress, and a challenge to the value we place on political democracy.

"With these convictions foremost, we view the election of 1952 as a time of trial and testing."

Reasons for the importance of the 1952 elections were further spelled out in the resolution, which said:

"The reactionary forces of our nation have not lost their power, and the longer they are denied unbridled control of our government the more desperate they become. Their drive to economic royalism is unceasing and relentless."

The resolution reviewed the unceasing attack of reactionary forces on PAC, but the prediction was made that liberal forces will not be defeated by the conservatives' tactics.

Despite the tories' onslaughts, the resolution said, the delegates set for themselves as "a reasonable goal a vote of 65 million citizens in the forthcoming elections."

To accomplish the goal it was decided that full publicity should be given to the shortcomings of the 82nd Congress.

The resolution listed the Congress' failures. These included inadequate price control, unfair taxation, inactivity on the civil rights field, inadequate housing and rent control, lack of medical care for the people, insufficient educational facilities, and the failure to revoke the Taft-Hartley Act.

The convention authorized expansion of CIO political activities under the direction of PAC. PAC also was instructed to direct and coordinate the PAC work of city and state councils, and to aid similar activities of CIO international unions.

Panama Workers Present Gifts To Murray, Haywood

As expressions of the "high esteem" of Panama Canal Zone workers for CIO organizing assistance, gifts of Panama handicrafts were present during the convention to CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

The presentation was made by Ed Welsh, CIO representative in Panama, who described efforts to improve the low-wage levels of thousands of U. S. government employes in the Canal Zone.

Repeal Anti-Union State Laws, Demand

The convention pledged itself to fight to the repeal of state anti-labor legislation enacted following the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act by Congress in 1947 and to replace such legislation with laws protecting labor's basic rights.

CIO Is Dedicated To Organizing Task

CIO—in its 13th national convention — rededicated itself to "fulfillment of its pledge to organize the millions of unorganized workers still denied the benefits of union organization." A resolution cited:

1. The South, where "increased industrialization . . . renders unionization imperative if our unions are even to maintain their present position of strength relative to industry."

2. The white collar field, where millions of workers "must not be allowed, due to their unorganized status, to fall farther and farther behind in their living and working conditions."

Since World War II, the resolution pointed out, "reactionary employers launched a powerful anti-labor drive" with enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act and numerous state anti-union laws.

Nevertheless, the resolution said, this drive "has been largely checked and defeated . . . Under heavy employer attack, our unions have not yielded ground but have pushed ahead."

In the South, work of CIO's Southern Organizing Committee was praised but the task ahead is still immense. There "millions of unorganized workers are still living under wage and working conditions that are always substandard and often approach peonage."

"Violence and terrorism against union organizers and workers are regularly resorted to by employers," the resolution said. "These remnants of the feudal age must be defeated."

The campaign to bring back into CIO workers in those organizations expelled because of Communist domination, the convention declared, "must be carried through until the last vestige of Communist influence in the American labor movement is destroyed."

Commended by the organizing resolution were Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, and the Southern Organizing Committee and its director, John Riffe. Serveral unions and organizing committees, including the Electrical Workers, Government Workers, Insurance Workers and Department Store Workers were cited "for their successful campaigns to bring free democratic trade unionism to workers formerly dominated by Communist groups."

Politicos Must Listen To Labor, Says Kroll

PETTY politicians who think that they don't have to pay any attention to labor—that "labor has no other place to go"—were told by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll that "the shoe is on the other foot."

"The politicians," Kroll declared in his convention speech, "have no other place to go except to the great mass of American people."

Pointing out that it isn't money alone that wins elections, Kroll said that victories are due rather to "the devoted work of thousands of volunteers."

"It's people inspired with an ideal — people willing to go out and work for a cause they believe in," Kroll said. "That is the way we built the CIO—that is the way we'll keep on building the CIO."

Kroll indicated that the CIO would support candidates who are "on the side of the people," regardless of party.

"We do not believe that a man is evil because he is a Republican or that a man is good because he he is a Democrat," Kroll declared. "We believe that a man is good if he believes in the general welfare of all the people. That is our standard. That is our guiding principles."

Hitting out sharply at "the greedy special interests in this country who put the Taft-Hartley Act on the books," Kroll charged that they had spent more than $100 million to enact this legislation.

"If you will look at the record, you will see that in the State of Ohio last year these same special interests spent over $2 million to re-elect Mr. Reaction," he continued.

"HOW much more was spent—off the record — I don't know. There were 49 special committees. Each one of them was loaded with dough. How much they spent, I don't know.

The millions of dollars that were spent in Ohio in 1950 will be "chicken feed" compared to what will be spent in this country in 1952, Kroll continued. He said that the American people were about to witness "the most brazen attempt to buy public office that has ever been seen in this country."

"That's the kind of corrupting influence we will have to fight," he warned. "And we will fight it. The Presidency of the United States is not for sale."

'Too Many Farm Leaders Talk Like NAM,' Warning

CIO WILL continue to build up "the long and fruitful tradition of farmer-labor unity which has done so much to build a better America," the convention said in a resolution on farmer-labor unity.

Hundreds of thousands of CIO members, it was pointed out, "have come to the city from the farm," and that is just reason why labor will "continue to advance the cause and share the problems of all American farm families, whether they be land-owners, tenants or farm laborers."

The convention, however, was critical that many leaders of farm groups "increasingly echo NAM dogma, while sympathy and understanding of the needs and aspirations of all working people is hardly manifested at all."

Condemned were "those few among the farm leaders who would set worker against farmer and farmer against worker, thus giving aid and encouragement to the big-business and big-money interests which pass up no opportunity to farm the farmers and work over the workers . . ."

Auto Worker Killed

Cpl. William Stengel, 21, formerly a member of Toledo Local 12, CIO Auto Workers, was killed in Korea, 10 months to the day after he entered the Army. His father, Leroy (Casey) Stengel, is executive committeeman at the Willys-Overland plant.

Delegates Pledge Aid In Puerto Rico

"Vestiges of colonialism" in U. S. economic curbs on Puerto Rico should be removed, the convention said.

Protested was the 1948 Sugar Act, which "limits the production of raw sugar and the refining of pure sugar in Puerto Rico to an extent that it is both unfair and economically unsound for the economy of the island."

The CIO's present efforts to win revision of the Sugar Act will be continued by the Organization Dept.

In another action, the convention congratulated the Puerto Rico Constitutional Assembly for enacting its own constitution, and suggested that the Bill of Rights be strengthened by recognizing the rights of labor to organize, strike and picket.

10-Step Forest Plan Endorsed

A 10-step program to get the nation's forests into productive condition was adopted by the convention in a resolution on "Forest Management Policy." It warned that:

"The international situation underlines the imperative necessity of a better conservation policy for our forests."

The resolution called for legislation providing direct federal regulation of cutting operations on private timberlands, larger appropriations and public credit for forestry, and other methods to enlarge, protect and preserve the nation's timberlands.

It again commended the CIO Woodworkers for the "constructive leadership" it has provided within its industry and throughout America, and promised the CIO's continued support.

UAW Grants Strike Truce At Borg-Warner

AT THE REPEATED request of government officials, CIO Auto Workers have called a "recess" in their strike for a national contract at 10 plants of Borg-Warner Corp.

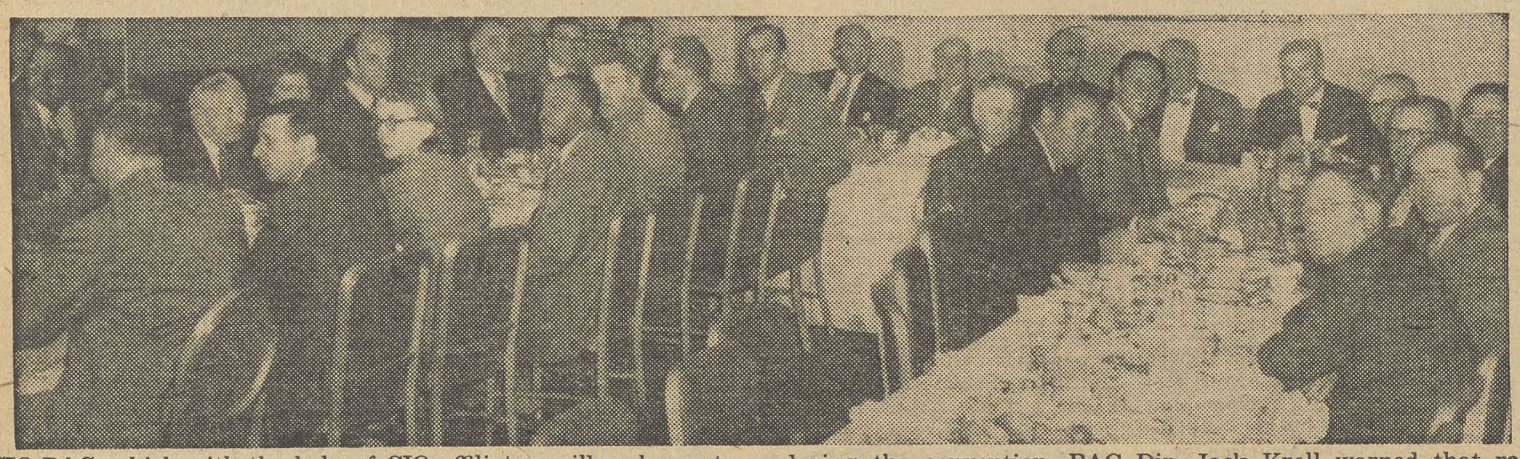
More than 8000 UAW-CIO members, who went on strike October 9, early last week were balloting on a recommendation of the international union for a "recess" in the strike.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther announced that the union "reluctantly" had agreed to call off the strike but again strongly condemned Borg-Warner's "unreasonable attitude" in refusing to agree to a single, company-wide contract in place of the separate agreements now in effect in the 10 plants.

The company-wide bargaining pattern is long established in GM, Ford and Chrysler and other parts of the auto industry.

Once the single contract issue is determined, according to daily press dispatches, the UAW expects to raise wage increase, pension and other contract proposals.

UAW's "recess" in the Borg-Warner strike came after several requests by President Truman and Nathan Feinsinger, head of the Wage Stabilization Board.



CIO-PAC, which with the help of CIO affiliates, will seek a vote of 62 million votes in the 1952 elections, holds luncheon meeting during the convention. PAC Dir. Jack Kroll warned that reactionaries will try to "buy" victory in 1952.

'No Compromise' Fight Vowed For T-H Repeal

"NO COMPROMISE" in labor's fight for repeal of the "unfair and unjust" Taft-Hartley Act and enactment of a new labor relations law on the pattern of the Wagner Act was vowed by CIO convention delegates.

Text of the resolution demanding T-H repeal follows:

The Taft-Hartley Act has now been in effect for more than four years. When this law was enacted over President Truman's veto by the Republican-dominated 80th Congress, the CIO declared that it would hinder free collective bargaining and thwart union organization.

The record of the last four years has unfortunately fully borne out the CIO's prediction.

The organization of the unorganized has been brought to a virtual standstill. Two-thirds of the American workers are unorganized and badly in need of unionism, yet, due to the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act and to the vicious anti-unionism it has engendered among employers, unions have not been able in the years since 1947 to make any substantial progress toward organizing this vast unorganized segment of the economy. Union membership today, in proportion to the total working force, stands just about where it stood in 1947. This blocking of the organization of the unorganized must be considered the most vicious single effect of Taft-Hartley.

The Taft-Hartley Act has also seriously hampered collective bargaining. Under the Wagner Act a union and an employer were free to enter into whatever sort of collective bargaining agreement they felt suited their situation. The government did not undertake to dictate the terms of the contract. The parties could decide what sort of union security there should be, what sort of welfare fund, what sort of checkoff arrangements, etc. But the Taft-Hartley Act, passed by self-styled foes of government regimentation, regulates in great detail the terms of collective bargaining agreements.

The Taft-Hartley Act places serious restrictions on labor's most basic right—the right to strike. Strikes for various proscribed purposes are prohibited entirely, and strikes otherwise permissible may be enjoined on the theory that they will create national emergencies.

Taft-Hartley brought back the use of injunctions in labor disputes, and in a form far more obnoxious than existed even before the Norris-LaGuardia Act. For the Taft-Hartley Act requires that in certain types of labor disputes an injunction against the union must automatically be sought, and not by the employer but by the government. Needless to say, the Act contains no comparable sanction against any employer abuse or unfair labor practice.

The CIO will support a legislative approach which will provide this country with a sound and fair national labor relations policy. Fundamental issues of principle cannot be compromised.

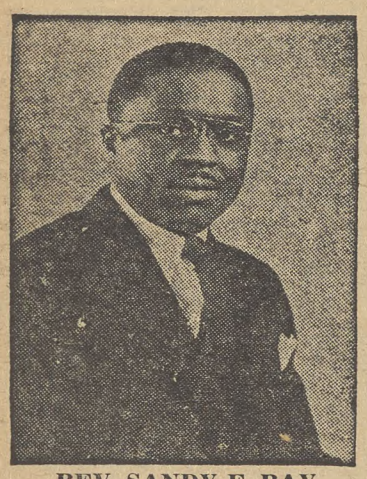
The fundamental policy which underlies Taft-Hartley is to weaken unions, to block union organization, and to hamstring collective bargaining. We cannot compromise our opposition to such a policy. Neither can we or will we compromise our opposition to provisions, such as those described above, which can have no place in any fair labor relations law.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

The CIO will continue to seek the repeal of the unfair and unjust Taft-Hartley Act.

The CIO will continue to seek the enactment of a labor relations act based on the policies of the Wagner Act which protects the right of workers to join unions, and accepts full collective bargaining as the national labor relations policy.

On these basic principles there can be no compromise.

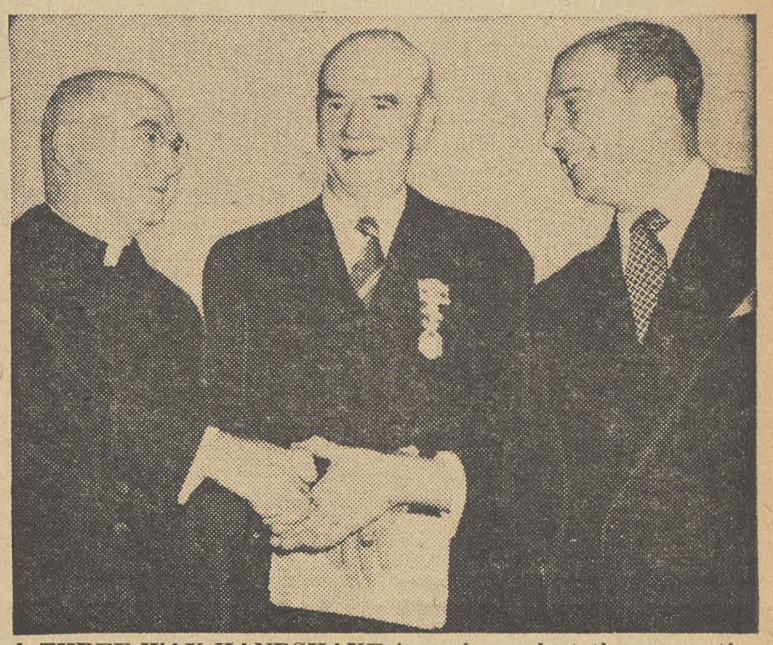


REV. SANDY F. RAY

CIO IS IN the vanguard in struggle for racial equality, said pastor of Cornerstone Baptist Church, Brooklyn,

RABBI ISRAEL GOLDSTEIN

BISHOP H. K. SHERRILL



A THREE-WAY HANDSHAKE is exchanged at the convention by Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York (left), CIO Pres. Philip Murray (center) and New York's Mayor Vincent Impellitteri.

Position Of Labor Held Index To Nation's Civilization

LABOR's position in the life of a nation "is an index of that nation's civilization."

Rabbi Israel Goldstein of Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, New York City, speaking to the convention on Nov. 6, declared that one of the foremost credentials of democracy anywhere is "the freedom, the dignity and the security of labor."

"We must not, however, be lulled into the illusion that labor's position in the U. S., fortunate as it is, is a dispensation which has come of itself and can be maintained of itself," he said.

"As you know, that comes and is maintained through vigilance like every gift in life that is worth having and keeping.

"It is the merit and the mandate of your organization that it has worked at and watched over the defense of labor's position in American democracy.

"Your leadership has been wise, courageous and vigilant. It has thereby made a contribution to the strengthening of the moral fibre of all native life and to the strengthening of the defenses of American democracy."

CIO Called One Of World's Most Important Movements

THE CIO was termed "one of the most important movements in our world today," by Dr. Sandy F. Ray, pastor of the Cornerstone Baptist Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Ray, representing more than 4 million Negro Baptists in the country, said the CIO has given "heart and hope to thousands of people who toil."

"Your organization has improved working and living conditions for millions, who in turn, make their contributions to the total social and cultural life of this nation and the world."

He declared the CIO has always been in the vanguard in the struggle for justice and equality for all people, regardless of race, creed or color.

"The pulpit and the shop are closely knit together," he said. "Our goal is one and the same. We are working for the salvation of the total man and are fellow laborers in the greatest of human enterprises, that of building and encouraging human dignity.

"Be assured that a large segment of Americans and people around the world are deeply appreciative of your yoeman service to the social and economic stability of our world community. May we all continue to work together for the construction of a free world for all freedom-loving people."

Life Of Spirit Held Message Of Our Times

THE RT. REV. Henry K. Sherrill, Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of New York, told the delegates that the "one supreme message for our times has not to do with military force or economic practice, but with the inner life of the spirit."

He declared he did not feel nearly so concerned as to the results of pressures from without "great as they may be."

"As a nation we have the resources and the strength to meet aggression," he said. "I am more deeply concerned with the inner spiritual strength of our people."

Bishop Sherrill recalled an article written several years ago by the late Henry L. Stimson in which he said:

"The problem of the atom bomb is not the problem of the atom bomb; it is the problem which lies in the hearts of men."

"I believe that to be profoundly true," Bishop Sherrill declared. "What we need is a true and a strong and a definite faith in God, for it is righteousness which exalts a nation. It is God which makes our democracy of significance, and it is God which fills our hearts with compassion and understanding."

'Right To Fruitful Labor' Acclaimed By Spellman

GOD HAS loaned to man "the uses of this world, the use of riches and the use of its forces to benefit all men while preserving their rights," declared Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York.

Making the convention's initial invocation, the Archbishop said that man has certain "inalienable rights—the right to abundant life, the right to fruitful labor, the right to family love."

At the same time, he said, man is charged with inalienable duties —"the duty to accept these rights, the duty to defend these rights and the duty to exercise these rights."

He pointed out that Christ was the first laborer and that God has made man his co-worker. "Who owns, borrows from Thee—who toils, cooperates with Thee. All are destined to serve mankind through Thee," he declared.

"Without such service, ownership is robbery and labor is slavery. Without this service, ownership forfeits rights, labor loses rights. Both become lawless."

He asked that "God, the Divine Arbitrator, teach each man the art of owning, the art of toiling by teaching them to follow Thee."

"Thou dost own and Thou didst toil, making mankind one body—its members one union, mutual in interests, duties and rights.

"Where Thy wisdom reigns and Thy love abides, there is no clash of classes, no hurt of interests and no scorn of rights."

Fight Pledged On Injunctions

CIO's convention authorized a several-pronged attack on the growing use of "strikebreaking" anti-union injunctions under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Increased use of injunctions, the convention warned, "can only result in injustice to labor, with consequent and justified hostility on the part of labor toward the government and the courts."

The convention pledged a fight to wipe out "unfair and one-sided" Taft-Hartley injunctive provisions, to restore the Norris-LaGuardia (anti-injunction) Act to its "original scope," and to press for enactment of state anti-injunction legislation.

Mosher Declares:

Canadian Labor Happy With Close CIO Relations

THE CANADIAN Congress of Labor, after 11 years of close relations with the CIO, finds its original qualms dissipated, A. R. Mosher, CCL president, told the convention.

"The CCL is very happy indeed with the relationship," he said.

"Frankly, in 1940 when we undertook this experiment of bringing about a union between the narrow-minded national unions of Canada and the broader kind of organizations affiliated with your Congress, we had grave doubts as to what degree of success we would have. And perhaps I, as the first president of the CCL, harbored just as grave if not graver doubts . . .

"But . . . whatever feelings there might have been among some of us . . . that you would undertake to dominate our policy and our administration, it was a justifiable doubt . . .

"That was because of the experience we had had over a number of years with a central labor body in the U. S. representing the craft unions. (This body) was not only satisfied to have associated with it the branches of their organization in Canada, but sought to and did unquestionably dominate the policy of the central labor body in Canada with which it was associated . . .

"But these doubts have all passed away and we have had a wonderful relationship. We appreciate more fully than I can find words to express to you the cooperation we have had from the CIO and the international officers of the unions affiliated with you."

Mosher told the delegates that organized labor in Canada is faced with many of the problems that bedevil workers in the United States.

Prices are increasing rapidly, he said, and at the same time managments are increasing their resistance to union efforts to improve wages.

"We can expect in the coming year," he warned "to be confronted with grave battles in our attempts to maintain and improve our standard of living."

Unemployment, especially in the auto industry, has increased sharply because of credit restrictions, he added, expressing the fear that it will be a still graver problem in the year ahead.

Mosher also described briefly the program the CCL is carrying on in the organizational, political action, education and public relations fields.

FOR AID TO ISRAEL CIO Pres. Philip Murray receives a Bible from Dr. Joseph Burstein, delegate from Histadrut. The presentation was made at a luncheon in Murray's honor given by the American Trade Union Council for Histadrut. In the background are Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel (left), and Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International Committee.

N.Y. Mayor Praises CIO For Advances

In his opening day address, the mayor declared the CIO "has made tremendous strides in developing a sound trade union movement for the interests of the working men of America."

"I think the CIO has accomplished this by taking cognizance of the fact that the strength of any labor movement is in exact ratio to the degree of public confidence it enjoys."

He declared that the great traditions of the country are under assault at the present time both from without and within. Impellitteri said organized labor has a profound obligation in combatting the twin menaces because "organized labor represents the very life-blood of our democracy."

"You can help greatly to insure that such un-American activity shall have no opportunity to undermine our national economy," he declared.

He said the CIO "has set an example worthy of emulation by all union groups.

Murray Praised For Labor Aid To Israel

THE STATE of Israel is "one bright little spot in the world today—one of the savory situations confronting a confused universe," CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the guests of a luncheon in his honor given in New York City on Nov. 1 by the American Trade Union Council for Histradut.

Murray was presented with a special Bible, printed in Hebrew, in recognition of his effort on behalf of the Jewish State and Histadrut. The Bible, bound in engraved silver covers, was sent to this country from Israel.

About 200 guests, including the entire membership of the CIO Executive Board, New York State CIO leaders and a number of officials of AFL organizations, attended.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers introduced Murray as "a man who is a true humanitarian in every sense, a friend and leader of all peoples." He added:

"The name of this great man will stand out prominently when the history of our times is written for posterity."

Shmuel Bendor, Director of the American Desk, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Israel Government, keynoted the meeting by hailing Murray as "a champion of Democratic Israel." He paid tribute also to American labor for having been "quick to understand the righteousness of our cause as a democratic movement."

The story behind the presentation was outlined by Joseph Schlossberg, retired secretary-treasurer of the CIO Clothing Workers and now general chairman of the National Committee for Labor Israel.

Speaking "as one who has worked a half century in the American labor movement," Schlossberg said that he regarded his present work on behalf of Histadrut as "one aspect of my work for American labor." Both movements have the same democratic ideals and purposes, he pointed out.

"Hence," he said, "the presentation of a Bible—which contains a record of the great labor legislation written 3000 years ago—is especially appropriate."

Dr. Joseph Burstein, delegate of Histadrut to the meeting, made his presentation speech in Hebrew. He referred to Murray as "a pillar of strength during our political struggle."

"You have helped immeasurably to raise our standard in the international area and you have loyally and faithfully expressed your fraternal solidarity—the solidarity between two labor movements which have a common fate, who have common aspirations to freedom and democracy," Burstein told Murray.

Other speakers included CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther, Joseph Curran, president of the CIO Maritime Union, and James C. Quinn, secretary-treasuer of the New York Central Trades and Labor Council, AFL.

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, translated Burstein's presentation address.

Curran Stands High In Israel

CIO Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob Potofsky told the Histadrut luncheon honoring Philip Murray that Joseph Curran, president of the CIO Maritime Workers, had been immensely popular when he served with him on a CIO delegation to Israel.

"Probably Joe's sailor boys had spread his fame in advance of his arrival," Potofsky suggested.

Curran praised the work of Histadrut and the accomplishments of Israel.

"Israel is doing our job—that of spreading democracy throughout the world," Curran commented.

Truman Hails CIO, Pledges New Fight For Strong Anti-Inflation Law

President Truman last week called upon CIO members to "redouble your efforts" because "the coming year will be a crucial year for all of us."

In greetings to the thirteenth National CIO Convention, Truman said "no group in our national life has a more vital part to play than the American labor movement."

The President, in a letter to Philip Murray, CIO President, expressed regret that — because of his crowded schedule — he was unable to accept an invitation to address the convention. He added his "best wishes for a good convention and a good year ahead."

Truman then detailed these "vital things we must succeed in doing if we are to advance toward peace and security for ourselves and free people everywhere":

1. "We must get our own defense production program rolling in high gear—and we must find the way to do this without bringing on renewed inflation . . . It means an unremitting fight for the laws we need to do a good, strong anti-inflation job."

2. "We must make sure our friends and allies overseas continue to get the help they need to make their full contribution toward security and progress for the whole free world. This means not only military aid—though that is vital—it also means real programs of economic and technical assistance . . ."

3. "We must hold firmly to our freedom and our progress here at home. We must keep on working to make this country a better place for all its citizens to live in. And we must stand up against all efforts to narrow down the people's civil liberties or to hold back their civil rights."

4. "And this above all—we must do everything that lies within our power to keep the world from the catastrophe of general war. We must seize every opportunity to offer real solutions for the problems that threaten peace . . . And we must never forget that the purpose of our strength is to bring peace, not war."

Then Truman warned "we face opposition not only from the Kremlin and its satellites and stooges, but from the right here at home."

He assailed the "short-sighted men" who, he said, "are working hard to put a brake on our domestic progress, to cripple and cut down our foreign aid, to weaken our support for the United Nations . . . Some of them would even risk world war in their impatience to find shortcuts around the problems that confront us."

In contrast with the "shortsighted and selfish men," the President praised CIO for so strongly supporting "all our work for peace and progress in the world and all the efforts for progress here at home."

Oldenbroek Tells Of ICFTU Growth

THE STORY of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the worldwide arm of the free labor movement, was told to the convention by its secretary-general, J. H. Oldenbroek.

Oldenbroek, a native of the Netherlands, spoke in English.

"When we met for the first time in London in December 1949," he said, "organizations from 48 different countries joined the ICFTU.

"Today, we have affiliated with us trade union organizations from no less than 66 countries, and before the year is out, we hope to reach 70.

"We have explored the world anew. We have sent delegations to Asia, to North Africa, to West and Central Africa, and at this moment we are surveying the trade union and economic position of the workers in East Africa. Very soon we shall go to the Middle and Near East. From these few indications you will see that we are truly a world organization.

"How do we see the future of our international? It will be based on the individual affiliation of the different countries, but we shall give a large degree of autonomy to the different regions of the world, to deal with their own affairs.

"In the western hemisphere, there exists the regional organization for the Americas, with headquarters in Cuba. The CIO plays an important part in those activities, together with the AFL, the Miners, the two Canadian labor centers and many of the national centers of Latin America and the Caribbean area. Similarly, we have a regional organization for Europe.

"Last May, we held our first regional conference for Asia, where a regional organization was set up with headquarters in Ceylon. Soon we shall open an office on the West Coast of Africa. All these regional organizations are administered by the people themselves.

"I THINK it stresses the democratic character of our organization that we allow and encourage regional activities. We don't try to impose policies upon affiliated organization. We don't want to buy people.

"We support them, yes, but with no conditions attached, except that we expect them to use the money wisely in the interest of establishing and strengthening free trade unionism and with the idea of improving their standards of living. The work to be done is one of organization and education."

In thanking the CIO for its role in the ICFTU, Oldenbroek said it is "a great and wonderful thing to work for an organization which is out to change the face of the world." A "tremendous" job lies ahead, he said, "because we are working against heavy odds."

"You see," he explained, "the problem is not that there are too many Communists. The problem is that there are too few trade unionists.

"Our aggregate membership has risen . . . to about 54 millions in a period of a little less than two years. It is an imposing figure . . . but it isn't enough."

Oldenbroek told the convention that the "Communist usurpers" are having a tough time in the countries behind the Iron Curtain, because the "workers practice a form of sabotage against their masters."

"This sabotage," he explained, "is described in one phrase—Go Slow."

100 Delegates From Overseas

The 13th National CIO Convention had a decidedly international cast.

In addition to formal addresses by Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labour more than 100 delegates from the free labor movements of a dozen countries were present.

Represented were unions in Puerto Rico, Cuba, Germany, France, Japan, Pakistan, Finland, Israel, New Zealand, Belgium, Singapore and the Netherlands. The delegates were in this country under the auspices of the U. S. State Dept. or the Economic Cooperation Administration.

THANKS FOR CIO AID to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was voiced by J. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU secretary-general, in address reporting growth of free labor movement.

CIO Aids World Struggle For Peace, Democracy

THE 13TH convention resolution on foreign affairs reaffirmed the determination of the CIO to continue the struggle for an enduring peace and the spread of democracy throughout the world.

It again stated CIO opposition to tyranny of the right and the left. It warned of the threat to peace and freedom from Communist aggression, and reiterated the CIO position that the United States must take the leadership in organizing the mutual defense of the free world on both the military and economic fronts.

It warned, too, that military strength "is only part of the answer to Soviet-Communist aggression."

"This totalitarian aggression against freedom," it said, "seeks to ally itself with the revolutionary and progressive ferment which is stirring two-thirds of the world's population — the underprivileged two-thirds who are hungry, ill and oppressed.

"The social ferment and nationalistic strivings against foreign domination do not originate with Soviet Communism, and the peoples of the world have nothing to hope for from Soviet aggressions.

"Instead of denouncing these movements as Communist, we should recognize that even when misguided they spring from a wholesome desire for individual betterment, national independence and the attainment of human dignity . . .

"The CIO believes that other nations must be allowed to work for their own improvement in accordance with their own ideals, but that improvement cannot be achieved while workers organizations and other free institutions are suppressed.

"Our government should lend aid and assistance to nations which can genuinely help in the struggle to preserve and extend freedom and democracy."

It is in the light of these principles that the CIO approaches international problems, the resolution said. The resolution then considered, one by one, seven major problems in our relations with other nations.

KOREA: The CIO hailed the stand against "the aggression in Korea inspired by Soviet - Communist imperialism," and honored "the bravery and courage of the troops defending the free world" against the onslaught of the Chinese Reds.

"Through this successful resistance," the resolution said, "the idea of collective security under the banner of the United Nations has become a reality."

The resolution also "welcomed" the possibility of a stop in the shooting war "without anyway lessening in the belief that the aggressors should not be allowed to reap any gains from their crime."

UNITED NATIONS: The resolution generally endorsed the work of the UN and of U. S. delegates to its various divisions. It called for "a legal way to obtain collective action that cannot be blocked by the veto," urged extension of UN efforts to help the people of under-developed nations "acquire a stake in their own countries," and demanded that the UN be given greater powers in various functional ways.

FOREIGN AID: The CIO recalled that the Economic Cooperation Administration has developed the kind of program called for by the 1950 CIO convention, one of "increasing emphasis on measures which will lead directly to improvements in the living standards of workers in the aid-receiving nations."

"The CIO believes," said the resolution, "that such a program, if accompanied by a vast expansion of free trade unions which can implement ECA's conditions, offer the most inspiring hope the workers of Europe have had since the turn of the century.

"We pledge it our fullest support."

The resolution also urged that U. S. resources be applied to the task of reallocating surplus manpower in Western Europe and aiding in its emigration; supported the unions in their work for the economic integration of western Europe; reaffirmed endorsement of the principles behind the Schuman Plan, and expressed the belief that the principles of the European coal and steel community be extended to other industries, with adequate union representation.

MUTUAL DEFENSE: Wholehearted support was given the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and its development of machinery for the defense of freedom. The U. S. military aid program, the resolution stressed, "can give Europe the confidence necessary for sound recovery."

LABOR PARTICIPATION: The convention again stressed the CIO contention that organized labor should have a voice in the planning, policy and operations divisions of the State Dept. Describing this as "long over-due," the resolution pointed out that U. S. labor has channels of communication with foreign labor movements "the use of which is essential" in prosecuting a democratic U. S. foreign policy. The lack of such representation, the convention maintained, is a "serious defect" in American foreign policy.

PEACE TREATIES: The delegates hailed the signing of the Japanese peace treaty and welcomed Japan back into the community of nations. At the same time it urged restoration of the German Federal Republic's sovereignty and independence and a peace treaty with Austria, despite Soviet obstructionism, and called for revision of the "unfair" Italian treaty.

ICFTU: The convention greeted the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions as "the spearhead for the efforts of workers in the free world to raise their living standards and achieve a better life in conditions of social justice." The resolution also expressed pride in the CIO's role in founding the ICFTU, and promised the continued assistance of the CIO European representative and other CIO representatives abroad to it.

LATIN AMERICA: The CIO pledged itself to continue furthering the social, economic and political interests of Latin American workers, and expressed "uncomprising" opposition to the "dictatorship regimes of Argentine, Venezuela and other countries in this hemisphere."

It protested the allotment of only $22 million in economic aid to Latin America, and demanded that any defense orders placed there be awarded with due consideration for adequate wages and working conditions. The resolution also welcomed the formation of the Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) of the ICFTU, and endorsed CIO affiliation to it.

MIGRANT WORKERS: The convention expressed "deep concern" over working and living conditions of migrant workers from Mexico and Caribbean islands, and strongly objected to "exploitation and discrimination in ways destructive of our program of international friendship."

Black Is White In Soviet Union

What totalitarianism means was told graphically in the convention resolution on foreign affairs.

"Totalitarianism means," it said, "the destruction of free trade unions and of their power to protect the rights of the workers.

"The wellspring of this menace is the Soviet Union, which in its 34 years of dictatorship has become a society where the citizen is oppressed in the name of freedom, where the workers are exploited in the name of socialism, where poverty is rampant while the ruling bureaucracy becomes even more enriched, where peace means war, and democracy means tyranny."

Convention Congratulates Jouhaux

CIO's congratulations last week were wired to Leon Jouhaux, veteran French union leader and foe of communism, after he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for 1951.

Jouhaux heads the French "Workers' Force" labor federation and was among the organizers of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The convention wired Jouhaux: "Your multitude of friends in the American trade union movement heartily and thoroughly endorse the decision of the Nobel Committee. Through the years, you have won our love and respect as a valiant fighter for peace, for human rights and for the advancement of democratic trade unionism.

"In making this great award to you, we feel that the Nobel Peace Prize Committee has given recognition to the hopes and aspirations of the working people everywhere for a better world of peace and justice."

At Paris, Jouhaux said awarding of the Nobel prize to him was "confirmation of the . . . action of the working class in favor of the organization of peace."

Jouhaux, who is 71, has been identified with the labor movement in France since he was 16.

Presentation of the Nobel award will be made Dec. 10 at Oslo.

'Thinking For Tomorrow'

Planning Demanded To Prevent Crash

CIO'S ADVOCACY of nation-wide industrial planning and Industry Councils—first proposed in 1938—was reaffirmed by the convention as a step to "build an economy that is enduring and that can assure social justice and will build a world structure of peace."

Importance of industrial planning as a long-range goal of CIO policy was emphasized by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Even in "this year of so-called plenty," he said, "I do not think it is the type of a plan that we can lightly cast aside, because some day in the not too distant future we may find ourselves confronted with the pendulum swinging in the opposite direction and no well-conceived plans under way to provide full employment for the countless thousands of people who may be required to walk the streets. Hence, the importance of the plan."

CIO's Industry Councils and planning program calls for nation-wide democratic economic planning in basic industry, giving labor a voice with other economic groups and government in the councils.

THE U. S. economy—production levels, development of natural resources, stable price ceilings, wage and hours floors, guarantees of collective bargaining rights—would be "brought under democratic direction" by the Industry Council Plan, the resolution said.

Murray likened the program to one aspect of the National Recovery Act in the early New Deal years, and also to the program of "co-determination" which recently went into effect in Western Germany.

Despite attacks upon it by conservatives and Communists alike, the Industry Council plan, Murray said, is "a trade union plan . . . to keep America on its economic feet." It is, he said, "a far cry from socialism," and "thinking in terms of tomorrow."

Before adoption of the resolution, John Brophy, veteran CIO leader, said "in this program is the answer of the CIO for democratic participation in making the basic decision within the national economy. In this resolution is the basic solution for the basic building of a structure for peace throughout the world."

Industry Draft Plans Opposed

A COMPREHENSIVE policy on industry and military manpower policies was voted by the convention. It calls for:

- Continued opposition to "all forms of national service (industry draft) legislation.
- Reaffirmation of CIO's past opposition to a Universal Military Training Program "at this time."
- Utilization of the Selective Service Act to meet manpower needs of the military services.
- Strengthening of the Defense Manpower Administration in the Labor Dept., on the basis of "voluntary cooperation of American labor and with proper respect for the human needs, dignity, and freedoms of working men and women."

A separate convention resolution on manpower praised Pres. Truman for continuing the "voluntary" program of World War II and also urged "improvements in gearing defense production to manpower supply, so as to minimize both unemployment and labor scarcities."

Annual Pay For Workers Is Asked

Industry cannot hope forever to escape its responsibility for guaranteeing some degree of security to its workers, the 13th CIO Constitutional Convention declared in its resolution on "Guaranteed Annual Wages."

"The CIO deplores and condemns industry's continued evasion of its responsibility to provide steady incomes for its workers," the resolution said.

It pointed out that the problems involved in providing steady incomes incorporated in collective bargaining agreements.

Ike Called 'Pig In Poke' By Mazey

SUPPORTING General Dwight Eisenhower for President would be buying "a pig in a poke" so far as labor is concerned, Emil Mazey, CIO Auto Workers secretary-treasurer, told the convention.

Mazey, a member of the CIO Political Action Committee, voiced "one man's opinion" on recent commercial press stories regarding labor's attitude towards Eisenhower. He said:

"I have carefully examined the record of General Eisenhower and I want to say that I find nothing in his record which would indicate that he is an acceptable candidate for President as far as organized labor is concerned . . .

"When you try to look at the position of the General on domestic matters you find that he has made one pronouncement on an important basic social question that affects a lot of people.

"You will recall that some time ago General Eisenhower poohpoohed the idea of the importance of social security and the necessity of pensions, and he thought that we were pampering people by trying to provide for them when they reached the age where they were too old to work and too young to die.

"That is the only basic social question that the General has ever committed himself on."

CIO Aid In Defense Production Praised

APPRECIATION for organized labor's assistance and participation in the U. S. defense program was expressed by two high government officials at the annual convention dinner.

More than 2000 CIO delegates, families and friends attended the dinner, at which the New York City and State CIO Councils were hosts. Pres. Louis Hollander of the state council and Pres. Mike Quill of the city council were co-chairmen.

Among the CIO's guests were Martin Lacey and James Quinn, president and secretary, respectively, of the New York AFL council.

The work of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, and OWUI Pres. O. A. Knight in defense production posts was praised by Fleischmann in describing what he called the "industrial miracle" of "military production, plus industrial expansion, plus maintenance of the civilian economy."

"Our enemy has been betting that no such miracle could be brought about," said Fleischmann, "but American labor and industry, working as a team, are about to prove again that the sky's the limit when this nation really begins to move."

"The only real victory," he continued, will be "a world at peace," but if all-out war does come, the mobilization program has developed "the strength to win such a war."

More coolly received by the convention dinner was DiSalle's address on the OPS which wound up with a plea for "a strong program of direct wage controls" and criticism of what he called "excessive wage increases."

Murray Armed To Negotiate

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was given a rugged Irish blackthorn stick at the convention—and hinted that he may have to use it when CIO Steelworkers' negotiators meet with employers shortly.

The cane was presented to the CIO president by Michael Quill, CIO Transport Workers president, during the convention dinner.

In accepting the cane, Murray commented humorously that "experience has taught us that sometimes a cane or a shillelagh might be more effective than facts and figures to convince a friendly enemy to give us more nourishment."

Strong Steps Asked By CIO To Build Up U.S. Shipping

THE CONVENTION called for positive steps to bolster the American merchant marine industries.

Congress was urged to pass legisolation making it illegal to allow American vessels to sail under foreign flags, and to appropriate funds for a "realistic ship construction program" and for "the repair and modernization of more vessels in the mothball reserve fleet."

Proper subsidies were asked for the American merchant marine to compete with low-wage subsidized foreign competitors. Also asked was the use of American flag vessels to transport Marshall Plan and military aid cargoes financed by the U. S. government.

The Marine Administration was urged to require subsidized and unsubsidized lines, that have been granted the privilege of having construction reserve funds, to live up to their obligations. Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) was commended for backing numerous bills to aid the American merchant marine.

Curran Delegate To CISL Parley

The new Executive Board, at its meeting following the convention, named Joseph Curran, president of the Maritime Union and newly re-elected CIO vice president, to represent the CIO at the convention of the Confederation of Italian Syndicalist Workers (CISL) this week at Naples.

Roosevelt Says Labor Must Stay In Politics

THE ACHIEVEMENTS of the New and Fair Deals—in the realization of which organized labor played an outstanding role—are matters about which the American people are rightly proud, Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D. N. Y.) told the convention in his opening day address.

"For almost 20 years," he said, "the New Deal and the Fair Deal have given to historians, students of government and to plain citizens a real look into the workings of a liberal democracy in action. The verdict and the forecast have both been good."

He pointed out, as examples of actual material wealth, that the United States, having only 6% of the world's land area and 7% of the world's population, owns 72% of the world's automobiles and 58% of its telephones.

"We are proud of our record and optimistic about our future in 1952," he said. "The Democratic Party is proud of the outstanding role which organized labor has played in the achievement of this record.

"We shall go forward together. I am hopeful that we can defeat the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition in the next Congress."

Pointing out that "there are many things yet to be accomplished," Roosevelt referred specifically to the need for enactment of a civil rights program, an equitable tax program, a health aid program and an expansion of aid to public education.

"We are determined," he added, "to free trade unions from restrictive legislation."

He named the Taft-Hartley Act, as an example and said that its repeal is a "very live" issue.

Roosevelt urged the CIO "to use especially the means which you have at your disposal for political action and dissemination of information." He added:

"You are in politics, and you must stay in politics, for only by so doing can the rights and the needs of many Americans be adequately represented."

'Citizen CIO' Gets A Big Pat On Back

"Citizen CIO" now is "a living and meaningful part of our national life"—thanks to 10 years of work and accomplishments by the CIO Community Services Committee.

Work of the CIO-CSC and of similar committees in international and local unions was praised by the convention as "a tribute to the vision and leadership of President Murray in founding and guiding it, and a credit to the CIO in supporting and developing it."

Highlights of CIO-CSC accomplishments include the contribution of more than $15 million to trade unions in 17 foreign nations, the contributing of more than $300 million to Community Chests, Red Cross and medical, social and community agencies by CIO members and their families, the naming of 10,000 CIO members to agency boards, the training of 10,000 union counselors, and "immeasurable aid and assistance" to a number of CIO unions while on strike.

Better Conditions In Canal Zone Asked For Natives

The CIO will continue its fight to eliminate "Caribbean Wage Scale" living and working conditions in the Panama Canal Zone, a convention resolution declares.

The CIO will support organization of Zone civilian workers into the CIO Government & Civil Employees Organizing Committee and other appropriate CIO units.

The resolution called upon all Canal Zone employes to remain firm and steadfast in their adherance to democratic principles. It recommended that all CIO international affiliates aid in the elimination of discrimination and the alleviation of human suffering existing in the zone.

It urged the Government agencies responsible for Canal Zone policies to take the necessary steps to insure decent standards of living for all Canal Zone employes.

Inflation And Communism

Johnston Says U.S. Faces Double Threat

ECONOMIC Stabilizer Eric Johnston in a dynamic address to the convention, warned that America today faces the double barreled threat of inflation and communism, either of which could destroy our free society.

He termed self-discipline and self-restraint "the highest price we must pay" for the preservation of freedom and democracy.

"The price of freedom is paid in the coin of our courage and our moral fibre—the courage and the moral fibre to put national interest above group interest or personal interest, above selfishness and cupidity and greed," he declared.

"We have these coins in abundance in this country and we shall have to spend them in abundance in the difficult times ahead."

HE CALLED the convention itself "a story of freedom in action," and expressed the wish that the "story" could somehow go behind the Iron Curtain for those in the insulated Communist domain to read—and marvel at.

He called for America and the free world "to make ourselves economically strong and solid and impregnable so that we can mount the vast armament effort without bleeding ourselves white on the dagger points of inflation."

The present inflationary pressures grew out of three main factors, he pointed out. He listed them as preparation for World War II and the war itself, preparations for peace, and full employment.

The latter element, he said, can and does exert strong inflationary pressures which must be combatted by self-discipline and self-restraint on the part of everyone.

"The high purchasing power which stems from full employment has provided easy excuses for some businessmen to demand—and get—excessive price increases to hold up the consumer," he declared.

"When the conditions of full employment lead to excessive prices, excessive profits, excessive wages, the concept of full employment is in danger."

Making a strong plea for continuation of controls, Johnston said that although the wild inflationary spiral has been halted, the worst pressures are yet to come.

"With these controls our economic defenses are in good shape," Johnston said. "They should be stronger but within the limits of the law Congress has given us this year, we must do our utmost to hold a stabilized line."

"Labor makes a good bargain in living with the wage policy. It trades something for something. For wage adjustments which are less in many cases than the traffic would bear labor receives in return the assurance of stability which means the maintenance of real wages."

"That does not mean that labor isn't entitled to continue to share in increased output—in actual increased productivity. That's fair and reasonable and will not be unstabilizing."

Johnston 'Tilts' Toward Murray

Eric Johnston made a terrific impression on the delegates with his frankness and open geniality.

In a humorous tribute to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, he told the story of a New England man who was about to depart from this world.

He had had two wives who preceded him to the grave, Johnston related. He wrote his own epitaph to be inscribed on his tombstone. It went as follows:

"Born in 1762, died in 1833;

"Here lies Ephraim Wise between his two wives;

"One was Tillie and one was Sue;

"Both were loyal and faithful and true;

"But I hope my friends from Adam to Willie,

"Have laid me out so I tilt towards Tillie."

"I happen to be tilted toward Phil Murray," Johnston said, "and I am delighted to have the opportunity of being here with him."

Give A Buck To PAC

'Discriminatory' Wage Freeze Hit By CIO

CIO's resolute opposition to "discriminatory wage freezes or unfair policies of any other kind" were expressed in this major resolution on wage stabilization and equality of sacrifice, adopted by the convention:

American foreign policy seeks to promote greater democracy and economic well-being among the peoples of the world. We cannot successfully support these ideals unless we maintain the principle of equality of sacrifice—and equality of progress—at home.

Elsewhere in the world, the moneyed interests have sometimes betrayed the security of their own countries in their rapacity for profits. Their avarice must be stopped in America. In a mobilization program to protect democracy, we must sacrifice and share alike.

To date the mobilization program is shot through with inequity and injustice. Prices have jumped to new peak levels. Price controls, weak from the start, were deliberately weakened further by the last Congress. Loopholes and exemptions free thousands of businesses from all controls. Landlords not entirely exempted from control have been given the right to raise rents by 20 per cent. Price rollbacks have been stopped. Retailers' and wholesalers' margins have been guaranteed; and manufacturers have been told they may pass cost increases on to the consumers. Even the recent increases in excise taxes on various commodities may be passed on to consumers in pyramid fashion. Congress has proven itself subservient to the meat, cotton, landlord and retail lobbies, and the NAM and United States Chamber of Commerce. By arraying the propertied interests against the people's welfare, such a coalition endangers democracy itself.

This exploitation of the consumer has resulted in curtailed consumer buying. High taxes and high prices have sharply curtailed the ability of Americans to buy, but manufacturers and sellers have refused to reduce their profit margins. This high-price, high-profit conspiracy is even willing to risk embittering the American people against the American business system.

We in the CIO are for vigorous application of the principle of equality of sacrifice. We want effective price and rent control to hold down the cost of living; we want a fair and equitable tax program based on ability to pay; we decry commodity speculation, and ask for its consumer credit; we want a productive capacity large and strong enough to protect us against the military might of the totalitarians.

We reject any system of control which places the burden of sacrifice solely upon the workers of this country. Instead of an effective and well-rounded program for stabilizing the national economy, we have only wage stabilization. Collective bargaining agreements entered into by the parties are tampered with; benefits are nibbled away. The Wage Stabilization Board has announced several general wage policies to approve some of the gains already secured by workers in 1950. But it has been delinquent in developing policies on numerous other benefits commonly adopted in 1950, with the result that thousands of petitions for approval of collective bargaining agreements have been pending for months without action.

While the board tarries in its deliberations, workers throughout the country are being deprived of the benefits of health and hospitalization insurance and retirement plans provided for in collective bargaining contracts. Substandard wages are being hardened by the failure to announce a policy. Discrimination against women is being perpetuated as board policies remain unformulated. Permission for workers to share in the benefits of increased productivity is being withheld while employers arrogate all of these benefits to themselves. Workers in industries exempt from price control continue under wage controls, while their employers indulge in an endless stream of price increases.

Wage stabilization must not be used to destroy or deny the benefits of genuine collective bargaining. Bargaining must be permitted to continue according to the needs and desires of the parties and the conditions appropriate to each industry. Wage stabilization does not mean wage freezing. The American standard of living must be safeguarded and its continued improvement protected. That has been the strength of America.

Wages and salaries must be permitted to keep pace with rises in the cost of living. Cost-of-living adjustments are essential if wage and salary earners are to maintain their standard of living.

Wage adjustments based on advancing industrial progress and increasing productivity likewise contribute to sound stabilization. Increased production would be encouraged, yet no increase in prices need result, since a rise in industrial efficiency reduces unit production costs.

To deny wage adjustments based upon industrial progress would represent intervention in the distribution of the shares of national income, to the detriment of the workers' share and for the benefit of business and management income.

Pensions and health-welfare plans, since they are non-inflationary, should not be subject to stabilization controls. Wage stabilization policy should be flexible as regards other fringe issues—such as paid holidays, vacations, shift differentials, call-in and reporting times, etc. The policy should be flexible enough to permit the elimination through collective bargaining of substandard wages, discriminatory wage practices against women, Negroes and other minorities, and inequities in wages and fringes.

The Wage Stabilization Board has insisted upon the endless submission of applications for approval of benefits commonly enjoyed. It has piled mountains of rules, regulations and complicated bureaucratic procedures upon American collective bargaining.

We call again as we have done repeatedly throughout the defense period for the enactment of legislation and administrative policies which will make possible a comprehensive and effective system of stabilization controls bearing fairly and equitably upon all elements in the economy. We renew previous CIO declarations in support of such policy.

We wish to make clear, however, that we shall never submit to discriminatory wage freezes or unfair policies of any other kind which will threaten the standard of living and the hard-won collective bargaining advances of free American labor or will undermine the fundamental rights of workers to organize, to bargain collectively, and to take concerted action for their mutual aid and protection.

We stand four-square in our determination to protect and advance the American standard of living, and the security of the American worker and American unions.

In fighting for these fundamental rights, we are best serving the interests of American workers, our beloved nation, and the entire free world.

'AFL Will Need A Big Bite To Swallow CIO'—Murray

BECAUSE of the AFL's breaking up of the United Labor Policy Committee, the CIO says "serious discussion of labor unity . . . now seems difficult."

The convention so declared in a resolution strongly critical of the AFL's destruction of ULPC as "an irresponsible and disruptive move away from our common goal of labor unity."

In commenting on discussion of labor unity, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in his opening address:

"The CIO is a pretty big organization, very big, and it cannot and must not and will not yield in the field of organic unity discussions to any process of coercion or intimidation, and when the AFL took upon itself the right to destroy the ULPC and later addressed a communication to the CIO saying . . . now that we have destroyed the ULPC we will meet you for one purpose, and one purpose only, and that purpose is to absorb you. That purpose is to swallow you.

"Well, let me say that Mr. Green has got an awful big bite to swallow the CIO."

An Opening Speaker

Here is the text of the resolution on labor unity:

The CIO has always looked with favor on the development of unity in the ranks of the free democratic labor movement of the United States. Labor unity has long been a cherished goal of the CIO and its members, because they have recognized that a more secure, more abundant life for the working people of America will be hastened by the achievement of a unified labor movement.

Therefore, the CIO over a period of years has repeatedly sought the unification of all bona fide labor organizations. In April, 1950, President Murray, in an historic letter to other democratic trade union organizations, pointed out the need for united labor action as a step toward agreement on the host of intricate details involved in the eventual attainment of organic unity.

We in the CIO have recognized that united action on economic, legislative, and political problems could not wait for final agreement on the countless important organizational problems involved in the development of organic unity.

Shortly after the 1950 CIO Convention, problems arising out of the national mobilization program accentuated the need for united labor action. Discussions among representatives of the various union organizations led, in mid-December, 1950, to the formation of a United Labor Policy Committee.

This Committee, composed of representatives of the CIO, AFL, the Railway Labor Executives Association and the Machinists, was created to provide organized labor with a unified voice in matters relating to the mobilization effort.

For eight months the United Labor Policy Committee functioned effectively as the voice of united labor. Through the Committee the overwhelming majority of American labor enjoyed the benefits of united action; it was a demonstration of the ability of the various labor groups to work cooperatively together.

IN AUGUST, 1951, representatives of American Federation of Labor on the United Labor Policy Committee suddenly and without adequate explanation announced their withdrawal from the ULPC.

The sudden destruction of a United Labor Policy Committee has created a climate in which serious discussion of labor unity between the American Federation of Labor and the CIO now seems difficult. It raises the question of the sincerity of the desire of the leaders of the American Federation of Labor for labor unity.

The CIO and its unions will continue, despite the disruptive blow to united labor action during the past few months, to strive for honorable labor unity with other organizations.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED:

This 1951 Convention of the CIO commends and approves the steps taken by President Murray and other officers of the CIO during the past year to gain a maximum degree of cooperation and united action among all legitimate labor organizations.

This Convention condemns and deplores the decision of the American Federation of Labor to withdraw from the United Labor Policy Committee and expresses its deep conviction that the AFL's action in breaking up the ULPC was an irresponsible and disruptive move away from our common goal of labor unity.

This 1951 Convention of the CIO reaffirms our traditional devotion to the ideal of organic unity in the American labor movement, and our hope and belief that organic unity will eventually be achieved through a spirit of cooperation, responsibility, and sincerity in the relationship of all democratic free American trade union organizations.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED:

That cooperation with AFL unions and other bona fide unions at the community, state and national levels be continued to advance common objectives and to strengthen the ultimate achievement of a united labor movement.

A SCROLL from the American Arbitration Association honoring CIO Pres. Philip Murray is presented by Arthur C. Croft, the association's president, to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Murray was unable to be present for the presentation.

with the CIO, or any member thereof. We are simply not going to do that."

The convention, too, took notice of the AFL flight from the ULPC. It praised Murray and other CIO officers for their steps to secure cooperation during the past year, and described the AFL withdrawal as "an irresponsible and disruptive move away from our common goal of Labor unity."

"This 1951 Convention of the CIO," the resolution went on, "reaffirms our traditional devotion to the ideal of organic unity in the American labor movement, and our hope and belief that organic unity will eventually be achieved through a spirit of cooperation, responsibility, and sincerity in the relationship of all democratic free American trade union organizations."

To Cooperate

It also resolved that "cooperation with AFL unions and other bona fide unions at the community, state and national levels be continued to advance common objectives and to strengthen the ultimate achievement of a united labor movement."

In addition to laying down CIO policy on a wide range of important issues, the more than 600 delegates approved two changes in the CIO Constitution.

The first first raised the monthly per capita tax from 8c to 10c per member and at the same time eliminated the special monthly tax of 2c per member levied to help workers escape from the unions which were expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination. The change had no effect on the actual monthly payment per member made by the international unions and organizing committees.

The second, an important administrative move, created the office of executive vice president. The amendment authorized the president to appoint him, subject to approval of the Executive Board, from among the nine vice presidents.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and the nine vice presidents all were re-elected without opposition. The only change in the personnel of the Executive Board was the replacement of Sam Eubanks, former executive vice president of the Newspaper Guild, by Pres. Harry Martin.

At the Executive Board meeting following adjournment of the convention, Murray named Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, director of organizations and industrial union councils, to the executive vice presidency. He was promptly confirmed by the board.

The resolution on wage stabilization and equality of sacrifice was approved after the convention had heard a series of Truman Administration stalwarts speak on the threat of inflation and a disrupted economy—a threat that Congress apparently expects the working people and low-income groups to meet while the wealthy continue to pile up the lush profits that have characterized the last few years.

Stalwarts Speak

Heard at convention sessions were Chairman Nathan Feinsinger of the Wage Stabilization Board and Economic Stabilization Administrator Eric Johnston. Administrator Manly Fleischmann of the National Production Authority, and Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle spoke at the convention banquet, held the opening night.

All received respectful attention. But none could convince the delegates that only wage stabilization can keep the country on an even economic keel while prices and profits run wild and a soak-the-poor tax law is on the statute books.

The resolution pointed out that in a mobilization program to protect democracy we must sacrifice share and share alike. But so far, it went on, the mobilization program "is shot through with inequity and injustice." The program of the CIO is simple:

"We want effective price and rent controls to hold down the cost of living; we want a fair and equitable tax program based on ability to pay; we decry commodity speculation, and ask for its control; we want effective public control of bank and consumer credit; we want a productive capacity large and strong enough to protect us against the military might of the totalitarians."

The convention laid down a vigorous program to secure equality in civil rights for everybody in the United States.

"We of the CIO are determined," the resolution said, "to carry out our commitments to strive for economic equality, political equality, and an equal share in the facilities afforded by the community, for all persons regardless of race, religion, color or national origin.

"The strength of our free institutions is proved by the virulence of the attacks upon them. These attacks are based in fear of democracy and in lack of confidence in the American people."

Congress, it said, has been turned into a "stronghold of the creators of hysteria" by the coalition of Northern Republicans and Southern Democrats who have blocked legislation that would establish fair employment practices.

The resolution called for Human Rights Committees in each CIO affiliate; repeal of Senate Rule 22, which makes it possible to block legislation by filibustering against it; passage of an FEPC bill and an anti-lynching law, and prohibition of poll taxes and other discriminatory restrictions on the right to vote; enactment of strengthened civil rights laws, and establishment of a Fair Employment Practices Commission by executive order by President Truman.

Some Disagreement

Disagreement was expressed to three resolutions which, in effect, restated positions the CIO has taken in prior conventions. These were on river valley development, the St. Lawrence Seaway and federal aid to education.

Delegates from the Utility Workers dissented on the river valley resolution, which urged application of Tennesse Valley Authority principles as other valleys are developed. They particularly opposed a section urging that public power distributed over public transmission lines be sold preferably through public or cooperative agencies.

The Utility Workers' spokesmen favored distribution through private utility companies, claiming experience has shown the union can win better wage and working standards from them than from government agencies. To meet their objection, Murray proposed to name a committee of CIO officers to study the problem with the unions representatives. After the convention he appointed Carey, Haywood, and CIO Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, Jacob S. Potofsky, Joseph Curran and Michael Quill.

Delegate Paul E. Monohan of the Railroad Workers objected to a legislative resolution demand that the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project be authorized and started at once. He maintained that if the seaway were in operation much unemployment would result among railroad employes. Murray assured him that the history of technological advances shows joblessness following them is but temporary at worst, and often not even that.

Several delegates objected to a resolution urging federal aid to education because it did not include a clause asking Congress to insist that the states use federal funds to provide bus transportation and free lunches to children in non-public schools. Murray maintained this detail fell within the province of the CIO Legislative Dept., and directed the department to note the stand of the objectors.

Shoe, Ship Strikes Given CIO Support

Full moral support of the CIO in two strikes was voted by the Executive Board at its post-convention session in New York.

They are the walkout of the CIO Shoe Workers at the Florsheim Co., Chicago, called two weeks ago against a proposed wage cut and for an increase; and the strike of the CIO Shipbuilders at the Alabama Dry Dock Co., Mobile, Ala., and the Todd Shipyard, New Orleans, La.

The delegates adopted a strong foreign affairs resolution after addresses by Mrs. Eugenie Anderson, U. S. Ambassador to Denmark, and J. H. Oldenbroek, secretary-general of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. They also heard reports from Potofsky and Sol Stetin of the Textile Workers, who were among the CIO delegates to the ICFTU world congress in Milan, Italy, last July, and from Victor Reuther of the Auto Workers, CIO representative in Europe.

"Let me say to you in all honesty," said Reuther, "that there is no other single force in Europe except the free trade union movement in which we can have complete confidence to not only wage an intelligent and effective struggle against the Communists, but to conduct that struggle in such a way that in the course of it they do not strengthen the hand of the equally totalitarian forces on the extreme right . . .

"There is no substitute for a trade union movement that can move in and protect its own interests on the economic front and win higher benefits for its own people. And there is no easy road to build that kind of strong, free trade union movement under the desperate conditions that exist . . .

"It must be done. The call has been sent out to the ICFTU. As free trade unionists who would rather solve these problems by winning economic and political victories than finding it necessary to fight for them on the battlefield, we must rally our resources and pledge everything that is needed to match anything communism or a rising nationalism in Europe brings up against us."

Potofsky said the CIO must "take the hand" of the ICFTU as that agency of organized labor which will spread free trade unionism throughout the world."

"We must support the United Nations and all the specialized agencies—the Intl. Labor Organization, UNESCO and Point Four," he said.

"We insist, and we still insist, on more and more labor representation on all levels of policy-making in our government so that the voice of labor can be heard and understood.

"The ICFTU has a motto which is 'Peace, Security and Freedom.' Let us make that a living reality—peace through strength, security through a rising standard of living, and freedom of real honest-to-goodness democracy the world over."

Broad Program

The resolution was particularly strong in its endorsement of the Marshall Plan's present program of making certain that workers, as well as employers, share in the benefits of increased production.

It also called for greater labor representation in every stage of foreign affairs, including the policy-making level in the State Dept., endorsed the Point Four program, opposed right wing dictatorships in some Latin American countries and called for stronger legislation to protect migrant farm workers from nearby countries who are being exploited in the U. S.

A strongly-worded political action resolution reflected the widespread interest of the delegates in next year's election, which was described as "a time of trial and testing."

There was constant citicism of Congress and of the Truman administration, but evidence of a more friendly feeling toward President Truman personally. In his final address, Murray recalled that the President seeks the advice of labor on questions of importance as he does that of other segments of the population.

Jack Kroll, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee, declared that the question of "liberty against socialism as a campaign issue in 1952 is a 'phony.'"

"The real issue," he said, "is progress against reaction, special interests against the public interest, welfare for all against special privilege for the few."

Dubious Of Ike

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers said he had examined the record of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower and said he could find "nothing in his record which would indicate he is an acceptable candidate for president as far as organized labor is concerned."

On these and many other matters the CIO spoke through its convention — on atomic energy, on cooperatives and Taft-Hartley and injunctions, on manpower and the merchant marine, on organizing the unorganized—"a challenge to each of the officers and each of the delegates," as Murray described it—on the union label and workmen's compensation, the draft, and industry councils.

It heard other speakers with important messages, too: Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., (D. N. Y.); Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor; Lester Granger, of the National Urban League; Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin; Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R-L N. Y.) and Pres. W. P. Kennedy of the unaffiliated Brotherhood Trainmen.

It was a good convention, a convention that worked hard. What it did and what it said will be an important part of life in the United States in the year to come.

THE LADIES WERE BUSY, TOO: The Executive Board of the CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries carried through an active program at the convention. Left to right: Mrs. Minnie Zoehler, Mrs. Polly Roberts, Mrs. Bess McVeeders, Mrs. Esther Briggeler, Mrs. Rosalie Mann, Pres. Lillian Sherwood, Sec.-Treas. Bertha Perrin, Mrs. Evelyn Smith, and Mrs. Viola Friedman. A new constitution was drawn up by the group.

Kennedy Asks Labor War On Communists

MOBILIZATION of "the great labor army of the world" to oppose communism was proposed by W. P. Kennedy, head of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, to the CIO convention.

He said "there is a labor underground, part of the vast international army of union men. It exists even under the most severe tyranny.

"We had a wonderful example of it recently in the ride of railroad engineer Jaroslav Konvlinka, the Czech who crashed his train through the Iron Curtain to freedom."

Kennedy suggested the free labor movement should "bore from within and without, battle with . . . pens and voice and spirit" against communism. The BRT president said further:

"We are being assailed right now from two quarters: Communism and economic royalism have become strange bed partners. They have at least one aim in common—the destruction of unionism."

Kennedy also praised CIO's accomplishments in the American labor movement, saying:

"As history is measured, the CIO is a young organization. Yet it already has permanently affected our economy and culture. What you have achieved for labor will be felt and appreciated as long as our country retains its democratic form of government."

Roosevelt Day Observance Planned

Senator Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Robert E. Sherwood will be co-chairman of the National Committee for Roosevelt Day, Francis Biddle announced. He is national chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, which sponsors Roosevelt Day dinners throughout the nation in January.

CIO Women's Auxiliary Meets In N.Y.

THE WOMEN folk of CIO members held their own convention again this year concurrently with the National CIO convention.

For three days the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries met in the Commodore Hotel's Club Suite above the big ballroom where delegates to the regular convention were assembled.

They drew up a new constitution, re-elected their top officers—President Lillian Sherwood and Secy.-Treas. Bertha Perrin—listened to addresses by CIO leaders and drew up their program for the coming year.

The vital importance of women taking an active part in political activity was one of the main themes stressed at the CWA convention. "Wishful thinking isn't going to win the election in '52," PAC Director Jack Kroll told the women in one of the major addresses given at their meeting.

A check of the voting records of union members, Kroll declared, showed that only 25% of the wives of CIO members were registered. He urged CIO women to do everything possible to increase the number of voters and to extend their influence in their communities by working for better legislative and social programs that will "lead down the highway to peace, prosperity and security."

THE NEWLY elected officers of the CWA were installed by CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey at a session of the main convention at the conclusion of the CWA's meetings.

Commending the women for their efforts in furthering CIO programs and policies, Carey told the CIO delegates that the women had devoted their convention "to deliberating on how they can best serve the mighty objectives to which the national CIO is dedicated."

"No one realizes more than the mother, wife or daughter of a union man the relationship that political and economic problems have to the family as a social unit," he said.

The following six vice-presidents took the oath of office along with Pres. Sherwood and Secy.-Treas. Perrin:

Mrs. Camilla Persohn, Auto Workers; Mrs. Evalyn Smith, Steelworkers; Mrs. Roselie Manns, Transport Service Employees; Mrs. Minnie Zoehler, Oil Workers; Mrs. Helen Foster, Rubber Workers; and Mrs. Thelma Lacey, Council Auxiliary, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Social Welfare Units, Labor Called Partners

LESTER B. GRANGER, executive director of the National Urban League, told the convention there is a very close kinship between organized social welfare and organized labor.

He declared both movements seek "to insure and extend" the security of the American population, "whether it be economic, social or cultural security."

Granger, who is also president of the National Conference of Social Work, spoke in his dual role for more than 15 million Negro Americans.

He declared that today the nation faces another enemy bent on world enslavement "even stronger and more dangerous than the Nazi beast so recently crushed."

The Urban League seeks to promote better racial relations.

He said Russia has capitalized upon weaknesses in our foreign policy and soft spots in our domestic situation and warned that this country is now threatend with the "possible unleashing of World War III."

Declaring that if the world threat offered by communism is to be subdued, it will be because this nation stands as the central support of the free peoples of the world, Granger called for a display of strength "by our working people."

"But for our working people and their labor movement to remain strong, we must constantly and conscientiously seek out each soft area, eliminate rotting spots, and make our fibre so sound and tough that it will resist any conceivable pressure placed upon it," he declared.

He said not only Negroes but intelligent people throughout the world are beginning to realize the cruel and destructive qualities of racial segregation.

"It is this unnecessary cruelty and destructive punishment which concerns the Urban League, social agencies and organized labor. Removal of racial discrimination must be a challenge to organized labor, but the labor movement cannot do the job alone.

"It is a heartening comment on the increasing maturity of the American labor movement that our best organized labor leadership is recognizing its responsibility and taking steps to discharge it."

The Urban League is a true partner of organized labor and particularly of the CIO," Granger stated.

Coops Get New Backing; Union Contracts Asked

Reiterated CIO support for the cooperative movement was voted by the convention "as a supplement to the trade union movement in defending the interest of the consumer in our national economy."

A convention resolution urged all co-ops to "recognize unions formed by their own employes and engage in accepted practices of collective bargaining."

CIO affiliates were urged to support the Council of Cooperative Development in developing consumer and producer co-ops, credit unions and cooperative health, housing and insurance programs.

Daily U.S. Labor Paper Endorsed By CIO President

STRONG SUPPORT for the National Reporter, projected daily labor newspaper, was voiced by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

He said the National Reporter would give labor a fair, factual national organ.

Plans for the new daily were outlined by Sam B. Eubanks, former executive vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild. He said:

"The time has come when we must take positive steps to guarantee continuance of a free press in the U. S. There is one positive step to be taken and that is to create a press that is responsible to the wishes of the American people."

An intensive subscription campaign, preliminary to beginning of publication, is planned by the National Reporter during coming months.

Proposals for CIO support for the labor daily now are being considered by a special committee which will report to the next meeting of the CIO Executive Board.

Re: MANUFACTURING ORDERS

(CPR 22, SR 17; CPR 22, Amdt. 33; CPR 30, SR 1, Rev. 1; CPR 30, Amdt. 20; CPR 30, SR 4--Mandatory Effective Dates; Adjustments under Section 402 (c)(4) of the Defense Production Act of 1950, as Amended)

In simultaneous moves, the Office of Price Stabilization today ordered several manufacturers, and machinery regulations (CPR's 22 and 30) to become mandatorily effective December 19, and at the same time issued supplements to each regulation providing for optional adjustment of ceilings under the terms of the so-called Capehart Amendment to the Defense Production Act of 1950, recently passed by Congress.

These supplements are the first of a series of regulations which will be issued by the agency to carry out the provisions of the amended law. These two supplements are in effect self-executing. In the near future OPS will also issue:

(1) A small business supplement to CPR 22, to be issued in the next few days, providing a somewhat simpler formula for adjusting ceiling prices, available as an option to manufacturers with net sales during the first half of 1951 of $1,000,000 or less, and whose net sales during the first half or 1950 by more than a specified percentage.

(2) A revision of Supplementary Regulation 2 to CPR 22, to permit manufacturers under CPR 22 who elect to use the new supplement to CPR 22 the option of adjusting their GCPR prices, thus enabling them to retain the price relationships among different products prevailing under GCPR. A revised supplement to CPR 30, making a similar provision is among the regulations issued today.

(3) A General Overriding Regulation allowing adjustment of ceilings under the amended law for manufacturers who are not covered by CPR 22 or 30 and for services (mostly industrial services), not covered by the service trades regulation, CPR 34.

"We have no choice under the amended Defense Production Act," said Mr. DiSalle, "but to allow manufacturers, if they wish, to adjust their ceilings. We fought the amendment because we believed it would spur inflationary pressures and because we believed that it presented tremendously complex administrative problems, both for the agency and industry. While the Senate voted overwhelmingly to revise the Capehart amendment and make it more workable from an administrative standpoint, action by the Rules Committee kept the House from considering the amendment before adjournment."

"We must, therefore, put these supplements and General Overriding Regulations into effect, even though they will result in higher ceilings on many industrial products. We have made these supplementary regulations as workable as possible, but they will involve complex calculations by manufacturers choosing to use them.

Beginning Of End—

Detroit Cops Move On Mafia, Jail 10 As Anti-Union Thugs

WHAT LOOKS LIKE the beginning of the end was in sight last week for Santo (Sam) Perrone, the Mafia gang leader in Detroit who graduated from bootlegging to industrial relations.

The Detroit police moved in on him and arrested 10 men for "investigation of conspiracy" to prevent workers from joining labor unions by coercion, threats and intimidation.

Seven of the group were seized on Nov. 10. They were headed by Agostino Orlando, Perrone's son-in-law. The others were Peter Guadino, Sam Giordano and Harry Johnson, described by Prosecutor Gerald K. O'Brien of Wayne county as former convicts; John W. King, a junk truck driver employed by Perrone; and Willie Poindexter and Willie Warford, employes of the Detroit-Michigan Stove Co.

ON NOV. 13 three more were picked up—Joseph (Taxi Joe) Bommarito and the two Cassise brothers, Charles and Christ. Kennedy Lawrence, deputy superintendent of police, said additional arrests would be made soon.

"It has been ascertained," said the brief police statement, "that there is an organized plan of operation on the part of certain persons to prevent employes in some plants from either joining a union or forming a union of their choice. The organized plan follows a pattern of outright threats, intimidation and the use of coercive measures."

What the police didn't say is that the organized plan of operation has been going on since 1934, when employes of the stove company formed a union and asked for recognition of the unaffiliated Mechanics Educational Society as their bargaining agent.

John A. Fry, now president of the company and then general manager, turned them down. The workers went on strike. What happened after that remained suspected but unprovable until the Kefauver Committee visited Detroit last spring.

True, a special grand jury had made an investigation in 1946 and 1947. But its proceedings were kept secret until the Kefauver Committee subpoenaed them.

Briefly, the story was this:

When his employes struck, Fry called in the notorious Perrone brothers—Santo, Gaspar and Matthew. He told them to break the strike.

THEY DID. They called in thugs who were given jobs as strikebreakers. They started trouble on the picket line—with police help. Union members were beaten. Their homes were showered with bricks and their families were threatened.

The workers lost the strike. The Perrones won, for all practical purposes, the company.

Sam Perrone was given a lucrative contract for handling the company's scrap metal. He's made about $5000 a month out of it ever since. Gaspar got the company's equipment and materials for making cores and space to make them in—and he's been making them ever since at a handsome profit to himself.

In 1936 the Perrones were convicted of bootlegging and went off to Leavenworth Prison. While Uncle Sam was keeping them busy, the tender-hearted Fry sent their wives monthly checks for their normal take.

And while they were in prison the CIO Auto Workers went into the plant and organized a strong union.

But with their release in 1939, the threats and intimidations, the beatings and the brick-throwing, started all over again. The union was broken up.

THE SCENE shifted to Briggs Manufacturing Co. in 1945. Labor relations there were far from friendly. Dean Robinson, company president and son-in-law of Walter O. Briggs, mourned to Fry, an old friend.

Magically, another of Sam Perrone's sons-in-law, Carl Renda, a college graduate and a machine tool operator, got a contract to handle the Briggs scrap. It worked out so that the firms which had always done the work continued to do it, with Renda getting a royalty or shakedown fee that has amounted to as much as $100,000 a year.

But—Briggs workers began getting the same brutal treatment the stove company's employes had been getting. The firm's tumultuous labor relations have since been more tumultuous.

The Auto Workers started another organizing drive at the stove works a few months ago. Beatings began about six weeks ago. Tires on the cars of workers who joined the union were slashed. Their homes were stoned, and their wives and children were threatened.

ALL THIS has stopped in the last few days. And according to Michael F. Lacey, heading the UAW organization drive, the management has posted notices threatening dismissal to anyone who intimidates its employes.

The Kefauver Committee minced no words about Fry.

Its report said ". . . the committee must point out the sinister relationship between the lucrative contracts granted to the gangster Perrones and the ability of the Detroit-Michigan Stove Works to keep labor unions out of its plant."

CIO Wins Three In A Row In Los Angeles

IT'S THREE in a row for CIO unionism in Los Angeles!

Three important organizing victories have just been won in Los Angeles, and in each, CIO affiliates defeated Communist-controlled organizations.

The victories:

- CIO Paperworkers defeated the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union by a two-to-one margin.
- CIO Electrical Workers defeated the UE.
- CIO Furniture Workers defeated a party-line splinter group.

The election victory over the ILWU, headed by Harry Bridges, came at the Zellerbach Paper Co., where an ILWU local previously had bargaining rights.

When the Zellerbach workers called on CIO for help, Irwin L. DeShetler, Southern California CIO regional director, began an organizing drive in which 72% of the employes signed CIO pledge cards.

Outcome of the balloting was 75 for the CIO Paperworkers to 33 for the ILWU.

The newly-won Zellerbach plant has been chartered as Local 1400 by the Paper Workers. It is the first UPA local on the West Coast.

Frank Grillo, CIO field representative on the campaign, said "the CIO intends to continue its fight on other fronts against Bridges and the ILWU."

Last week UFWA Local 1010 reported winning bargaining rights in eight master contract furniture plants in Los Angeles. The CIO local defeated Local 576, which seceded from UFWA after the national union cleaned house last year.

THE VICTORY was the latest in a series of uphill battles by Local 1010. The local now represents more than 1700 workers. Plants covered in the election were Brown-Saltman, Spartan Furniture, Karpen Div. of Intl. Furniture, Hollycraft Furniture, Seally Mattress, Edan, L. C. Phoenix and Crest Pacific.

Earlier, IUE defeated the CIO-expelled UE at the Los Angeles plant of General Electric Supply Corp. The vote was IUE 20 to UE 12. IUE has chartered the plant as Local 860.

(In its recent convention, CIO declared "during the past year substantial progress has been made in bringing back into the CIO workers who were formerly in unions which the CIO expelled for adherence to the Communist Party line. This campaign must be carried through until the last vestige of Communist influence in the American labor movement is destroyed.")

Senators Club Defense Dept. To Trim Arms Needs To Taxes

By MILTON PLUMB

THE BEATING the American people took when the 82nd Congress enacted the "rich man's" tax law is much more serious a defeat than one simply imposing unfair taxation.

This became clear last week as a move developed in Congress to force the nation's military leaders to determine next year's budget for defense not on the nation's need for security, but solely on the basis of "the pattern of tax revenues."

In direct contrast, CIO spokesmen have repeatedly pointed out that the nation's most crucial need today is adequate military strength to ward off any potential aggressor.

While supporting constructive moves for economy and the elimination of unnecessary expenditures from appropriations, the CIO has warned that careful preliminary study and analysis of the need must be undertaken if cuts made by Congress are not to do irreparable damage to national security.

An attempt to deal with the military appropriations in a manner somewhat along these lines was made, without much effect upon Congress, in the last session by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.).

The adoption of the proposed appropriation-by-taxation approach, on the other hand, would inevitably result under the present tax law in the curtailment of real military needs. In no way would it guarantee the elimination of unessential pet projects or fatted calf expenditures by the top brass.

In other words, a "balanced budget"—even if it is "balanced" in terms of unrealistic taxation—is being stressed as of greater importance than the determination of military needs on the basis of their merits.

Pressure upon Sec. of Defense Robert A. Lovett and other Pentagon officials to formulate their budget for fiscal 1953 by cutting it to conform to the tax pattern is coming from influential—and usually respected—senators.

These include Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), chairman of the important Senate-House Economic Committee, and Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.), a member.

Each has publicly announced his support of the perhaps unprecedented appropriation-by-taxation approach.

O'Mahoney said that he has cautioned Lovett and other defense officials against "outsized" military requests.

"From the Secretary down," O'Mahoney is quoted as saying, "I told them they had better cut their requests to fit the pattern of revenues or Congress would be likely to do it for them."

O'MAHONEY SAID he is convinced the limit of taxes, so far as rates are concerned, has been reached, and that he believes "the only way we can avoid critical inflation is to keep spending within the limits of revenues."

Flanders also said he doesn't believe taxes can be raised. He was quoted as supporting O'Mahoney's position and as saying that Congress must inform the Defense Dept.:

"Here is how much money we are going to allow you to spend and you shape your budget accordingly."

The appropriation-by-taxation move in Congress is a direct result of the fact that the shortcoming of the new tax law will mean, estimates Sec. of the Treasury John W. Snyder, a deficit of about $7.5 billion in the government's operations during the current fiscal year.

THIS DEFICIT was the direct result of Congress' failure to accept President Truman's request for a $10 billion increase in taxes, which the CIO supported. CIO tax experts pointed out that it was possible to balance the budget by closing tax loopholes and applying the principle of "equality of sacrifice" to corporation and individual income taxes.

Instead, Congress voted big increases in the tax on low and middle income families, while letting big income individuals and corporations off with smaller percentage increases. It also widened the tax loopholes instead of closing them.

Now, the failure of Congress adequately to tax the record earnings of corporations and individuals earning more than $50,000 annually, and the resulting deficit, is being used as a club over the appropriations to be voted for the defense of America.

Since military appropriations have always had favored treatment in Congress, if this appropriation-by-taxation approach succeeds in connection with the budget for defense, still greater cuts will be in store for other government operations.

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week filed suit against the Westinghouse Electric Co. for $200,000 for wages lost by 180 IUE members "illegally locked out" of the Bowling Green, Ky., plant of the company.

The suit, filed in the Louisville Federal District Court, charged that the workers lost that amount in wages because the company has prevented them from working since last Aug. 15.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey said the company "violated" a national agreement with IUE which stated there should be no lockout of the union's members.

"The Bowling Green workers' choice of IUE as a bargaining agent entitled them to the benefits of our national agreement with Westinghouse," Carey declared. "The company refused to honor its agreement.

"It insisted on paying rates as low as 60c hourly and declined to pay a 9c increase we had obtained in other plants. It granted fewer holidays and established a poorer vacation system. The union shop, night shift bonuses and seniority rights were also denied the workers."

Carey said the company, instead of abiding by its contract, resorted to an illegal lockout in order to weaken the union. He said IUE is also filing unfair labor practice charges against Westinghouse because of "illegal discrimination, refusal to bargain and its lockout of workers in violation of the terms of the National Labor Relations Act."

Steelworkers Ask 'Substantial' Hike

"SUBSTANTIAL" wage increases, a guaranteed annual wage, and 20 other important contract improvements will be sought by CIO Steelworkers when collective bargaining sessions begin shortly with "Big Steel" and other producers.

The wage bargaining goals of the 1.2 million-member steel union were decided at an important three-day session of the USA-CIO in Atlantic City last week.

Following a session of the Steelworkers International Executive Board, the union's 170 member Wage Policy Committee met for two days.

In line with past bargaining practice of the steel union, USA and CIO Pres. Philip Murray had no estimate of the total, cents-per-hour cost of the union's goals in wage and other contract improvements.

According to press dispatches, Murray said the "substantial" wage increase sought by the Steelworkers has not been fixed at any figure but was a "negotiable" factor.

Murray placed particular emphasis on the USA's demand for a guaranteed annual wage, calling it "very important." He said it would be a "constructive and permanent answer to the problem of unemployment."

Other USA contract proposals, in summary, call for a union shop, a new incentive pay system, improvements in overtime and holiday pay rates, and improved vacations and seniority systems.

Murray told reporters he "hopes" a new contract can be negotiated "without government intervention" and he sees "no reason" why agreement could not be reached on a new contract before expiration on Dec. 31 of the present agreements with U. S. Steel Corp. and other basic producers.

IN LINE with his statements to the recent CIO National Convention, Murray reiterated that the 5c hourly increase, which steel management (and the daily press) claims is all the existing Wage Stabilization Board 10% formula would allow, is "not acceptable" to the union.

At the CIO Convention, Murray said:

"I do not believe that the average wage earner in the United States is prepared to accept the type of wage reasoning that has been offered them by the government at this moment."

He struck at the failure to put a lid on prices, rents or profits and warned:

"The working population of the United States of America is in no mood to accept a one-sided discriminatory system of regulation that operates only against those who work and work hard for a living."

THE FORMAL contract proposals will be presented to steel industry management later this month, and negotiations are expected to begin shortly thereafter.

Negotiations in the basic steel industry cover some 500,000 members of the steel union, and the outcome there directly affects another 700,000 members of the union in fabricating plants, can plants, the aluminum industry and other firms organized by the USA.

Participating in the Atlantic City meeting were 130 USA members, elected from districts of the union, and international officers and district directors. Together they comprise the Wage Policy Committee.

Text Of Steel Union's Wage Policy Statement

Here's the text of the CIO Steelworkers' wage policy statement, adopted at a meeting of the International Wage Policy Committee:

This wage policy contains the basic objectives of the United Steelworkers of America in all cases in which contracts expire or new contracts are to be negotiated. Where existing contracts limit the scope of collective bargaining, only the appropriate portions are applicable.

The basic objectives of the United Steelworkers of America are:

1. Wages: A substantial wage increase.

2. Geographical differences: The complete elimination of geographica wage differentials.

3. Inequities:

(a) Elimination of all remaining wage and salary inequities.

(b) Adjustment of iron ore, aluminum and non-ferrous mining and manufacturing rates and of fabricating plant rates so as to eliminate inequities and to bring about needed improvements.

4. Shift premiums: Increase of shift premiums and improvement of their application.

5. Serverance pay:

(a) Severance pay for all employes whose employment is terminated for any reason.

(b) Adequate compensation shall be provided for all employes demoted, directly and indirectly, as a result of either abandonment of facilities or technological change.

6. Overtime: Time and one-half pay for all work performed on Saturday and double time for all work performed on Sunday as such. Time and one-half for all work performed after the eight hours of any employe's working day.

7. Holidays: Eight paid holidays. Premium pay in addition to the holiday pay for all employes who work on holidays.

8. Reporting allowance: Liberalization of reporting allowance provisions both as to amount and application.

9. Vacations: Vacation benefits shall be increased. Elgibility and scheduling provisions shall be improved.

11. Incentives:

(a) Present inadequate plans and methods shall be renegotiated to provide mutually agreed upon adequate incentive pay and coverage.

(b) Technological improvements shall result in increased incentive earnings for the employes and under no circumstances shall such incentive earnings be reduced.

12. Union shop and check-off: All employes, as a condition of employment, shall become members of the union within thirty (30) days and shall remain members of the union in good standing during the life of the agreement. All new employes, within thirty (30) days after the day of hiring, shall, as a condition of continuous employment, become and remain members of the union in good standing.

The initiation fees and monthly dues shall be checked off as designated by the international secretary-treasurer pursuant to authorization cards.

13. Seniority: Length of service shall be the governing factor.

Seniority shall govern in all matters of job preference and job security.

Provisions concerning breaks in continuous service shall be liberalized.

All employes shall be given preference over new applicants in filling vacancies.

Probationary periods shall be reduced to correspond to the 30-day provision in the union shop clause.

Seniority lists shall be provided to the local unions, without prejudice to the right of an individual at any time to object to the accuracy of such lists.

Provision shall be made, where not now incorporated in agreements, so that in the case of decrease of forces, preference shall be given to local union officers, grievance committeemen and assistant grievance committeemen. Persons who may receive employment with the international union or local union shall be granted a leave of absence by the company for the period of such employment and there shall not be a break in the record of service.

14. Local conditions: All present local practices, understandings or supplements or working conditions which grant to the employes benefits and protections not otherwise provided by the agreement shall remain in effect unless changed by mutual agreement, and in no case shall such local understanding, supplement or condition of employment be effective to deprive any employ of his rights under the agreement.

15. Grievance and arbitration machinery: Grievance and arbitration machinery shall be improved so as to provide speedier and more satisfactory disposition of cases.

Limits on the number of assistant grievance committeemen shall be eliminated.

Penalties shall be imposed upon the companies for failing to answer grievances on time.

The effective date of arbitration awards shall be the date of the occurrence on which the grievance is based.

Arbitrators shall be authorized to modify discipline imposed by the company and to award additional compensation where employes have been required to perform work in violation of the agreement.

16. Contracting-out: The agreements shall apply to all work performed in and around the properties and mines of the companies and all such work shall be done by members of the United Steelworkers of America. No contracting-out of such work shall be permitted.

17. Military service: Improved protection shall be provided for employes entering military service.

18. Safety and health: The duty to provide protective devices, wearing apparel and other equipment necessary to protect employes from injury shall be made absolute. Other overdue improvements shall be made to protect the safety and health of the employes and to recognize the status of union committees in this field.

19. Responsibilities of the parties: There shall be no discrimination by the companies for any reason whatsoever. Failure to work at a unilaterally imposed incentive pace shall not be regarded as a violation of the contract.

20. Pensions and social insurance: Where contractually appropriate, existing pension and social insurance agreements shall be improved. It continues to be a basic policy of the organization to oppose and not to permit compulsory retirement. Appropriate provisions preventing compulsory retirement and protecting older employes against loss of employment and hence of pension rights should be included in the basic agreement.

21. Inter-district companies: Every effort shall be made to negotiate company-wide agreements and uniform expiration dates for companies and industries in our jurisdiction.

22. Miscellaneous: Each negotiating committee shall conduct a complete review of existing agreements with the objective of obtaining additional improvements and in order to remedy deficiences which have been disclosed by arbitration proceedings or in the operation of the contract. Every effort shall be made to incorporate in new agreements beneficial provisions previously made part of the basic agreements or contained in this or prior wage policies. Where benefits in excess of those set forth herein obtain, they shall be maintained.

MacDonald Named To CCL Post; Succeeds Pat Conroy

THE EXECUTIVE council of the Canadian Congress of Labor last week formally accepted the resignation of Sec.-Treas. Pat Conroy and named Donald MacDonald, of Sydney, Nova Scotia, to succeed him.

Conroy resigned at the CCL convention in Vancouver, B. C., two months ago—about two hours after he had been re-elected—in the climax of a CCL political disagreement. The resignation of Vice Pres. Alex McCauslane, who quit the following day, was accepted two weeks ago.

MacDonald, like Conroy, is a member of the Mine Workers. A UMW member since 1927, he has been CCL regional director in the Maritime Provinces on Canada's East Coast. As a member of the Nova Scotia Legislature from 1941 to 1945, he was the leader of the Canadian Commonwealth Federation bloc.

He also has been active in Nova Scotia's important cooperative movement, having held offices in coop societies, housing groups and credit unions, and in the People's School. He has been provincial vice president of the CCL and a member of its national council.

The appointment carries with it membership as the CCL representative on the Dominion government's Labour Management Production Committee and Manpower Advisory Council. CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

CIO Findings On Red-Run Unions Published By U.S.

The nine reports of the CIO committees which investigated charges of Communist domination in 1950 were published last week by the Senate Subcommittee on Labor and Labor-Management Relations.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), committee chairman, said that the document shows "how an alert and democratically governed organization destroyed Communist infiltration by due process." The reports were published as the first step in an investigation to be undertaken by the subcommittee "on the extent to which Communist-controlled unions are in a position to endanger the defense effort."

Copies of the document may be obtained from the Senate Labor and Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

20,000 Phone Unionists Get Security Clause

The Long Lines division of the Bell System has signed a maintenance of dues contract with the CIO Communications Workers, covering 20,000 employes.

The company had agreed earlier to the clause, with the usual Taft-Hartley election requirement. But Congress knocked out that requirement, so the company signed.

We're Beginning To Pay

For a good many months, The CIO News—and too few members of Congress—have been saying that the stabilization program is a farce and a fraud.

Because of the Dixiegop Congress, there isn't any real price control system in this country today. There are plenty of rules and regulations over wages, and swatting increases in taxes on the average guy—but on price controls, or real rent controls, nothing.

How it is working out under the Defense Production Act was demonstrated by two recent actions of the Office of Price Stabilization:

First, when the tax increase law went into effect, boosting excise (sales) taxes among others, the OPS had to apply the CIO-condemned Herlong amendment. That allows businessmen to keep past percentage markups. Its effect is that many wholesalers and retailers, through markups way beyond the excise tax boost, actually are earning a profit on higher taxes!

Then, the Capehart amendment, that "economic booby trap," was put into effect, as DPA also required. OPS allowed a quarter of all manufacturers to obtain price increases, which will be pyramided by still more markups before the consumer pays and pays.

It's easy enough to gripe about the high cost of living that's going way up yonder. But the question is: When are we going to turn our gripes into effective political action? When are we going to organize to elect a Congress responsive to the people's will?

The time to organize for PAC—in your shop, in your union, in your neighborhood—is now, for November of '52 is coming up fast!

'CIO—Doers Of The Word'

"We have got to be bold and we have got to be courageous about these things. We have got to be forthright about it. We have got to practice what we preach."

That is what Pres. Philip Murray told the CIO Convention as it debated the all-important problem of full civil rights and equality for all Americans.

Fortunately, CIO unionists are "doers of the word."

Take the example of the Virginia State CIO Council. Charles C. Weber, council president, told about the convention the Virginia CIO recently held in Norfolk.

Despite all the Jim Crow laws on the books, that CIO convention hall was unsegregated. So, too, was the dining room. And the Virginia CIO demanded repeal of the state's segregation law and enactment of the Fair Deal civil rights program.

CIO has backed Negro candidates for the state assembly and the Richmond city council—not because they are Negroes, as some would do, but because they would truly represent the people. And in several industries, CIO is working to upgrade Negro workers.

"We are trying," in the words of Webber, "to be doers of the word and not just hearers only."

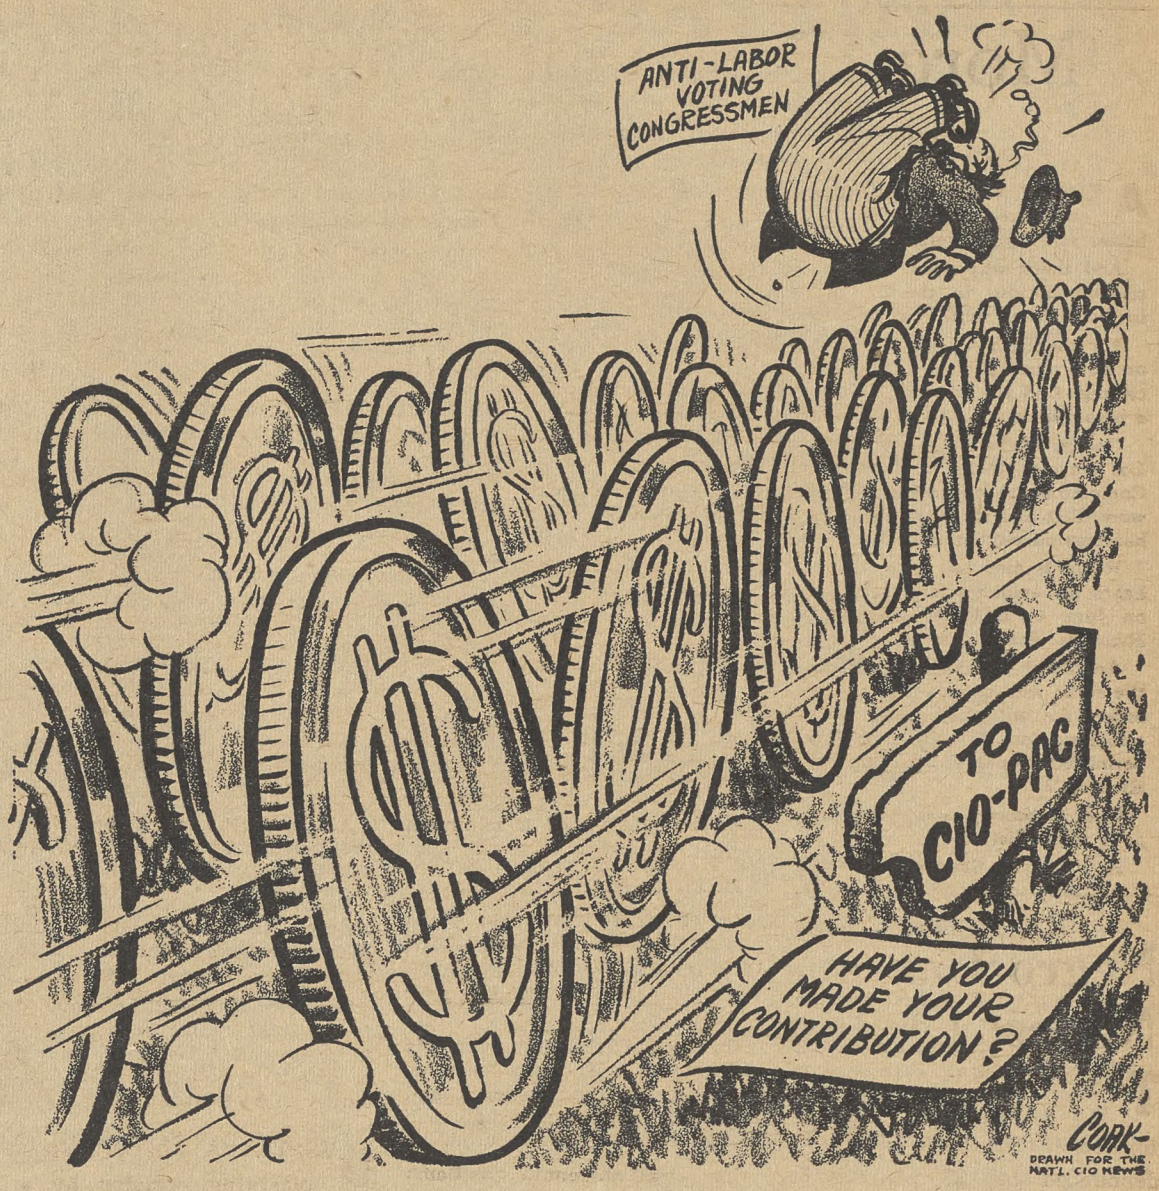
Keep 'Em Rolling!



'The Meaning Of Democracy'

WE IN THE CIO have understood for a long time, and we have been saying for a number of years, that the struggle in the world between freedom and tyranny, between democracy and Communism, is essentially a struggle for men's minds, their hearts and their loyalties, and it cannot be won with guns alone.

If America believes that by building up its military power that it can preserve peace and freedom in the world by that sheer physical strength, it will be making a tragic mistake. Because the world is going to judge America not only by the military power that we have been able to muster, not only by the economic resources which we have in such great abundance, but they are going to measure America and the caliber of American democracy by what we do in the field of civil rights.

Pres. Murray and I in conference with Dean Acheson, the Secretary of State, several weeks ago, said that in Asia, where hundreds of millions of people are in revolt against the status quo, against poverty and hunger and colonialism and racial discrimination, that in Asia the question of civil rights in America is the most important single issue because in Asia people are being told by the Communists that America has two standards of citizenship, one for white citizens and another kind of standard of citizenship for people who are not white.

In Asia, because there are hundreds of millions of people who have dark skins, the question of racial equality is of primary importance in their minds.

We have got to come to the realization that in the struggle to square democracy's noble promises with its practical performance in the field of civil rights we are not only dealing with a matter of human decency and elementary and economic social justice, but we are dealing with a fundamental question of democratic survival because we will fail, as we are failing today.

We are giving the Communists in Asia by our failure to square our promises with our practices in the field of civil rights, we are giving the Communists a psychological and moral weapon equal to a stockpile of H bombs.

Let us look around and see what has been happening. In Cicero, a suburb of the city of Chicago, a Negro veteran was denied a home for his family. Riots ensued and the local authorities looked the other way while people took law and order into their hands and destroyed the property and the furniture and drove this Negro family out of the house which they had rented.

Out in Iowa an Indian American who gave his life in Korea in defense of freedom, in defense of American democracy—they shipped his body back to America and his wife bought a lot in a cemetery and he was denied the right to be buried in the cemetery. Why? Because he is an American Indian, because his skin is not lily-white.

Here is a headline in this morning's paper. A Florida sheriff slayed one Negro prisoner on the way to jail and wounded a second one. The sheriff said they were trying to escape. But we know that in state after state in America that it has been the practice where Negroes come before the bar of justice there are two standards of justice, one for Negroes and one for white citizens.

THIS IS NOT the first time in the history of American justice that a Negro prisoner has been shot on the way to jail because he is alleged to have tried to escape. That is the attitude of the law enforcing agencies in certain sections of our country because they do not treat Negroes as citizens, and Negro citizens do not have the same rights before the bar of justice.

Millions of Negroes all throughout the world, millions of dark-skinned Asiatics believe that sort of thing, and as long as we don't do something about it they are going to continue to believe it because it is true that Negroes in America and minority groups are not given the same opportunities. They are the first to be laid off in unorganized industries and they are the last to be hired; and until we change that the Communists are going to exploit that fact.

So not only as a matter of human decency should we step up to the question of civil rights, but as a matter of democratic survival. As long as Jim Crow lives in the house of American democracy there is something wrong. It is about time the American people stood up and said that from here on out there is not going to be room for Jim Crow in democracy's house here in America.

Behind The Headlines—

'More Important Than Mink Coats, Deep Freezes'

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

A GROUP of experts who figure such things out recently announced that the lie outruns the truth, that a lie is better and longer remembered than a truth.

And that's why what the Federal Communications Commission decides in the Richards case is lots, lots more important than mink coats and deep-freezes.

For the Richards case decision will set a national policy on how much protection you can have from biased broadcasting. And that means, among other things, how much of a break labor will get on the nation's airwaves.

George Richards owned three radio stations: KMPC in Los Angeles, WJR in Detroit, and WGAR in Cleveland. Complaints of deliberate distortion of news by Richards were filed in February 1948, and the FCC held protracted hearings on removing his licenses for the three stations.

Richards died last May, and the FCC examiner who had heard the evidence for renewal of the licenses recommended on June 14 that the proceedings be dropped since, with Richards' death, the issues were "moot."

Are they? The Richards corporations still exist. Those on the staffs who defended Richards' stand and carried out his orders are still there. The important policy question still remains: Can a radio station or a group of stations be permitted, under federal license, to continue policies like Richards'?

The testimony was conclusive that Richards ordered news items distorted.

According to Shad Polier, vice-president of the American Jewish Congress, sworn and undisputed testimony showed that: newspaper editorials were broadcast as news reports; Richards suggested outright fabrications of vicious items about Eleanor Roosevelt or inquired into the possibility of starting rumors implicating her in discreditable activities, including drunkenness; gave standing orders to link Jews and communism; ordered attacks on all the Roosevelts, Howard Hughes, Justice Frankfurter, the late Sidney Hillman, the CIO, and Leo Durocher.

There is no question that such directives were made. Richards admitted their authenticity, for they were in his own handwriting. The defense was that these were merely "directives." But testimony showed they were meant to be obeyed, and were obeyed.

Fortunately, the FCC general counsel and the chief of the FCC broadcasting bureau are opposing the recommendation that the case be dropped. Liberal groups are insisting the examiner be compelled to rule on the issues involved.

You don't care what a radio station says about the Roosevelts, or Frankfurter, or Hillman, or the CIO? It's only a step from there to attack other individuals, other groups—like the labor movement as a whole. The air waves belong to all of us. Radio licenses are permits from you—the American voter—and the issue is poison propaganda versus an honest presentation.

Think this one over: In three short years, a young sport broadcaster has parlayed a small radio station in Palestine, Tex., into the Liberty network, which by the end of 1950 had 431 outlets in 43 states, Hawaii, Alaska, and Japan. Liberty hired as newscasters Raymond Gram Swing, William Shirer, and John Vandercook. Last August Hugh Roy Cullen of Houston, an immensely rich oil man, bought a big chuuk of Liberty. By that time Swing had left to join Voice of America. Shirer quit. Vandercook remains.

But when Cullen put his money into Liberty, John T. Flynn was installed as chief of news broadcasts. It is rank understatement to say that Flynn is no friend of American labor. He is a darling of the anti-labor Committee for Constitutional Government and its long list of anti-Fair Deal affiliates, followers, and supporters.

His most recent piece in Readers Digest was "Who Owns Your Child's Mind?" part of the nation-wide attack on the public schools. In fact, that article played a large part in the decision of the trustees of Ohio State Univ. to impose a gag on outside speakers.

Liberty network tried to get WMCA as its New York outlet. The deal fell through, according to Leonard Lyons, New York columnist, "because WMCA disapproved of the network's backer, Roy Cullen of Texas, who has a peculiar attitude about N. Y. residents." (Time magazine once quoted Cullen as saying "a bunch of New York Jews" were trying to run Houston.)

Flynn's job is to see that news broadcasts on the Liberty network do not have a "leftist" slant. To Flynn and his backers, "left" means anything better than McKinley.

Do you see why what the FCC decides about licenses for the three Richards stations is a lot more important than mink coats or deep-freezes?

Negro Unionists Denounce Newest Of Commie Fronts

THE NATIONAL Negro Labor Council, recently formed in Cincinnati, has been denounced by 37 prominent Negro leaders of both the CIO and AFL as "simply another creature of the Communists."

Pres. Willard Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employees, Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, Frank R. Crosswaith of the Intl. Ladies Garment Workers Union, and 34 other Negro unionists, charged that the group's objectives "are to undermine and disrupt the legitimate activities of the American labor movement and Negro community groups and promote Communist propaganda."

"The tie between the Communists and the so-called National Negro Labor Council," they declared, "is easily recognized from its formation at a Cincinnati conference, held in the former Communist party headquarters there.

"It was dominated by Communists and red fellow travelers who have been expelled from the bona-fide labor movement for pro-red activities.

"The establishment of this Communist Negro labor group is part of a program to use Negro workers in their disruptive activities to hamper the national defense program.

"We warn Negro trade unionists and community leaders not to be mislead by the cleverly cloaked special appeals to Negro workers. In the present world crisis the Communists have no sympathy with the black soldier of the UN who is spilling his blood on the battlefields of Korea in the fight to restore peace to the world."

Story Of A Failure . . .

The National Negro Labor Council, "organized" in Cincinnati recently, has been unable to form a local branch.

Joseph A. Hall, executive director of the Urban League of Greater Cincinnati, said interest in the new group departed along with its convention, much ballyhooed by the Communist Daily Worker.

Evidently Negroes overwhelmingly were following the advice of CIO and AFL leaders and of City Council to avoid the organization. Council's resoultion urging all Cincinnati citizens to shun the convention, adopted unanimously, was introduced by Jesse D. Locker, a Negro, and supported by his only Negro fellow councilman, Theodore M. Berry.

'TVA' Methods In Atomic Energy Are Requested

The adoption of "TVA policies and methods" of direct operation and production for the atomic energy program was recommended by the Convention in an "Atomic Energy" resolution.

"The proper planning and direction of all activities related to atomic materials and energy are of the utmost importance to the people of America whether in war or peace," the Convention declared.

It demanded that the Atomic Energy Commission establish labor relations in the industry based on the right of employes to organize and bargain collectively and to take concerted action through unions of their own choosing.

Get Escalator Hike

Under the cost of living clause in the CIO Auto Workers contract, 33,000 workers of North American Aviation, Inc., in Los Angeles and Columbus, O., received another cent an hour. Adjustments, based on the Bureau of Labor Statistics index, are made every three months, with 11c given in a year.

Isthmian Strike Continues Despite Anti-Picketing Ruling

DESPITE A "harsh" anti-picketing decision by a California judge, CIO Marine Engineers are continuing their national strike against Isthmian Steamship lines and are winning increasing support from all unionists.

MEBA Pres. H. L. Daggett last week condemned as "highly unfair and too far-reaching" a decision by Superior Court Judge Clarence Morris in San Francisco.

In that decision, Judge Morris ruled that California's anti-jurisdictional strike law applied against MEBA in the Isthmian dispute.

That decision, Daggett said in Washington, now is being appealed to the California Supreme Court.

While the lower court verdict forced the MEBA to call off picketing in California, the ship engineers are receiving direct support from CIO local unions.

Recently CIO Shipbuilders Local 13 in the Los Angeles harbor area refused to undertake repair work on an Isthmian freighter. When the ship was moved to an Alameda yard near San Francisco, shipyard machinists of CIO Steelworkers Local 1304 likewise refused to work the ship, Daggett reported.

On other coasts, MEBA continues picketing Isthmian—a subsidiary of the U.S. Steel Corp. Two ships were tied up last week in Philadelphia, when AFL longshoremen refused to handle cargo, and others in Boston.

The MEBA strike for a continued contract at Isthmian began last July, when the company terminated negotiations and signed a "backdoor" deal with a subsidiary of the AFL Seafarers' Intl. Union. CIO support for the Marine Engineers' strike was pledged by the CIO Executive Board.

In commenting on the adverse court decision, Daggett said in a statement:

"The National MEBA considers the interim decision of the California lower court in the Isthmian Steamship case against the MEBA as only a temporary reversal. The MEBA is confident that the California Supreme Court, before whom the same matter is pending, will make a determination on the basis of facts, which will set aside the action of the lower court.

"THE STRIKE of the MEBA against the Isthmian Steamship Co. is continuing with growing labor support. The MEBA considers the application of the California Jurisdictional Dispute statute, in our case, as a blow to all labor.

"The entire resources of the MEBA have been mobilized to carry on the strike until the Isthmian Steamship Co. agrees to accept the pattern in the industry which has been accepted by 150 MEBA contract companies on the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Coasts."

Schafer Defeats Kinstley In OWIU; Knight Wins

B. J. SCHAFER of Chicago has been elected vice president of CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union in a referendum vote by the membership.

Schafer defeated the incumbent, A. R. Kinstley, by a vote of 16,469 to 13,452.

Pres. O. A. Knight was reelected with 23,478 votes against 6593 for his opponent, Harlan L. Savage of Long Beach, Calif.

Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick was reelected without opposition.

Elected to the union's International Executive Council were: Loyd Cooper, Rodeo, Calif., incumbent; M. Phyl Poulson, Salt Lake City, Utah; T. F. Scarbrough, Borger, Tex., incumbent; L. L. Crane, Port Neches, Tex., incumbent; A. W. Mitchell, Tulsa, Okla., incumbent; George H. Hoffman, Hammond, Ind.; H. I. Cole, Chester, Pa., incumbent; Doug C. Black, Montreal, Quebec.

For the past six years Schafer has been director of the Oil Workers' District 6, which includes the Great Lakes area. Before that he served as an international representative for several years and in the late 1930s served two years as vice president. He comes from the union's big Hammond, Ind., Local 210, which he helped organize in 1933.

Kinstley had served as vice president since 1940, with the exception of one year in 1943-44.

THE TREE IS FELLED—Then what? Next time you buy a piece of lumber remember there was more involved than cutting down the tree. At Crown-Zellerbach woods operation near Seaside, Ore., members of CIO Woodworkers Local 5-4 skid felled logs to loading yard. Key to operation is spar tree (left).

SKIDDING is done by wire ropes rigged to spar tree and powered by donkey engine. Slim Schrader unhooks choker that gripped log on trip from woods.

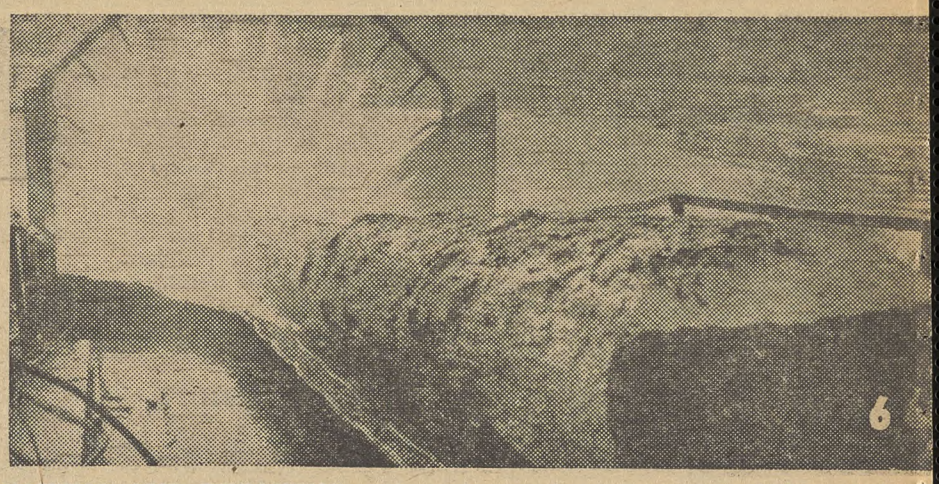
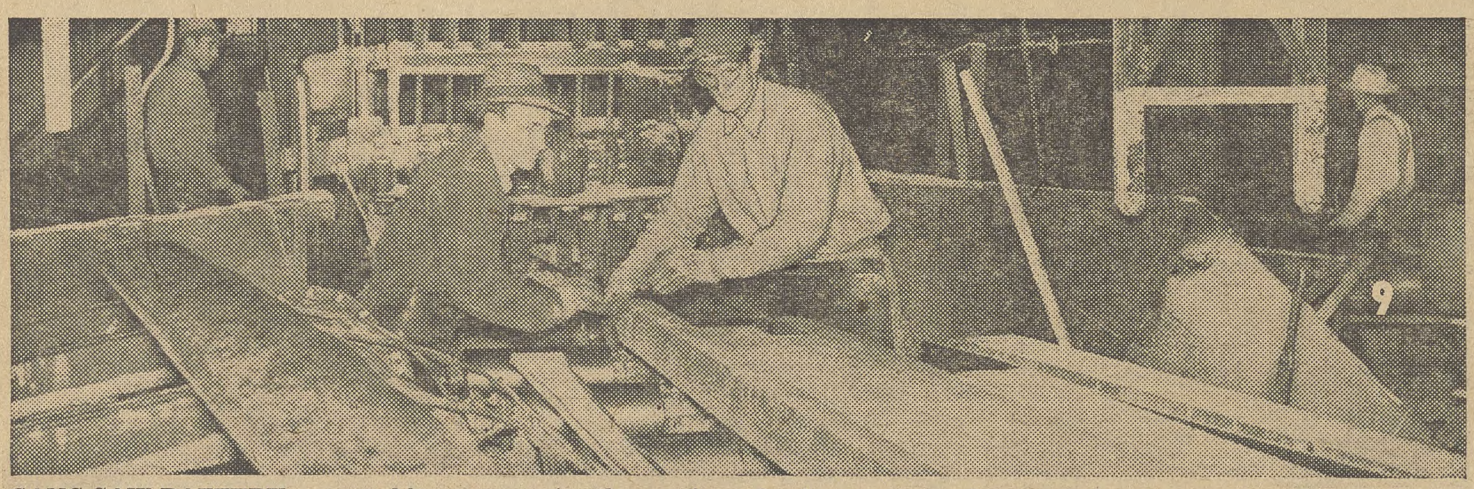
SPLASHING WATER KICKS UP as bundle of logs hits river at dock. Each log is marked with Crown-Zellerbach seal before it goes into the river, to safeguard against loss if raft breaks up. At Oregon City, experts will examine the logs, set aside best fir and hemlock for sale to saw mills, make paper of the rest. Logging is the country's most hazardous industry, with an injury rate of 92.2 per million manhours in 1949; it would be worse except for the union.



SAWING AND RESAWING and sawing again are necessary before timber comes lumber. At sawmill of Oregon-American Lumber Co., Vernonia, O some 300 members of IWA Local 5-37 turn tree-trunks into boards. Here a hu hemlock log, carried up "green chain" from 10-acre mill pond, gets a hydrau shower bath that knocks off dirt and chips before sawyers tackle it. Better ti ber becomes boards, poorer quality is chipped, sold to paper mills.



GANG SAW BATTERY, operated by steam as is other equipment at Oregon-American mill, cuts joist-sized lumber into smaller planks as George Clark (left) and Ernest Redigger feed it. Note their gloves and glasses. Workers always wear gloves when handling wood in any stage, use short pike poles for larger pieces. Sawing is basic operation of sawmill, and chief sawyer is most important employe—fellow workers say his decision on first cut of log determines if mill is operated at profit or loss. Work flowing through mill moves to accompaniment of screeches, roars, bangs, whines, etc.

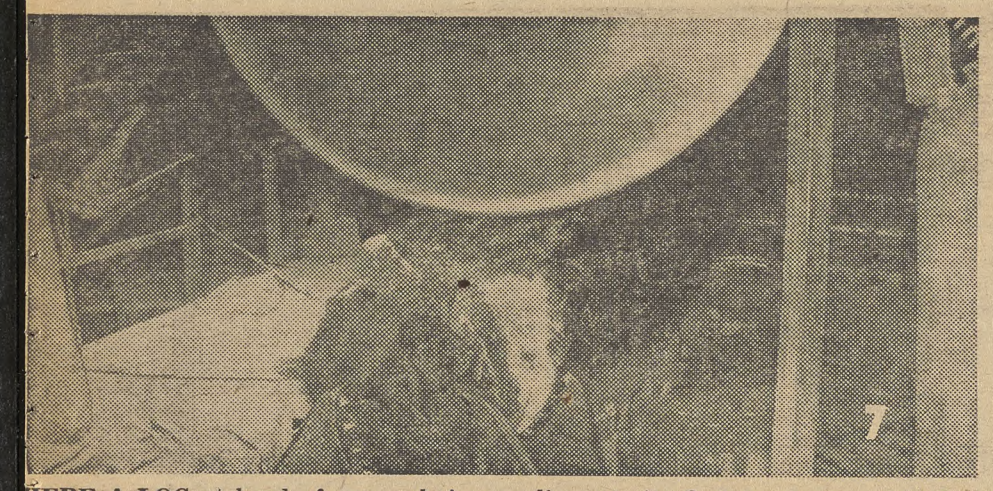
TWENTY-MILE TRUCK TRIP ends at dock on Lewis and Clark River near Astoria. Here Max Johnston, also a Local 5-4 member, watches as his entire load—girdled by heavy chains and stropped with steel band by John Larson (rear)—is carried to the water to be floated to Oregon City paper mill.



HERE A LOG at head of green chain, or slip, gets its first treatment; rotted or damaged ends are cut off by huge circular saw, six feet in diameter, operated by a "deck hand." In interests of conservation, industry no longer rejects all but best timber; windfalls, fire-damaged logs, are processed for what lumber they may offer, ground into chips for paper, treated to make other byproducts. Some mills use waste for fuel, older ones just burn it.

JITNEY CRANE WANDERS all over sawmill. Here Amos Hain, the "hooker," prepares to release boards it has carried from sawmill to planers. It also carries loads from planers to kiln for drying, dried boards from kiln to loading dock. Hain and more than 100,000 other IWA members work in lumber camps, sawmills, from Canada to Deep South, from Atlantic to Pacific.

TELLS OF SLAVE LABOR—Elinor Lipper, once a prisoner in Soviet Russia's salve labor camps, receives congratulations from CIO officers after telling members of the CIO executive board of campaign to aid refugees from Iron Curtain nations. From left are Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, of the Communications Workers, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union, Pres. Jacob Potofsky, of the Clothing Workers, Miss Lipper, Pres. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers, and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

CIO Asked To Aid Workers Who Flee Iron Curtain Nations

"A MESSENGER from the country of the mute to speak for those millions who have for years been deprived of their voices and any possible way of protest" came to the CIO Convention to report on the flight to freedom of workers in Iron Curtain nations.

She was Miss Elinor Lipper, author of "Eleven Years in Soviet Prison Camps."

And she asked CIO's assistance and support for the program of the anti-Fascist, anti-Communist Intl. Rescue Committee to erect a chain of Frontier Freedom Stations around the Iron Curtain.

Miss Lipper addressed a convention luncheon of the CIO Intl. Affairs Committee. She pointed out:

"Most of the people who escape through the Iron Curtain are working men and women, like the members of CIO. They are risking death in order to flee to a free society where they can build a life of freedom and security.

"Because you are dedicated to the achievement of such a life for all American workers, you can best understand the hopes and dreams of the Iron Curtain escapees.

"I know you will want to help in the building of Frontier Stations to welcome these freedom-loving men and women and establish them in the constructive life of the free workers in the west."

Miss Lipper, once a Swiss Communist, was imprisoned from 1937 to 1948. Part of her sentence was in the notorious prison camp of Kolyma in Siberia. She gave this report to the CIO committee on life in a Soviet slave labor camp:

"Since all the camp directors and administrators are common criminals—murders, thieves, prostitutes—they always favor the common criminals above the other prisoners. Therefore, part of the work quota of the non-criminal is credited to the quota of a criminal.

"This means that if you are a political prisoner you often have to work 17 to 18 hours a day in order to fill your quota.

"If you do not fill your quota on a certain day, you get less bread. The next day, because you are weak, you are able to perform less work and you get still less bread.

"THIS becomes a vicious circle. As you get weaker you cannot work the 17 hour day and eventually you die of fatigue. The average length of life of a shipload of prisoners is three years.

"Those of us who survive have had the benefit of special circumstances. Because I had medical training, I was assigned to work in the prison hospital. This was how I survived."

Reuther, Millard Off To Brussels

Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, will serve for the CIO at a meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions executive council in Brussels, Belgium, Nov. 26 to 30.

The Canadian Congress of Labor will be represented by Charles H. Millard, Canadian director for the CIO Steelworkers and an alternate CCL delegate to the executive body.

Life Goes On In Red Zone— More Speedups For Workers!

LIFE GOES ON as usual behind the Iron Curtain, according to Spotlight, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' publication dealing with uncensored news from the dictatorship countries.

Life as usual behind the Iron Curtain countries, it should be explained, means that the Communists overlords are having the same old trouble convincing the people that there's a future in working themselves to death for wages below the subsistence level. Some examples from Spotlight:

Czechoslovakia: Absenteeism in the first half of 1951 was 103 million manhours, compared to 94 million in the same period last year, meaning a serious loss in production. Many workers spend less than eight hours on the job, take more time than is allowed for lunch, have little or no morale, and are not amenable to discipline.

The party union paper, Prace, bemoaned such passive resistance by commenting sourly that the unions "are up against the conservative mentality of the less conscious part of the workers who, through force of habit, still consider the putting forward of demands as a way toward the improvement of their conditions."

Hungary: Hungarian labor in many industries is working for nothing under a new technique imported from Russia and called the Nazarova movement. The workers just get ownership of the machines they operate forced on them. That makes them responsible for maintenance, which they have to do on their own time. But they can't hock their machinery if they run into financial difficulties.

Poland: Miners in two coal shafts staged a sitdown strike when management ordered a 12-hour work day to make up a deficiency of 8000 tons in the "Liberation Day" (July 20) quota. After working eight hours they just sat at the bottom of the pit until the cage came four hours later.

Civil Liberties' Rout Appears Slowed Down

THE "RETREAT from civil liberties" which the National CIO Convention denounced in an unanimously approved resolution has been slowed—at least momentarily.

In some developments of the last two weeks:

1. The Supreme Court unanimously reminded the Justice Dept. that "excessive" bail is expressly forbidden by the Bill of Rights. It sent back the cases of 12 second-string Communist leaders to the lower court with orders to hold separate hearings for each "for the purpose of fixing reasonable bail for each petitioner."

2. By a 6-to-3 division, the Supreme Court let stand without review a decision of the New York Circuit Court of Appeals which permits libel and slander suits against persons giving the FBI information if they are motivated by malice.

3. The Senate subcommittee checking the charges against Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) made by Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) delayed a report on its findings. Chairman Gillette (D. Ia.) said that the report would be issued later this month and that the committee staff would make good use of the extra time.

4. Comm. Kenneth L. Greenquist of the Wisconsin American Legion ordered all posts in the state not to permit speakers to address them on politics after learning that McCarthy planned to address two such meetings.

5. Richard C. Boulet, chairman of Wisconsin's Marathon County Young Republican Organization, resigned to be in a better position to fight McCarthy in his drive for re-election next year.

6. Former Sen. Tydings (D. Md.) offered McCarthy first $5000 and later $10,000 if he could prove his charges that there are "205 Communists" or "57 card-carrying Communists" in the State Dept. Tydings headed a Senate subcommittee which investigated McCarthy's charges and labelled them "a fraud and a hoax."

7. Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), who has used his Senate Internal Security subcommittee to conduct a fishing expedition in support of McCarthy's charges, warned against "premature judgment" of testimony until all the facts are in. McCarran said that "the record to date is only partial" and promised to give all accused "a chance to reply, under oath and on the record."

8. Chairman Robert Ramspeck of the Civil Service Commission, in a speech before the Washington Trade Association Executives, called upon business men to take the lead in "beating back the barrage of loose talk about the government and its employes."

9. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas warned, in a Brandeis Univ. address, that "our weakness grows when we become intolerant of opposing ideas, depart from our standards of civil liberties and borrow the policeman's philosophy from the enemy we detest." He added that "if we are true to our traditions, if we are tolerant for a whole market place of ideas, we will always be strong."

Professors' Group Hits Ohio Gag Rule

THE ACTION of Ohio State Univ. trustees in requiring that campus speakers be approved by the president's office has come in for more criticism.

The Council of the American Association of University Professors, at a meeting in Chicago, charged that the move "encroaches upon the effectiveness of free speech and inquiry for students and faculty."

The council warned that "the trustees' action was subversive to the functions of a free university in a free society," and declared it "gratifying that students, faculty, individual chapters of this association and representatives of the informed public have opposed the regulation."

(Ohio State's trustees issued the regulation in September. The rule was modified recently to exclude from the screening process speakers invited to appear by professional groups, by the faculty, and by recognized religious groups.)

"The training of students in the methods of free and responsible discussion can be accomplished only by actual practices," the resolution declared.

"Imposing censorship and curbing the right to hear dissenting views denies students this maturing experience."

Two off-campus professors recently rejected invitations to speak because they considered the screening practice unnecesary. The professors, who had previously been screened and approved, were Robert Dixon, of Denison Univ., and Dr. Douglas G. Ellson, chairman of the Indiana Univ. Psychology Dept.

One speaker barred was Dr. Cecil E. Hinshaw, a Quaker who is a pacifist. The Ohio CIO Council has taken a leading role in exposing and fighting the gag.

When A Feller Needs A Friend! See Joe McCarthy

The Milwaukee Women's Service Club cancelled a scheduled debate last week because it was unable to get anyone to take the affirmative side of the question: "Resolved, that Sen. Joseph McCarthy has performed an outstanding service to the American people."

Mrs. Allen B. Beverstock said Attorney Henry Reuss had agreed to take the negative side. Since accepting, Reuss has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination to the Senate in 1952.

Mrs. Beverstock said she asked Lloyd Tegge, chairman of the Wisconsin Young Republicans, to find someone to speak for McCarthy in the debate. She said Tegge told her he would find a speaker for a debate on some other subject "but not on McCarthy."

Rieve Protests Jail Labor On Army Order

BOTH CIO and AFL textile unions have protested the Army's awarding of the $2½ million contract for manufacture of woolen blankets by the federal prison at Terre Haute, Ind.

They demanded that the prison contract be revoked and the work given to idle textile mills in private industry.

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers termed the prison contract an "outrage" and "a flagrant violation of the national interest."

"In the textile industry today," he declared, "particularly in the woolen and worsted centers in New England and the Middle Atlantic states, thousands of textile workers are unemployed; thousands of others are working only part time. It is bad enough that textile workers should be suffering hardships in the midst of an inflationary period. It is intolerable for the government to deny them the work which normally would be theirs."

Rieve also pointed out that the 17-year-old executive order permitting prison contracts "specifies that prison work shall not impose an undue burden upon private industry."

In answer to the protests, the Quartermaster Corps said it is compelled by federal regulation to buy products manufactured in federal prisons when possible.

Labor's Legal Hurdles Studied At CIO Lawyers' Conference

LEGAL HURDLES confronting the labor movement were examined a post-convention conference on labor law sponsored by CIO's Legal Dept.

Focus of the two-day meeting at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York was on bargaining under the Wage Stabilization Board, civil liberties, and a further look at Taft-Hartley Act repeal.

"Civil Liberties and National Security" were discussed at the conference dinner by Philip B. Perlman, U.S. Solicitor General. He said:

"World events give us a sound basis for believing that we are confronted by the most serious threat in all history to the security of the United States and the liberties of our people.

"The threat comes from extremists both on the right and the left, from within the country as well as from without.

"We are aware of the grave dangers to the peace of the world and to the security of the free nations which have resulted from Communist aggression.

"We are aware, in almost every aspect of our daily lives, of the rapid growth of fears and prejudices, which, unless curbed in time, may undermine the basic American tradition of fair play and the fundamental right of the individual to freedom of expression."

Perlman discussed at length the evidence of Communist revolutionary plans in the U.S., and warned "the dangers at home are not to be minimized or disregarded." Concerning CIO's investigation, hearing and ouster of Communist - controlled organizations, he said:

"The CIO has given notice to the people of America, not only that it is fully informed and understands, but that there is no room in this organization for unions dominated by Communists.

"The steps taken by this congress to rid itself of subversive elements were to be expected of such a loyal and patriotic organization, and won for you the added approval and esteem and respect of people in all walks of life."

PERLMAN declared civil liberties and national security "are not antagonistic" and said that President Truman "has been especially alert to the dangers to the fundamental freedoms inherent in any program to maintain internal security."

He recalled the President's appointment of the Nimitz Commission to study how "a free people can protect their society from subversive attack without, at the same time, destroying their own liberties." Work of that commission was stymied by the Senate Judiciary Committee — and one proposal in the CIO Convention's civil liberties program was reconstituting of the Nimitz Commission.

Other viewpoints on the defense of civil liberties were presented at a panel chaired by John O'Donnel, CIO Transport Workers general counsel.

PARTICIPANTS included Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., CIO Auto Workers counsel in Washington, Morris L. Ernst of the American Civil Liberties Union and Thurgood Marshall of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Two panel sessions were held on the Wage Stabilization Board, with Benjamin Aaron, WSB public member, and wage board officials describing its operations. Contract bargaining under WSB regulations was discussed by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers (and a WSB member), Herman Cooper, CIO National Maritime Union general counsel, and Harry Becker and Jack Steiber, CIO consultants to the wage board.

Participants in the panel on the Taft-Hartley Act were Sen. Morse (R. O.), William J. Isaacson, CIO Clothing Workers general counsel, G. L. Patterson, CIO Rubber Workers general counsel, Gerhard Van Arkel, AFL Typographical Union general counsel, Prof. Archibald Cox of Harvard Law School and R. R. Murdock, former counsel to the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations.

'Tax Bonanza' Brings Big Golden Eggs

ANNOUNCED figures for the "tax bonzana"—the quick write-offs for expansion projects by corporations—went over the $10 billion mark. However, there's at least another $1 billion on which the figures have not been revealed.

The latest list of 123 approved certificates of necessity, the Defense Production Administration announced, "includes applications approved since the Oct. 18 termination of DPA's 60-day moratorium on the issuance of tax amortization certificates." But it is known that many of them were acted upon during the "freeze" and there'll be "a couple of more lists" in which that status will prevail.

Top amount, $43,107,000, went to Richfield Oil Corp. for aviation gasoline facilities at Los Angeles, of which 65% or $23,643,000 will be written off in 5 years instead of the customary 25. Of the rest, $4,399,000 qualifies for 90% write-off, $12,765,000 for 45%, and $2,300,000 for 15%.

CERTIFICATES of necessity let firms write off the cost of plant construction or expansion in five years instead of the usual 20 to 25 years, at a tremendous saving to the corporations in taxes. Thus, in effect, the ordinary taxpayer foots the bill for these new plants.

Other oil company high sharers in the "gravy train," as the write-off program has been called by labor officials and liberals in Congress, included: Cities Service, $12,410,000; Pan-American Refining, $18,674,500; Socony-Vacuum, $4,210,000; Standard of California, $1,187,000; Phillips Petroleum, $1,007,225.

Colorado Fuel & Iron Corp. listed 18 projects in various parts of the country, the largest in New York, calling for outlay of $4,432,400, of which 70% was certified for quick write-off.

Heading the steel firms aided was Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., East Chicago, Ind., with 50% of $42,536,600 for production of steel sheets. (LPA)

Red Jailing Of Youths Protested

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was one of a number of prominent Americans who signed a cable recently to Otto Grotewohl, Communist Premier of East Germany, protesting prison sentences of eight to 15 years each for 19 high school students in Werdau, in the Soviet Zone of Germany.

The boys and girls, aged 16 to 18, were accused of "incitement to boycott the German Democratic Republic," war mongering, endangering the "peace of the German people," and setting up a "spying and partisan organization for the American imperialists." What they actually had done was to make fun of Communist propaganda and leaders in their class rooms, and distribute leaflets and posters protesting the oppressive Soviet domination.

French Unionists Meet With CIO

Eight members of a French union organization and functioning team brought to this country by the Economic Cooperation Administration visited National CIO headquarters on Nov. 14.

The visitors heard brief discussions of CIO formation, progress, operations and policies by Executive Vice President Allan S. Haywood; Frank L. Fernbach, associate director of the Education and Research Dept., and Michael Ross, director of the Intl. Affairs Dept.

Members of the team represent all three free trade union groups in France. They have been touring the country since Oct. 4, visiting union offices and plants with union contracts, and attending the CIO Convention.

AVC Blasts Army Failure To End Bias

THE American Veterans Committee last week bluntly told the Army that "time has run out" on its failure to carry out President Truman's executive order abolishing discrimination in the armed forces.

The President's order, establishing "equality of treatment and opportunity" for all military personnel, was issued in 1948.

The Navy and Air Force have complied with it.

Last week Michael Straight, AVC national chairman, fired another blast at the Army's dilatory failure to carry out the executive order.

In issuing that order more than three years ago, Truman had ordered that it be carried out "as rapidly as possible." But Lt. Gen. A. C. McAuliffe, assistant Army chief of staff, told the AVC the segregation ban is "still under study."

Straight sent this reply to Gen. McAuliffe:

"We assume that when the President issued his order, he meant it to be an order. We cannot understand why the Army, unlike the Air Force and the Navy, has so far failed to carry this order out. Nor can we understand how you can take the position that it will be carried out only if your study indicates that it should be obeyed.

"That is not the way we were taught to obey orders in the armed forces."

Union Label Drives Backed

All CIO affiliates were urged by the convention "to coordinate and intensify activities of the CIO in support of the union label" as an aid to union organization and collective bargaining.

Separate convention resolutions praised, specifically, the union label campaigns of CIO Clothing Workers and CIO Lithographers and the union watermark drive of CIO Paperworkers.

"Members of the public who believe in the labor movement," a resolution said, "should demonstrate their support by purchasing goods bearing the union label."

U.S. Recontrols Rent Ceilings At 11 Cities, Military Bases

RECONTROL provisions of the new rent law were placed in effect in 11 more defense housing and military areas last week by Tighe E. Woods, director of rent stabilization.

Full-range rent ceilings on all types of residential housing were ordered in the Kennewick-Pasco-Richland area of Washington State, near major atomic energy installations. They also were restored in Indianapolis, Ind., the Bristol-Morrisville area near Philadelphia, and at Sydney, Neb.

Ceilings also were restored near these military installations: Ft. Dix, N. J.; Camp Rucker, Ala.; Forbes Air Base, Kan.; Camp Breckinridge, Ky.; Camp Polk, La.; Camp Pickett, Va., and Rapid City, S. D., Air Base.

This brings to 37 the number of areas to which Woods has restored rent ceilings during the past six weeks.

It includes a number of military areas where housing conditions were reported to be deplorable by the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.)

In the Camp Breckinridge area, for example, the committee found a sergeant paying $45 a month for a tiny building once used as a child's playhouse. A coal shed and a rat-infested house where a baby was badly bitten had also been rented.

Peace? Hah, Commies Like Nazis In Causing War Fears

Peace, it may be wonderful! But the Swedes are fed up to the ears with a new variety of the Commie Stockholm peace appeal.

In fact, so far as the danger of war is concerned, the Swedes say "the Communists have succeeded the Nazis as the cause of tension and unrest."

That's the comment of the Stockholm newspaper, Morgon-Tidningen, which is the organ of the Swedish Social Democratic Labor Party.

After fireworkers for the Stockholm Peace Appeal (which had no connection with Stockholm), the Swedish paper reports that the party boys now are planning a "Nordic Peace Conference" (shades of Hitler's pure Aryans)!

Whatever and whoever the non-commies out in front, the Stockholm paper says, "in the center of the machinery sits a group of dependable Communists, and in the last instance all of these appeals and conferences always become links in the Communist propaganda—on the international scene, instruments for the Soviet Union and its satellites.

"It is, moreover, revolting to see Communists and Communist states boast of being the foremost champions of universal peace. The tension in the world today is first and foremost due to Communist aggression . . . The Communists have succeeded the Nazis as the cause of tension and unrest."

The Story Of Convention As Told In Photos

VISITING GERMAN trade unionists take time out from the sessions of the convention to visit a New York City polling place. They are inspecting a voting machine during the municipal election which was held Nov. 6, the convention's second day.

VOICE OF AMERICA. An old-timer in the U. S. labor movement, Charles W. Ervin of the CIO Clothing Workers, broadcasts an interpretation of CIO's convention for U. S. shortwave stations overseas. Ervin, 87, is dean of labor newspapermen and associate editor of ACWA Advance. And that's an Amalgamated union label display in the background.

TWO SHOE WORKERS' DELEGATES: Mrs. Harriet Morin, Chicago (left), and Mrs. Florence Lynch, St. Louis, Mo. Both are members of the USWA general executive board. Mrs. Morin has worked 18 years for the Florsheim Shoe Co. Mrs. Lynch's first job was at the Intl. Shoe Co., and she's still there with nearly 19 years' seniority. Note the shoe display.

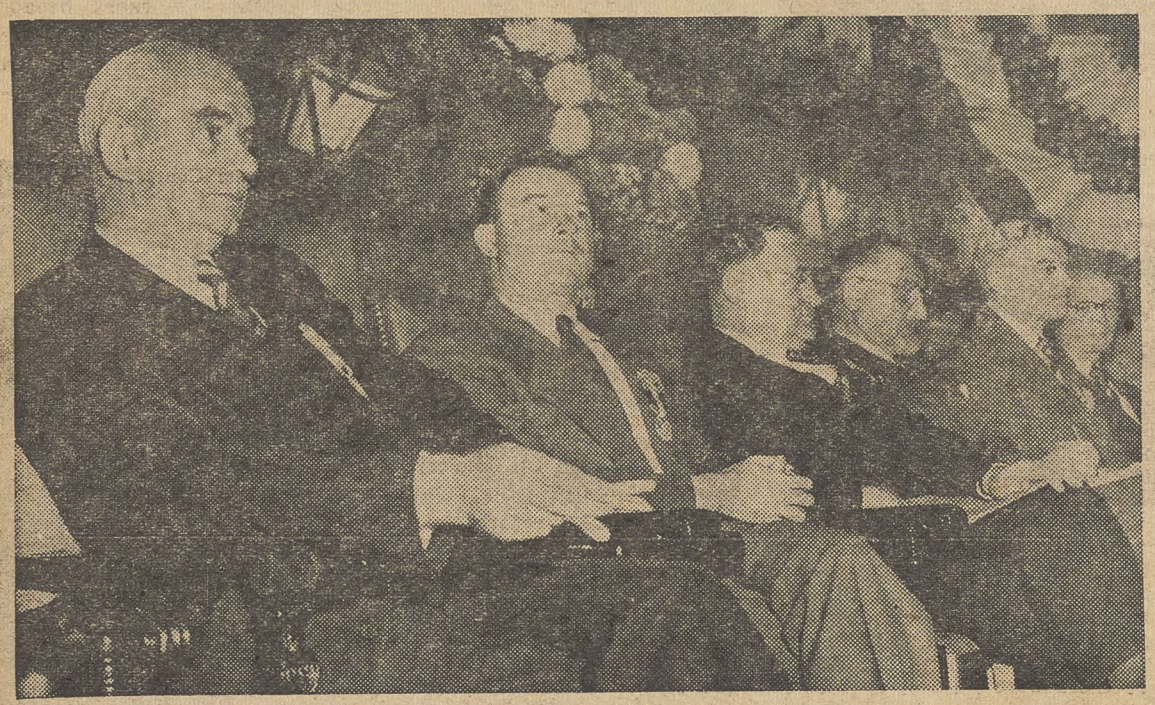
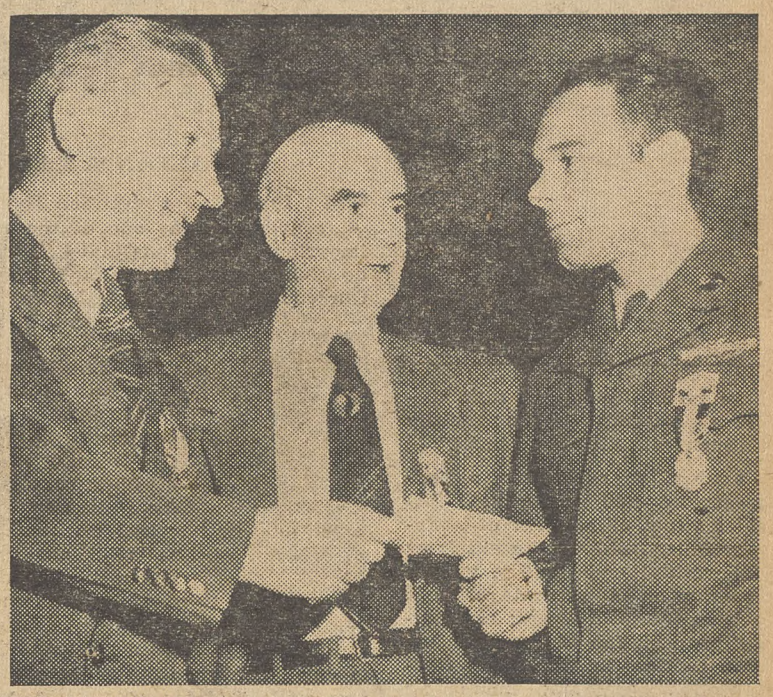
Cameraman Tells More About The Convention

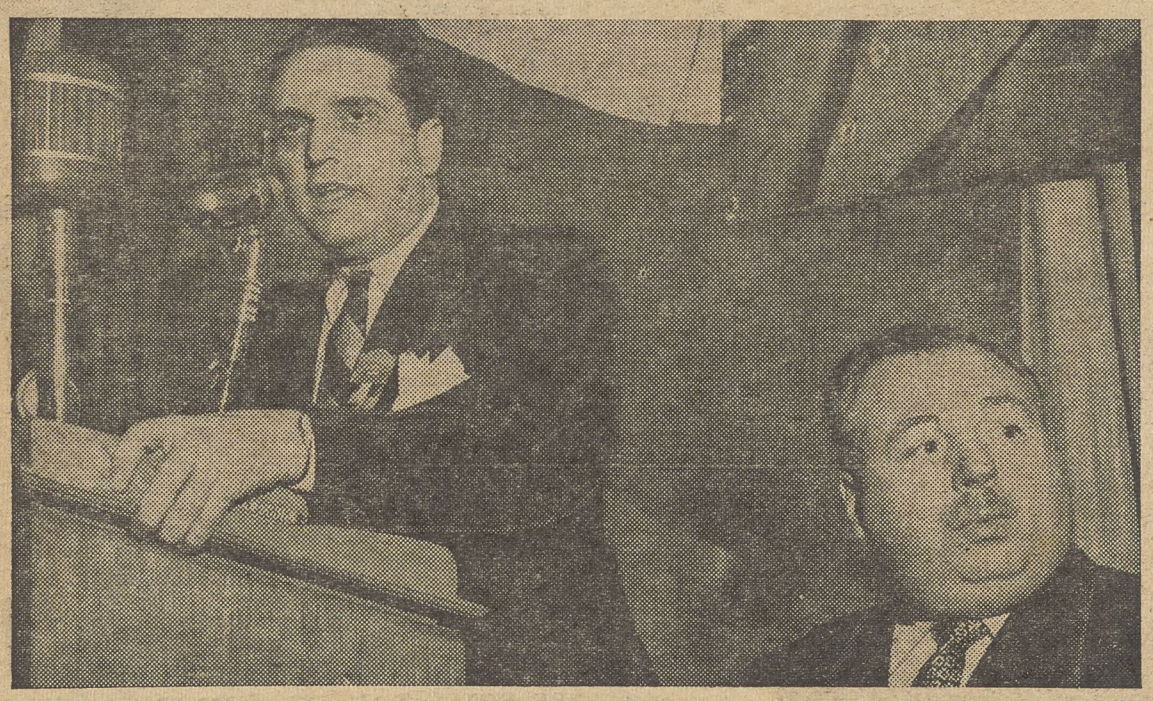
THE PRESS is well represented and attentive as CIO Pres. Philip Murray (at right) speaks. The newsmen are seated at the first two long tables. Delegates are seated at the round tables behind them. Two hundred and thirty reporters were registered by the CIO Publicity Dept.



CIO LEADERS in a serious mood: Left to right, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers. They are shown during a convention session.



$10,000 CHECK is given Sgt. Ralph Juliot, a member of the Steelworkers, by Chairman Irving Abramson of the CIO Community Services Committee, while CIO Pres. Murray approves. Money is for CARE packages for GIs in Korea.



MORE THAN 2000 DELEGATES, families and friends hear Manly Fleischmann, defense production administrator, laud labor's assistance in the defense production program. The other man is Michael V. DiSalle, price stabilization director. Both spoke at the banquet at which the New York City and State CIO were hosts.

BUSY WITH HER PAPERS is Mrs. Irma Carbone, a delegate from the New Haven (Conn.) CIO Council of which she is secretary-treasurer. She has worked in the textile industry 28 years and is a member of the Textile Workers.

CIO Warns On New York Compensation

NEW YORK CIO last week gave the State Legislature its choice: Either strengthen workmen's compensation laws, or labor will drive to improve compensation protection through direct collective bargaining.

That alternative was presented by Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council. The Council represents more than a million CIO union members in the state.

Hollander testified before a New York City hearing of the Joint Legislative Committee on Labor and Industry.

"The largest employers of the State," he predicted, "have given unmistakable evidence that workmen's compensation will be their target in next year's legislative session as unemployment insurance was their target in this year's."

Hollander warned that if the Legislature "follows the pattern it established last year and again bows to the will of these employer groups, then organized labor will have no choice but to seek adequate protection for its members through collective bargaining."

Among strengthening amendments proposed by the State CIO chief were: elimination of statutory dollar maximum benefit (now $32 weekly) and limiting weekly benefits on a percentage basis only to 66⅔% of wages; eliminating participation of private insurance carriers in workmen's compensation program; increasing benefits to workers who received awards under now obsolete benefit schedules with increase being paid out of public funds.

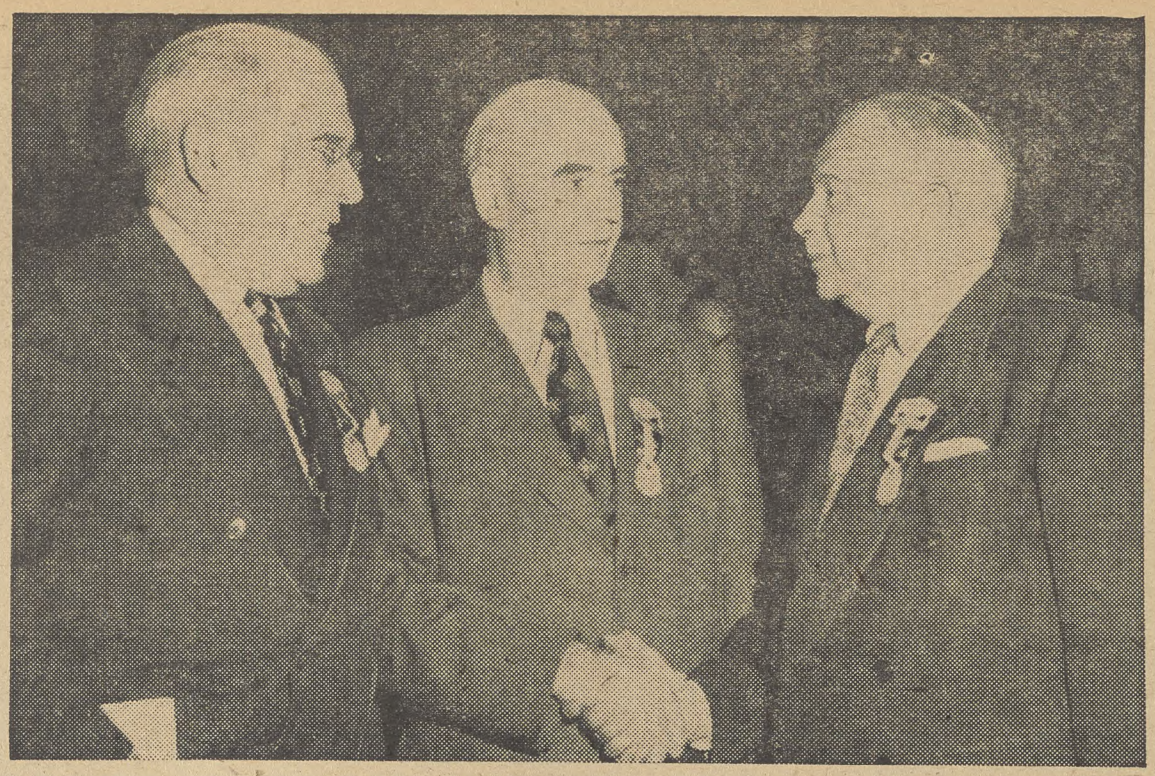
Hollander declared that adequate workmen's compensation protection is the right of every worker and should be guaranteed for all by law. "But," he said, "if the Legislature cannot be persuaded to live up to its responsibilities, then organized labor must take steps to make employers live up to theirs on an individual basis."

In this connection, Hollander recalled the successful drives for pension provisions in their contracts conducted by steel, auto and other CIO unions which he asserted were instrumental in bringing about "necessary and long-overdue" improvements in the Social Security laws.

Attacks On Freedom Of Press Assailed

Fascist and Communist attacks on freedom of the press were protested by the convention.

Singled out were the seizure of La Prensa by Dictator Peron in Argentiana, and the Czech kidnapping and imprisonment of William Oatis, Associated Press correspondent and a CIO Newspaper Guild member.



GREETINGS are extended by CIO Pres. Philip Murray (center) to two convention visitors. Murray clasps the hand of Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. At the left is Mayor David Lawrence of Pittsburgh, Murray's home city. Several other distinguished guests also were introduced.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE 13TH CIO Convention is now history. This convention was one of the most fruitful and important conventions that CIO has ever held. The decisions arrived at are far-reaching in their effect. Our convention has truly become an important national event. The press, radio and television channels all gave considerable space and time to the sessions as they took place. The entire delegation expressed a unanimous desire and determination to carry on the fight for progressive measures that will make for a more secure and happy American worker. We must continue to build our great organization and make 1952 a banner year for organizing the unorganized. Our great leader, Philip Murray, presided over the sessions and performed a masterful job. The job CIO is doing is recognized throughout the world. This was evident at the convention, where there were numerous foreign visitors.

Allan Haywood

ALL IN ALL it was a great week; a tremendous amount of work was accomplished. We must continue to build our organization stronger. Let's all do our part and carry our union on!

Dir. John Riffe of the Southern Organizing Committee reports 21 CIO victories: National Cylinder Gas Co., Houston, Tex., 31 for the Oil Workers, 10 no union; Proctor & Gamble, Dallas, Tex., eligible 425, OWIU 251, independent 166, no union 6; Affiliated Gas Equipment Co., Inc., Tyler, Tex., eligible 10, UAW-CIO 7, no union 2; Texas Sheet Metal & Mfg. Co., Dallas, eligible 57, UAW-CIO 53, no union 4; National Automotive Parts Association, Richmond, Va., eligible 20, UAW-CIO 8, no union 3.

Other Southern drive wins reported by Riffe are: Tenn. Marble Co., Knoxville, Tenn., eligible 57, Stone Workers 36, AFL 24; Southern Cast Stone Co., Knoxville, eligible 75, Stone Workers 54, no union 9; Standard Brands, Dallas, eligible 10, Brewery Workers 8, no union 1; Fitzgerald Cotton Mill, Fitzgerald, Ga., eligible 408, CIO Textile Workers 171, AFL 130, no union 3; Fowler Brothers Motors, Gadsden, Ala., eligible 21, Retail, Wholesale Workers 17, no union 1; C & S Motor Co., Gadsden, eligible 21, Retail, Wholesale Workers 17, no union 2; Oakdene Cotton Compress Co., Charleston, S. C., eligible 52, Packinghouse Workers 42, no union 10; Swift & Co., Charleston, eligible 24, UPWA 24; Southern Maid, Inc., Johnson City, Tenn., eligible 32, UPWA 21, no union 11.

Pres. Morris Pizer, United Furniture Workers, reports six representation victories and two security wins. The representation election victories are: Arlington Furniture Co., Boston, Mass., UFW 6, no union 5; C. H. Hartshorn, Gardner, Mass., UFW 33, no union 14; Universal Metal Co., Saranac, Mich., UFW 58, no union 13; Lee of California, Los Angeles, Calif., UFW 8, no union 4; Metalcraft Products Co., Los Angeles, UFW 47, no union 37; Enterprise (div. of Metalcraft), Los Angeles, UFW 10, no union 2. The security wins are: Trade Upholstery Co., Boston, yes 13, no 0; C. H. Hartshorn, Gardner, yes 34, no 12.

Vice Pres. A. T. Stephens of the Packinghouse Workers reports six representation victories for his union: Armour Garage, Omaha, Nebr., UPWA unanimous; Central Packing Co., Kansas City, Kan., UPWA unanimous; Darling Rendering Co., Marletta, Mich., UPWA 4, against 3; Armour Branch, Orlando, Fla., UPWA 9, against 5; Armour Branch, Greenville, S. C., UPWA 9, against 4; Swift Oil Refinery, Dallas, Tex., UPWA 46, against 1.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, IUE-CIO, reports four wins in representation elections. They are: G.E. Appliance Service Center, Long Island City, N. Y., IUE 21, UE withdrew; Local 736, Ward Products (office workers), Ashtabula, O., IUE 18, UE 1; Local 427, Philharmonic Television, New Brunswick, N. J., IUE 142, AFL withdrew, no union 10; Hubbard Spool, Garrett, Ind., IUE 94, no union 10.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports a representation win for the CIO Woodworkers at the Ace Box Co., Denver, Col. Out of 52 eligible employes, 30 voted for the Woodworkers, 13 for no union and two ballots were void. The same day, at the Grauman Co., Denver, the Woodworkers won a unanimous victory in a representation election.

REG. DIR. James Leary reports that the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers won bargaining rights for a majority of the workers at the National Gypsum Co. Parsons Ordnance Plant, Parsons, Kan. In a representation election for production and maintenance workers, the vote was GC&CWA-CIO 863, UAW-AFL 531, no union 161. Dist. Dir. Joe Appelbaum handled the drive, assisted by Intl. Reps. Ira Williams and W. H. Bone.

Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports that in a representation election at the Oklahoma National Stockyards Co., Oklahoma City, Okla., the workers picked the CIO-UPWA by a vote of 58 to 42 for no union. Intl. Rep. Steve Mauser was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the Zellerbach Paper Co., Los Angeles, the CIO Paperworkers won an important victory over the discredited ILWU in a representation election by a vote of 76 to 26. Intl. Rep. Frank Grillo did a splendid job in handling the campaign.

The Furniture Workers won bargaining rights at eight Los Angeles furniture factories. The election covered workers in the following plants: Brown-Saltman, Spartan Furniture Mfg. Co., Karpen Div. of the Intl. Furniture Co., Hollycraft Furniture Inc., Seally Mattress Co., Edan Co., L. C. Phoenix Co. and the Crest-Pacific Co. The total vote in favor of the CIO Furniture Workers was 305 to 113 for an independent union.

CIO Demands Inquiry On Negro Slaying

IN A QUICK follow-up to adoption of the CIO's civil rights program, the Convention wired President Truman a strong protest and a demand for investigation of the shooting of two Negro prisoners by a Florida sheriff.

Slain was Samuel Shepherd and wounded was Walter Irwin by Sheriff M. V. McCall of Lake County, Fla. McCall claimed they were attempting to escape.

"This is either murder or bad police work," said a wire—approved by the convention—from CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Truman.

"It will be exploited around the world by the totalitarian enemies of America. It will discourage our friends. The facts must be speedily ascertained and justice done."

The CIO action supported a demand by Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Subsequently, the U. S. Attorney General announced plans for federal investigation.

Victims in the Florida shooting were defendants in the long-pending Lakeland case, in which their convictions were set aside by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Truman Bans Jim Crow In Army Schools

A "RIGHT" can't justify a "wrong," President Truman said in effect when he applied a pocket veto to a Federal aid-to-education bill which would have restored racial segregation in schools—particularly on military posts—now operating on an integrated basis.

The President's refusal to sign the bill, passed by Congress a month before adjournment, killed the measure. The bill would have permitted defense areas to get Federal aid in providing schools for anticipated increases in population.

The section objected to by Truman would have required schools located on Federal property in 17 States to conform to State laws calling for segregation of white and Negro students. This, he pointed out, would take in some schools where segregation is not now practiced.

"We should not impair our moral position by enacting a law that requires discrimination based on race," the President said. "Step by step we are discarding old discriminations; we must not adopt new ones."

More Aid Urged For Handicapped

A Convention resolution praised the efforts of CIO affiliates on behalf of the physically handicapped.

But the convention asked expansion of the CIO organizations' efforts for the handicapped and of the rehabilitation program.

CIO Acts Quickly To End Battery Layoffs

Despite the general booming of industry, thousands have been thrown out of work in the storage battery plants throughout the nation. The cause is a shortage of lead, important to the manufacture of batteries.

The Battery Council, consisting of all unions in the industry, except the discredited United Electrical Workers, has protested to government officials. CIO members of the council sent a delegation to Washington to confer with officials.

At left, CIO council members are discussing the critical situation with Munitions Board officials.

Give Them All An Equal Chance!

It doesn't take much—just a pipe, a few fittings, some boards and a little living space—to make these children happy. But the youngsters shown here are lucky: literally millions of Americans their age are being denied even this simple pleasure.

Twenty years of neglect of our schools, and the great increase in the nation's birth rate during the war, now find our educational system without adequate facilities.

Thousands of schools lack play areas; many are unsafe for occupancy. About 1½ million children of kindergarten age aren't attending school at all because there are no facilities to care for them. (For a detailed examination of the nation's school crisis, turn to Page 7.)

Pete's Story — And The Brotherhood Of Man

By AL ZACK

THIS IS THE story of an Ohio worker named Pete, and his family of eight.

Pete once was a member of the CIO, but, after the last war, when prices were high and layoffs were many, Pete moved his family back to the farm.

He had a lot of little mouths to feed and he felt the farm was the best place to be.

Then Pete became sick . . . certainly sick in body and, some doctors said, sick mentally as well.

He was sent to a hospital. He lost his home. Every stick of furniture the family had accumulated the hard way was sold to pay debts.

And Pete's family was broken up.

By court order, his seven little children were sent to various institutions and foster homes and his wife was left alone.

Eventually the doctors decided they were wrong about Pete's mental condition and he was released. He and wife went to Columbus.

They were absolutely penniless and just as friendless.

"When we came to Columbus," says Pete, "all I had was a temperature of 104 and my faith in God."

That was little more than a year ago. Pete went directly to the CIO—to the office of the Ohio CIO Council.

He told his story and the facts were checked. Public welfare agencies and private charitable organizations could do little for Pete.

THEY HAVE rules and regulations—official red tape which provides certain periods of residence before an individual is eligible for assistance.

But eventually, Pete and his wife got work—poor paying work, of course.

But their chain of tough luck hadn't run out. Pete was seriously ill and there were hospital and doctor bills.

And they still didn't have their children.

In effect, the court said: "You can have your children when you have a home for them."

Columbus housing authorities said: "You can have a home when you have your children."

A year went by and the battle for Pete went on. Now welfare and Community Chest agencies could do more to help, and they did.

Pete got the home. He was promised his family on a certain day. Arrangements were made for piecemeal settlement of the bills. Both he and his wife had jobs. Pete even had a raise of a few cents an hour.

But there was one big obstacle to overcome before Pete's problems were settled.

He had a home. But he didn't have a single item of furniture for that home.

Pete and his family weren't afraid, they said. They would be satisfied to start all over again without anying.

BUT WINTER was coming on. The kids couldn't sleep on the floor. They couldn't eat off the floor.

And no welfare agency—public or private—could furnish a home for a family.

Then the Columbus CIO Council stepped in.

It made an extraordinary appeal in the Columbus CIO News. The appeal told Pete's story and asked CIO members to donate anything they had—"anything from a teaspoon to a table . . . from a dish to a mattress."

That story did the trick.

In less than a week, Columbus CIO members had completely furnished a home for Pete, his wife and their seven children.

Here are some of the things the family received:—

BEDS, BED clothing, blankets, sheets, pillows, washing machine, stove, refrigerator, clothes for the children (who range in age from 2 to 11), tables, chairs, pots, pans, dishes, silverware, lamps, curtains, 300 pounds of potatoes, toys and even comic books for the youngster's entertainment.

The response was so generous there were even a few things left over for some other deserving families known to the Community Chest.

Pete and his family were reunited, in a home completely furnished by what the Columbus CIO Council calls the "wonderful, kind-hearted and generous members of the CIO."

In an open letter of gratitude in the Columbus CIO News, the Council's Executive Board said: "Our readers are wonderful people."

An Pete and his family? Well, they have a new and abiding faith in God and their fellowman, that they surely remembered on Thanksgiving Day.

Textile Union Raps Wage Board For 'Robbery By Red Tape'

THE CIO Textile Workers Executive Council last week characterized the failure of the Wage Stabilization Board to approve fringe benefits for TWUA members as a "real runaround" and "robbery by red tape."

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve—who is a labor member of WSB—said that 200,000 workers in the cotton-rayon and woolen-worsted industries have been waiting eight months for approval of fringe benefits won by negotiations and, in some instances, by strike action.

The council pointed out "the brutal fact that retroactivity does not apply to fringe cases."

WSB's answer that no policy has been set on fringe issues, the TWUA council said, is only a "bureaucratic alibi to conceal the truth that sufficient time has been at the disposal of WSB to develop such a policy—if it had really so desired."

Benefits referred to by the council are pensions, retirement-severance pay and insurance improvements.

The council also demanded that the board "promptly and clearly" set policies and procedures to guide the union in future negotiations so that workers may enjoy benefits "without excessive delay."

THE COUNCIL bitterly protested awarding of government contracts for 250,000 blankets to Prison Industries, Inc.

The TWUA demanded that directors of the organization stop accepting contracts for textile products until the present textile unemployment crisis is solved.

The council said it is a "paradox which compels free workers, dependent on the operations of a relatively free market, to face rivalry from the highly regulated efforts of prison labor which can readily be adapted to a wide range of industrial activities."

The Textile Workers council also rapped the U. S. Conciliation and Mediation Service for collapse of the three-man panel appointed in May to settle textile disputes in the South. The panel was appointed when TWUA stopped its industry-wide five-week strike at the service's request.

The council demanded that the service certify the dispute to WSB to assure "harmony, efficiency and free production in the southern textile industry, and a measure of justice for southern textile workers."

'Big Steel' Contract Talks Will Open This Week

THE CIO Steelworkers and U. S. Steel will open negotiations for a new contract at Pittsburgh on Nov. 27, four days before the required opening date in present basic steel pacts.

U. S. Steel—"Big Steel"—is referred to as the bellwether of the industry because it usually leads in reaching agreement with the steel union.

About 2000 basic and fabrication steel companies have been sent formal letters by USA-CIO asking for opening of negotiations—and formal strike notices as required by the Taft-Hartley Act. Meetings have been arranged with most of them.

This is the first year since 1947 that the union has the chance to re-open its entire standard agreement in the basic steel industry.

USA and CIO Pres. Philip Murray told reporters during the meetings of the USA Wage Policy Committee in Atlantic City 10 days ago that he hoped that a new contract could be negotiated "without government intervention" and that he saw no reason why a new pact could not be negotiated before Dec. 31.

The union will seek "substantial" wage increases, a guaranteed annual wage and 20 other important contract negotiations.

Murray will head the union's negotiators, which will consist of directors of districts where "Big Steel" plants are located, and officials of locals consisting of U. S. Steel plant workers.

U. S. Steel's negotiator will be John A. Stephens, vice president in charge of industrial relations.

TWUA Asks Pay Hike On U.S. Contracts

CIO TEXTILE Workers last week asked the government to increase minimum wages on government contract work in the woolen and worsted industries.

The TWUA, announced Pres. Emil Rieve, proposed a 21½c hourly increase to $1.26½ an hour, and other safeguards under the Walsh-Healy Act. This act sets wage minimums for private industries handling U.S. contracts.

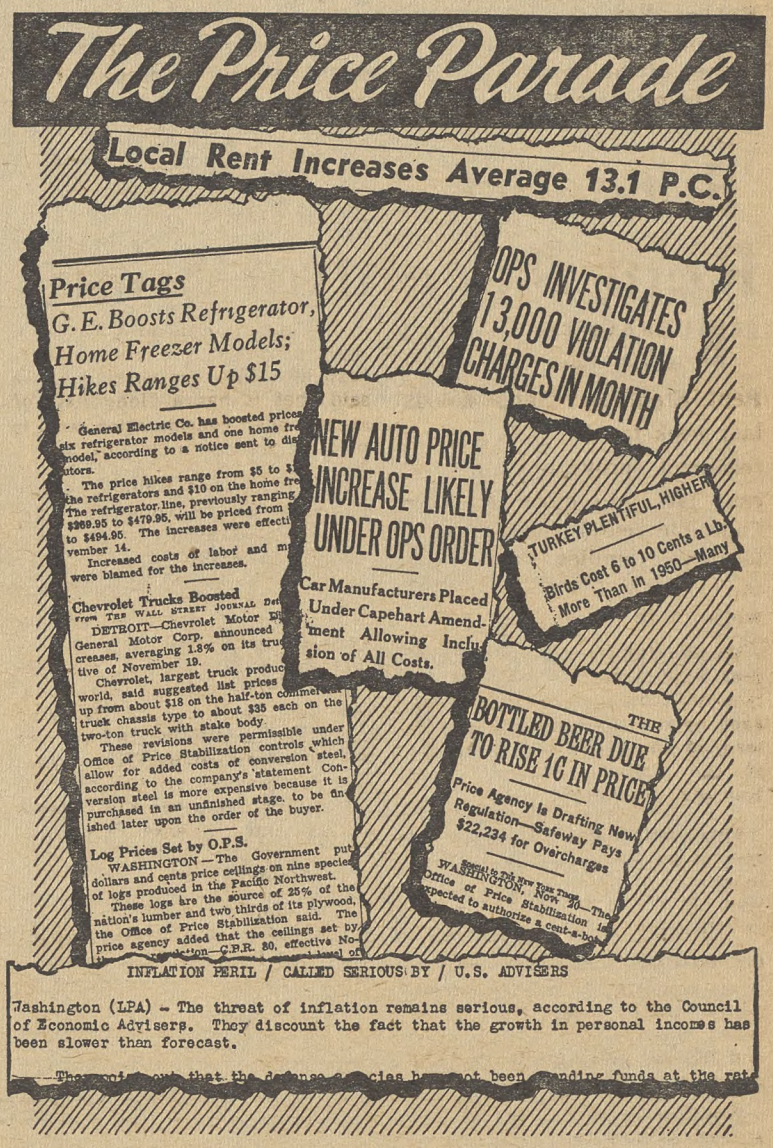
According to an announcement from TWUA, the minimum wage increase proposal is part of "a campaign to bolster existing wage standards" in the textile industry.

Rieve also petitioned these additional improvements: an escalator wage clause providing a 1c increase in rates for each 1.18 rise in the consumer price index, six paid holidays, shift premiums and fixed vacation benefits.

The Textile Workers' request was addressed to William R. McComb, Wage and Hour Div. administrator.

URW Moves Parley Site

The CIO Rubber Workers have moved their 1952 convention site from Akron to Asbury Park, N. J., it was announced by Desmond Walker, URW international secretary-treasurer.



Abramson Gets CARE Post Again

Irving Abramson, chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, has been re-elected to his seventh annual consecutive term as vice president of CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, Inc.).

Abramson was again chosen for the post at the recent annual meeting of CARE Board of Directors. He has represented the CSC on the board ever since CARE was founded as a non-profit, government approved relief agency in Nov. 1945.

As a CARE vice president, Abramson has played a decisive role in determining the policies and operation of the agency. In less than six years, upwards of 10 million food and textile packages, valued at more than $100 million, have been channeled to the needy in a score of overseas countries.

Much of this CARE aid was contributed by CIO members, local and international unions and other CIO affiliates through CSC and went to needy trade unionists abroad to build their free and democratic trade union organizations.

Give A Buck To PAC

PROOF that CIO women as well as men are behind the Armed Forces Blood Donor Program is given by pretty Mary Gray, treasurer of CIO Rubber Workers Local 154 in Denver, Colo. as she makes her donation at the Blood Donor Center of the Denver General Hospital. Awaiting their turn are two more CIO members, LaRoy Purdy, District 8 director of the CIO Communications Workers who is also a State Senator, and Marilyn Staley, a member of the Office & Professional Workers Local 1715 in Denver. Marilyn's husband is fighting in Korea at the present time. The Blood Donor Program has been endorsed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Sam Perrone Surrenders—

UAW Beats Thugs, Gets First Contract At Detroit Stove

FOR EMPLOYES of the Detroit-Michigan Stove Co. in Detroit, Thanksgiving Day 1951 was a day they'll long remember—and one they could well give thanks on.

The strong-arm men who had kept their wages low and their working conditions bad, who had beaten them, stoned their homes or threatened them when they talked about a union, were on the run.

They were enjoying their first full day under a union contract—and they marked it by having the first paid holiday in the firm's tumultuous history.

The CIO Auto Workers finally wrested the contract from the reluctant company on Thanksgiving Eve.

On the same day, Santo (Sam) Perrone, gangster chieftain whose thugs had blocked unionization of the stove works, except during the all too few years he spent in prison, surrendered to a warrant charging him with conspiracy to deprive the plant's employes of their right to organize.

Perrone, whose unsavory history as the company's paid strikebreaker was bared before the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee last spring, was one of five persons named in a warrant issued Nov. 19.

THE OTHERS were his son-in-law, Augostino Orlando, who runs a gas station owned by Perrone and located across the street from the stove works; Nono Minaudo, who owns a bowling alley near Detroit Police headquarters; Harry (Poppa Dee) Johnson, 71, a former convict, and Willie Warford, a stove works employe.

Orlando, Johnson and Warford were among 10 men arrested in the previous week for investigation of conspiracy to prevent workers from joining labor unions.

The three were given a hearing on Nov. 19 and were held in $1000 bail each for examination on Nov. 29.

Perrone himself surrendered Nov. 21 and was released on bond for examination with the others. He said he had been deer-hunting in Northern Michigan.

The new contract, which covers about 600 employes, yields an estimated 24c an hour in money benefits, according to Michael F. Lacey, co-director of UAW Region 1.

Everybody gets a flat increase of 10c an hour under the pact, with an average of 2c additional earmarked for the elimination of inequities.

THE COMPANY agreed to a fully funded pension plan, like the plans in the auto industry; $3000 life insurance for each employe, and sickness and accident insurance to yield $30 a week for 26 weeks—all at company expense.

Paid vacations as in other UAW contracts were negotiated, along with six paid holidays. The non-money clauses—seniority, grievance procedure, etc.—are of the standard type in the area.

And on top of all that, there is the full union shop.

The agreement runs for two years, with reopenings every six months on the money clauses. It was subject to ratification by the employes, who were expected to approve it this week.

Perrone, Minaudo and John A. Fry, president of the stove company, were witnesses before the Kefauver Committee at hearings in Detroit.

The hearing and the records of an earlier grand jury investigation, which had been kept secret until the Senate committee released them, told a sordid story.

THEY DISCLOSED how the stove works' employes had tried to form a union in 1934 and were forced out on strike by the company, of which Fry was then general manager.

After that, it was revealed, Fry gave the job of breaking the strike to Perrone and his brothers, Gaspar and Matthew, already notorious as big shots in Detroit's Mafia crime clique. The Perrones brought in thugs as strikebreakers. They started picket line fights, beat and intimidated the strikers and their families, and broke the walkout and the union.

For this job, Perrone was given a contract for handling the firm's scrap metal, worth about $5000 a month to him since then. Gaspar got the job of making the firm's cores under contract—with the company's equipment and materials, and in company space. Matthew, since dead, was cut in on the take.

'Bureaucracy' Hit In Rent Recontrol Snafu

"BUREAUCRACY at its worst" was blamed by Rent Stabilizer Tighe Woods last week for delays in getting recontrol provisions of the rent law into effect and for "horrible rents" charged servicemen's families living near military installations and workers in defense centers.

Woods—the man in charge of rent control enforcement (or the lack of it under legislation meat-axed by the Dixiegop Congress)—teed off in a television interview of the Critical Areas Defense Housing Committee.

This committee, representing several governmental agencies, is in charge of naming areas where rent lids are to be restored or put in effect for the first time.

IN WOODS' words, the committee consists of "second-echelon moles in a mountain that has labored three and a half months and has actually squeezed out 48 puny little areas."

Woods said there ought to be at least 250 new rent control areas by now.

Actually, the rent stabilizer's office disclosed last week that only 39 areas have been controlled since Aug. 1. Nine other areas are expected to be controlled soon.

Latest areas to be placed under control are Newport News, Va., and Barstow, Calif.

Four other areas were certified to Woods' office for control: Colorado Springs, Colo.; Marietta, Ga.; Tucson, Ariz., and Braidwood, Ill.

Revealing his plea to Mobilization Director Charles E. Wilson to "get some action," Woods said:

"Somebody is dragging his heels and I intend to find out who it is."

Ivan D. Carson, of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, recently appointed head of the committee, insisted it was working as "expeditiously as possible." He said that it has a "long list" of areas under consideration and is meeting weekly to clear it up.

His predecessor, Ralph Caul, resigned with the complaint that the set-up prevented him from getting anywhere.

The group is made up of agency representatives who could not get excited about critical areas, he told a Senate Preparedness subcommittee headed by Sen. L. Johnson (D. Tex.), which reported shocking conditions in housing near military camps. Other agencies represented on the committee include the Labor and Defense Departments, Defense Production Administration and Economic Stabilization Agency.

"I'm supposed to be the guy in charge of rent control," Woods said, "yet I am the last one to be consulted—sometimes they don't even bother to consult me on critical area designations."

College Kids Get Royal Treatment From The NAM

"Catch 'em while they're young!" The National Association of Manufacturers is still carrying that to the last degree!

This year, as it has for the last three, the NAM is bringing 48 college students to New York City for its annual "Congress of American Industry."

NAM will pay all the freight for the students, from business administration and economics classes.

The NAM calls this a "program of public service" and an answer to many questions from colleges "asking just what kind of an organization" the NAM is and what it does.

Here are some answers on the NAM, which the college students won't get at the "Congress of American Industry."

It killed price controls back in 1946.

It drafted and won passage of the Taft-Hartley Act.

WSB Lifts Freeze On Incentive Plans

THE WAGE Stabilization Board has finally made up its mind on two policy issues which it has had pending before it since it imposed the general 10% wage increase limitation a year ago.

Under certain circumstances, the board's decisions make possible additional increases in wages.

By a vote of 8 to 4, with all labor members dissenting, the WSB on Nov. 20 lifted its freeze on incentive pay plans and set up yardsticks governing their approval.

Earlier, the policy of "equal pay for equal work" was unanimously approved by the board. It voted to grant wage hikes where necessary to insure fair wage rates "without regard to sex, race, color or national origin."

The controversial decision on piece work and other incentive pay systems was described by WSB Chairman Nathan Feinsinger as merely giving "formal approval to existing industry practices."

LABOR members filed no dissenting opinion but expressed disapproval in keeping with traditional trade union principles.

Incentive wage plans, in the main, are regarded by labor as a form of speed-up and are prohibited in many union contracts. Under most of them the worker gains little and often loses much because of undue pressure for increased output.

Under the new WSB policy the board will approve incentive plans covering an individual or a group of employes only if workers are given an opportunity to earn at least 15% above the daily or hourly rate for their jobs. To be permissable, the plan must include a minimum wage guarantee and shall not result in an increase in unit labor costs.

Meanwhile the Salary Stabilization Board announced a new policy which puts a lid on the stock-buying plans which hundreds of companies offer their top executives. The board decided not to limit plans where the executive pays at least 95% of the market value of the stock, but hereafter plans offering a greater discount cannot be used to beat the general 10% limitation on salary increases.

Steel Union Gets 16c After Strike

An eight-week strike of more than 1000 CIO Steelworkers at Clark Brothers Co., Olean, N.Y., won a 10c general increase, plus 6c in fringe benefits.

The contract, first with the company, was made retroactive to June 1, date the local was certified as bargaining agent.

Strike At Florsheim

It was a rough Thanksgiving for some 2500 members of the United Shoe Workers, CIO, who have been on strike at the Florsheim Shoe Co. since the beginning of November.

It has been an unusual strike; for in the midst of this inflationary period, the workers at Florsheim are fighting a company proposal that would almost certainly cut their wages.

Florsheim, a highly profitable corporation, gained headlines a month or two ago with an announcement that it was cutting prices as a service to the public. But there is no public service in wage cutting at any time.

During this period, when government figures show an almost daily rise in the cost of living, any cut in take-home pay for CIO members at Florsheim would prove disastrous to thousands of families.

The United Shoe Workers, in fighting this absurd company proposal and in demanding a deserved raise in their wages, is living up to the CIO's long tradition of militant protection of workers' interests.

The strike at Florsheim has the full support of the CIO. The strike has been endorsed unanimously by the CIO Executive Board. It also has the support of union members throughout the land, who know that any proposal for trimming wages in times like these is unjust and absurd.

See Here, Don Juan

Dictator Juan Peron of Argentine, having been "re-elected" after a campaign in which the opposition was denied almost every known way of getting its message to the public, has now wrapped himself in the robes of a political scientist.

Peronista Argentine leaves much to be desired, from any democratic view-point. Civil liberties have been choked; rising prices have far outstripped wages; and corruption is widespread.

Nevertheless, Peron—having won an easy election victory in the absence of a fair election campaign—seems to like the situation. In fact, he boasts about it to his hand-picked stooges.

Peron would have the world believe that the Argentine mess is the "labor union state" in action.

No decent man or woman who carries a union card in any democratic organization will accept the idea that Peronism has any relationship to bona fide trade unionism. The objective of honest unions, in both the economic and political field, is the extension of democracy—not its murder.

Peron, like Stalin, has captured free trade unions—through the use of violence, bribery, threats and secret police. Peron, like Stalin, claims that his state is a worker's state.

But the Argentine, like the Soviet Union, has become a slave dominion. Unions exist not to protect workers but to enslave them for the will of the dictator.

End Of An Editor

The editor of the conservative Boston Herald has resigned because he couldn't print in his paper—owned by big New England financial interests—some mild personal doubts about the views expressed by Sen. Taft in his new book on foreign policy.

In Republican circles, one gathers, the old saying that a man "would rather be right than president" has been altered. The GOP would rather have Taft as president than be right.

That Wonderful Ceiling!

Dixiecrats' Days Numbered

LEADERS OF the Dixiecrat movement are bitter and frustrated men who don't really believe themselves the poisonous ideas they preach, and certainly don't express the views of the mass of the Southern people.

The marked contrast between the motives of those Southern governors and politicians "directing the new Dixiecrat movement and the aspirations of the people of the South," are pointed out in a recent article by Thomas L. Stokes, newspaper columnist, a native Southerner himself.

Stokes wrote a series of articles in the early years of the CIO's organizing drives, on the economic and social consequences of the trek southward of employers looking for "cheap and docile labor." The Amalgamated Clothing Workers reprinted the columns in a pamphlet called "Carpetbaggers of Industry," and gave it wide circulation particularly in the South where it did much to help call attention to the exploitation of low-paid Southern workers.

IN A COLUMN on the Dixiecrats published last week, Stokes says that the movement "is based primarily on exploitation of ancient prejudice which is still easily aroused among a people who, to borrow a phrase from Abaham Lincoln, long remember and cannot easily accept on an equal basis those (Negroes) who once fetched and carried in human slavery." Stokes went on:

"Those who exploit this prejudice are betraying the South. What is worse, they are betraying it consciously for selfish political ends. But the impression that gives hope is that they do not truly represent the Southern people, and that the Southern people seem to be waking up to this fact.

"The Dixicrats are bitter and frustrated men and if the truth be known, they do not themselves believe the poisonous doctrine they preach and some let this admission escape privately.

"That is their real crime and the tragedy of what they are doing to the South. Theirs is a philosophy of negativism, of defeatism. They are much closer to real defeat, it is suggested, than they know.

"For the South today is not negativism or defeatism, nor are its people. Theirs is not a negative philosophy. It is a positive philosophy, a dynamic philosophy. All around are evidences of that. The simplest and most direct evidence is in the change that has come in only a few years in the landscape of the South.

The Southern people have come to believe in their glorious natural heritage and are utilizing its resources. That has taken help and encouragement from the Federal Government. That is their government. A soverign state is also a part of a union of states and is a union, as in a family, all help each other.

"OLD PREJUDICES do not go easily, some never quite ever. But they are going gradually. There is a bouyant new generation in the South that knows only the new South, and it sees that, all about it.

"The younger generation, which exubertantly waves Confederate flags at college football celebrations, also rises up against its elders and welcomes Negro students among it to break down old barriers.

"This is happening in the South. While one perhaps should not try to interpret just what the Confederate flag may mean to the newer generation, one may suggest that possibly, as is the way with youngsters, it is a symbol not of an ancient rebellion that was lost, but of a new rebellion against a tradition that that old rebellion represented.

"As such, if that were true, it is a monstrous, ironic joke the newer generation is playing on its elders—and in particular the elder generation as represented in the narrow and tortured prejudice symbolized in the Dixiecrat movement.

"FOR THE TRUTH is beginning to be suspected, which is that there is some selfish purpose behind the appeal to racial prejudice. The trick is for the politician, in league with the privileged, to rally the underprivileged to him and to those privileged interests by stirring up racial prejudice.

"That is disclosed if you inquire who provides the big chunks of money for the Dixiecrats. It is great corporate interests, many headquartered far from the South."

But the people of the South, Stokes says, are beginning to be aware of this trick. It's "wearing thin," he believes, and ventures the prediction that "what we are seeing now is the Gettysburg of the Second Confederacy that the Dixiecrats have sought to foist on the South."

Not All The Industry's Gas Is In Its Wells!

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

IF THE GOVERNMENT ever decides to regulate all natural gas prices, some of the biggest producers will stop selling gas to entire areas—and deprive themselves of millions of dollars in profits.

Of course, that's not the way K. S. Adams put it when he addresesd the Oil Man's Club at Kansas City, Mo. the other day. What he said was that government regulation would mean less gas at higher prices. And who would suffer? The poor consumer.

Adams heads Phillips Petroleum Co., ninth in the industry. It has directors of the boards of Dupont Continental Can and the Lambert Co.

It has an indirect link, through directors, with Union Oil, Manufacturers Trust Co. and Tide Water Oil. It has 49 subsidiaries, including five pipeline companies, a railway, a radio telephone company. One, the Wasatch Oil Co., itself has 13 subsidiaries.

Phillips' net profits for the first nine months of 1951 were $49,751,662, against $35,885,522 in 1950, a jump of about 37%. Yet Adams told the Kansas City men that producers of natural gas receive only a "niggardly portion of what the consumer pays."

Phillips is the company the Federal Power Commission recently decided it had no jurisdiction over. Its theory was that Phillips was just a producer and gatherer of natural gas, and was not actually selling gas in interstate commerce. Wisconsin and the cities of Kansas City, Milwaukee and Detroit are expected to appeal that decision.

The exemption of Phillips from rate control means the company can charge the pipeline companies anything it pleases. The pipeline companies then go to the FPC and demand higher rates because they have to pay more. This makes a mockery of rate controls and the consumer gets stuck with a higher gas bill.

But that's not the way Adams sees it. He says that if his company and others like it are regulated, they will sell all their gas in the states in which it is produced.

This automatically would create shortages in states which do not have gas fields of their own. Why, says Adams, the mere threat of federal regulation already is causing this to happen.

"The natural gas producer and gatherer remains uncertain as to where or when the hand of federal control may reach out to seize his business," Adams says.

"If selling his gas for use outside the producing state may make him liable to federal control, then the gas producer prefers to sell his gas at home.

"This is not something that may happen. It is something that is happening. Federal control of the producer and gatherer—the touted road to a plentiful supply of gas at depression prices—is in reality nothing but a sugar-coated route to less gas at higher prices."

FPC staff experts say Adams is talking through his hat. They say his speech was based on "three rather dubious assumptions":

1. That the commission, which must approve any reduction in gas service, would okay the withholding of gas from states which do not have reserves of their own to draw on.
2. That the big producers would deprive themselves of milions in profits they could make by selling in interstate commerce, even under federal regulations.
3. That the big producers could sell enough gas in the states in which it is produced to make ends meet.

The battle over regulation of the power interests—gas, oil, and electric—has raged for years. The companies spent millions in an attempt to avoid regulation of any sort. They spent more millions later to weaken regulation, and still more millions to capture state and federal commissions.

That the gas interests now dominate the FPC became apparent in the Phillips decision.

The decision, in effect, repealed President Truman's veto of the so-called Kerr Bill, passed by Congress last year. Truman himself helped in the death of his veto by naming to the commission, since the Kerr Bill, three of the four members who voted against the public in the Phillips case.

Adams is afraid the courts will upset the FPC ruling. He called on the "public" to ignore "talk about keeping prices down" by control regulations and "realize that their best interests lie in an unregulated producing industry competing vigorously in the search for and the development of new reserves."

Competiiton in the gas industry really IS keen. Five companies control more than 70% of the natural gas reserves of the great Texas-Oklahoma Panhandle fields, with Phillips alone controlling 20%.

Twelve companies control more than 70% of the reserves in the Hugoton fields in Kansas and Oklahoma. Phillips' share is about 15%.

Catholic Prelates Condemn 'Slander' In Political Life

THE CATHOLIC bishops of the United States, at their annual meeting in Washington, issued a formal statement roundly condemning immorality in all its phases.

They also pleaded that "justice and benevolence govern the operations of the state and relationships between individuals and groups."

Much of the statement dealt with morality—or the lack of it—in politics and public life. Some Catholics read into one section a condemnation of the activities of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

"Those who are selected for office by their fellow men are entrusted with grave responsibilities," the statement said. "They have been selected not for self-enrichment but for conscientious public service.

"In their speech and in their actions they are bound by the same laws of justice and charity which bind individuals in every other sphere of human activity.

"Dishonesty, slander, detraction and defamation of character are as truly transgressions of God's commandments when resorted to by men in political life as they are for all other men."

Churchill Gets Union Warning On Wage Cuts

Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain has been warned that the country's unions will not stand for any effort of his new Conservative government to lower working class standards.

Pres. H. G. Brotherton of the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions, advised Churchill that if his party makes any such attempt, the labor movement "will ensure that there is such a state of affairs evoked in this country that they will be bound have second thoughts."

LOW COST COOPERATIVE housing program quarter of a century long was celebrated by CIO Clothing Workers with New York banquet last week. Last unit (shown), finished this year, is on Grand st. on lower East Side and contains 796 dwelling units. Other units are nearby on Grand st. and in the Bronx. Representing $20 million investment, they provide 2466 units housing 9245 persons. The late Sidney Hillman inspired the project.

Co-Op Housing Gains Hailed By ACWA

TWENTY-FIVE years of successful sponsorship of low-cost cooperative housing in New York was celebrated by the CIO Clothing Workers with a banquet last week.

During the quarter - century period, it was announced, the union has guided the construction of developments in the Bronx and on the lower East Side which provide 2466 units sheltering 9245 persons. The total cost was $20 million.

Each tenant-cooperator has an equity in his apartment ranging from $500 to $650 per room. In buildings completed before 1946, rentals average slightly less than $12 per room per month; in buildings completed since then they are $15 per room per month.

The first houses were completed in the Bronx in 1926-7 and contained 318 dwelling units with 1187 rooms. New projects, the latest this year, have been added since then until the Bronx total now stands at 1434 units with 5268 rooms.

The ACWA program on the lower East Side included a slum-clearance project. It was started in 1930 at 504 Grand st. with the erection of 236 units for 930 persons. This year marked completion of 796 new units, with quarters for 3047 persons, on an adjoining site.

Low-cost cooperative housing by the union was largely inspired by the late Sidney Hillman, ACWA president, and Abraham E. Kazan, president of the Alamgamated Housing Corp., who guided the ventures from start to finish.

The basic plan was elementary—to bring low-cost housing, with modern conveniences, with plenty of space for light and air, and with areas for recreation, within the reach of skilled workers and others in the modest income brackets.

They were helped in bringing the program to fruition by Jacob S. Potofsky, Hillman's successor as ACWA president; U. S. Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.), Aaron Rabinowitz and Robert S. Szold. George W. Springsteen was the architect.

In summarizing the success of the program in a speech at the banquet, Kazan said:

"The fact that, after 22 years, more than 70% of the original member-cooperators remain in the community, and nearly 100 young couples, children of these pioneers, have chosen to settle among them, is eloquent evidence of the continued attractiveness of the enterprises."

Potofsky presided at the banquet. Other speakers included Herman T. Stichman, State commissioner of housing; Robert Moses, city construction coordinator and park commissioner; Borough President Robert F. Wagner, Jr., of Manhattan; City Comptroller Lazarus Joseph, and Louis Pink, director of the Blue Cross.

Peronista Police Torture Jailed Railroad Strikers

Several railway union members jailed by Argentine Dictator Peron after a railroad strike have been tortured with electric needles and other devices, an inter-American labor bulletin charged.

The men have been held in jail without being permited to see their attorneys. The family of one prisoner received a bundle of blood-stained clothing from the jail. Another tortured prisoner tried to commit suicide, the report said.

The men are members of Argentina's oldest national trade union. It is one of the last few remaining unions in the country not dominated by the Peron regime.

Panama Ship—

Fugitive From 'Slums Of The Seven Seas'

Since the end of the war, American maritime unions have been bombarding authorities with protests against the transfer of U. S. ships — often built with public funds—to Panamian registry. They have shown that seamen who sail under the flag of Panama have no unions to protect them from exploitation by grasping ship operators, and have no social legislation to safeguard minimum standards of wages and working conditions.

The following story consists of excerpts from an article by Verner Ulvstig, editor of the Swedish Seamen's Union magazine. It appeared in the ITF Journal, monthly organ of the Intl. Transport Workers Journal, trade body of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

REPRESENTATIVES of Swedish Seamen's Union (third and sixth from left) discuss appalling conditions aboard S. S. Filadelfos discovered when "ragamuffin of the seas" put into port of Gotherburg. Flying the Panamanian flag, the owners forced sub-standard living, working and wage conditions on the crew, helpless with no union to aid them. But the Swedish union invoked an Intl. Transport Federation boycott, negotiated a contract and forced a complete overhaul job before the ship was allowed to sail.

DURING THE early summer of this year, something of a sensation was caused in the Swedish port of Gothenburg by the arrival of the S. S. Filadelfos, sailing under the ill-famed merchant flag of Panama.

Those of the Swedish public who had had a chance of admiring the fine modern vessels recently acquired by their country's merchant fleet were given a first-class opportunity of comparing them with that sorry hulk from the slums of the seven seas known as the Filadelfos.

At the same time they were treated to an uncensored glimpse of just how badly seafarers can be dealt with by greedy and unscrupulous shipowners when there exists no trade union to protect them or social legislation to safeguard their working conditions and living standards.

The Filadelfos—a vessel of 6800 tons belonging to the Cia Panamena de Navegacion Aisne—was built in Germany in 1914. Since that time she has traded under the flags of various countries, finally seeking refuge on that last resort of sub-standard vessels—the shipping register of Panama.

The officers—all of Greek nationality and related to one another—operate this floating coffin as a kind of family concern, under the auspices of N. J. Pateras & Sons, Ltd., of London. A part of the crew is made up of Greeks, the remainder being Egyptians, Sudanese, Senegalese and other colored seafarers.

When representatives of the Swedish Seamen's Union visited the Filadelfos, they found conditions so appalling that immediate boycott action—on lines laid down by the ITF—was deemed necessary.

AS SOON as we stepped on to the deck our attention was attracted by the ancient and well-nigh useless cargo-handling gear, an examination of which had already decided Gothenburg's dockers to refuse to unload the vessel with its own equipment and to use quay cranes instead.

The fo'c's'le, consisting of an upper and lower section, was found to be in such a filthy and neglected state as to defy description. In the top section lived the Greeks, whilst the colored seamen were "accommodated" below.

Down below, rats scurried in the gloomy, cellar-like compartment in which men were expected to live. The skylights were badly cracked. The bulkheads consisted of bare iron plates, thick with rust and devoid of any trace of woodwork or insulation, a fact which to lift them in an emer- point in favor of this black hole of Calcutta—the absence of lice!

The bunks were nothing more than wooden chests. Bedding—except for mattresses supplied by the men themselves—was conspicuous by its absence. Water leaked through the sides of the fo'c's'le and the food—like everything else aboard—was of extremely poor quality.

Wages varied between 18 pounds (one pound is worth $2.82) per month for a colored seaman to 28 pounds for a Greek crew member and payment was, in any case, irregular. There was no agreement regarding paid holidays, time off, sick pay or, for that matter any other social benefits whatsoever.

The vessel as a whole showed unmistakable signs of irresponsible neglect by its operators.

The lifeboats were rotten and contained neither equipment nor stores. They were, in any case, completely useless since there were neither davits nor falls with which to lift them in an emergency. In fact, the whole of the so-called lifesaving seemed to be at least 100 years out of date and in addition, showed every sign of having lain on the sea bottom for a considerable length of time.

Our union immediately asked the Swedish Transport Workers Union to put an embargo on the ship. This organization, to which most Swedish dockers belong, later declared its complete willingness to cooperate.

IN ADDITION, the Port Shipping Inspector was sent for. He refused the Filadelfos permission to leave port until repairs, particularly to the lifeboats and other safety equipment, has been carried out. The Panamanian Consul (of Swedish nationality) also carried out an inspection and decided to take away the classification certificate.

A telegram was then sent by the Seamen's Union to the owner in London, requesting that he sign an agreement based on current conditions in the Swedish merchant marine and conforming to accepted international maritime standards.

As a result of our determined attitude, a settlement was quickly reached. Three days after the Filadelfos arrived in Gothenburg, new monthly wage scales were agreed upon between representatives of the owner and our union, acting on behalf of the ITF. They ranged from 14 pounds eight shillings per month for an apprentice or deck boy to 66 pounds four shillings for the chief steward, with an able seaman getting 33 pounds two shilings.

Hours of work are now limited to eight per day and 48 per week in the deck and engine room departments. Maximum hours for the catering department have been fixed at nine per day while at sea and eight whilst in port. All personnel are now entitled to 18 days leave per annum, during which period a subsistence allowance of 10 shillings per day is payable.

In addition, all crew members working as daymen are to be granted one full day off per month and 1½ days off after six months continuous service with the owner. Watch-keeping personnel called upon to work in excess of 48 hours per week are to receive compensation in the form of time off. Overtime pay has been fixed.

THE agreement also lays down that sheets, pillows and other bedding shall be supplied by the owner and shall be changed every fortnight. Boots and overalls are to be provided for those members of the crew employed on dirty work.

Provision is also made for free medical care and sick pay, and reimbursement for the loss of personal effects as a result of shipwreck or fire on board, etc. In addition, all ratings are entitled to a temporary bonus for the period during which the vessel is engaged in a voyage to or from a port in the U. S., amounting to 12 pounds per month.

When this ragamuffin of the seas was finally allowed to escape from the vise-like grip in which it was held, it had been through an ordeal which neither the master nor the owner is likely to forget in a hurry.

Not only had the owner been forced to sign what to him must have seemed a terrifying new agreement—an ordinary standard contract among bona fide seafaring nations—but day and night there had been repair work to carry out at the double.

The lifeboats were completely overhauled and rotten timbers replaced, whilst the entire tackle—including pulley-blocks and steel wire—had to be scrapped and new equipment substituted. Various parts of the woodwork, both on deck and below, had to be repaired and reinforced; skylights changed and new glass fitted; while the crew quarters were repainted and completely renovated.

Even when this work had been completed the master's troubles were still not over. Before he could even think of leaving port there was a small matter of a writ from the consignee, claiming damages amounting to no less than 27,000 pounds, and alleging that the cargo delivered was not only filthy and badly damaged but did not even correspond with the bill of lading.

A COURT order for the ship's seizure was executed and the Filadelfos was able to leave only after the owner had put up security for the amount claimed.

There can be no doubt that recent developments in the ITF's boycott action against sub-standard shipping have caused surprise and alarm within the Oversears Tanker Corp., one of the giant shipping companies operating under cover of the Panamian flag. Important financial interests are becoming disturbed at the increased activity on the part of the ITF-affiliated unions and sooner or later there may come a real clash.

WFTU Comes Out In Open With Drive To Sabotage Rearmament In West

THE HIGH COMMAND of the Soviet-dominated World Federation of Free Trade Unions has been kind enough to come right out and say in public that it is going to try to infiltrate the free trade unions of the world so as to sabotage rearmament.

The announcement was made by Benoit Frachon, French member of the WFTU executive board, in a 3½-hour speech before some 200 officials of the organization at a meeting in the Russian zone of Berlin.

The idea, he explained, is simple: Once the Red borers-from-within have bored their way into a legitimate union—say in the United States or even his native France—their job is to agitate for wildcat strikes for higher wages.

Western defense programs, he said, must be crippled at all costs.

Frachon praised a series of strikes in the free world as helpful to what he described as the WFTU struggle against rearmament. He particularly noted the recent longshoremen's strike in New York and some other East Coast ports.

The U.S. dock strike was a protest against the way the AFL Longshoremen's Union conducted a referendum vote on a new contract. John J. Sampson, the leader in New York, described as "a lot of blatherskite" Frachon's intimation that it was in any way an expression of sympathy for the WFTU or the Russians.

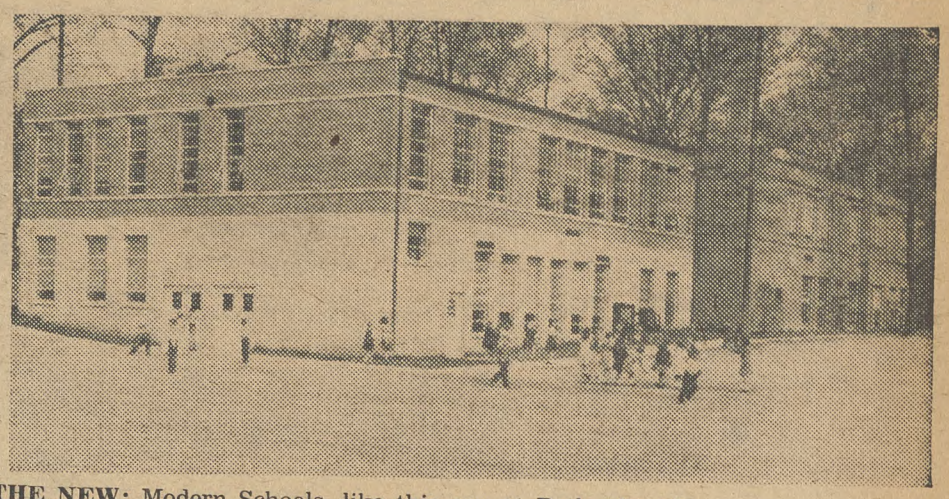
The strikers, he said, were the same workers who over the last year have periodically refused to unload ships from Russia or the Iron Curtain countries because of their opposition to communism.

THE "democratic" nature of the WFTU was shown when Pres. Guiseppe de Vittorio of Italy silenced Reeza Ruste, delegate from Iran, when he described WFTU activities in the Near East as "inadequate."

Ruste said specifically that the WFTU had not backed the Iranian oil workers in a recent strike, according to the West German news agency, and called for immediate establishment of a regional conference on Near East matters. Di Vittorio said he gavelled down Ruste because he "had not stayed within bounds."

An American Tragedy: Our Neglected Schools

THE OLD: "The Little Red School House," typified by the Alabama school, is rapidly disappearing from the American scene.



THE NEW: Modern Schools, like this one at Bethesda, Md., must meet health standards undreamed of by educators 50 years ago.

By MILTON PLUMB

HAVE YOU ever wondered what kind of a person that "old woman who lived in a shoe" must have been?

According to the nursery rhyme, when she discovered that she had "so many children she didn't know what to do," she just whipped them all soundly and sent them to bed.

Most of us today would conclude that the old woman just wasn't a nice person. Her treatment of the youngsters, in fact, might be described as downright un-American. Wasn't she acting like a totalitarian dictator in punishing a helpless scapegoat for her own shortcomings? It couldn't happen here.

Tragically, something quite similar IS happening in the U.S. at this very moment. The nation's schools, suffering from two decades of public neglect, quite literally have too many children to care for properly.

UNLESS DRASTIC steps are taken immediately a whole generation of young Americans will be denied the education that is due them. School authorities say that, despite the unprecedented demands of life which today's youngsters must face, in many communities the new generation will be given a much poorer education than its parents got a quarter of a century earlier.

Enrollment in grade schools jumped for the past two years at the rate of 800,000 a year. This increase is only the beginning of a long-range trend.

The U.S. Office of Education, in figures just released, predicts that over eight million more children will be enrolled in American schools by 1960. The present public school enrollment of about 30.5 million pupils, an all-time high, compares with an enrollment of less than 28 million at the outbreak of World War II.

Here is the tragic picture of our schools as several leading educational authorities have summed it up to this reporter:

1. In the present year, more than 400,000 young Americans will not get full-time training because many schools, lacking adequate space and teachers, will be able to handle them on only a part-time, double session schedule.

2. Nearly four million children between the ages of five and 17 years of age are not enrolled in any school. About 1.5 million are youngsters who ordinarily would be enrolled in kindergarten if it weren't for the fact that there are no facilities.

3. Twenty states report that they have a "very large" shortage of public school buildings and 27 describe their shortage as "considerable." OE says that 78,000 additional elementary and secondary school classrooms are needed NOW to meet present needs.

4. There are now only about half the number of qualified teachers necessary to provide proper instruction. More than 75% of the states have substantial teacher shortages in city elementary schools and 90% of them have acute shortages in rural schools.

5. Over 70,000 present teacherers are employed on substandard certificates, indicating they do not have the standard professional preparation for teaching.

To correct these evils and prevent them from multiplying severalfold, here's what will be needed:

At least 600,000 new classrooms must be available by 1957, at least $14 billion of school construction and repairs must be undertaken, and about 750,000 new teachers must be provided.

These figures, all official OE estimates, cover only the public elementary and secondary schools. It is believed that an additional 12% increase in each category will be needed to meet the needs of non-public schools. No sound estimate has yet been made of the needs of colleges and universities.

The need is all the more staggering when it is realized that the effort to meet it cannot be postponed. Commissioner of Education Earl J. McGrath puts it this way:

"The point is that the present generation of children must have a sound education NOW or not at all. You can't put children into educational cold storage 'for the duration' and later put them in an educational hothouse.'

How did this situation come about? It is due primarily to two factors: the depression of the 30's, which caused a postponement of much school construction needed, and the shortage of labor and materials during World War II and the years immediately following.

It is estimated that a shortage of some 252,000 elementary and secondary school classrooms developed because of inadequate new school construction in the years between 1930 and 1950.

Not only must this backlog be made up, but an additional 222,000 new classrooms to house the increased enrollments expected over the next seven years must be provided. On top of this, an additional 18,000 rooms now in use will become outmoded each year.

THE NATIONAL Education Association reports a fifth of the school buildings now in use are from 50 to 80 years old, and that 16% of city school children attend school in buildings built before 1900.

Since 1949, the public, confronted with the actual situation of over-crowding, has undertaken an intensified school building program. This had scarcely gotten underway, however, when the outbreak of the Korean war, the resultant scarcity of steel, halted much of the new construction.

Over 1500 new school buildings have now been approved for construction throughout the U.S. and construction of 731 buildings is actually under way. Work on nearly all of the latter was halted on Oct. 1 of this year, however, because the Defense Production Administration refused to allot sufficient steel for their construction.

Educators and aroused parents immediately launched a barrage of protests with Congress, and a House Education subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Rep. Bailey (D. W. Va.), launched an investigation. Its hearings disclosed that, despite vigorous appeals from the OE, the DPA had consistently refused to allocate the minimum amount of steel needed.

McGrath told the subcommittee: "The immediate needs of our schools are so pressing that even a 100% fulfillment of construction schedules would fall far short of providing adequate classrooms."

He added that overcrowding in schools is so critical that "school basements, apartment house basements, empty stores, garages, churches and even trailers and tents" are being used as classrooms.

For the first quarter of next year, DPA has approved only 38% of the steel required for essential school construction.

AFTER THE hearing, Bailey introduced a resolution which the House approved unanimously the same day.

The resolution said that DPA "should reconsider its allotments of steel, copper and aluminum in such a manner as to provide a greater quantity of such materials for the construction of and additions to schools and hospitals."

The Senate also unanimously adopted a similar resolution sponsored by Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Moody (D. Mich.) and Knowland (R. Cal.).

Generally lost sight of in the whole dispute was the fact that it involved only a quarter of 1% of the total steel production, or about 100,000 tons more than that allocated.

Following congressional action, Office of Education officials predicted that DPA would meet their demand for more steel for school construction at least in part.

One month ago they stated confidently: "We should get an answer within 10 days."

Last week, however, OE officials were still waiting to hear from DPA.

So were millions of the nation's youngsters.

The Backbone Of Democracy

Good schools, the backbone of democracy, cost money.

Unquestionably, the present shameful condition of U. S. schools, as reported in the accompanying article, means that more tax monies must be spent for their support.

The "rich man's" tax law adopted by the 82nd Congress has already plaecd an undue burden upon many low and middle income taxpayers. A number of unscrupulous groups are seizing upon widespread public opposition to higher taxes to win support for unprincipled attacks upon our nation's schools.

Next week, The CIO News will examine the nature of these organizations and show the real motivations underlying current attacks on the public school system, modern educational methods and academic freedom.

UC's Special Oath Killed

The controversial "loyalty oath" imposed on thousands of Univ. of California faculty members and other employes has been revoked.

After more than two years of dispute, the oath was cancelled by a 12 to 5 vote of the UC Board of Regents, meeting in Berkeley, Calif.

But the action was not as important as might appear at first glance. California's Legislature—since adoption of the university oath—had followed up with an even more sweeping oath required of all public employes in California, including the UC staff. This oath is contained in the Levering Act.

At the next election in California—presumably next November — a constitutional amendment will be on the ballot to write the Levering Act into the state's constitution. The CIO California Industrial Union Council has called for defeat of this amendment.

UNESCO Calls For Expose Of Teachers' Smearers

THE Executive Committee of the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO, meeting in Washington, struck back at reactionary groups responsible for attacks on educators who teach about UNESCO and the United Nations.

It adopted a strongly-worded resolution pointing out that "those attacks often emanate from groups which hide their identity under titles deceptively like those of honorable organizations."

"The attacks distort the purpose of UNESCO, and sometimes they are directed toward control of courses of study and of contents of textbooks, the end in view being to diminish opportunities to learn the true aims of UNESCO and the United Nations," the resolution said.

It warned that many of those assailing the integrity of teachers because of their interest in the UN are "the notorious supporters of totalitarianism and of rowdy attacks on racial and religious groups."

It charged that they are carrying on "falsely in the name of patriotism" and called upon the public and the press to continue to expose them.

What Cheer? CWA Pickets Help Friend

They brought cheer, did pickets of the CIO Communications Workers, to one citizen of What Cheer, Iowa.

Even before winning their strike against the Central Iowa Telephone Co. they dug down into their thinly lined pockets and bought a wheelchair for their friend who lives near the company building. And in off-hours from picketing they built a ramp so he could get in and out of his home more easily.

'Living Together'—

Ohio CIO Sparks Civil Rights Parleys

PLACING one community at a time under the spotlight and asking "How is democracy working in this town?," the Ohio State CIO Council has embarked on a series of community conferences designed to improve civic relations and ease racial tension throughout the state.

"Pilot" conference in the civil rights program was held recently in Youngstown.

It proved so successful that the Ohio IUC plans similar meetings throughout the state.

By adopting the dramatic technique of placing one community at a time under the spotlight of public concern, council officers said, the Ohio CIO hopes to alert its membership and the community as a whole to the evils of discrimination and prejudice.

CIO declared its intention of "placing the community under a microscope to determine the trouble spots; isolate the germs which cause discrimination and prejudice and eventually discover the antidote to cure these ills."

The Youngstown conference was jointly sponsored by the Ohio CIO Council, District 26 of the United Steelworkers, and the CIO Councils of Mahoning, Trumbull, Ashtabula and Columbiana counties.

It was open to other organizations and individuals interested in the problem and drew more than 150 delegates from CIO locals, religious organizations and minority groups.

Calling the conference "Living Together in the Community," the CIO reiterated its belief that "democracy is people living, working and playing together."

"When we've learned to do this well," the delegates were told, "we will have put into reality the brave beliefs on which this nation was founded."

THE Youngstown sessions, which had widespread newspaper and radio publicity, were opened with a hard, cold-blooded look at the community, outlining both its good and bad points in the field of race relations.

Technicians and experts in various fields, such as housing, employment, public accommodation and psychiatry, then outlined the impact these factors have on the basic question of living together in the community.

At a luncheon, Edwin J. Lukas, director of the American Jewish Committee's Civil Rights Dept., discussed the nationwide civil rights fight and the progress being made.

NAACP Petition Asks Trial Of Cop Who Killed Negro

POPULAR and legal action to end Florida's "whitewash" of the police slaying of Samuel Shepherd and the wounding of Walter Lee Irvin is being organized by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The two Negro prisoners were shot by Sherriff Willis McCall, of Lake County, Fla. He said they were "trying to escape."

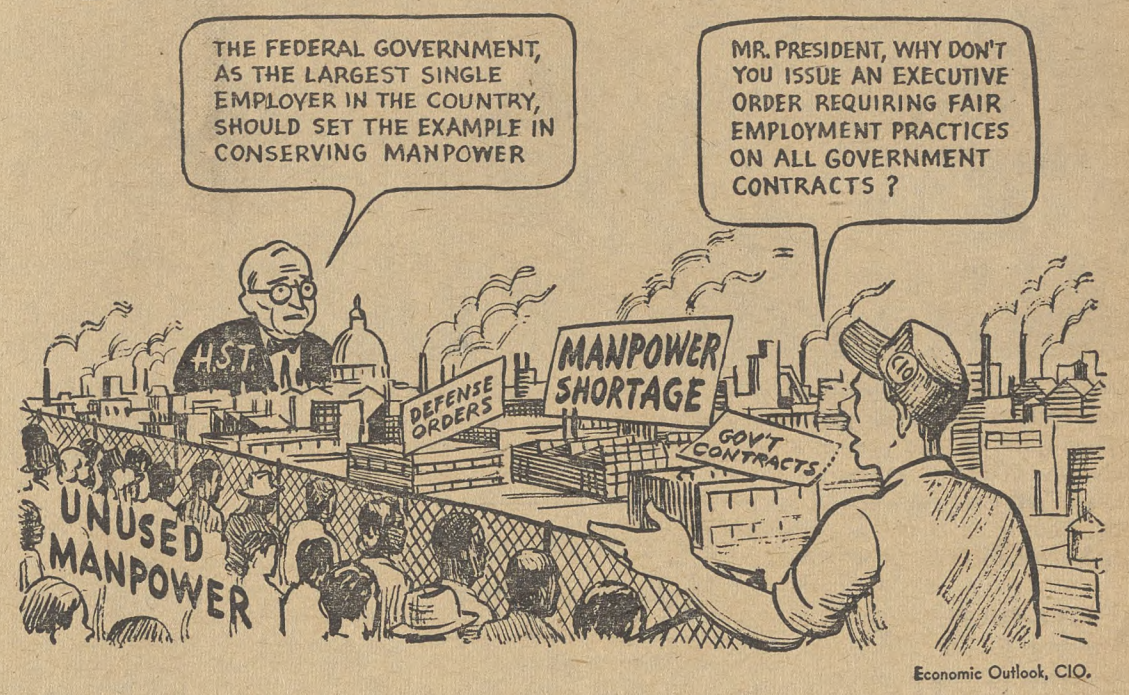
Last week the NAACP reported these developments:

- NAACP branches throughout the nation will seek a million signatures to petitions protesting the shootings. Addressed to Gov. Fuller Warren of Florida, the petition says "such barbarism cannot be condoned any more in America than in Nazi Germany or Soviet Russia."
- Thurgood Marshall, NAACP special counsel, urged Atty. Gen. Howard McGrath to present the Florida shooting case for review to the Supreme Court. The review would determine whether Sheriff McCall acted in "defiance of the U. S. Supreme Court." The Supreme Court had ordered new trials for Shepherd and Irvin.

The NAACP attorney told McGrath that Florida "has demonstrated a determination to whitewash the whole affair."

WARN ON RED FRONT.—Members of the CIO Auto Workers Ford Local 863 at Cincinnati distribute leaflets warning workers that the Negro Labor Council is a Communist front organization. The outfit has been denounced by 37 prominent CIO and AFL Negro leaders.

It's President's Responsibility! CIO Urges FEPC Executive Order



Economic Outlook, CIO.

PROMPT ISSUANCE by President Truman of an Executive Order establishing fair employment practices in defense industries is urged by CIO in the current issue of the Economic Outlook.

"The authority and responsibility for setting and enforcing such standards rests squarely with the President," the monthly CIO publication said.

"He can discharge that responsibility by issuing an Executive Order prohibiting discrimination in defense employment and creating a Fair Employment Practices Commission with authority to enforce such a policy."

Such presidential action—similar to that taken by President Roosevelt during World War II—was urged by the Outlook while the legislative campaign continues for congressional enactment of fair practices legislation.

"ONCE again our national security demands all-out production of defense materials and use of all available manpower," says the Outlook. "But discriminatory employment practices are preventing the full utilization of our manpower resources, impeding our productive capacity, and providing ammunition for the Communists' propaganda about the failures of democracy."

Tracing the record of the FEPC established by President Roosevelt at the beginning of World War II and its outstanding accomplishments, the Outlook, which is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, recalls that "from the very beginning FEPC had to carry on a continuing fight for its very existence."

Despite strong congressional opposition to its lack of authority to enforce its directives, the wartime FEPC docketed some 8000 cases in its first three years. It settled 5000 of these, including 40 strikes over racial differences, by peaceful negotiations, and accomplished many other objectives in the interests of better race relations.

"The statistics cannot account for the qualitative gains that were made in terms of upgrading and training, in terms of classification to higher categories of skill and pay," the Outlook emphasized.

"Above all, the statistics provide no measure of FEPC's contribution to national morale and unity or of the contribution its mere existence made in revitalizing the faith of millions of Americans in the democratic ideal."

In spite of the lessons learned during World War II, "discriminatory practices continue to prevent millions of Americans from contributing their utmost skills and talents to the production of tools and weapons so essential to our national security," the Outlook points out.

Charging that "vicious minority rule" will prevent the Senate from considering Fair Employment Practices legislation, the Outlook names "the undemocratic cloture rule" as the chief barrier to obtaining a vote on civil rights legislation.

Because of this block, the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, supported by CIO, has called upon President Truman to issue an Executive Order similar to that which created the World War II FEPC.

F.D.R. Said It—

Franklin D. Roosevelt once said it, in his Prayer for the United Nations on June 3, 1942:

"Yet most of all grant us brotherhood, not only for this day but for all years—a brotherhood not of words but of acts and deeds. We are all of us children of the earth—grant us that simple knowledge.

"If our brothers are oppressed, then we are oppressed. If they hunger, we hunger. If their freedom is taken away, our freedom is not secure.

"Grant us a common faith that man shall know bread and peace—that he shall know justice and righteousness, freedom and security, an equal opportunity and an equal chance to do his best, not only in our lands, but throughout the world . . ."

Missouri Closes Jim Crow Office

The last vestige of possible race discrimination in Missouri's employment service was wiped out in St. Louis when the Negro office was closed and its personnel shifted to the central office.

First steps to integrate the program regardless of race began in Kansas City two years ago, after Charles A. Ricker was appointed Director of the Div. of Employment Security by Gov. Forrest Smith.

"We're in the business of finding jobs for everyone, regardless of race or religion and we can do this with one centrally located office," Ricker said.

Ohio Free Speech 'Freeze' Challenged By State CIO

THE OHIO CIO Council has turned down a request made by an Ohio State Univ. fraternity for a speaker to address the group on the campus.

In a letter to OSU Pres. Howard L. Bevis, Jacob Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the council, pointed to the university trustees' action requiring speakers to be approved by Bevis' office.

Consequently, he said, the Ohio CIO had decided to refuse invitations for speakers to address campus groups. The CIO representative had been approved by the screening process.

"As matters now stand," Clayman wrote, "we feel that we cannot appear at Ohio State without compromising our deep belief in and affection for academic freedom in our country.

"We believe the problem is so profound, in terms of the future of American education, that we want to forego any action which will imply acquiesence on our part in the 'freeze' of free speech at the university.

"We just cannot appease those who have no faith in freedom. We cannot make common cause with those who allegedly so hate totalitarianism that they would adopt most of the characteristics of the totalitarians. In the name of democracy they would use the repressions, the fear of freedom, the controls . . . the worst tools of the director."

Clayman said a recent poll taken among OSU students indicated displeasure with the ruling by a vote of 2986 against the ban to 637 in favor.

UAW Conference Vows Renewed FEP Fight

A FIVE-POINT program to secure for all Americans "the most fundamental freedom," the right to work, was adopted by nearly 500 delegates at a statewide Fair Practices and Civil Rights Conference at Grand Rapids, Mich., sponsored by the CIO Auto Workers.

Conference speakers centered much of their fire on the notorious Senate Rule 22, which permits filibustering and has been successfully used to block Fair Employment Practices Commission and civil rights legislation.

After hearing it described as the "road block to all future civil rights laws," the delegates made its elimination the major item in their program. The other points:

Extend union contracts to the hiring gate.

Increase political activity so as to elect representatives who will back FEPC legislation on the national, state and local levels.

Step up the FEPC educational program within local unions.

Ask President Truman to issue an executive order forcing non-discriminating hiring in industries receiving government contracts.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the UAW described FEPC as "the key issue America will face in the next 12 months." He warned that in Asia, for example, lack of FEPC here is the greatest obstacle to winning the people to the side of democracy.

"If we could stand before the world with clean hands," he said, "we could give a moral leadership that would be worth 100 military divisions."

HE POINTED out that a majority of the world's population is yellow, brown or black skinned.

"God help the whites," he added, "if these people should ever treat us as we have treated the Negro in the United States."

Reuther challenged the view of those who think additional education must precede enactment of a national FEPC law.

"Education and legislation go hand in hand," he asserted.

"For example, we have a lot of safety education, but the motorist really starts getting education when a policeman hands him a ticket for running a red light.

"By delaying FEPC we are giving Communist propagandists a psychological weapon as potent as a stockpile of H-bombs. This is the age of jet propulsion, and the social dynamic is changing at the same rate. When we attack the problem by education alone, we are dealing with it at Model T pace. And we simply haven't that much time."

Negroes and other minority group members have made more progress in the 15 years since the UAW was organized than they had in the preceding 50 years, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the UAW told the conference.

"BUT LET'S be frank," he said, "and admit there still is much work to be done. This is a problem we consider as important as any bargaining question our union has."

An FEPC law would permit the union to do a lot more, he said.

"We have to establish a solid base," he explained. "We have to organize more unorganized workers in the South. When enough of them have the benefits of unionism, then they can join with us in the political battle."

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan urged delegates to support an FEPC law and said his administration would do the same.

Other speakers included Edward Cushman, public relations director of Wayne Univ.; UAW Reg. Dir. Joseph McCusker, and William Oliver, co-director of the UAW Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept.

Doctors' Lobby Hits Warren In Second Payoff To Taft

SEN. TAFT'S sellout to the powerful doctors' lobby in the closing days of the first session of Congress paid off again last week.

So far the only other announced candidate for the Republican nomination for the presidency is Gov. Earl Warren of California. The well-heeled American Medical Association now makes it clear that it doesn't approve of his candidacy.

Immediately following Warren's announcement, the AMA issued a blast against him for his support of a national health program. In a letter sent Nov. 19 to 202 members of its House of Delegates, the association said that Warren "in common with President Truman and Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, repudiates the term 'socialized medicine' while warmly embracing the substance."

The letter was signed by Dr. John W. Kline, of San Francisco, AMA president, and Dr. Elmer L. Henderson, past president and chairman of the campaign coordinating committee.

The AMA said that "no one should be misled" by Warren's stand.

In one of the two speeches it criticized, Warren said that "we must make it possible for everyone of our people to protect himself and his family from the economic disaster of back-breaking hospital and medical bills."

"I believe it is the responsibility of the states to undertake to help doctors, hospitals and the public they serve in the solution . . . of the problem," he said.

THE AMA blast at Taft's only announced opponent in the GOP race is the second time that the Ohio Senator has been paid off for reversing himself on the question of federal aid to medical schools. Taft withdrew his support of this measure, which he had helped draft and actively campaigned for, when it was up for vote last October.

Immediately thereafter a letter soliciting funds for his campaign was sent to doctors by the Draft Taft Clubs of America. It was signed by Dr. Harry M. Hedge, chairman of the group's "medical committee."

That letter told the doctors that "your interest will be best served" by Taft's nomination. It added:

"He has consistently opposed the Administration's efforts to develop a nation-wide compulsory sickness and hospitalization plan for our country."

CIO Joins In Court Fight On Capital Race Segregation

THE CIO last week joined with 21 other organizations, including the AFL, in the fight to end racial discrimination in Washington, D. C., restaurants.

Those joining in the presentation of the brief before the U. S. Court of Appeals as "friends of the court," include minority racial groups, civil rights organizations, and a number of religious faiths.

The brief backs the decision of the Municipal Court of Appeals, upholding validity of a Congressional Act of 1873. That act forbids the proprietors of city restaurants from refusing service to "any well-behaved and respectable person."

The case arose over the refusal of one of the J. R. Thompson chain of restaurants to serve Negroes.

The brief declared that the organizations involved spoke as representatives of "many creeds and races who are committed to the democratic way of life and who reject, as inimical to the welfare and progress of our country, artificial barriers, based on racial or creedal differences, to the free and natural association of peoples."

Toadying To Interests Held Reason Toadying To Interests Held Likely

LOBBY GROUPS spent about 20% less in the first six months of 1951 than they did in the corresponding period of 1950, according to a tabulation by Congressional Quarterly. Total reported spending dropped from $5,272,739 last year to $4,288,300 this year—perhaps because with a Congress like the 82nd it just isn't necessary for the special interests to dig down as deeply as they have had to in the past. The 10 top spenders and what they spent it on:

	What It Spent	What It Got
American Medical Association (AMA)	$288,234.66	Pigeon-holed Health Insurance Law
American Farm Bureau Federation	223,978.36	Phony price controls
National Association of Electric Companies	221,978.36	Soak-the-poor taxes
Committee for Constitutional Government (CCG)	188,691.94	Soak-the-poor taxes

W. C. Emeigh, Rail Unionist, Dies

Willard C. Emeigh, one of the pioneer members of the CIO Railroad Workers, died recently of complications brought on by a heart attack in Altoona Hospital, Altoona, Pa.

Emeigh, who was 33, was a CIO member since the day he started as a railroad worker in the Juniata shops of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

He was a former financial secretary of the URRWA Altoona local and at the time of his death, an international representative of the Railroad Workers.

Surviving are his wife Alice and two children, Donald and Nancy.

'Pitiless Publicity' Urged On Big Business Profits

JOHN CARSON, Federal Trade Commissioner, believes that he has a sure fire method for cutting prices.

Carson last week said that he would shame businessmen into selling their commodities cheaper.

He called on labor and consumer groups—at a meeting of the Potomac Cooperative Federation in Washington—to aid him in his proposal to let the public know the cost of making products and the margin of profits on their sale.

Carson said that these two groups should give "the greatest possible amount of pitiless publicity" to "the economic facts of business—costs, prices and profits."

FTC is doing what it can to publicize these facts, he continued, but it doesn't get much help from public groups. It has a comparatively small staff—only a few more than it had 35 years ago.

FTC Chairman James M. Mead last week had something to say about the growth of monopoly.

He directed staff members to investigate promptly all corporate mergers to determine whether they conform with a Clayton Act amendment, passed by Congress last year.

The amendment prohibts mergers which would "substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly."

Mead said that "serious dangers to American business are inherent in the merger movement and the future welfare of free competitive enterprise depends, to a very substantial degree, upon our ability to stem the tide of illegal mergers."

"It is therefore a matter of vital importance," Mead continued, "that every effort should be made to prevent the consummation of mergers which destroy competition."

At the end of 1947, there were about 500 mergers of business firms annually. The current rate is about 750 a year. The highest level in 20 years was reached in the second quarter of 1951.

O.K., Mr. Carson, Here's What You're Asking For!

The Commerce Dept. last week reported that for the first nine months of 1951 American corporations paid cash dividends totaling $5.501 billion. That was 9% more than the amount paid out during the corresponding period last year.

Here are some profit figures (unless otherwise noted for the first nine months of 1950 and 1951) showing that corporation profits are going higher into the stratosphere:

CIO Issues New Bulletin

THE FIRST edition of the CIO World Affairs Bulletin, a publication of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept., has just made its appearance.

The bulletin — eight mimeographed pages plus an especially designed cover—is the first in a series aimed at telling CIO members about events of interest to them in the international labor movement, and also to keep them informed about what the CIO is doing in other countries.

The opening issue is devoted largely to a report on the second Intl. Confederation of Free Trades Union congress at Milan. It also includes a brief report on the Intl. Labor Organization conference at Geneva.

The World Affairs Bulletin made its bow at the CIO Convention, where it was distributed to delegates and visitors. It will be mailed regularly to international unions, state and local councils, and CIO regional offices. Members of CIO unions can be placed on the mailing list by writing the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept., 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Long Session Gains Plasma Plant Pact

HEROIC negotiations lasting 16 hours averted a strike at the Sharp and Doehme Co., near Philadelphia, and won the CIO Chemical Workers a modified union shop.

In addition to a clause which provides that all new employes must join the union after a probationary period, the union also won a 4.4% wage increase, the right to reopen the contract after six months, increased wages for certain groups to remove inequities, and automatic increases on promotion.

A strike—scheduled to begin at midnight, Nov. 20—had been voted by Chemical Workers Local 86 after the company refused to yield to the union's demand for a union shop such as is contained in contracts with other drug manufacturing firms.

Settlement was reached by the negotiators in the Federal Mediation Service office in Washington at 5:30 a.m., Nov. 20, after 16 hours of continuous negotiating.

UNION negotiators were Martin Wagner and Joe Joy, the international president and vice president respectively; Intl. Rep. Joseph B. Wright; Ben Sigal, the union's counsel; Local 86 Pres. Herbert D. Heath and 10 members of the local's negotiating committee.

Newspapers carried big-headlined stories, some of them quoting a federal mediation official in Philadelphia as saying that the strike would have threatened the entire flow of plasma to the armed forces. Union officials said that the plant processes 36% of the armed forces supply of plasma.

Heath had declared that any blood received before the strike deadline would be processed. This would have required keeping men working in the plant's plasma department three or four days after the strike deadline.

In any event, it is doubtful if there would have been a strike. Federal mediators said that the dispute would be sent to President Truman if an agreement was not reached.

Edward Cote, co-director of Region 1-A of the CIO Auto Workers, has been elected to the board of directors of Detroit's United Community Services.

"LIFELINE FOR CONSUMER."—That's what Mrs. Ray Evanson, a school teacher in Oregon, calls her nation-wide Housewives' Buyers Resistance Cycle campaign. Each month, consumers join in boycott of particular high-priced items.

Busy Housewife Gives A Hand In Boycott Of High Prices

IT'S THE BUSY people who have the time to do something for the rest of us. That's how it is with Mrs. Ray Evanson, who for months has been conducting an unique nation-wide campaign by housewives against high prices.

Mrs. Evanson is going to Lewis and Clark College at Tigard, Ore., full time, taking 18 hours of college work, so as to get her B. S. degree in January. Then she can resume teaching, "because it now takes two paychecks to meet current expenses."

For months Mrs. Evanson has been running a Housewives' Resistance Cycle campaign; that is, she gets housewives to agree not to buy certain foods or articles for certain stated periods.

Here's how it works:

What products will be boycotted, and at what times, is decided by a poll. Any housewife wanting to join the campaign addresses a blank U.S. postcard to herself, encloses it in an envelope with a note listing four articles she thinks are too high-priced and should be boycotted during the next "resistance cycle."

She sends both to Mrs. Ray Evanson, Tigard, Ore. Those who send cards in one month get back before the first of the next month, the postcard listing the items to be boycotted during that month.

"MY HUSBAND is my loyal supporter in this price battle of mine," says Mrs. Evanson. "We feel this is our small contribution in the present 'war effort.'

"Since we survived the depression we will probably manage to get through this crisis too, but we are deeply concerned over the families with children and the old folks living on fixed pensions."

Mrs. Evanson encourages the women to let a local group or organization be responsible for giving the items to be "resisted" to a larger number of women.

"It isn't the number of cards we receive that counts," she explains. "It is the number of people who are not buying."

She believes that the Housewives Buyers Resistance Cycle campaign is "a lifeline we can throw to the customer. (LPA)

Voters Pick CIO Veteran For Judge

A VETERAN CIO member was elected to the Pennsylvania judiciary in the recent elections, it was reported last week.

He is Harry Kessler, of Danville, Pa., who was elected to a six-year term as associate judge of Montour County.

Kessler is a charter member and former president of CIO Local Industrial Union 1651, the United Geisinger Hospital Employes. He has been an attendant at the hospital for more than 20 years.

Kessler is a Republican, and in the election defeated a Democratic opponent by a margin of more than 2 to 1, according to CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph M. Walsh.

For the past year Kessler had filled the judicial post by appointment, filling a vacancy caused by death.

UAW Auxiliaries Aid Stricken Worker

Four auxiliaries of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit have presented a large television set to Miss Irdie Valmassy, a worker at the Ford Rouge plant during the war. She has been confined to a wheel chair for six years.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

THE UNITED Railroad Workers of America, CIO, is marching on! In recent weeks it has won two important representation elections. In a huge election among the workers on the Pennsylvania Railroad, the vote was as follows: carmen, CIO 11,360, AFL 6900; boilermakers, CIO 1199, AFL 396; laborers, CIO 3897, AFL 1575; moulders, CIO 158, AFL 51; electricians, CIO 2057, AFL 1399. In another important election the URWA-CIO was victorious over the AFL among workers of the Santa Fe Railroad ice plants. The vote was as follows: CIO 206, AFL 50. These victories of this young militant union over the AFL's craft unions show how miserably the AFL has failed among the railroad workers over the years. Congratulations to all on these great victories.

Allan Haywood

The policies that were adopted at the 13th Annual CIO Convention are receiving acclaim throughout the entire country.

The United Steelworkers met in Atlantic City this past week. Pres. Philip Murray and the Steelworkers Wage Policy Committee were determining their position in the coming wage negotiations among the steel companies. The greatest possible union solidarity prevailed in these meetings in Atlantic City. The Steelworkers can be counted upon to carry the case of American labor militantly and unafraid under the leadership of their great leader and our great leader, Philip Murray.

PLANS ARE NOW being made to make 1952 our greatest year for organizing. Let everyone meet his responsibility, and keep before him our aim—organize the unorganized!

More CIO victories in the South: Daily Record, Columbia, S. C., eligible 15, Newspaper Guild 13, no union 2; Barton Furniture Co., Memphis, Tenn., eligible 61, Furniture Workers 37, AFL 1, no union 21; A. Brandt Co., Inc., Ft. Worth, Tex., eligible 296, UFWA 167, no union 92; Vulcan Furniture Co., Birmingham, Ala., eligible 24, UFWA 12, no union 9; Newberry Equipment Co. Inc., Memphis, eligible 21, Steelworkers 12, no union 3; Dept. of Public Improvements, Birmingham, eligible 500, recognition without election was gained by the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports that in a consent election at the Superior Laundry, South Bend, Ind., the workers favored the CIO Clothing Workers over the AFL by 61 to 21.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that the Furniture Workers won a representation election at the International Furniture Co., Dyersburg, Tenn., by a vote of 46 to 4 against. Rep. Carl Holt directed the organizing job.

Vice Pres. A. F. Hartung of the CIO Woodworkers reports winning representation elections at: West Lane Lumber Co., Springfield, Ore., IWA-CIO 11, no union 1; Klamath Logging Co., Orick, Calif., IWA-CIO 9, AFL 8; Miller Brothers, Johnson City, Tenn., IWA-CIO 175, no union 80 with IWA Rep. George Bentley handling the election; Stoll Lumber Co., Ukiah, Calif., IWA-CIO 26, no union 9, AFL 2 with IWA Rep. Kenneth McKee in charge, and Ramsey Lumber Co., Suffolk, Va., IWA-CIO 19, no union 7.

Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports that the UAW-CIO won two important representation elections over the FE-UE at the Oliver Corp., South Bend, Ind. For production and maintenance employes, the vote was UAW-CIO 1170, FE-UE 455, no union 7, challenged 18, void 20; for the office workers, UAW-CIO 115, FE-UE 41, no union 13, void 2. A good job was done by the UAW-CIO staff, especially by Rep. Wayne Burgoyne who was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the UAW-CIO secured bargaining rights for the workers at the Warner Steel Products Co., Inc., Ottawa, Kan. There was no election held as the UAW has 99% of the employes signed up on cards and the company agreed to a card check. Organizational work was in charge of Intl. Rep. Kenneth Worley.

REG. DIR. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the Bersted Electric Co., Fostoria, O., the workers favored the UAW-CIO by a vote of 177 to 148 against. Intl. Rep. Emerson Baringer was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports from Southern California several election victories for CIO-LIU 78.

In the small fruits area, the vote was LIU 78 518, independent union 172, no union 38, challenged 18, and void 10. This election covered the Cochran Co., Inc., with sheds at Tracy, Rhodes Station and Walnut Grove, Cal.; Garin Co., Brentwood, Cal.; Pacific Packing Co., with sheds at Stockton and Patterson, Cal.; Tracy Tomato Co., El Solyo, Cal.; George Covert Co., Carbona, Cal.; McDonald & Whealey Co., Vacaville and Dickson, Cal.; Hayman & Covert Co., Carbona; American Fruit Growers Inc., Stockton and Walnut Grove; and William Grable Co., El Solyo.

LIU 78 ALSO won bargaining elections at the Half Moon Fruit & Produce Co., Yola, Cal., by a vote of 19 to 5 no union; Salisch & Costa, Yuba City, Cal., LIU 78 29, no union 2; Rose Valley Produce, Woodland, Cal., LIU 78 30, no union 5; Half Moon Fruit & Produce Co., Live Oak, LIU 78 10, no union 0. Reps. Clayton Coon and Dick Perry of LIU 78 handled the campaign.

At the Levi & Zentner Co., Newman, Cal., the vote was LIU 78 52, independent union 3, no union 22 with Field Reps. Ken Gillie and Local Rep. Russell Parker handling the campaign; and Perez Bros., Crows' Landing, Cal., LIU 78 35, no union 8, with CIO Rep. James Spangler and Local Rep. Lum Moorehead in charge of the organizational work.

Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports that the CIO Paperworkers won a representation election at Acco Products, Ogdensburg, N. Y., by a vote of 96 to 38 against. The campaign was conducted by Intl. Reps. William Sheer and John Galluccio.

WSB Action Asked By IUE In 2 Disputes

PRES. JAMES B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers last week asked President Truman to refer two labor disputes between the union and the Westinghouse Electric Corp. to the Wage Stabilization Board.

Involved are 6000 workers. More than 5000 of them are employed at the corporation's Buffalo plant where there has been a strike since Sept. 21.

The other Westinghouse employes involved are at the Bowling Green, Ky., plant, where the corporation initiated a lockout because IUE was asking that the plant be covered by its national agreement with Westinghouse.

Carey wrote President Truman:

"Full and extensive use of mediation and conciliation facilities has been made without avail.

"These protracted disputes, although at the present time involving only two plants of the far-flung Westinghouse chain, are of profound concern to all Westinghouse employes because the issues in dispute, relating to basic working conditions, touch them deeply.

"THE PRESENT situation is such that a continuation of these disputes is likely to cause an interruption of work in at least a major part of all Westinghouse operations.

Carey urged President Truman to refer the disputes to WSB because they are hampering the production of materials needed in the defense effort, such as products needed by the Atomic Energy Commission.

The main issue at Buffalo is the effort of the company in negotiating a supplemental agreement to scrap the present plant-wide seniority system in favor of another system.

The corporation also has been attempting to establish its new system throughout the chain.

DONALD MACDONALD

CCL Board Backs Ban On Price Fixing

ALONG with naming Donald MacDonald as secretary-treasurer, the Executive Council of the Canadian Congress of Labor in its recent meeting took these actions:

- Granted jurisdiction in the tanning and leather sections of the fur and leather field to the CIO Packinghouse Workers, determined on direct chartering of local unions in the fur dyeing, dressing and manufacturing sections. Jurisdiction in all previously was held by the independent Fur & Leather Workers, which was expelled because of its Communist domination. The recent convention turned down an appeal from the ouster.

- Endorsed proposed legislation to outlaw price fixing, against which manufacturers and their agents are conducting an intensive lobbying campaign.

- Protested to the Dominion government against discrimination against West Indies in immigration to Canada. A resolution claimed the Dept. of Citizenship and Immigration refuses permanent residence to West Indians on the ground that the Canadian climate is not suitable to them—an allegation disproved by the experience of many West Indians who live in Canada and who have served in the armed forces. The resolution asked that all British subjects be admitted on the same basis.

- Condemned the "reactionary" action of the government in setting a $60 ceiling on social income tax for old age pensions.

- Urged widespread support for Local 1000, Department Store Employees Union, in an important representation election Dec. 3 and 4 for workers in the Eaton store in Toronto.

- Supported a resolution, referred by the convention, endorsing the United Nations' policy "to fight aggression wherever it may arise" and supporting foreign and trade policies designed "to promote the welfare of the peoples of all countries."

UAW Wins Major Elections At Ford Air Engine Plant

THE CIO AUTO Workers won representation elections in in three major departments of the Ford Motor Co.'s aircraft engine plant in Chicago last week.

The National Labor Relations Board had ordered the voting to be held on a craft basis.

The UAW scored in the production and maintenance department by rolling up 1943 votes to 207 for no union, with 207 challenged. In the tool room, the tally was UAW-CIO 512, AFL Machinists 264, no union 10, challenged 196. The count in the foundry was UAW 84, AFL 11, challenged 11.

In two small departments, totaling less than 100 employes, runoffs will have to be held because of the large number of challenged votes. Six AFL units won craft elections involving a total of less than 500 employes.

George Duke, a plant employe helping the UAW staff in the organization drive, reported to police that he was kidnapped by three men on the eve of the election and forced to "drink something" which sent him to the hospital too groggy to be immediately questioned by police. The only clue he could give was the word "Communists," which he muttered to his wife after stumbling into the house and asking her to call police.

The election was one of a series won by the UAW in aircraft plants where employment is expected to increase sharply.

The others were at Avon, Inc., Bridgeport, Conn., where the UAW tallied 388 to 350 for the IAM and 9 for no union, and at Air-Cooled Motors, Inc., Syracuse, N. Y., where the CIO affiliate piled up 145 votes to 83 for no union.

Arizonans Get Some New Ideas On U.S. Labor

Arizona is one of the toughest states in the nation for union organizing.

It has a strict law limiting collective bargaining.

But Arizonans got a new glimpse at CIO and the U. S. labor movement at the CIO booth at the Arizona State Fair in Phoenix recently.

The booth featured a fountain of crystal spring water and fairgoers consumed more than 1000 gallons. While they stopped, more than 5500 pieces of CIO literature were distributed. Some 3000 people signed up for an ACWA union label suit. And nearly 10,000 puzzles were distributed.

"The public response was very gratifying," said Nicholas C. Dragon, CIO director for Arizona and New Mexico. "We are looking forward to an even bigger and better fair next year."

Minimum Pay Boost Urged

A $1 hourly minimum wage law for workers in New York State has been proposed by the State CIO Council.

Testimony in support of the $1 minimum was presented by Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council, at a recent hearing before the state legislature's labor-industry committee.

Such a law would benefit all industrial wage earners not now covered by the Federal Wages and Hour Act.

Wage minimums in some New York industries now range from 52c to 65c an hour, and Edward Corsi, state industrial commissioner, suggested they be increased to a 75c hourly base—which would be in line with existing Federal legislation.

CIO Retail Union Gets Shorter Hours

All stores throughout Brooklyn have been put on a 45-hour, 5½-day week through contracts negotiated by CIO Local 338, Retail, Wholesale Food Chain Employes.

'Reconversion Pains'—

CIO Group Comes To Capital To Protest Battery Layoffs

UNEMPLOYMENT is fast becoming an increasingly acute problem.

"Reconversion pains" resulting from the change-over of large segments of the economy to defense production is largely responsible for the current unemployment.

Latest industry to be hit is storage battery manufacturing. Shortage of lead has resulted in the lay-off of thousands of workers throughout the industry.

Unemployment has also struck the auto, men's clothing and the textile industries.

And more unemployment is in sight as cutbacks in the production of all consumer durable goods announced by the government Nov. 16 become effective Jan. 1.

Battery industry unemployment was brought to the attention of defense mobilization officials by the Battery Council, consisting of all legitimate unions in the industry.

The CIO members of the council, headed by Charles Goff, a member of CIO Electrical Workers Local 113 at the Exide plant at Philadelphia, recently came to Washington to protest—and to ask for a solution.

The CIO battery plant workers pointed out to government officials that defense contracts for batteries remain unfilled and that there is danger that skilled workers may transfer to other industries.

The delegates said that they were promised by Chairman John Small of the Munitions Board that some lead would be released from the emergency stockpile for a limited period.

National Production Authority officials said that they would attempt to increase the production of domestic mines, improve the distribution of available supplies and promote more efficient methods of lead manufacture.

As a result of the cutbacks announced Nov. 16, the Labor Dept. predicted more joblessness as civilian plants are converted to war production.

Under NPA orders, manufacture of most strictly civilian-type items using steel, copper and aluminum will be held to 50% of pre-Korean levels the first three months of 1952.

Production of most of these commodities—which include electrical appliances, stoves, costume jewelry and autos—already has taken sharp cuts so that the new slashes will not be near 50%.

But, employment experts pointed out, small civilian industries have had a hard time converting to mobilization production, resulting in widespread unemployment, and the new cuts will merely add new jobless to many industrial areas.

NPA said some firms were bound to go out of business as a result of the new allocations. But, it said, the allotments "will give manufacturers at least a fighting chance" during the first quarter to stay in business.

Blame Pentagon For Job Lack

Defense Dept. officials are working out "secret strategy" to give war contracts to foreign companies while some U. S. workers are jobless, Rep. Lane (D. Mass.) charged last week.

Lane has been asking the Defense Dept. to give military textile contracts to Massachusetts mills many of whose workers are unemployed.

"But they answer us with technicalities, not with procurement contracts," he said. "Perhaps they think unemployment is good discipline for displaced American workers."

Florsheim Pickets Fight Wage Cut More

SOME 2400 members of the CIO Shoe Workers, whose strike against the Florsheim Shoe Co. was unanimously voted full moral support by the National CIO Executive Board, spent Thanksgiving Week on the picket lines despite icy winds and freezing weather.

They are fighting against a wage cut and for a wage increase.

Not only did they picket the company's three factories in Chicago, employing the bulk of the members, and a small plant in Danville, Ill., but they marched in front of each of the firm's retail stores in Chicago.

Plans were under way to extend picketing of retail outlets in other parts of the country.

Negotiations were temporarily halted by the holiday, but were to be continued with the assistance of federal conciliators.

The walkout started Nov. 1, the day after the old contract expired without agreement on the renewal. The major bones of contention were three—the company's demand for a cut in some piece work rates in the ladies' departments, its insistence that an hourly payment of 32c—representing pay boosts negotiated since the end of the war—be incorporated into piece rates, and wages.

The company in negotiations since the strike has given indications that it will not insist on cutting the piece rates in the ladies' dept. However, it remained obdurate in refusing to offer more than 4c an hour increase, compared to the 12c sought by the USWA.

Other points at issue include vacations, insurance, job timing and holiday pay. The company has proposed a new method of computing vacation pay that would prove costly to the workers, but has since modified its stand.

THE UNION seeks the right to have a union time engineer accompany a company time study man when he is timing a job, and also wants the company to pay all the cost of the insurance program instead of merely a part, as at present.

The strikers are members of three Chicago locals and one in Danville, and the walkout is being conducted by the Shoe Workers' joint council.

The action of the National CIO Executive Board has won for the workers widespread encouragement and offers of support from CIO unions in Chicago and other parts of the country. Picket lines have been maintained continuously, and attendance at strike meetings averages 1400 to 1500.

The company has made no attempt to resume operations, but according to stories printed in St. Louis newspapers, is reported looking for quarters there to relocate.

The CIO Shoe Workers are well organized in St. Louis, too.

Anti-Union Company Cited In UGCCW Organizing Drive

CIO CHEMICAL Workers have won an unfair labor practices ruling against Sharples Chemicals, Inc., at Wyandotte, Mich.

Such a citation has been issued by the National Labor Relations Board, Chester J. Alamczyk, UGCCW regional director in Michigan, reported last week.

The complaint, issued on recommendation of Lloyd Buchanan, labor board trial examiner, agreed with charges of UGCCW-CIO that the firm was supporting a company union and coercing its employes in an effort to prevent them from supporting the CIO organization.

The board ordered the company to cease and desist.

The CIO Chemical Workers, whose petition for an NLRB representation election is pending, hailed the citation as a blow to Sharples Chemicals' efforts to stop union organization.

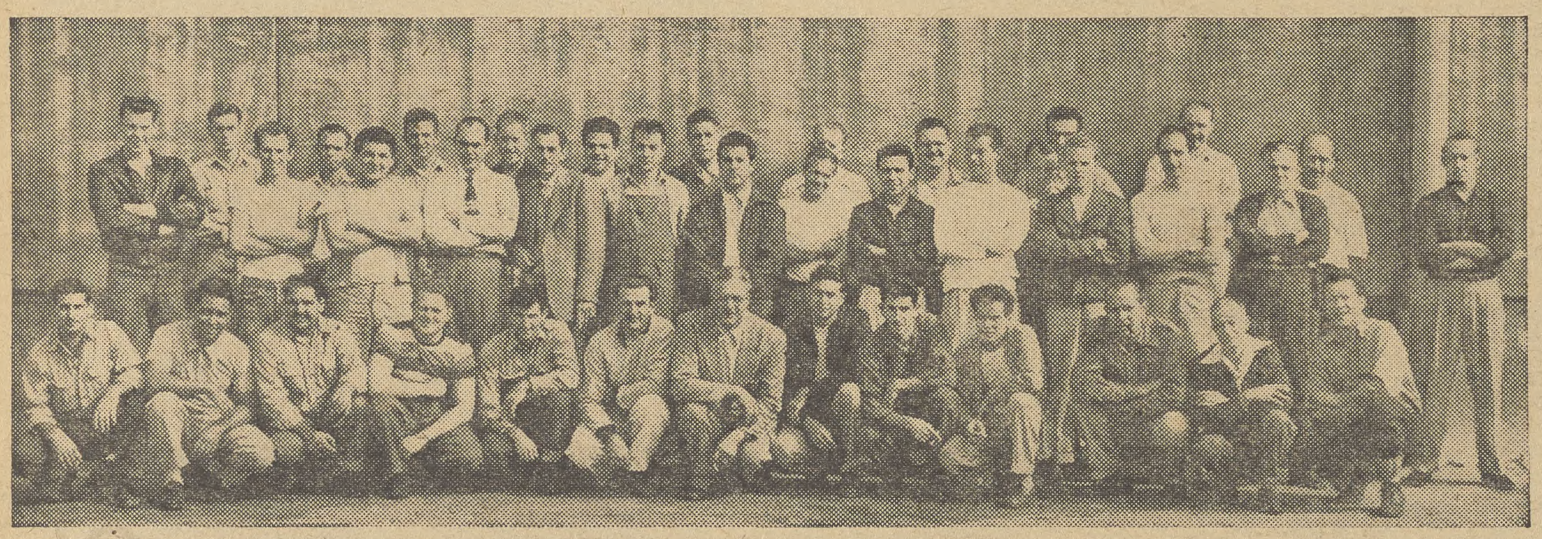
The UGCCW also is pushing organizing drives at two other plants in Wyandotte. They are the Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. and the Wyandotte Chemicals Corp.

No. Carolina PAC Plans Local Rallies

Political action will be taken to the local unions throughout North Carolina, to begin preparations now for the 1952 campaign, the North Carolina PAC decided at its recent annual convention at Raleigh.

Plans were approved for weekend PAC meetings to be held for local union members and officers at several cities throughout the state. They will provide intensive, practical PAC training in advance of the national election campaign.

Franz E. Daniel, North Carolina CIO director, was re-elected PAC chairman. Convention speakers included Tilford Dudley, CIO-PAC assistant national director, and Newman Jeffries, CIO Auto Workers' assistant PAC director.



THEY'RE IN CIO!—Here's group of workers at the Los Angeles plant of Zellerbach Paper Co., who picked CIO by a 2-to-1 margin over the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, expelled by CIO as Communist controlled. Zellerbach workers voted 75 for CIO Paperworkers to 33 for ILWU recently. In charge of campaign was CIO Field Rep. Frank Grillo (center).

Congressional "watchdog" committee heard defense production and price control chiefs as the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumer price index climbed once again to still another new record. The work week and average earnings of factory workers are declining. (Stories, Page 3.)

Steel Union Opens Parleys For Wage, Contract Gains

By WILLIAM MILLIS

CRUCIAL negotiations last week began between the CIO United Steelworkers of America and the basic steel industry and related ore mines, aluminum mills and fabricating plants.

On their outcome directly will rest the wage, working conditions and other contract gains of the 1.2 million steel union workers and —indirectly—the bargaining pattern for millions of others of American working men and women.

This year, as in the past, the keystone to steel negotiations is U. S. Steel Corp.

Early last week in Pittsburgh a 50-member committee of the Steelworkers, headed by USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray, met with top management of "Big Steel." Involved directly are officials of "Big Steel's" recently-formed operating subsidiary, the U. S. Steel Co. This subsidiary includes Carnegie-Illinois and similar producing plants.

The talks with "Big Steel" began on Nov. 27 and continued behind closed doors. Later in the week, other bargaining committees of the Steelworkers met with Bethlehem, Republic, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, and the other 40 basic steel producing firms, and also Aluminum Co. of America.

At the weekend, a spokesman for the union said the USA bargaining committee had spent the week in presenting its demands to U.S. Steel Corp. Negotiations will continue next week.

Meantime, agreement was reached with Alcoa to extend its contract a month until Dec. 31—expiration date of the basic steel contracts.

THROUGHOUT the nation, USA Local bargaining committees are meeting with fabricating plants.

In all these negotiations, the Steelworkers have a uniform wage and contract goal. It was set at a recent wage-policy conference in Atlantic City. The highlights:

A "substantial" wage increase.

Complete elimination of wage differential (rates in the South now are 10c below the North.)

Elimination of wage inequities.

Increased shift premiums.

Severance pay.

Eight paid holidays (there are none now).

Overtime for weekend work.

Increased vacation benefits.

And the guaranteed annual wage.

Several times in the years since World War II collective bargaining by the Steelworkers has set the pace for the U. S. labor movement.

In 1949, through strike action, USA-CIO won a company-paid pension program and jointly financed social insurance benefits. These gains have resulted in payment of some $14 million in sickness and accident benefits and more than $15 million in life insurance benefits.

Just a year ago, across the bargaining table, USA-CIO negotiated wage increases averaging 16c an hour.

This year negotiations began under the restraints imposed by the Wage Stabilization Board in line with the defense program.

By all present indications, steel management hopes to evade a contract settlement with the Steelworkers in collective bargaining, and thus to force the dispute to mediation machinery of the federal government.

Benjamin Fairless, U. S. Steel Corp. president, has said: "Whether our workers are to get a raise, and how much it will be if they do, is a matter which probably cannot be determined by collective bargaining, and will apparently have to be decided finally in Washington."

IN WASHINGTON, the Bureau of Labor Statistics last week issued figures directly bearing on the steel negotiations. It reported that average hourly earnings in basic steel—exclusive of overtime and premium benefits—now are $1.79. That is 11c an hour under figures generally reported in the daily press.

The new BLS figure, it was reported, will loom large in WSB consideration of the contract settlement finally reached by the USA.

For the union's part, Murray has expressed the hope that a settlement can be reached across the bargaining table by Dec. 31, the expiration of the present contract. Whether that goal will be reached is the question of the week.

Textile Sets Pace With 3 Big Pay Boosts In Southern Mills

Three big collective bargaining gains have just been reported by CIO Textile Workers in their drive to bring wage scales in Southern mills up to Northern minimums.

At two mills of A. D. Juilliard & Co., TWUA gained an 8c hourly wage boost and a cost-of-living clause. Mills covered are at Rome and Aragon, Ga.

At California Cotton Mills, Uniontown, Ala., Textile won a 10½% package increase, including 5c hourly.

At Moore Textile, Charlotte, N. C., Textile won an 8½% increase.

The Juilliard settlement, said James W. Bamford, TWUA Southern director, is "the first realistic approach made by Southern cotton-rayon mills toward meeting the wage problems of Southern textile workers." TWUA will press, he said, for similar wage settlements throughout the South.

John Hancock Pay Hike Given WSB Approval

WITH APPROVAL of an excellent contract with the John Hancock Insurance Co. under its belt, the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee last week made final preparations to win National Labor Relations Board elections among Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. agents.

Seven thousand agents are involved in the elections. The biggest election was held Nov. 30 for 5000 agents in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York City. The ballots will be counted Dec. 5.

Other elections will be held on Dec. 7 for 1000 agents in Ohio, and on Dec. 14 for 500 agents in Connecticut.

"True to form, the anti-social corporation, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., has resorted to every known trick to block efforts of the agents to organize into a union of their own choosing," said Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and IAWOC chairman.

"The company's latest act was to grant a discriminatory increase, on the day before the election, applicable to those not participating in the voting.

"The company granted a pittance of an increase, which will not be satisfactory when bargaining rights are established by IAWOC.

"The CIO is in the insurance field to stay. It will bring greater security and higher living standards to all insurance agents throughout the nation. Metropolitan's tactics will avail it nothing, and the CIO will bring the blessing of organization to its employes."

The IAWOC contract with John Hancock—which the Wage Stabilization Board approved late last week—brings increases in wages and commissions to about 6000 agents. The company itself says they average approximately $13 a week.

The pact also outlaws the "individual agent's agreement" — a yellow dog contract—and provides the check-off, the union shop and a $260 annual vacation allowance. Another feature is a streamlined grievance procedure, which includes arbitration of all disputes.

IAWOC last April won bargaining rights at John Hancock in a NLRB election and negotiated the contract, which the agents ratified in August.

UPW Barred From N.Y. Labor Inquiry

The newly-formed advisory committee on city labor relations in New York City has refused to let the United Public Workers take part in its deliberations.

The committee will study the city's labor policies and make recommendations for a possible city labor relations act. The UPW was one of 11 unions ousted from the CIO as Communist-dominated.

The Price Parade

Oil Unions Agree On Joint Pay Hike Drive

By RAY DAVIDSON

IN THE PAST seriously divided, labor unions in the oil industry have now embarked on a new program of cooperation that may mark the beginning of a new era of collective bargaining in that industry.

Seventeen CIO, independent and AFL unions held a conference in St. Louis at which they pledged mutual support and devised a joint strategy for a bold campaign to secure substantial wage increases—increases far beyond any yet permitted by the Wage Stabilization Board. The conference was held Nov. 24-25.

Specific goals of the various unions vary somewhat, ranging from 25 to 30c an hour in general increases and including a number of other items, such as increased night shift premiums. But all unions will work together on strategy to secure minimum improvements acceptable to all.

Seventy-four delegates attended the conference and their unions represent approximately 250,000 employes of the oil industry. It was the first time in history that the unions in this industry had held such a session.

CIO's Oil Workers Intl. Union had suggested the conference, it being the largest union in the industry. As host union, the Oil Workers insisted that the show be run democratically, with the rules and agenda to be fixed by vote of all delegates present.

The delegates elected OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight chairman.

Unions participating included the OWIU-CIO, representing employes of 350 companies from coast to coast; the Standard Refinery Union and Bayonne Marine Employes Assn., representing Standard of New Jersey employes on the East Coast; Bayonne Texaco Employes Assn.; Baytown Employes Federation, representing employes of the huge Baytown, Tex., Humble refinery.

Central States Petroleum Union, with about 24 locals representing nearly all employes of Standard of Indiana in several states; Independent Oil Workers of Oklahoma, representing part of Continental's employes; Gulf Employes Assn. of New England; New England Petroleum Labor Council, representing employes of five major companies.

WESTERN States Service Station Employes Association, representing Standard of California service station employes; Independent Industrial Workers Assn. and Cooperative Bargaining Agency.

Shortly after the joint oil union conference, OWIU filed formal notice with the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service that a grave dispute exists in the Oil Workers wage talks with 349 petroleum companies.

Several weeks ago OWIU began a bargaining campaign to seek a 25c hourly general wage increase plus other contract improvements.

In his notification to the federal agency, Knight said:

"We are most anxious to cooperate with the government for the purpose of avoiding any interruption of defense production.

"However, we feel that we should advise you that this dispute is very grave and that the employes involved are very restless because of the curtailment of their earning power during this period when prices are completely out of line and when industry is making tremendous profits."

He's 'Adviser' Now—

Capehart Renews Drive On Price Controls

By FRED ROSS

SEN. CAPEHART (R. Ind.) last week appeared in a new and self-appointed role. Now he's "adviser" to the Office of Price Stabilization.

Capehart is the same Indiana manufacturer who at the last session of Congress came to the aid of his fellow manufacturers with the Capehart Amendment to the Defense Production Act. This amendment guarantees manufacturers' profits under the guise of price control.

He appeared in his new role at a hearing held by the Joint Congressional "Watchdog" Committee on Defense Production.

Capehart indicated by his questioning of Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle that he would like very much to have controls removed when the "law of supply and demand" forces a price below the OPS ceiling.

He was abetted in his quizzing of DiSalle by only two other committee members present, Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.), committee chairman, and Rep. Brown (D. Ga.), vice chairman.

DiSalle refused to be taken in by Capehart's arguments in favor of letting nature take its course as far as prices are concerned.

The Price Stabilizer pointed out that if controls are removed there is no guarantee that the same law of supply and demand would not cause prices to go still higher.

DiSalle even went further. He called for repeal or amendment not only of the Capehart Amendment, but also of the Herlong and Butler-Hope Amendments to the DPA.

The Herlong Amendment guarantees wholesalers and retailers the same percentage markup profits that they made between May 24 and June 24, last year, or in the nearest representative period.

THE BUTLER-HOPE Amendment prohibits quota restrictions on the slaughter of livestock.

There were some indications that manufacturers themselves were "not buying" the amendment. DiSalle said that only 70 applications had been received for price increases under the Capehart clause. But these will cover thousands of items.

DiSalle added that he had informal discussions with a number of large manufacturers who said that they would wait for price increases until they can get customers to pay them.

Meanwhile, they will qualify for price increases under the Capehart Amendment.

A Business Week article also hinted that there may not be a rush to take advantage of price increases under the amendment. The reason: the mountains of bookkeeping involved and a disinclination to hike prices to the ceiling while demand is off and inventories are piling up.

But DiSalle said that the regulations he was forced to issue under the three amendments would "be harmful to the economy." He said that he hoped to be able to maintain the level of prices AFTER increases permitted under the Capehart Amendment are absorbed into the economy.

"I think that we can hold meat prices pretty much as they are," he said. Neither did DiSalle expect any general increase in the price of bread, although he admitted that there would be "scattered" increases to absorb the rise in wheat prices.

Although Capehart's tactics with Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson varied, he was not a man to miss an opportunity.

CAPEHART asked if there is any group of people who are hurting the defense program" and feared that "people in the plants are not excited."

Finally, Wilson said it would be good if more and more citizens were so "alive to the necessities" of the defense effort that strikes would be held to a minimum.

Wilson said that strikes had hurt the production of airplane engines and that transportation strikes caused great damage.

But Wilson apparently did some second thinking. After William F. Foster, acting secretary of defense, followed him as a witness, Wilson returned to make some additional remarks.

"There has been a 300% increase in the production of raw materials since the Korean War started," Wilson said.

"We probably have lost less man-hours than when we had a no-strike pledge during the last war." And then he added, "Yes, we have lost less man-hours."

'Fantastic Spread' On Prices Hit By Carey

CIO WENT to the farm experts last week to denounce the "fantastic spread between the prices paid the farmer for his products and the prices paid for those same products by the industrial worker who constitutes the great bulk of American urban consumers."

James Carey

That criticism was voiced by James B. Carey, CIO secretary treasurer and president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

Carey addressed the Dept. of Agriculture's Graduate School in Washington.

"The farmer," he said, "is told in no uncertain terms by the middleman what will be paid him for the result of his labor."

But "at the other end of the line," the CIO official emphasized, "the ultimate purchaser is not allowed to set the price he will pay. He is told by the same middleman what he must pay for the product."

Carey told the Dept. of Agriculture group that CIO does "not believe that prices paid the farmer for his foods and fibres are inflationary, and we are similarly convinced that prices paid industrial workers for their labor are not inflationary."

Carey listed these principles "that should govern farmer-labor relations":

1. "The earth was made for man, not man for the earth.
2. "The bare necessities of all of us, both food and clothing, must come from the land that is cultivated by the farmer.
3. "The other necessities which are needed by men to make life more than bare existence must come from the hand of the industrial worker in the mine, mill or factory.
4. "Because of the complexity of production that arises from steady advances over the centuries through the sciences and arts, a division of labor or specialization is imperative to carry on the business of living and to achieve further progress.
5. "The only way the farmer and the industrial worker can live and progress is by the fair exchange of food and fibre for industrial products."

Putnam Gets Stabilizer Job

Roger Lowell Putnam, a Springfield, Mass., industrialist and former mayor, last week became U. S. Economic Stabilizer.

He was appointed by President Truman to succeed Eric Johnston.

In his new post, Putnam will have general supervision over Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle's office and the Wage and Salary Stabilization Boards.

Putnam is president of the Package Machinery Co.

BLS Index Up Again; Workers' Wages Drop

The cost of living, moving relentlessly upward, set another all-time high on Oct. 15 when the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Consumer Price Index reached 187.4.

The index figure represents the new BLS measurement of changes in the costs of articles and services used by workers and other low and middle income families.

The old index showed an even higher figure—187.8. That was enough to give more than 600,000 members of CIO Auto Workers a wage increase of 1c an hour under the escalator clauses in their contracts, which are tied to the old index.

The revised index compares with 186.6 on Sept. 15, the old with a 186.5 on the same date. The variation is caused by the change in the BLS market basket items.

While cost of living was chalking up a all-time high for the eighth month this year, the average work-week of manufacturing plant production workers was dropping—and with it their take-home pay. The drop, while slight, was enough to lower the average to 40.4 hours, nearly an hour less than a year ago. Average earnings dropped 28c to $65.17 a week. The figures on the BLS index:

Car Makers Gimmick To Jack Up Prices Told

ONE REASON for the high auto prices was revealed by Manly Fleischmann, Defense Production Administrator, at last week's hearing before the Congressional "Watchdog" Committee on Defense Production.

Fleischmann said the auto industry had developed an "elaborate" system for obtaining steel.

The industry, he said, is purchasing premium steel that does not have dollar-and-cents control. He said that it is hard to enforce the "general" type of control under which this steel has been placed.

Such steel has to be processed in the three or four marginal mills. Each makes a profit. And the price of such steel is further increased because of extra transportation from mill to mill.

All of which means, said Fleischmann, that this steel costs 50 to 60% more than "ordinary" steel.

Auto makers are using less premium steel because they have an allotment of regular steel, Fleischmann said. Truck manufacturers want to continue to use a large amount of premium steel.

Fleischmann gave the committee a detailed report on how the DPA was fulfilling the demands of U. S. agencies and the National Production Authority for scarce materials during the first quarter of 1952. Here are some examples:

Schools: An additional allotment of 15,000 tons of steel will permit the construction of all projects under way—approximately 1400—and 500 new projects needed in defense areas.

Ships: DPA is "exploring with a number of agencies, including the Maritime Commission, the possibility of using this premium-price plate (steel) to restore at least some of the cuts that we were originally compelled to make to apply to their programs."

Mirth On Capitol Hill: DiSalle's Quips Get Under Sen. Capehart's Hide!

Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle's answers to Sen. Capehart's (R. Ind.), questions frequently brought snickers and laughter from the audience and reporters at a hearing before the Congressional "Watchdog" Committee on Defense Production.

After considerable questioning by Capehart, DiSalle said that he hoped to maintain the general level of prices after the economy absorbs increases permitted under the Capehart amendment, But he added:

"That's like saying a man who has a bad arm and leg that if you amputate, his condition won't be bad at all."

At another point, Capehart accused DiSalle of taking "political" advantage of reduced soap prices by announcing his probable intention of reducing the ceiling price on soap. DiSalle retorted:

"I don't have to take credit for anything. I'm not running for this office."

DiSalle's answers finally got under Capehart's skin. The Senator pressed DiSalle to give him instances of decontrol.

"Last week we decontrolled corn cobs and Christmas trees," DiSalle said.

This brought the loudest mirthful explosion from audience and caused Capehart to warn DiSalle against being "funny."

Give A Buck To PAC

'Rich Man's McCarthy'

The Republican Party in Ohio was dead-set on winning the 1950 Senatorial election for Bob Taft.

Great sums of money were collected; the state was dotted with his election billboards; conservative radio commentators and even more conservative newspapers turned over their columns—on news pages and editorial pages—to the sacred cause of Taftism.

The whole process cost a lot of money, and it was worth a lot of money to the Taft forces.

Those are facts. They cannot be denied. They were not denied when the Ohio Senator testified last week at the Senate probe of last year's Buckeye State elections.

Instead, Senator Taft used the hearing as a sounding board to carry on the "smear CIO campaign" in which he has indulged for the past decade—and which he is ready to use in 1952. Taft is a smarter man than Joe McCarthy. Taft is a smoother operator—in fact a rich man's McCarthy.

Taft claimed that the campaign against him had "undertones" of communism—a charge as erroneous as it was vicious. He guessed that the CIO and other unions had spent nearly six million dollars in an effort to defeat him—but could offer no scintilla of proof to back up these supercharged figures of his imagination.

He sought to smear the CIO News, the motives of honest union men and women, and the conduct of the campaign they waged against him.

Taft and his public relations advisers have worked hard to build the Senator a public reputation of integrity, sincerity and honesty. His performance before the Senate committee did not help the Taft myth. Rather, it showed that Taft is today what Taft has always been: a reactionary man intent on winning the American presidency, and not particular how he does it.

Furthermore . . .

He has a handy knack, particularly on all-important problems of America's role in the troubled world of 1952, of being on all sides of all issues.

Here are a few cases in point:

In Washington, a few weeks ago, Robert Alfonso told the Press Club:

"I don't think my own foreign policy statements differ from President Truman's policy."

Then he went up to New York to the Union League Club, to belabor U. S. foreign policy for "lack of judgment, lack of ability and lack of any program . . ."

Last week the GOP leader was touring the South—no, not as a "carpet-bagger" (that's a touchy phrase with Robert!).

At Durham, Chapel Hill and other points in North Carolina, Taft denounced the United Nations' resistance to Communist aggression on Korea as "the Truman war . . . an unnecessary war which has accomplished nothing."

Evidently, it's a question of which Taft are you listening to.

No Cease Fire Here

'Calamity For The South'

(The recent smears by Dixiecrat Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina against the CIO Textile Workers and the U. S. labor movement brought this reply from John W. Edelman, TWUA Washington representative. Edelman addressed a TWUA joint board in Rock Hill, S. C.)

FROM A PUBLIC official with a vast experience of the needs of a nation in war-time, Governor Byrnes' attack on the Textile Union of America for urging that no structural steel be allocated to new textile mills at this moment was utterly inexcusable.

Apparently the Governor was using the TWUA as a stalking horse for a slap at the allocations program of the National Production Authority, which was later obliged to agree with the position taken by the union in this particular matter.

To smear the TWUA as being anti-South because it pointed out the economic absurdity of using critically needed metals to build additional plants when the textile industry is already equipped to produce more goods than are being currently consumed was as unfair as it was bad tempered.

TWUA deserves the commendation of every responsible business man and public official in the South, to say nothing of the wage earners and the farmers, for its highly successful and unselfish efforts to raise basic wages in the cotton textile industry during the past decade.

It cannot be denied that the most important single reason why cotton mill workers' average wages, in both union and non-union mills, have more than doubled in a very few years is the unionization drive conducted by TWUA and the CIO. The rather sensational upward climb of textile mill workers' purchasing power has certainly set the pace for wage rises in other industries throughout the South.

Businessmen in the South who have prospered in recent years should recognize that the real basis for these economic advances is the progress made in eliminating grossly substandard wages.

CIO has actively supported all moves for the development of the South and for the increased industrialization of the region. Surely the people of the South must realize that no real improvement occurs when you merely dump a few sweatshops in a semi rural area. It would be an unmitigated calamity for the South if in its zeal to locate new plants it helped bring about a real depression in the textile industry due to the serious over-expansion of productive facilities.

Anyone who troubles to look at the basic statistics regarding production and consumption of textiles today must see at once that there is already evidence of over-capacity, which could create economic distress for both employers and employes through the entire industry if proper judgment is not used.

American textile mills now have a capacity to produce over 14 billion yards of cloth per year. Less than that amount is actually being made. Peak output of textiles in the United States took place during the last war when 13.3 billion yards were turned out. An industry which can produce a billion or more yards than is being consumed could easily maneuver itself into a nasty spot.

IN MONTHS ahead the "little people" throughout the South will be actively exhorted to become the pawns in far-reaching political maneuvers which can only serve the ends of economic reaction and a very dangerous and nasty form of isolationism in world affairs.

That clique of local politicians, who in an excess of courtesy are called statesmen and who seek to play the game of Taft Republicanism under the name of Southern Democracy, are not merely engaging in trickery, they are courting disaster at a time of world crisis. In 1948 the Thurmond insurrection just missed throwing the presidential election into the electoral college.

Just try to picture what could happen not only in this country but throughout the world between November 1952 and January 1953 if we had to wait for Congress to meet before we knew who was to head our government.

The rank and file people of the South must see to it that the feuds of disgruntled politicians, or blind frenzy for power, does not push this country to the point where we could become virtually helpless while the whole world depends on our leadership and strength in the struggle against totalitarianism.

Behind The Headlines—

At Least They'll Get A Trip To New York!

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

A FLOCK OF America's youngsters will be guests—all expenses paid—of the National Association of Manufacturers at the 56th Congress of American Industry and the First International Conference of Manufacturers in New York this week

The group comprises 49 college students, one from each state and the District of Columbia, and 12 apprentices in skilled manufacturing trades. The students were chosen from 600 candidates nominated by their college presidents. Of the 49, eight are going into teaching.

NAM publicity says this program, started three years ago "as a public service," was evolved "after we received many requests for information from colleges asking just what kind of an organization the association was and what it did."

Perhaps NAM took to heart an Elmo Roper survey of 1948 which showed that only 49% of the public knew anything about the NAM; of that number, a fifth were "for" NAM, an eighth "against," and the rest had no opinion.

It seems hard to understand the ignorance about NAM, since the NAM News has boasted that in 1950 alone NAM put out 7,839,039 pamphlets, which if stacked in one pile would reach four miles into the sky.

Of these, more than half went to high schools and colleges, an increase of 11% over 1949 and of 600% over 1947. In fact, the NAM said more than 16,000 educators ordered its literature in 1950.

NAM has now "decentralized" its vast propaganda campaign, has sent public relations experts out into the field for a "grass roots" campaign.

The NAM was formed in 1895, incorporated in New York, listing among its "general objects and purposes" the support of certain legislation and opposition to other legislation.

Yet when, in 1946, Congress passed the Lobbying Act, requiring the registration of those working for or against legislation, the NAM refused, declaring it was a service organization "with relatively little interest in lobbying as it understands that term." Finally it did file, under protest, and is still testing the constitutionality of the law. In 1947 it reported total income of $5,145,649, but said only $146,-182.12 of that was spent in lobbying.

During his 1948 campaign President Truman said the NAM boasted that it spent $3 million in 1946 to kill price controls, and that it found 85% for OPA when the NAM campaign started, and it changed that to only 26%.

All observers say that the major credit for forcing passage of the Taft-Hartley anti-labor act belongs to the NAM.

NAM founght creation of the Securities and Exchange Commission; the Social Security Act of 1935; the Full Employment Act of 1946; and more recently the creation of the National Science Foundation. This last is not just obscurantism. Behind that fight is the whole issue of the ultimate control of atomic energy, the biggest coming battle in U. S. economic history.

In the 1935-41 New Deal era, when most of our present welfare legislation was put on the books, the NAM, according to students, fought 31 of the 38 major reforms passed.

Back in the era of President Wilson, a House committee looked into the NAM, compiled 60 volumes of testimony on lobbying and other activities, including union-busting, of this "service organization." The report, a model of understatement, found NAM methods "secretive, reprehensible, and deserve the severest condemnation by the House."

Why is the NAM so solicitous about students? Perhaps the clue is to be found in "Plant Tours," a publication of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which points out that "students are reached at a crucial age, shortly before they attain voting status."

As to NAM's general approach to life today, this is what it said in the Nov. 17 issue of the NAM News, discussing "The Weakness of the West":

"In this country, although there is much talk of equality of sacrifice, it is evident that the Administration and its supporters are determined to avoid any seeming break in the upward progress of living standards during the rearmament period. The cost of defense is supposed to be borne by American business and that small segment of the population which earns better than an average income."

Well, New York is a fascinating town, and those 49 students ought to have a good time—if they can get away from their hosts.

A Book Review

Mary Anderson; Sweden's Loss, America's Gain

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

TAXES were high but crops were never very good on Magnus Anderson's small farm in Sweden. Much of the ground was lowland and heavy rains reduced it to swamp. One year not enough rye was grown to make seed for the next spring.

For two years things went from bad to worse, until finally Anderson and some other farmers went to the king to ask that their taxes be lowered. The king gave them an audience but turned down their request, and Magnus Anderson went back home to tell his family the bad news. He was going to lose the farm and could no longer support his sons and daughters.

MARY ANDERSON

All this happened more than 50 years ago, and is interesting now largely because it was responsible for bringing one of America's most outstanding labor women to this country—Mary Anderson, head of the U. S. Women's Bureau in the Dept. of Labor for 25 years. (She retired in 1944).

The youngest of seven children, Mary was 16 at the time of her father's difficulties. The oldest sister already had emigrated to the United States the year before, and Mary and another sister, Hilda, decided to join her.

So begins the life story of a remarkable woman as told in "Woman at Work," autobiography of Mary Anderson, published last week. The book is the joint project of Miss Anderson and Mary Winslow, a former co-worker for many years.

"Woman at Work" might be called a "success story," for it is a fascinating account of how a Swedish immigrant who started out as a servant girl and an exploited factory worker, rose through her activity in the labor movement to one of the highest positions in government ever reached by a woman in this country.

During the 25 years she was director of the Women's Bureau, Mary Anderson took part in the important social and labor problems of her time. She was given many important missions here and abroad, and hobnobbed with presidents, foreign rulers, and scores of leaders in labor and government circles in this country and Europe.

Yet she never lost the patience, simplicity, native shrewdness and down-to-earth common sense which first launched her on her career in the labor movement. One of the tactics she sometimes used successfully when confronted with a difficult situation was to "sit tight and say nothing."

The fact that her practical ideas and attitudes as a government official were based on lessons she had learned in the labor movement was undoubtedly her greatest asset in her government post.

"Woman at Work." is an interesting and important book which unionists, both men and women, will find worthwhile reading. It will make a valuable addition to all union libraries.

Knuckle-Rapping

Wuxtry! Top Command Of DPO Reprimanded In Commie Press

THINGS ARE TOUGH all ever—even for the Commie liners in the Distributive, Processing & Office Workers!

For years, DPO has been a bright star in the Kremlin firmament.

But now DPO and its ever-so-obedient officials have been taken over the hurdle for various high crimes and misdemeanors (in the eyes of the Communist Party, that is).

If not an old-fashioned caning, at least a good strong knuckle-rapping has been meted out to the brass of DPO.

Said knuckle-rapping was handled by George Morris, "labor editor" of the Daily Worker and frequent knuckle-rapper for the Communists.

Things aren't what they used to be in DPO, complains Morris. For example, "democracy has suffered." A lot of people that Morris (and the CP) like—for example, Sec.-Treas. James Durkin who used to head the United Office & Professional Workers—have been "recognized" out of office. And "the union's life doesn't ring true to its traditional past."

The DPO is falling behind in collective bargaining (that's not news for a red-wired union, but it may be for Morris!). He comes right out and admits that District 65—which is just about the whole of the DPO outfit—is signing contracts in which "such raises as are being obtained should be deducted almost in total for payments on the union's security (welfare) plan."

DPO is a forced marriage—which miscarried—of various Communist-dominated unions. It includes District 65 of department store locals in New York, the remnants of UOPWA and the shreds of Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers.

AFTER FTA and UOPWA were tried, convicted and expelled from CIO as party-dominated, they hastened to amalgamate with District 65 into DPO.

But the amalgamation didn't jell—mainly because the workers involved would have none of it.

Out on the West Coast, in the course of the past 18 months, some 7000 fruit and vegetable packing shed workers (who were the heart of FTA) have reformed in CIO.

In the East, the big Campbell Soup local of FTA in Camden even earlier stayed with CIO, and now are in the Packinghouse Workers.

In the office and professional field, CIO's Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee has made considerable progress.

And CIO's Department Store Workers are moving ahead in New York.

The result: District 65 dues-payers in New York were paying the freight for numerous former FTA and UOPWA officials, who brought to the merger paper organizations without memberships.

Net result was a "reorganization" of DPO's top command on a "proportional" basis and a whittling down of what organizing staff the outfit had.

DPO Pres. Arthur Osman kept his hands on the reins.. "Reorganized" out of office were DPO Vice Pres. Victoria Garvin and John Stanley, Sec.-Treas. Durkin and Vice Pres. Robert Latham from North Carolina.

Durkin, the DPO told its New York membership, is "incompetent." (That's hardly news!)

All in all, DPO apparently is becoming a ticklish situation for the Communist Party. In "normal" times, it would be a matter for the CP labor secretary to lay down the law and corral DPO officials back into line.

WHAT WITH one thing and another, the party apparatus is not running so smoothly these days. So the laying down of the law was assigned to labor expert Morris, who spread the party's fears and misgivings through two lengthy columns.

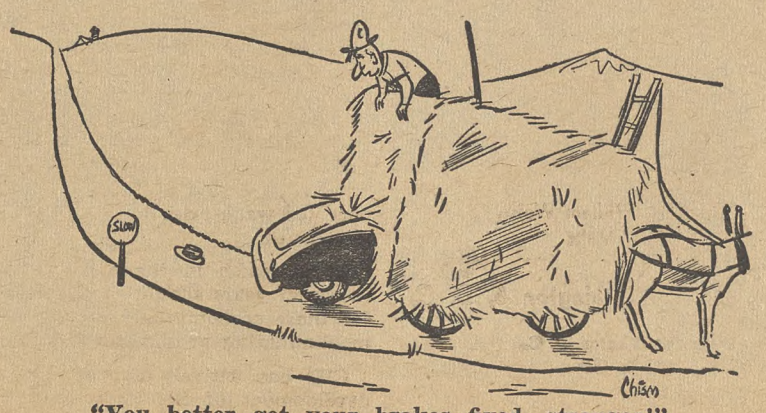
"It is DPO's democracy that has suffered in the recent period," Morris mourns.

And heresy of heresy, Morris continues, DPO's District 65 has been signing contracts recently with cost-of-living escalator clauses. (What that does to the party-line you can figure out!)

To top it off, Morris was glum about DPO District 65's recent anniversary festival. He wrote:

"What struck me was the omission of any reference to the union's origin and history as a left-wing organization . . . This couldn't have been an oversight. Not in 65."

Yes, things are tough all over!



"You better get your brakes fixed, stranger!"

Sen. Taft's 'Big Lie' Against The American People

By MILTON PLUMB

THE AMERICAN people last week began to get a clearer insight into the slick and irresponsible big-money propaganda campaign that lies behind the 1950 re-election of Sen. Taft (R. O.) and his developing campaign for the 1952 Republican Presidential nomination.

It was not a pretty story—the history of the "big lie" campaign of big business to re-elect its man to the Senate.

At this late date, many of the facts of that campaign are already buried under a curtain of subterfuge and deceit.

The curtain on the Ohio 1950 election situation began to lift Nov. 26 when the long-delayed public hearings got under way in the Senate Caucus Room. As far back as October 1950, Taft's Democratic opponent, Ohio State Auditor Joseph T. Ferguson had wired Congress to demand an investigation of the huge expenditures that were being made in behalf of his opponent.

Despite their delayed beginning, the hearings of the Senate Elections subcommittee have a particular timeliness in the light of today's political situation. Less than a week before, President Truman had pointed out that "special interests poured money into Ohio last year to elect a Republican Senator" and warned that more money would be spent to beat the Democrats in 1952 than in any past election.

Taft Smear Job

Taft at the outset called upon the committee to "not permit outsiders in the Democratic National Committee or the President of the United States himself to use this committee as a political smear weapon."

But Taft's own 62-page statement, accompanied by 82 exhibits, which he read to the committee can be described only as "a political smear weapon."

Both Ferguson and the chief CIO spokesman at the hearing, Secy.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council, who followed Taft to the stand, felt it necessary to amend their original prepared statements because of the Senator's clearly political assault.

Pointing out that labor knows how to accept defeat as well as victory at the polls and that he had tried to prepare an objective analysis of the Ohio campaign that would further the committee's announced purpose of determining whether new legislation governing elections is necessary, Clayman said:

"I shed my qualms after hearing Sen. Taft yesterday."

Taft, pleading a busy schedule, managed to get first placement on the list of witnesses, though Ferguson was originally slated as first witness.

Thus, Taft—with his long list of accusations—got the lion's share of the newspaper publicity; and the subsequent replies fared far less well in the news columns of the press.

Significantly, one of the chief points brought out about Ohio campaign was the "conspiracy of silence" with which, Clayman testified, Ohio metropolitan newspapers greeted Ferguson's candidacy. Although they gave "extraordinary" publicity to Taft's campaign, the newspapers almost universally played down statements by his opponents, Clayman said. He added:

"The real hope of the retention of our democratic institutions is to keep the channels of information to the people free, clean and open. That wasn't so in Ohio in 1950."

Clayman cited many examples of biased handling of the campaign news, but pointed out that the remedy of this evil "is a matter of conscience and not of law." He asked the newspaper industry "at least in Ohio" to undertake "a re-examination of its ethics in the Ohio campaign."

Support for his statement came indirectly from the press itself. As he was testifying on the point of press bias, less than half—perhaps not even one-third—the number of reporters who had covered Taft's charges against the CIO on Monday were seated at the three press tables in the hearing room.

Taft's testimony consisted in the main of a patent effort to misrepresent labor's opposition to him as a "Communist plot." He also jumped the gun in discrediting the later revelations of the millions of dollars spent on his behalf by claiming that his own expenditures were necessary to offset fantastic sums he declared were spent by labor groups in an effort to defeat him.

"My opinion is that the campaign was actually organized by the CIO headquarters in Washington, in close cooperation with the Democratic National Committee," he charged.

Testifying on this assertion, Clayman declared that "Mr. Taft really does a grave injustice to the AFL, and the other labor groups." He pointed out that labor's opposition to his re-election was a joint undertaking in which the AFL, United Mine Workers, railway brotherhoods, the then independent Machinists and the CIO all cooperated through a joint labor policy committee.

Ferguson, who has served as Ohio State Auditor for more than a decade and therefore presumably knows something about financial accounting, told the committee that, actually, Sen. Taft's campaign cost "more than $5 million dollars" instead of the $612,000 total that the Senator had acknowledged.

TAFT LIES ANSWERED. Jacob Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO Council and the Ohio CIO-PAC, spent two days last week before the Senate Elections subcommittee answering some of the many false charges of Sen. Taft (R., O) about labor's part in the Ohio 1950 senatorial campaign. Clayman branded Taft's assertions "pure political malarkey."

Submitting a detailed breakdown for his figure, Ferguson listed $1,204 355 available to statewide groups supporting Taft; $703,154 spent by county groups; $1.2 million spent for advertising by corporations that aided the Taft campaign, and $2 million for other miscellaneous activities, including literature, billboards, paid-half holidays given workers for attending Taft rallies, etc.

Charges Flop

"When approximately $5 million can be spent in behalf of one candidate, the principles of our democratic system and our American way of life become hopelessly abandoned," Ferguson declared.

"The contributions that labor unions are able to make for their candidates are insignificant in comparison."

The total spent on his own campaign was only $107,004.94, Ferguson told the committee. Taft had told the committee that he "guessed" Ferguson's campaign had cost about $2 million.

As testimony before the committee unfolded the true story of the campaign, others of Taft's charges designed to misrepresent labor and the CIO in particular also collapsed just as completely.

Particularly bitter over a "comic book" produced by the United Labor League of Ohio, Taft intimated to the committee that 1.6 million copies had been distributed at a cost of $160,000. He backed down when the committee staff reported that they had documentary evidence that only one million copies had been printed and that the total cost was $16,000.

Taft took as the springboard for his attack on PAC and the CIO the "Speaker's Handbook on Robert A. Taft" which he called "a mass of plain lies, libelous statements, incidents that never occurred and twisted distortions."

The book, which recorded Taft's votes on some 927 different occasions, was declared to be "essentially correct" by Clayman. He conceded only that there were two items on which Taft's position may have been unintentionally misrepresented. Taft had complained that the book presentedly wrongly his position on public housing and the 75c minimum wage.

Clayman pointed out, however, that Taft's votes on these matters actually had been recorded correctly. He insisted that, although Taft had claimed to support public housing, "when the chips were down Mr. Taft voted against his own bill." Taft contended that he did this because his bill had been blocked in the House and he had to vote for a substitute.

"There was certainly no deliberate attempt to deceive on these issues," Clayman declared. He added that, if errors had been made in one or two instances, they did not make invalid Taft's record on the more than 900 other votes covered.

Perhaps the most vicious of Taft's phony charges was that the AFL and CIO had engaged in "a sinister conspiracy" with a "peculiar Communist undertone" in their campaign to defeat him. Clayman and other witnesses said that in making this statement Taft was engaging in "scurrility" and branded them "a tissue of lies."

The day after Clayman's reply, Taft's office sent the committee a statement purporting to be from the Senator in support of his charge of "Communism" against PAC.

Questioning by the committee brought out that the Senator had never seen the statement, but had ordered his staff to prepare it over the telephone. Most of the charges were based upon reports of the House Un-American Activities Committee's discredited investigation of PAC in 1944, when former Rep. Dies (D. Tex.) was chairman.

Clayman, recalled to the stand after the statement had been introduced, called it a "foul canard" and a "malicious" repetition of old charges. He pointed out that not a single known Communist had served on the staff of PAC during the Ohio campaign.

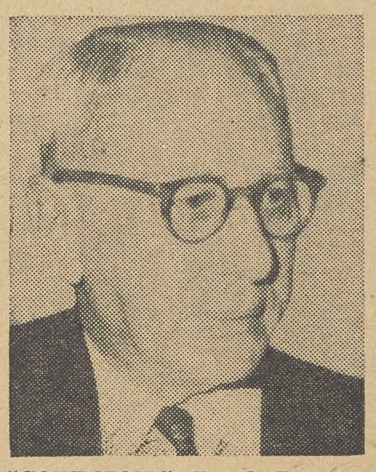
"It amazes me," he added, "that a man of the alleged integrity, the alleged sincerety, the alleged intelligence of Sen. Taft can resort to this sort of villification . . . merely by calling one of the boys in his office and telling him to get out a statement."

Dies Again

Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.), a committee members, commented that it was his understanding that the CIO "has been particularly vigorous in its anti-Communist drive." Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) added that he had observed that the 1944 reports of the Dies committee "is frequently cited as high authority" in curent smear attacks on labor unions and others.

Of many names cited in the Taft statement, only one had anything to do with the 1950 campaign. That was Jack Kroll. Clayman said that he could testify by his own personal knowledge that any effort to impute Communist connections to Kroll was a deliberate lie.

Tom Harris, CIO assistant general counsel, took the stand briefly to point out six errors of fact in just one paragraph of the Taft statement. He added that they could all easily have been checked since the facts in question are set forth correctly in a Senate document referred to in the same paragraph.



"COERCION." Beryl Peppercorn, manager of the Cleveland Joint Board, CIO Clothing Workers, refuted Sen. Taft's charges of coercion in PAC collections. He pointed out that about 50% of CJB members contributed.

Perrone Gives Up Lush Scrap Deal; Tired Of 'Persecution'

THE UNDERWORLD'S beachhead in Detroit industry narrowed last week when Santo (Sam) Perrone, the area's leading practicioner of strong - arm union - busting, bowed out of the Detroit, Michigan Stove Co.

Less than a week after the company signed a contract with the CIO Auto Workers, Perrone gave up a contract for handling the firm's scrap metal. This contract, witnesses told the Kefauver Crime Committee last spring, yielded him as much as $65,000 a year.

He said he didn't want to be "persecuted any more."

The contract was Perrone's reward for busting a strike of the unaffiliated Mechanics Educational Society at the plant in 1934. He had been called in by John A. Fry, then general manager of the company and now its president, when his workers went on strike for union recognition.

Perrone put thugs to work as scabs. They started picket line fights while police looked the other way—after all, Fry had been a deputy police commissioner once—beat some workers, threatened others and their families.

UAW officials don't attempt to explain it, but since the first of the month warrants have been taken out for Perrone and 13 others charging them with conspiracy to interfere with the rights of workers to organize a union. All but one have been served, and hearings are scheduled soon.

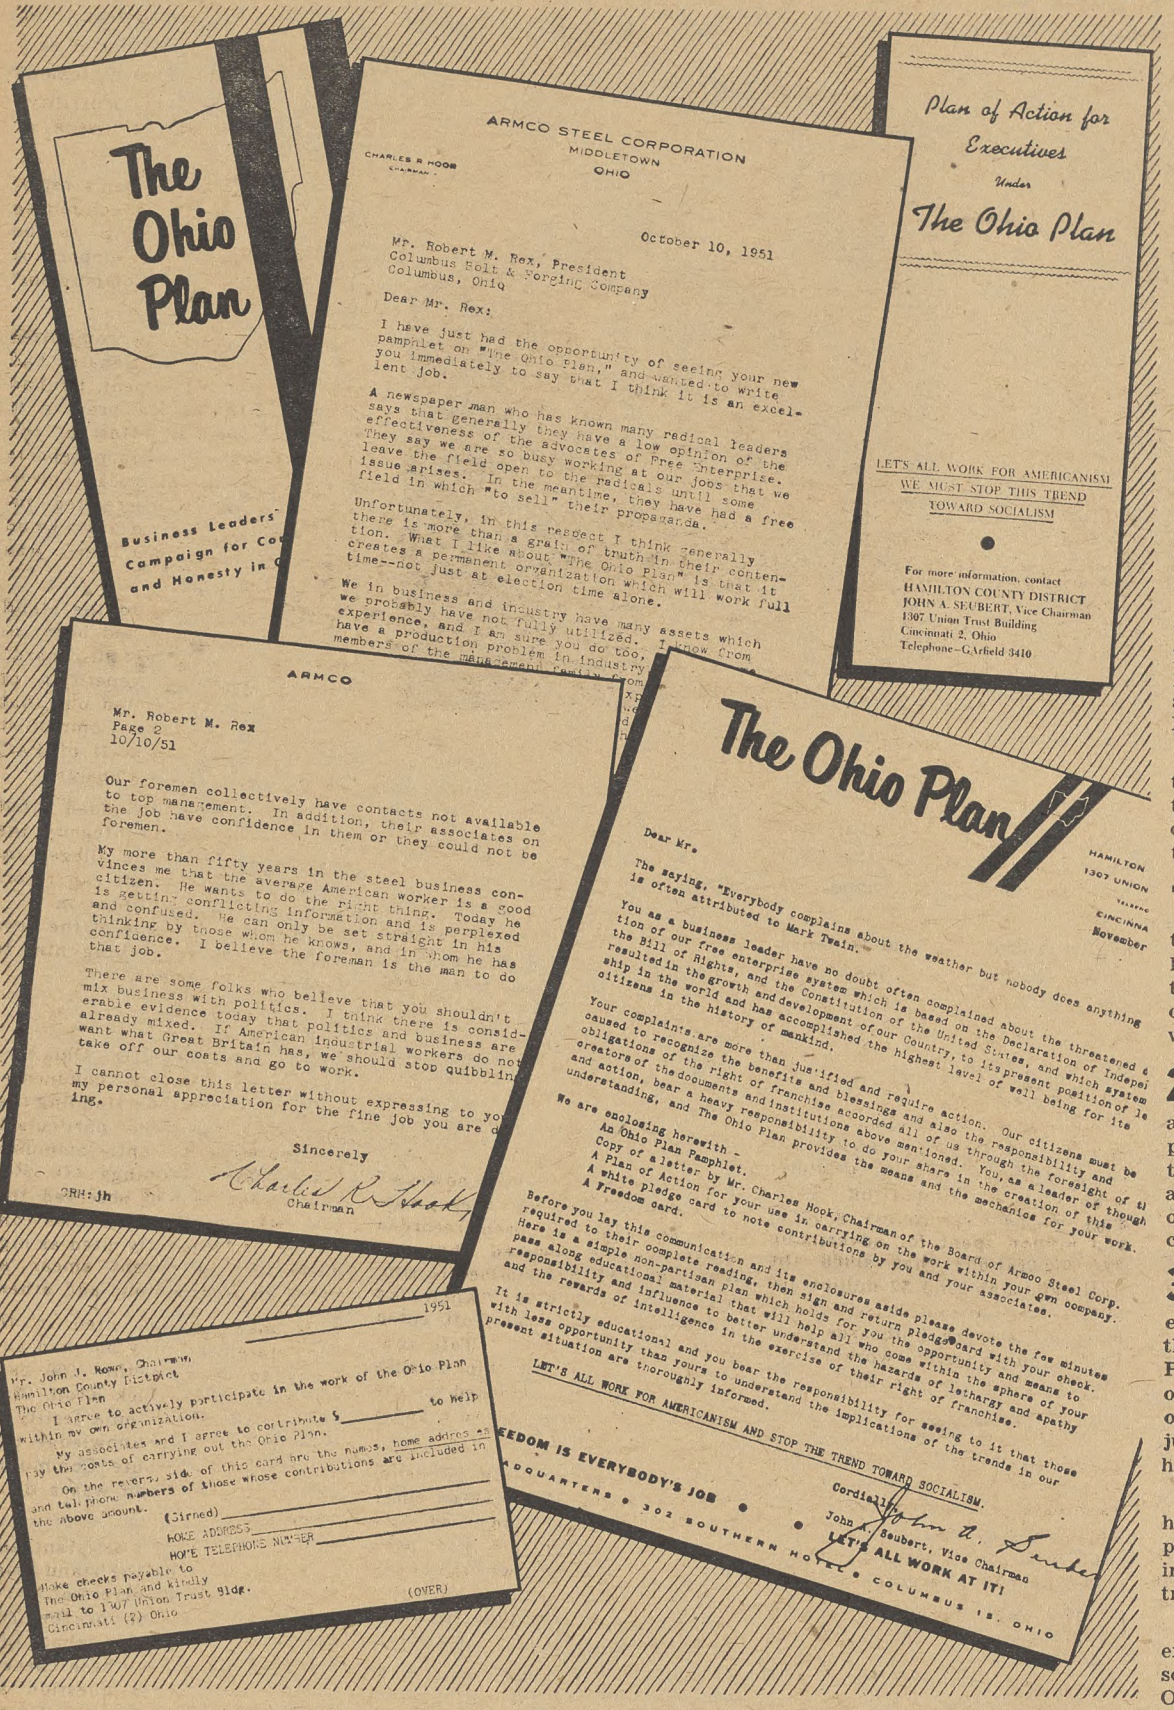
Ohio Business Forms Its Own 'PAC' To Aid Taft

By HENRY ZON

BIG BUSINESS in Ohio is putting its shoulder to the wheel to drive its favorite senator—Robert A. Taft (R. O.)—into the White House.

The plan is down in black and white and is already in operation from Room 302, Southern Hotel, Columbus, O.

Seemingly under the guiding eye of the former president of the National Association of Manufacturers and the chairman of Armco Steel Corp., Charles R. Hook, of Middletown, O., the plan calls for raising a slush fund of about $5 million for preliminary operations.



This fund is to come from the 98,000 business establishments in Ohio. If the plan is put into operation on a nationwide scale—and Gus Allbrand, Armco executive who is its wheelhorse, indicates this is a possibility—the slush fund will run into many times Ohio's $5 million.

These funds, the plan indicates, will be used in a gigantic effort to propagandize and coerce every employe of every firm in the State subscribing to the so-called Ohio Plan.

As outlined in a pamphlet entitled "Plan of Action for Executives under The Ohio Plan," the contemplated operation works in this fashion:

1 "The executive of a business establishment, after getting all the information, calls a meeting of his associates, explains the plan to them, and assigns them the work of carrying on Ohio Plan activity within his own company.

2 "While the meeting is still in session the executive gives his associates (top executives) an opportunity to make a financial contribution, listing the names, home addresses and telephone numbers on the enclosed white pledge card.

3 "The executive should then have his associates (top executives) who have been given the job of carrying on the Ohio Plan start their program in his own company. This work consists of explaining the plan to their junior executives, department heads, supervisors and foremen."

Once the organizational set-up has been accomplished, another pamphlet called "The Ohio Plan" indicates, it will be used to distribute propaganda.

This propaganda, the pamphlet explains, "will be in letter form sent to you as the head of The Ohio Plan in your company."

"The information will be short, to the point, written by experts in their field," it adds.

"You should reproduce it on your own letterhead, sign your name and pass it on to others in your organization.

"Some of the bulletins will be for your top management group only. Others will be intended for key executives and supervisors. Others will be written so they can be given general distribution."

Mindful of the Taft-Hartley Law, the pamphlet goes on to explain that direct political activity will be kept away from the plant. "At the proper time" the Ohio Plan executive will furnish political headquarters with the names of people to act as campaign workers. They will be mobilized under the political party banners.

TOUTED as a non-partisan plan, the pamphlet nevertheless indicates its ultimate goal.

"Presidential candidates," it says, "represent political parties and the Ohio Plan is designed to contribute to the election of the right men in 1952.

"Therefore it stands to reason that at some point the program must affiliate itself with a political party."

There is no confusion in the minds of the Ohio Plan planners as to which party this will be.

Giving his blessing to the scheme for this "rich man's PAC," Hook in a letter dated Oct. 10, 1951 and addressed to Robert M. Rex, president of the Columbus Bolt & Forging Co., Columbus, declares:

"Our foremen and key men are just as interested in preserving our freedom as are the directors of the company. They will be enthusiastic workers if we will but provide them the leadership.

"OUR FOREMAN collectively have contacts not available to top management. In addition their associates on the job have confidence in them or they could not be foremen."

Hook bucks up the faint-hearted who might protest that business should not be mixed with politics by telling them firmly:

"I think there is considerable evidence today that politics and business are already mixed."

The spread of the Ohio Plan was indicated by Allbrand. He told reporters he has received inquiries from as far away as California.

"A big banker from New York was over this way and told us not to scratch his state off the list," he declared.

"The American Plan" was the name given the big union-busting drive which took place in the United States under President Warren G. Harding after the first World War. Prior to his election, Harding was also a Senator from Ohio.

Byrds Of A Feather . . .

Item on the news wire:

"Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.) and Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D. Va.) will discuss issues of the 1952 presidential campaign before the House of Delegates of the American Medical Association in Los Angeles Dec. 5."

CIO Denies Use Of Faked Photo Of Taft

THE CIO NEWS last week denied that it had printed a composite photograph of Sen. Taft and Nazi leaders.

The charge was levelled at the CIO paper by the Ohio Senator at a hearing last week before the Senate Elections subcommittee which is investigating his 1950 campaign.

"I'd like to show you the granddaddy of all political composite photographs," Taft told the committee. "It appeared in The CIO News, official national publication of the CIO, and purports to show me in conference with two Nazi leaders."

In a letter sent Nov. 29 to the chairman of the subcommittee, Henry C. Fleisher, editor of The CIO News, set forth the facts as follows:

"The October 14, 1946, issue of The CIO News carried on Page Five, two photographs: one, approximately one column wide, of Senator Taft; the other, almost three columns wide, of Hjalmar Schacht and Hans Fritzche, both defendants at the Nuremburg war crime trials.

"The two photographs are separated by a solid column of white space one-eighth inch thick. I am convinced that no fair examination of these two photographers could possibly lead to the conclusion that they represent a composite photographic representation. They are separate photographs concerning people involved in an accompanying feature story—a technique used by every daily newspaper and magazine in the country.

"The CIO News, along with every other reputable publication in this country, condemns the use of composite photographs when they are used for defamatory purposes of any kind, and I would not permit the publication of any such composite photograph in the columns of The CIO News.

"By the same token, we do not believe it constitutes a fair or ethical practice for The CIO News to be accused unfairly and unjustly of carrying 'the granddaddy of all political composite photographs.'

"I feel certain that your subcommittee, in examining these two photographs, will agree that Senator Taft's criticism was not well taken, and was, in actuality, a misrepresentation of the facts."

THAT TAFT could not have been mistaken about the true nature of the pictures involved is clear from the fact that he held up a copy of them when he made his statement to the committee.

Chief point to be remembered: In condemning the pictures Taft did not deny the accuracy of the accompanying story. This pointed out that Taft had said he believed the Nurenberg war crimes trial verdict which condemned 11 Nazis to hanging was a miscarriage of justice. They were found guilty of responsibility for the starvation and murder of more than 10 million men, women and children.

Give A Buck To PAC

Public Housing Wins In Miami

By a 4 to 1 count, voters in Miami, Fla., directed their city council to cooperate with the local housing authority in the construction of 1500 low-rent public housing units.

Of the six city councilmen elected on the same ballot, four had campaigned in favor of the housing project.

A year ago, the city council refused to go along with the public housing program and a public referendum was held on the issue. The vote was 14,246 for, 10,410 against, but the court threw out the vote on a technicality.

Economic Outlook Says—

Point Four Offers Hope To Two-Thirds Of Globe

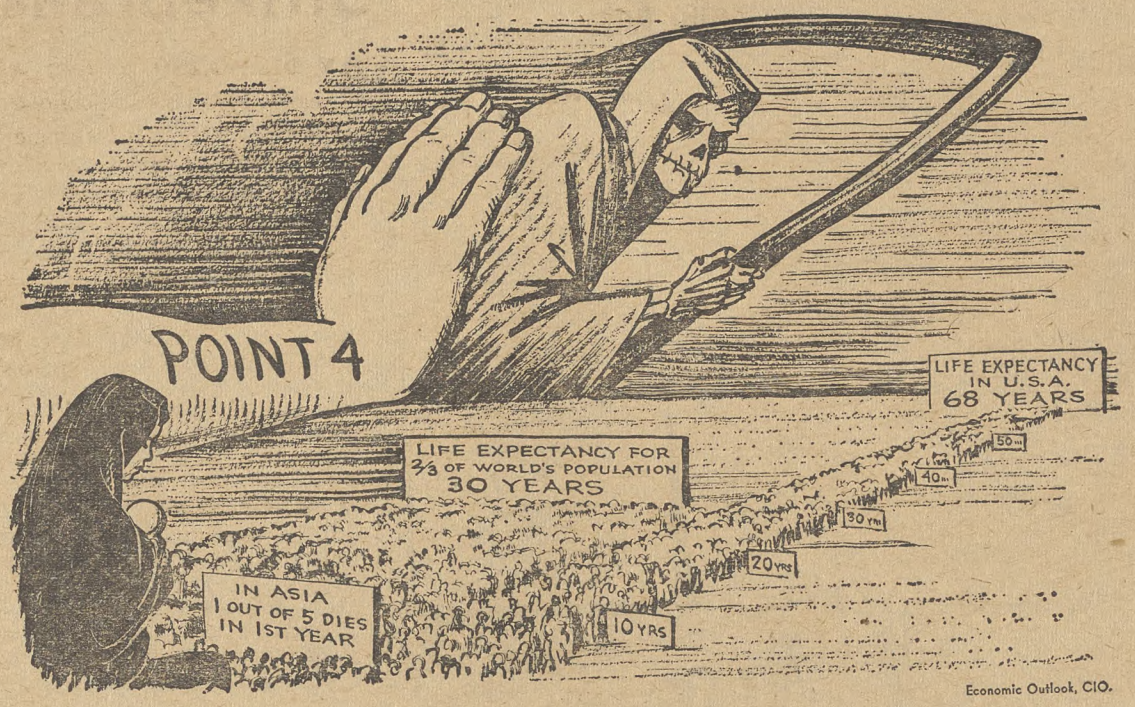
THE CIO examines the Point Four program in the current issue of the Economic Outlook and finds it entering its second year with "high hopes of growing and increasing its effectiveness."

"If it remains true to its basic character," the Outlook adds, "Point Four will never be a 'big money' program, because its purpose is not to give things to people or do things for them, but to help them do things for themselves and thus to increase their own self-reliance and self-respect."

The Economic Outlook is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research. The CIO has supported the Point Four program since it was announced by President Truman in his inaugural address in 1949.

The Outlook examines a world in which two-thirds of its 2.4 billion people live in "under-developed" countries—Asia, Africa, the South Pacific, Latin America—"ruled or dominated now or until recent years by foreign nations or by foreign financial interests."

These countries, the Outlook continues, have low average income, unequal distribution of other forms of wealth, including farm land, inadequate food, widespread diseases and illnesses, poor transportation, little or no education.



Economic Outlook, CIO.

"The majority of the population of the world is in dire need," it says. "All that is required is a helping hand.

"And it is a human reaction to help a fellow in distress—whether it pays to do so or not. It makes a lot of hard-headed practical sense, too, for good deeds are remembered and friends are a valuable asset."

Empire control of under-developed areas was undermined during World War II and the empires "are quickly dissolving," the Outlook says. Their people, more than the number living either in the free world or under Soviet control, are on the march for "national independence, human dignity and economic improvement."

"All kinds of political groups—including democrats, fascist-like super-nationalists and Communists—have been competing for the loyalty of these peoples," it continues.

"Shall we try to present these peoples with an alternative—the alternative of freedom instead of Soviet slavery, of the development of their economies instead of Kremlin promises and super-nationalist propaganda?

"Friendship with the hundreds of millions of people in the under-developed areas is essential for American security and the continued development of democracy.

"Communist propaganda and blind, super-nationalism in the under-developed areas should be answered by democratic achievement," the Outlook contends.

"Our alternative to the Kremlin propagandists should be practical deeds, here and now. In answer to the irresponsible super-nationalists of these areas, we must show our sympathy and assistance toward movements for democratic reform and national independence—economic, as well as political.

"In this vast effort, we must not identify ourselves with reactionary policies. We will lose, even before we start, if we tie ourselves to the old rulers and feudal landlords."

The Story Of Three Evangelists— They Bring Hope For A Better Life

THIS IS THE STORY of three modern-day evangelists — forerunners of the better life the United States is hopefully extending, through the Point Four Program, to the ill-clothed, ill-housed and ill-fed 2.4 billion people in the world's under-developed countries.

It is the story of three men who went to villages that are mere pin-points on the maps of their own nations and preached the gospel of better farming and better sanitation in what are now recognized as Point Four pilot projects.

It is told in a new State Dept. booklet, Point Four Pioneers, which is aptly subtitled Reports From A New Frontier.

The pioneers are Frank Pinder, Florida farmer and Farm Security Administration economist; Albion W. Patterson, teacher at a school where farming is part of the curriculum, and Horace Holmes, Tennessee farmer and farm extension agent.

Pinder went to Liberia in 1944, at the behest of a U.S. Economic Mission to that country. Patterson went to Paraguay in 1942 as one of three technicians from this country. Holmes went to India in 1948 at the invitation of the United Provinces' government.

All of them had the same job—to teach hungry people how to grow enough food to feed themselves decently and have enough left over to sell.

Their methods were substantially the same. They made friends with the people, learned their problems and their needs at first hand. They travelled constantly, going into villages and homes, meeting the people.

They DID, as well as taught. Perhaps most important, they weren't afraid to get their hands dirty.

The results are incredible. In the village of Dimeh-Amino, where Pinder set up a pilot project, the annual income of each family has increased from less than $5 a year in 1944 to about $25 now—not much by our standards, but a tremendous advance in Dimeh-Amino. Pinder-trained instructors helped.

WHEN Patterson went to Paraguay, he saw that most of the people "were small farmers who were living in a state of continuous depression," and who "lacked methods and means of communication to help" themselves. He had to supplement his Spanish by learning Guarani, the language of the original Indians.

Pilot projects were set up at Caacupe, Piribebuy, Estancia Barrerito, other localities. Cattle and seed were improved, people were eating better. Now a surplus is being produced, debts are being paid off and three other Latin-American countries have asked Paraguay for aid.

Holmes, who almost automatically became chief of the agricultural group of the Point Four Program in India when it was inaugurated in 1950, went there to help solve its major problem—food.

As a starting place, he picked the little village of Mahewa, where a few interested farmers agreed to try to improve their wheat yield. The experiment was a major success: the harvest was 43% greater than the native wheat. The program has been extended. Now, over a large part of a section 100 miles square around Etawah, in the United Provinces, the yield has jumped from an average of 13 bushels an acre to 26 bushels.

ITALIAN FREE LABOR MEETS.—Joseph Curran, CIO vice president and National Maritime Union president, listens to proceedings of first national congress of CISL, the Confederation of Italian Trade Unions. Curran was a CIO fraternal delegate to the recent congress in Naples. CSIL now represents 1.8 million Italian workers, and more than 900 delegates participated in the congress.

'West Needs Bold Action,' Curran Tells Italian Labor

DEMOCRACY will lose the war of ideas if it confines its action to that realm alone, Joseph Curran, CIO vice president and president of the Maritime Union, told the first national congress of the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions (CISL).

The congress was held in the National Museum in Naples and was attended by 920 delegates, Curran was a fraternal delegate from the CIO. Other fraternal delegates were present from Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, France, England, the AFL and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

"Democracy will lose the war of ideas," Curran said, "if we fail to take bold action in the social and economic sphere where communism works night and day to make converts of insecure and desperate men.

"I BELIEVE WE in the ICFTU share that viewpoint, the conviction that it is easier to pass a resolution against communism and in favor of democracy than it is to make democracy work better.

"Yet our goal is to make democracy work better, to prove democracy's case not by slogans but by practical achievement. Such a course will insure the defeat of communism."

Curran said there is too much of a tendency on the part of many government and industrial leaders in the west "to believe that the exclusive function of the free labor movement is to fight Communism."

"You know, as we of CIO know," he added, "that the true and lasting function of free labor is to protect the interests of the workers and to advance those interests—not only against the Communists but against any force in society that stands between the workers and the better life for which they strive.

"CIO was created to advance the interests of the workers. CISL was formed to advance the interests of the workers. And both of us have joined the free labor movements of the rest of the world in the ICFTU in order to advance the interests of the workers in every land."

Democratic forces must arise in every nation sharing the defense program of the west, he said, if they are to be able "to devote more of their energies to the constructive tasks of peace."

"Democracy cannot be exported or imported," he said. "It is a native product that must grow in native soil and must be accessible to all—not a privileged few. American assistance has made available some of the raw materials for democracy's sustenance. The use to which those materials have been and will be put must be determined by the strength of native democracy."

ILO Checks On Suez Dispute

Charges of the Egyptian government that British military authorities "are savagely violating basic human rights" of Egyptian workers in the Suez Canal area will be investigated by the Intl. Labor Office.

Raghunath Rao, ILO assistant director general, will head the probe.

The charges, filed with ILO on Nov. 5, were denied by the British. At the same time the United Kingdom promised cooperation with an ILO representative if the Egyptian government invited one to investigate. The ILO transmitted the suggestion to Cairo and an invitation was promptly forthcoming from Minister of Social Affairs Abdel Fattah Hassan Pasha.

CIO In Texas Sets Sights On Dixiecrats

By AL HIEKEN

AN AMBITIOUS political action program—to help defeat the anti-labor Texas Dixiecrats and to expand labor's voting strength throughout the state—was adopted by the 15th annual convention of the Texas State Industrial Union Council.

Paul G. Gray, member of the CIO Communications Workers from Fort Worth, was elected council president, while J. J. Hickman, a member of the CIO Oil Workers, of Houston, was re-elected as secretary-treasurer.

The Texas CIO convention was held at the Roosevelt hotel in Waco.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CWA-CIO, also a CIO vice president, told delegates that every man and woman in the CIO will be backing the CIO Steelworkers in their forthcoming, important wage negotiations.

Those negotiations, Beirne said, are part of the CIO's campaign to win equality of treatment in the defense program and to see to it that the full burden of mobilization does not fall on the working people of America alone.

Beirne warned the more than 250 convention delegates and some 100 visitors that intensive political action will be required to protect labor from legislative annihilation of hard-won gains made over the bargaining table and on picket lines.

Convention committees worked out a PAC program for widespread participation by labor in 1952 nominating conventions in Texas and for speeding up a precinct-by-precinct registration drive which now is underway. They were advised by Dan Powell, CIO-PAC Southern director, and W. D. Ellinger, PAC representative in Texas.

OTHER officers elected included: Arthur A. Rister, UPWA Local 399, Sugarland, first vice president, and the following vice presidents and executive board members:

J. N. Boen, OWIU Local 207, Kilgore; William P. Rice, UPA Local 770, Fort Worth; Robert L. Hardy, ACWA Local 557, McKinney; Roy R. Evans, UAW Local 893, Dallas; John F. Moriarity, NMU, Galveston.

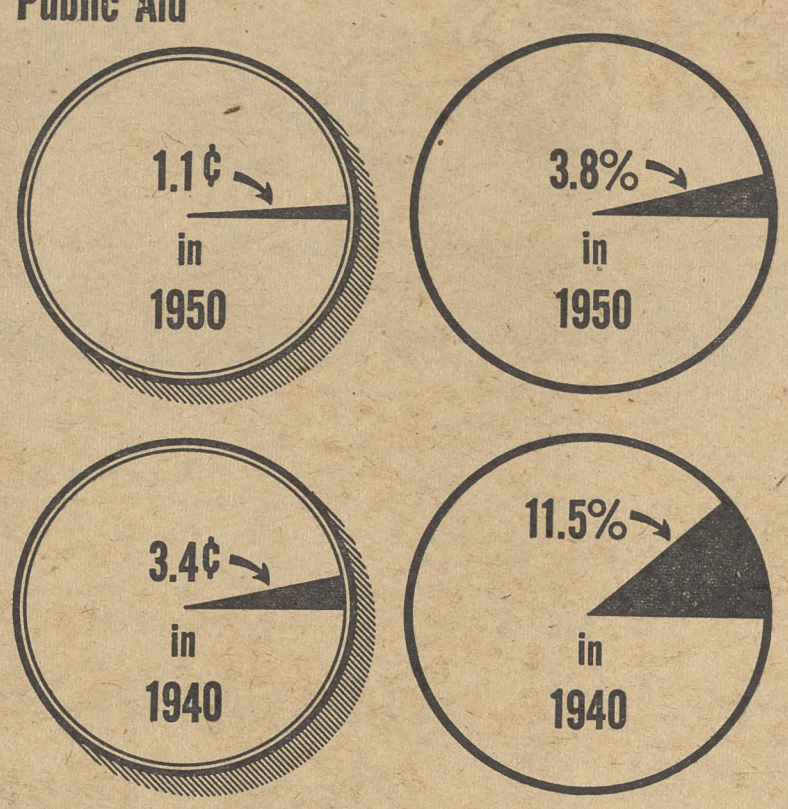
C. C. Stone, TWU Local 260, Houston; Charles W. McKinney, USA Local 4289; Dumas; Sam Lewis, USA Local 2883, Houston; Waldo Bernard, CWA Local 6222, Houston; M. E. Johns, USA Local 2083, Houston; Jack W. Brandon, UAW Local 967, Greenville.

Maxine Lee, CWA Local 6200, Wichita Falls; Mattie Jackson, TWUA Local 935, Waco; George Thomas, UPWA Local 54, Fort Worth; E. F. Lee, UPWA Local 59, Fort Worth; L. L. Roberts, OWIU Local 23, Port Arthur; J. A. McEvoy UAW Local 870, Dallas, and Alexander Hieken, ANG, Houston.

CCL Backs Strike

"Wholehearted support" has been pledged by the Canadian Congress of Labor to the strike of a National Union of Paper Products Workers local at Prescott, Ont. The union wants 20c more an hour.

Who Said The 'Welfare State'?



TREND.—Maybe you saw the big headlines in the daily press and the stories that five million Americans "are receiving some form of public aid in the midst of the biggest business boom in history." But actual report of Federal Security Agency pointed out (as in two charts above) that share of national income going to public aid and share of population getting some types of assistance went down drastically in the decade from 1940 to 1950. And so far as that "biggest boom in history" is concerned, report by Oscar R. Ewing, federal security administrator, pointed out that four million U. S. families have an income of less than $1000 a year.

'Scurrilous' Attacks On PAC 'Encouraging' To Jack Kroll

SLANDEROUS ATTACKS on the CIO's political action program were called "encouraging" by Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, in addressing the 13th annual convention of the Indiana CIO Council.

"We shouldn't feel too concerned about the scurrilous charges made by reactionary elements in the country," Kroll declared.

"I take their action as an indication that we are making real progress in making it more difficult for individuals to conduct dishonest campaigns for public office."

He called for increased political action and a "wholehearted attempt" by every CIO member in the state to retire Sen. Jenner."

"Unless laboring people in Indiana play a greater part in the affairs of state and become better citizens by voting on election day, they face the possibility of becoming second class citizens," Kroll warned.

The convention, held in Indianapolis, was devoted almost entirely to the development of policy and the adoption of programs for the coming year.

A comprehensive legislative emphasized improving unemployment and workmen's compensation and adoption of FEPC uniform voting and registration requirements.

A penny increase in per capita tax from 4c was voted for establishing a council research and education dept.

Gov. Henry F. Schricker, a convention speaker, indicated in his address that he may seek the Democratic nomination for the U. S. Senate seat now occupied by Jenner. He told the delegates he "didn't intend to run out" on them.

Indian's liberal Democratic Congressman Madden, a member of the House Rules Committee, paid tribute to the role organized labor has played in the field of social legislation during the last 15 years. He declared the "CIO has been responsible for most of that progress."

JOHN W. EDELMAN, CIO Textil Workers' Washington representative, pointed out to the delegates that unless issues take "clear precedence over personalities in the political contests next year, the people of this country and countless millions of others in Europe and Asia will be the losers no matter who wins the nominations and the elections."

He declared the election of General Eisenhower "would deliver a firm victory for black reaction and risky isolationism" because the Congress which would slide into power with him "would cut to ribbons the program Eisenhower is reputed to believe in."

The convention unanimously re-elected the following officers: Neal W. Edwards, president; Claude Becktell, secretary-treasurer; and Nelle Riddle, vice president.

Supreme Court Gives Strikebreakers Assist

BY DECLINING to hear a case involving telephone workers, the U.S. Supreme Court last week struck at the right of trade unionists to respect picket lines of fellow employes.

It refused to review a decision by the Circuit Court in Chicago. The lower court held that eight girls employed by the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. who respected a picket line established by a striking union which did not represent them "legally" were discharged.

The lower court ruled the girls were not entitled to the "protection" of T-H because they acted as individuals rather than at the direction of their union, and were not seeking a benefit for themselves.

The strike was called by the National Federation of Telephone Workers in April 1947 (before the CIO Communications Workers was organized) and ended a month later. The Taft-Hartley Act did not become effective until later in 1947.

Seven of the girls were members of the striking union, but as service assistants all were represented in bargaining by a local independent, the Chicago Telephone Traffic Union, which scabbed during the walkout.

THE COMPANY warned the eight that if they did not report for work during the strike, they would be demoted to operators. When the strike ended, the firm carried out its threat.

The National Labor Relations Board ordered them reinstated to their former jobs with back pay. When the company refused, it asked the Circuit Court for an enforcement order.

In appealing to the Supreme Court, the NLRB claimed the Circuit Court decision "subjects to employer reprisal employes who, in traditional manner, lend their assistance to a striking labor organization by refusing to cross its picket line."

'Don't Relax Labor Laws,' Tobin Says

THE PRESENT state of defense production requires no weakening of laws safeguarding the wage and working standards of the workers, Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin said last week.

The department's position was made clear in a statement which was approved by the top-level National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee and the Office of Defense Mobilization's Committee on Manpower Policy.

"The U. S. Dept. of Labor has reviewed existing employment standards in the light of current defense requirements," Tobin said.

"It has given special consideration to the effect on production of state laws that set maximum limits on daily and weekly hours of work or that limit the number of days that may be worked each week. As a result of this review, the department recommends that there be no general relaxation of state labor standards that limit daily, weekly or night hours or the number of days that may be worked each week.

"It further recommends that there be no relaxation of child labor, industrial homework, minimum wage or industrial health and safety standards. Furthermore, efforts which are being made to strengthen labor standards need not be abandoned because of the defense effort.

"If the time comes when the national defense clearly requires modification of maximum hour standards in states with relatively high standards, such modification should take place only under careful safeguards and for temporary periods . . .

"The application of the policy here recommended will go a long way to insure production without needless waste of manpower and materials, and to maintain a healthy, efficient and dynamic labor force."

Oil Union Recognized In Uruguay

THE WORKERS of the Uruguayan Petroleum Co. (ANCAP) have just won a resounding victory.

ANCAP is a nationalized enterprise and its management for this reason refused to its workers permission to establish a free trade union.

The ANCAP workers had the support of free Uruguayan labor and ORIT, the ICFTU's Regional Organization, and at one time more than 40,000 workers had left their place of work in solidarity with their striking brothers. Today all the men have been reinstated and the union has won the right to establish a bona fide labor organization.

The CIO from the outset has supported the strike of the ANCAP workers assuring them of its full cooperation and solidarity and when some of the strike leaders had been thrown in jail, CIO's strong and repeated protest contributed to their liberation.

What People Do For Money or Oil

It's amazing what people will do for money and—oil.

For example, E. L. Cord—who used to make sleek, front-wheel drive autos—and his associates tried to use scrip issued to Civil War veterans and others to buy from the U. S. 40 tideland oil wells in Louisiana.

The oil lands are under the jurisdiction of the Dept. of Interior, pending enactment of legislation settling the issue of federal versus state rights in the tideland oil areas.

Sec. Oscar Chapman rejected the claims and cited an opinion by the department's solicitor that public land "does not include land lying seward of the line of high tide along the coast."

CIO Before Legislatures—

N. Y. Council Plans 'Counter-Offensive' On Jobless Benefits

IMPROVEMENTS in state unemployment, disability and workmen's compensation legislation—and defeat of employer moves to whittle down existing benefits—are getting top attention from CIO Councils in three eastern states. Developments last week:

● The New York State CIO Council called a conference to drive for liberalization of unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and sickness disability benefits, to bring them "more closely into line with the needs of the people in a period of rising prices." The conference will be held Dec. 12 in New York City.

● The New Jersey CIO Council, on the eve of the Legislature's meeting in Trenton, urged all lawmakers to approve bills increasing maximum unemployment and disability benefits from $26 to at least $30 a week, plus $3 weekly for each dependent.

● The Pennsylvania CIO Council demanded that the State Senate strike out crippling amendments which it added to a workmen's compensation bill. Originally, the measure increased benefits from $20 to $30, but its scope was cut down in Senate committee.

In New York State, the CIO welfare legislation conference was described as part of a counter-offensive against expected employer moves to cut existing benefits.

In calling the conference, Pres. Louis Hollander of the CIO state council again warned that failure of the New York Legislature to enact improved benefits will result in determined efforts by CIO unions to gain such protection through collective bargaining.

The conference, Hollander also said, will organize to seek repeal of the Hughes-Brees Act. This measure, enacted in the last legislative session, gives reduced unemployment insurance tax rates to employers with stable employment records.

Any surplus in the unemployment insurance fund should be used to finance the disability program, Hollander declared.

"The way the present law is written," he said, "the bulk of the cost of sickness disability now falls on the workers.

"If the money that is now being kicked back to giant corporations from the unemployment insurance fund were used for sickness disability, we could abolish any special tax for sickness payments and we could give benefits for at least 26 weeks, instead of the present maximum of 13."

In New Jersey, where the Legislature met last week in special session, CIO Council Pres. Carl Holderman announced support for seven measures, four of them providing for boosts in unemployment compensation to $30 a week.

NEW JERSEY, he pointed out, now has a surplus of $25 million in its jobless insurance fund, while the proposed increases would cost only about $10 million.

The Jersey CIO also supported bills extending unemployment and disability benefits to small employers and condemned several "Chamber of Commerce bills to delay and deny (such) benefits to most workers."

In Pennsylvania, CIO Council Pres. Harry Boyer urged state senators to support a discharge resolution so that a House-approved Fair Employment Practices bill can come up for final vote.

In the social welfare field, the Pennsylvania council urged defeat of S. 671, which would drastically reduce eligibility to receive public assistance. The council also condemned H. 1644, a so-called anti-Communist bill which Boyer said "might well harass many innocent people."

Continued protests by Pennsylvania CIO unions and members was urged to stop a state income tax bill, which has passed the lower house.

Miller Named To Salary Curb Board

Justin Miller, chairman and general counsel for the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters, has been named chairman of the government's Salary Stabilization Board.

CIO Support Of D.C. Chest Hailed At Labor Lunch

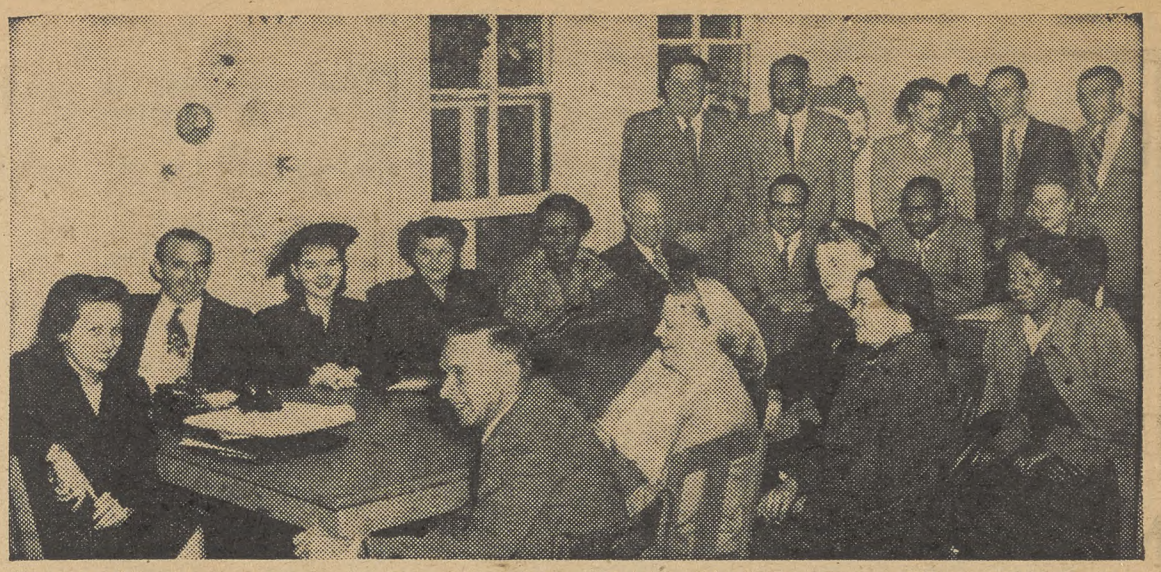
Year-around work of Washington area CIO members in support of the Community Chest was praised at a joint labor luncheon during the current Washington Community Chest-USO campaign.

All branches of the labor movement in the District of Columbia joined in the luncheon.

Glenn Watts, president of the D. C. Industrial Union Council and CIO Communications Workers district director, introduced CIO officials who are serving as Chest volunteer workers and members of the council's community services committee.

He also introduced several telephone operators, members of CWA-CIO Local 2300, who have sparkplugged Chest solicitation by telephone.

The Washington Chest drive now is close to its goal of $4,050,000.



TRAINING—The District of Columbia CIO Council is sponsoring a nine week union counsel course in cooperation with the United Community Service. CIO local unions represented are: Communications Workers, 2300 and 2336; Oil Workers, 403; Government & Civic Employees, 1; Clothing Workers, 457, and United Service Employes, 603. Seated around table: L. to R., Josephine Piccolo, CWA; W. R. Smith, OWIU; Betty Bowman, CWA; Edna Poston, CWA; Laura Brandon, ACW; Hugo Hopkins, GCEOC; Benjamin Lumpkins, GCEOC; Willie Copeland, UTSE; Mary Cooperman, GCEOC; Grace Payne, GCEOC; Mary Farmer, CWA; Jane Berry, GCEOC; Kathrine Artrip, CWA, and T. T. McCarthy, OWIU. Standing at left: H. E. Shanton, OWIU, and Samuel Danley, GCEOC.

New Trial Sought For 'Trenton Two'

AN APPEAL for justice for the "Trenton Two" was made last week in a full page ad in the New York Times.

These are the two Negroes of the famous "Trenton Six" case who are still in prison in New Jersey, after a jury freed four of them last June.

It's sad but true that it usually takes money—and a lot of it—to right a wrong when a case gets tangled in the complexities of our courts. The Joint Committee to Free the Trenton Two which sponsored the public appeal is convinced that these two young Negroes are innocent and is putting on a drive for funds to finance the present appeal of the case to the New Jersey Supreme Court.

The Joint Committee is composed of three groups that have been working on the case for more than two years—the American Civil Liberties Union, the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the Princeton Committee for the Defense of the Trenton Six. Headquarters for the Joint Committee is at 8 West 40th St., New York 18, N. Y.

In its public appeal for funds, the committee calls attention to a great American tradition at stake in this case—"that all of our citizens whether rich or poor, Negro or white, shall have equal justice under the law."

Floods Point Up MVA Need, Kansas CIO Says

RECENT disastrous Kaw and Missouri river floods have underscored the necessity of the prompt establishment of a Missouri Valley Authority, the Kansas CIO Council declared at its recent convention at Kansas City, Kan.

A resolution said that the floods "have made it crystal clear that the discredited Pick-Sloan plan, drawn up by the Corps of Engineers and Bureau of Reclamation, will not solve the problem.

"The existence of the Pick-Sloan plan," the resolution continued, "has been in fact the real reason that no effective flood control or watershed management has been achieved in the Missouri basin, because the people on the valley itself resisted appropriations for the harmful and useless projects which compose the plan."

The resolution also recounted that CIO raised about $150,000 to help flood sufferers, urged federal legislation to pay for flood losses and to set up a flood insurance program, and recommended a continuing program of federal rehabilitation for flood victims.

Other resolutions adopted by the council endorsed in principle the Tennessee Valley Authority as a model for the proposed MVA and recommended a stronger federal forest management policy.

Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils, brought forestry, conservation and flood control problems to the attention of the delegates.

Willard Murphy, Kansas City, Packinghouse Worker, and H. J. Yount, also of Kansas City, were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer respectively.

CIO Joins In Ohio Welfare Conference

CIO's CONCERN for improved policies and programs in the whole field of social welfare was demonstrated at the Ohio Welfare Conference held recently in Columbus.

Delegates from all major CIO county councils in Ohio were among the 2000 participants in the social welfare conference.

A major speaker was Harry Becker, director of the CIO Auto Workers Social Security Dept.

Becker spoke on "Economic Security and Family Life." He deplored and condemned the current campaign of reactionary politicians to publicize the names of all persons receiving public assistance. (This program originated in the Republican-controlled Indiana Legislature and has spread to other states, with an "assist" from Congress.)

Becker discussed the growing search for economic security, saying:

"As the world grows more complex and as we assume a more mature role of world citizenship, we are increasingly obliged to meet our problems collectively."

He called for an adequate program of social welfare insurance which would provide benefits for those who need them as a matter of right, not as a matter of charity.

During the welfare conference, the Ohio CIO Council sponsored a day-long meeting for CIO community services leaders.

Milwaukee CIO Members Study City Government In Special Field Trip

THE MILWAUKEE, Wis., CIO Council recently decided on a novel scheme to acquaint its members with the manner in which the city's government operates.

Led by Council Pres. Robert Jordan and Sec. Fred A. Erchul, a 24-member CIO-PAC party spent an entire day in field trips through City Hall in a study of the various departments.

Following a City Hall tour, the group visited a municipal housing project and then went to Mayor Frank P. Zeidler's conference room. There they heard explanations of the workings of departments by the Commissioners of Public Works, Health, Civil Service, and Elections.

In a front-page editorial the following day, the Milwaukee Journal praised the interest of the CIO in the functioning of the city's government and suggested that other groups do the same thing.

"This was not a mere sightseeing holiday," the Journal editorial declared. "The 24 members of the group were assigned to the duty by 13 local unions. They were all rank and filers out of the shops and will be expected to share their new found knowledge at their union meetings.

"The quality of work city officials do is directly related to the extent that people they work for understand what they are doing. Time so spent is well spent.

"A systematic approach and followup like that of CIO would seem to make the most efficient use of that time," the editorial concluded.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

NEGOTIATIONS are continuing between the U. S. Steel Corp. and the CIO Steelworkers, led by Pres. Philip Murray. The members of the Steelworkers are 100% behind their officers and the Wage and Policy Committee.

These representatives of the members are fighting for the benefits that are rightfully coming to them and are long past due. The Steelworkers can rest assured that every CIO member stands "four square" behind them in this crusade of human decency.

It is expected that the big propaganda guns of radio, television, and newspapers will voice their objections and slander against the Steelworkers and CIO. These disciples of big business, instead of creating a feeling of animosity between the steel corporations and the Steelworkers, should put their minds and efforts on ways of helping them come to mutual understanding. It so happens though that many of these disciples are not faced with daily economic necessity of paying rent, food bills, clothing, hospitalization, etc. All Steelworkers, in fact all workers, are faced with meeting these needs, and all the propaganda to the contrary does not change the facts.

Let it be known that we of CIO stand solidly behind Pres. Murray, his associate officers and members of the United Steelworkers in achieving their just demands.

SEC.-TREAS. AL HARTNETT of IUE-CIO announces that in a representation election at the Becton & Dickinson Co., Rutherford, N. J., the IUE was victorious over the discredited UE by the following vote: IUE 844, UE 592, no union 7. Intl. Rep. James Callaghan was in charge of this successful campaign.

The IUE also won the following representation elections: Toro Manufacturing Co., Windom, Minn., IUE 44, no union 35; Peter J. Schweitzer, Inc., Windom, IUE 42, no union 12; Roanwell Corp., Brooklyn, N. Y., IUE 52, no union 23; Artisan Electronics, Bronx, N. Y., IUE 14, no union 3; General Electric, Bucyrus, O., IUE 180, UE 132, no union 11; Hubbard Spool Co., Garrett, Ind., IUE 98, no union 10. Intl. Rep. Philip Harrity was in charge of this last campaign.

Pres. Tom Andert of the CIO Optical Workers reports that Local 208 of New York City won representation elections in the following companies, all within the New York area; all except one were won by unanimous votes: True-Vue Optical Co., American Optical Co. (Flushing, L. I.), Techni-Craft Optical Co., Gall & Lemke, S. Lemke & Sons, T & P Optical (Brooklyn branch), Mid Town Optical Co., Henry Miller, Inc., Shoreham Optical Co. and Charles Schachne.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election at the Engleheart Brothers milling plant, Evansville, Ind., the workers favored the Packinghouse Workers, CIO, by a vote of 112 to 83 for no union. Intl. Rep. Larry Rager handled this drive.

THE UAW-CIO continues to roll up election victories. The following representation votes were won by UAW: C. D. Beck Co., Sidney, O., UAW 29, UE 1, no union 20; Air-Cooled Motors, Inc., Syracuse, N. Y., UAW 145, no union 83; Ford Motor Co. aircraft engine plant, Chicago, Ill., (production and maintenance) UAW 1943, no union 129, challenged 207; (tool room) UAW 512, IAM 264, no union 10, challenged 196; (foundry) UAW 84, AFL 11, challenged 7.

Reg. Dir. Ed McCrone reports that the UAW won a representation election at the AVCO airplane plant, Bridgeport, Conn., by the following vote: UAW 388, IAM 354 and no union 9. It is expected that this company will have 7000 or 8000 employees in the near future.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the Metalcraft Products Co., Los Angeles, Calif., the CIO Furniture Workers were victorious by a vote of 55 to 37 for no union.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that in a representation election at the Coleman Furniture Co., Pulaski, Va., the workers favored the CIO Furniture Workers by the following vote: eligible 342, UFW-CIO 169, no union 145, not voting 20, void 8. Intl. Rep. Mike Smith and Asst. State Dir. George Murphy handled this campaign.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at the Shelby and Valley Fibre Box, Memphis, Tenn., the workers chose the CIO Paperworkers over the AFL Pulp and Sulphite Workers by a vote of 82 to 64. UPA Rep. Joe Rinaldi directed this drive.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that the CIO Steelworkers were victorious in a representation election at the Sunray Stove Co., Delaware, O., by a vote of 50 to 30 for no union.

ORIT Council To Meet In D.C.

The executive council of ORIT —the democratic labor organization of the western hemisphere— will meet at the Hotel Hamilton in Washington, Dec. 17-18.

ORIT is the Spanish abbreviation for the Regional Organization of Inter-American Workers, an affiliate of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. It was established at a Mexico City convention last January.

Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee represents CIO on the ORIT executive body.

On Dec. 14-15, ORIT is sponsoring a New York meeting to consider establishing a World Sugar Workers Congress.

Woods Gets His Wings Clipped For Blast At Rent Lid Snafu

RENT STABILIZER Tighe E. Woods got his come-uppance for his criticism of the Critical Areas Committee for delaying rent recontrols in crowded defense areas.

Three days after Woods charged that the committee is a bottleneck holding up his office in reimposing rent controls in defense areas, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson named Raymond E. Foley head of all defense housing activities. That includes rent control.

The committee is composed of representatives of several agencies and operates under Wilson's supervision. The Office of Defense Mobilization issued a statement which said in part:

"Representatives of all the other interested agencies were of the opinion that the current operations of the (Defense Housing) Committee did not warrant such criticism.

"Mr. Wilson indicated he concurred in this judgment and agreed with the other members in their confidence that the committee was operating effectively and would continue to handle area recommendations on a reasonable time schedule."

Woods now answers directly to Foley on all rent control matters in defense areas. But Wood's agency—the Office of Rent Stabilization — remains under the Economic Stabilization Administration on rent control policy in non-defense areas. Foley continues as Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency chief.

With his new appointment, Foley suspended credit restrictions and set up special defense housing programs in five more areas: Anniston, Ala.; Allentown-Easton-Bethlehem, Pa.; Camp Stewart, Ga.; Ft. Meade-Laurel, Md.; and Indiantown Gap, Pa.

Wood's office last week re-imposed rent controls in two more areas: Ft. Knox, Ky.; and Mt. Pleasant-Daingerfield, Tex.

NEW WAGE POLICY goals of the CIO Steelworkers and plans for expanded organizing in the non-ferrous industry in the New York-New Jersey area were discussed at a USA-CIO District 2 conference with Pete Mosele, district director (center at desk). Participating were representatives of a number of former Mine-Mill locals which have joined the Steelworkers, together with USA-CIO staff representatives.

Non-Ferrous Mill Drive Set By USA

REPRESENTATIVES of CIO Steelworkers' locals in the New York area, which bolted the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers because of its Communist domination, met recently to plan further organizing in the non-ferrous industry.

The meeting, held in New York, was called by USA Dist. 2 Dir. Pete Mosele. It came as a result of the initiative of Pres. Edward Murphy of Local 4355, at the Phelps-Dodge Corp. plant in Laurel Hill, L. I. Also attending were members of the USA district staff.

The spokesmen for the locals were optimistic about the contribution they thought they could make in helping the staff complete organization of their former associates.

One of the factors that moved them was their satisfaction with the efforts put forth by the USA on their behalf since their affiliation, they said. Gains for the members through new contracts, they said, were far greater and of a higher caliber than they had received while still members of Mine-Mill.

The conference adopted a program that included an exchange of information affecting any segment of the non-ferrous metal industry.

Mosele said that if the spirit demonstrated at the conference was continued, much will be accomplished in the district both organizationally and in attaining the national bargaining program adopted at the recent USA wage conference in Atlantic City.

Collective Bargaining 'Here To Stay,' Says U.S. Expert

A U. S. GOVERNMENT expert on labor has examined collective bargaining and has found that it "has contributed some positive benefits to our economy."

The report of the expert—Dr. Gustav Peck, senior specialist in labor of the Library of Congress' legislative reference service—was printed as a document of a Senate Labor subcommittee headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

"Many businessmen and economists," Dr. Peck wrote, "can find much in the reasoning of union leadership which seems to them incompatible with the successful operation of the private enterprise economy and with its long-time welfare.

"At the same time a fair appraisal of the progress of industry during the period in which collective bargaining has been flourishing must lead to the conclusion that collective bargaining has been compatible to the needs of American industry.

"The possibilities are great that collective bargaining has contributed some positive benefits to our economy. On balance, there is practically universal agreement that 'collective bargaining is here to stay'; that means that the terms of employment and the economic and social consequences of collective bargaining have become permanent factors in our economy.

"At the same time few expect the rate of progress in American industry to decline. Even those economists who are perturbed about the influence of unionism in the operation of some elements in the competitive system admit that one of the results has been a speeding-up of general increases in efficiency to offset union demands."

Dr. Peck also found that strikes will always exist where there is collective bargaining but it "may be necessary" to limit strikes in certain cases.

In a foreword, Humphrey wrote that Dr. Peck's survey "does not purport to commit the subcommittee or any individual senator to its conclusions."

"All too often," Humphrey said, "the emphasis is put on breakdowns in collective bargaining. As a useful background for legislation in this field, it is thought worthwhile to examine what most experts in the field agree is the more characteristic condition, successful collective bargaining."

Hap Ward Leaves AP 'Labor Beat'

Harold "Hap" Ward, who covered the "labor beat" for the Associated Press in Washington for many years, resigned from the news agency last week.

Ward was well-known to hundreds of union officials as a fair and highly-skilled newspaperman. He has covered almost every CIO meeting in Washington during recent years, and also attended the recent CIO convention in New York.

On Dec. 1, Ward became publicity director for the mine workers welfare and retirement fund, with headquarters in Washington.

Story Of Bowling Green—

They Have What It Takes To Battle Westinghouse!

(Since last Aug. 15, 150 members of the CIO Electrical Workers have been locked out by the giant Westinghouse Electric Corp. at Bowling Green, Ky. The IUE members are fighting for coverage under the union's national agreement. Here is the workers' story of their battle, as told by Marjorie Morris, an organizer for the CIO Clothing Workers. She formerly was a leader in the Philadelphia-Camden local of the CIO Newspaper Guild.—The Editor.)

By MARJORIE MORRIS

YOU'VE GOT to hand it to the kids of Local 740 CIO Electrical Workers, of Bowling Green, Ky.

They have everything it takes to lead the fight against substandard wages and working conditions in the South.

They realize the stakes are high. Their own personal sacrifices are shrugged off as unimportant if they can help pull up the wage standard to make it possible for working people to continue living in Kentucky instead of flocking to industrial centers of the North and East.

The kids, most of them in their late teens and early twenties, believe that they—and not the Chamber of Commerce—represent the best interests of the community. The C. of C. has been accused of dangling the bait of cheap labor before Westinghouse to get it to locate the photo-flash bulb plant in Bowling Green.

Westinghouse moved into a building formerly occupied by a General Electric plant. It hired the cream of the 18-to-22-year-olds, and proceeded to pay them lower wages than had been the practice by General Electric.

They introduced other substandard working conditions, requiring the girls to do janitorial work and ruling out smoking in the plant. Executives were sent in who showed a contempt for local labor.

Trouble was the executives were blinded by dollar spots in front of their eyes. Otherwise, they would have noted immediately that here was a superior group of young people, representative of the best of American youth.

You can't push folks like that around. Westinghouse found it out when the employes voted overwhelmingly to have IUE-CIO represent them. They found it out again when the group protested company stalling of negotiations.

The company locked out the workers on Aug. 15, hoping to starve them into quick submission, but the workers have remained militant and united.

MOST OF Local 740 members, like Polly Gaines, expect to work at Westinghouse indefinitely if good working conditions and wages can be obtained. Roy Lightfoot plans to make his job at the plant his life work, "and I might as well hold out now as later."

Bill Hinton has considered leaving Bowling Green and he may leave later. But first, he says, "something has got to be done in Bowling Green. Somebody has got to do it."

Bill, who has a wife and two children, plans to stick it out at least until the workers are back in the plant. Then if he decides later to move elsewhere, "I will leave with a better conscience."

Patsy Meeks, a young wife and mother with two children, doesn't expect to work "forever." But she is fighting for an improved wage standard for the community.

Wendell Sears doesn't like the idea of Westinghouse making so much more profit off the workers there than it does in other areas where the wage scale is higher. More money paid wage earners will mean more money to spend in Bowling Green stores, he pointed out.

BOWLING GREEN workers know they are as good as those anywhere else. Many have held down better paying jobs in union shops in Detroit and Indianapolis and could do it again. They returned to Bowling Green for personal reasons.

Responsibilities of a democratic union are taken seriously at Bowling Green. Local 740 members have made an impression by their speech-making at conventions and at their local membership meetings.

They've been writing script and producing a 15-minute radio program three times weekly, telling their story to the public in their own words.

They've taken on numerous other responsibilities, including financial assistance for their own members from a fund donated by other CIO members all over the country. Strict records are kept of all money payments. Gate meetings are held twice daily.

Committees met with both the Senior and Junior Chambers of Commerce to discuss the situation at Westinghouse. Local 740 donated $100 to the Boy Scouts and a large group donated blood to the Red Cross during the visit of its bloodmobile.

They are doing and will continue to do a selling job on unionism to other workers of the community. IUE representatives have encouraged the workers to take initiative. They have lived up to the faith shown in them.

Some of the Westinghouse workers' wives and husbands and friends work at the unorganized factory of the Union Underwear Co., formerly Derby Underwear Co., which employs more than 1000 people.

Local 740 members would like to see their neighbors getting a better deal too. They want the CIO at the underwear plant. So organizers for the CIO Clothing Workers have come in.

WE OF the Amalgamated know that our success hinges on the success of Local 740's stand against the company, the C. of C. and local businessmen who have been fighting them.

False rumors that the Westinghouse plant will not be reopened have created fear in the minds of the more timid of the potential members of the Amalgamated. Union Underwear Co. plant executives have reportedly told workers, "if a union is started here, this plant will close down for six months."

As a group, employes at the underwear factory are older. Dislike of change, even for the better, is stronger with them than with the alert youngsters in Local 740 of IUE.

Some of the clothing workers say: "Wait until we get our Christmas bonus, about Dec. 14, then we can talk union."

They can't afford to make the boss mad until that big check, amounting to as much as $300 for the highest paid among them, is safe in their pockets.

The boss gives it "out of the goodness of his heart," and he might decide to stop giving it any Christmas.

But he would have to have a mighty good reason to stop paying the better wages which the Amalgamated would win for them. IUE Local 740 members like Glenna Boyles already are putting that point across to their non-union neighbors and relatives.

THE WORKERS in Bowling Green often say, "Oh yes, I believe in unions, but not at Derby." It doesn't take long to learn fear is back of such statements. Once Westinghouse is back in full operation, with better wages, the biggest bugaboo will have been removed.

The CIO has a job ahead of it, but it has taken firm roots in Bowling Green. Even the babies are learning what it can do for them.

Blonde Nancy Garmon, a "personality kid" at two, attends meetings and sings union songs in a loud, clear voice that leaves no doubt about how she feels.

Her mother, Eve Garmon, a former schoolteacher, was forced to go to work at Westinghouse, because wages in Bowling Green just wouldn't support a family unless both parents became wage earners.

". . . ONCE WAS A UNION MAID."—Little Nancy Garmon is only 2 and she can't pry the lock off the Bolling Green plant of Westinghouse Electric, where IUE-CIO members have been locked out almost four months. But Nancy knows all the union songs. Her mother worked at the plant.

Jobless Toll High In 15 Cities: Tobin

Serious unemployment problems in many industrial centers has been "masked" by defense hiring elsewhere, Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin revealed last week.

He said some 15 labor-market areas now have critical unemployment problems, due to cutbacks in civilian production. Cities he listed as hard hit were Brockton and Fall River, Mass., Altoona and Pottsville, Pa., and Cumberland, Md.

Big Business Gets Still More Gravy As Defense Program Bogs Down

—STORIES ON PAGE THREE

HANDSHAKES AND HEADACHES — All were smiles and congratulations as the Administration's defense mobilization chiefs welcomed Roger Lowell Putnam (second from right) as new economic stabilizer, but there were plenty of headaches present and signs of more to come. Joining in five-way handshake (from left) were Mobilization Dir. Charles E. Wilson, Price Stabilizer Michael DiSalle, Eric Johnston, outgoing economic stabilizer, Putnam, and Nathan Feinsinger, Wage Stabilization Board chairman. Some of the headaches are failure to meet defense production goals, increasing unemployment in consumer goods industry, steadily mounting prices, and developing pressure from business groups to wipe out the ineffective present anti-inflation legislation. Last week CIO denounced the "wholesale gaps and holes" in the mobilization program, attacked the "confusion" and "lack of vigorous and competent programming and planning in the conduct of mobilization." Discrimination Inquiry—

CIO Hails Truman Order, Renews FEPC Demand

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S action last week in establishing a new Committee on Government Contract Compliance to secure better enforcement of anti-discrimination provisions in government contracts "is to be commended," CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey declared.

Carey, who is chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, said at the same time that CIO will continue vigorously its campaign for creation of "a truly effective Fair Employment Practices Commission."

In connection with Mr. Truman's action, Carey pointed out that anti-discrimination provisions, which all government contracts have carried for the last 10 years "have been widely flouted."

"The CIO welcomes each and every step that may lead to the abolition of discrimination in America," Carey said. "Accordingly, we will make every effort to see that the new committee acts as vigorously and effectively as possible."

He added that the CIO will urge the President "to appoint as public members of the committee, persons of sound judgment and good will, in order that the committee may have the full and wholehearted support of the American people."

At the same time, Carey pointed out that the President's new Executive Order does not, and was not intended to, establish a Fair Employment Practices Commission.

"We believe," he said, "that only an FEPC with vigorous enforcement powers will be able to banish the scourge of discrimination from American life."

The new CGCC is authorized only to examine and study the rules, procedures and practices concerning non-discrimination of the various government agencies which let contracts to private firms. It also may confer and advise with others with the objective of preventing and eliminating discrimination based on race, color, creed or national origin in work performed on government contract.

It will consist of representatives of five government agencies and six public members. The committee has no enforcement powers of its own and, unlike the World War II FEPC, cannot issue "cease and desist" orders.

Although the sole purpose of the President's order is to see that business firms doing work for the government abide by existing contract agreements, Mr. Truman's action evoked the usual protests from such Southern members of Congress as Sen. George (D. Ga.) and Rep. Hebert (D. La.).

Both the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and Americans for Democratic Action, on the other hand, said that the President's action was a step in the right direction but expressed disappointment that he had not set up an effective FEPC.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) said that he, too, would have preferred an FEPC but that the President "apparently felt that he could not legally take further action because of the 'Russell amendment rider' to the appropriation bills."

That rider prohibits the expenditure of federal money on any project which Congress has refused to approve. FEPC legislation has repeatedly been sidetracked by Southern filibusters.

CIO Members Ask WSB To Lift Lids On Low-Wage Workers

CIO MEMBERS of the Wage Stabilization Board have proposed a relaxation of controls which would directly benefit thousands of unorganized workers receiving sub-standard, sweatshop wages.

They proposed that the WSB recognize all wages below $1.25 and hour as substandard and allow increases to that figure without approval of the government agceny.

In calling for such action, the three CIO members of the WSB declared that the "wage stabilization program should not be employed for the purpose of freezing American workers to substandard conditions of living."

The modification was proposed in a resoultion introduced by Joseph A. Beirne, CIO vice president and Communications Workers president. Joining in the request were Emil Rieve, CIO vice president and Textile Workers president, and John A. Livingston, CIO Auto Workers vice president.

Their request for automatic authorization for wage boosts up to $1.25 an hour was in line with a similar action of the War Labor Board some 10 years ago. Then the top figure was 55c hourly.

The CIO members pointed out that the WSB can allow wage increases "to prevent or correct hardships or inequities."

Further, they cited the latest Bureau of Labor Statistics' report on a minimum budget for a workingman's family of four. In 34 cities, that budget now exceeds $3400. (On an annual basis, the $1.25 hourly rate would yield but $2600.)

The CIO proposal to allow some "catch up" for workers in low-wage industries is one of 15 important problems which Rieve, Beirne, and Livingston have presented to the wage board for early decision. They also asked for a liberalized policy on health and welfare programs.

In another WSB development, the board approved increases in insurance benefits for more than 150,000 textile workers, principally TWUA-CIO members.

Steel Talks Continue

Full contract negotiations of the CIO Steelworkers with U. S. Steel Corp. continued last week in Pittsburgh, with small bargaining committees representing both parties. At the weekend, there were no reports of progress toward a settlement of the "Big Steel" contract, which expires on Dec. 31.

Still More Price Increases Near, Thanks To Capehart!

And still the price increases come—thanks to Indiana's Republican Sen. Capehart and the price-boosting "Capehart amendment" added to the Defense Production Act.

Late last week the Office of Price Stabilization, because of the Capehart gimmick, issued a regulation which will allow price boosts on tens of thousands of consumer products.

The OPS order allows manufacturers and processors of meat, milk, canned foods, coal, cigarettes, liquor, drugs, cosmetics and oil products to seek increases under the Capehart formula.

Previously the formula had been applied to 70,000 manufacturers.

Capehart's amendment allows producers to add all "reasonable" cost increases to their pre-Korea base prices.

IUE Seeks Pact In Westinghouse Strike

IN THE FACE of the Westinghouse Corp.'s adamant attitude, Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers last week was seeking to arrange a fair settlement of the strike of more than 5000 IUE members at the company's big Buffalo plant.

Carey appeared before a Federal Mediation Board panel at Washington, which was attempting to bring settlement between Westinghouse and the union.

Just before the meeting Carey said his union is ready to cooperate with all agencies of the government and the public and with the company "to secure a just and decent settlement."

But, Carey added, "we cannot surrender."

He compared the strike to the present program of mobilization being carried on by the U. S. government. He said:

"From a practical material standpoint, it is not 'profitable.' It consumes men and materials, money and energy for destructive purposes. Yet our nation is engaging in this because we recognize that if we did not, there would probably be in store for us something much, much worse. The Westinghouse workers in Buffalo view the problem in the same light."

The company's insistence on breaking the national contract seniority provisions caused the strike, which began Sept. 24.

Carey said that Westinghouse had refused to live up to the contract despite the fact that local had plant-wide seniority rights for five years. This, he said, has given rise to wage cutting throughout the system.

"Faced with the terrific loss in their seniority rights and recognizing that there will follow a terrific loss in their pay and work status," Carey said, "the workers of the Buffalo plant have concluded that they cannot surrender to the company's bidding."

Al Hartung Wins In IWA

AL HARTUNG defeated J. E. Fadling, incumbent, for the presidency of the CIO Woodworkers in a mail referendum of the more than 100,000 members.

The union's tabulating committee, which last week announced the results, said that the race was close.

Hartung, first vice president of IWA and once CIO regional director for Oregon, was formerly a logger in northwest Oregon.

Other referendum results:

For first vice president, J. E. Dicey, Laurel, Miss., defeated Burke Christie, Olympia, Wash.

For second vice president, Claude Ballard, Portland, Ore., won over Tom MacKenzie, Vancouver, B. C.

For trustee, Rae Eddie, Vancouver, overwhelmingly defeated Walter Belka, Seattle, Wash.

CWA Urges Truman To Run In '52

The CIO Communications Workers last week urged President Truman to seek re-election next year.

Such a request was voiced in a letter to Mr. Truman by Joseph A. Beirne, CWA-CIO president.

Pledging "unstinting support," Beirne's letter said in part:

"Four years ago, our union endorsed you for re-election. We endorsed you even before the Democratic Convention selected you.

"Feeling within our union today, if there has been any change since then, is even stronger in favor of your re-election.

"There are good reasons for this—your positive approach to implementing the 1948 platform of the Democratic Party, a platform endorsed overwhelmingly by the American public at the polls, and your spotless record of courageous fighting for those objectives most beneficial to common, ordinary citizens of America—and the world."

CIO Warning—

Big Business Bottlenecks In Arms Program Hit

THE LACK OF VIGOROUS and competent planning and execution of the defense production program was sharply criticized from many quarters within the CIO last week. Chief target was the present policy of allowing big firms to expand at public expense while smaller plants are idle—and thousands of workers are becoming unemployed.

The CIO Committee on Economic Policy, through its administrative chairman, Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers, renewed its plea for adequate over-all planning of the defense.

Pointing out that under present policies the build-up of the nation's armed might is far behind official forecasts and schedules, the committee warned that "wholesale gaps and holes in the delivery of defense materiel" are also causing disruption elsewhere in the economy.

"Critical materials have been allocated faster than the present military-producing plants can chew them up," Rieve's statement declared. "The result is large inventories of raw materials or half-finished military goods on the one hand, and unemployment or short work in scores and scores of civilian plants on the other."

ATTACKS on specific shortcomings of the mobilization program came from other CIO organizations.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers demanded that action be taken to correct the manpower and production bottleneck in the tool and die industry, and the CIO Electrical Workers' Radio, TV and Parts Conference Board called for the distribution of more defense work throughout industry to reduce "change-over" unemployment.

Reuther called for a two-pronged attack on the tool and die bottleneck. He warned that unless action were taken promptly, "not only will the defense production effort lag still further, but there will be a chain reaction of general economic dislocation."

THE FIRST step, he urged, is reconsideration by the Wage Stabilization Board of its rejection of substantial pay adjustments for tool and die workers.

The second step, Reuther said, is the incorporation of a "change-over" agreement into existing contracts. The UAW plan, prepared last March, would allow transfer and training of new skilled workers to meet defense needs on a basis that would protect job security and wage standards of skilled trades journeymen.

"Not only would this plan give us quicker production," Reuther pointed out, "but it would also help solve the manpower situation in the tool and die industry as well. The auto industry-owned 'captive' shops are not using their full capacity. Many tool and die workers in these shops are working either normal or short work weeks, while those in job shops are working overtime constantly."

The Senate Preparedness Subcommittee headed by Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.) issued a report, based upon a study of secret documentary material, which largely substantiated earlier statements of the CIO about mobilization shortcomings.

In the face of growing pressure, the Defense Production Administration announced that it will try to put idled civilian goods plants to work on defense contracts, and to prevent similar shutdowns in the future.

NAM Aide's Move To Gag Rieve On WSB Backfires

Industry members of the Wage Stabilization Board have failed in a move to oust Emil Rieve, CIO Textile Workers president, as a WSB labor member.

Rieve was attacked by Maynard Smith, Atlanta attorney and outgoing board member for the National Association of Manufacturers.

The NAM representative complained that Rieve had violated his oath of office by recent speeches, as at the CIO National Convention, criticizing the WSB. Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, also a WSB labor member, also was criticized.

The industry members said Rieve had flouted the WSB when he said unions could go ahead and seek higher wages in collective bargaining. Rieve pointed out that WSB Chairman Nathan Feinsinger had said practically the same thing.

"My speeches are not going to be censored by business agents of the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce," Rieve said.

Buildup For Killing Price Lids Continues

DESPITE continued soaring living costs, big business is still singing the same old tune. It wants, it says, an immediate end of both "wage and price controls."

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce has just restated its unchanged views in a 53-page booklet called "The Price of Price Controls." The pamphlet by omitting mention of wages in its title gives away the real point of the group's attacks on controls.

ON THE same day that the report appeared, Eric Johnston, in his final report as Economic Stabilizer, again expressed complete disagreement with big business views.

Claiming that although at present "inflationary pressures in our economy are in hand," he warned that anyone who thinks anti-inflation controls can be dropped now is indulging in "wishful thinking."

In commenting on the Chamber's report, Emerson P. Schmidt, director of economic research, repeated the same plea for "indirect controls" that big business has used before.

"A balanced federal budget and tight credit controls can keep prices in line," Schmidt declared.

"EVEN if prices should start to rise again, a courageous Administration could use the powers it now has to stop inflation by cutting less essential spending, taxing enough to cover necessary expenditures, and tightening credit policies."

Schmidt did not refer, of course, to the fact that the Chamber and other business groups—after using this same argument against controls last spring had gone before the Congressional tax committees to fight the "taxing enough" which they had said was necessary.

The Price Parade

GM On Top As 100 Big Firms Get Bulk Of Arms Contracts

EIGHT FIRMS got more than 25% of the more than $18 billion worth of military contracts of $10,000 or more awarded in the last fiscal year, the Munitions Board disclosed last week.

And the nation's 100 largest contractors got 61½% or nearly $11 billion worth of such contracts.

General Motors Corp. got the lion's share given to any one concern. Alone it received 8% of the total, or orders amounting to $1.44 billion.

Second on the list was United Aircraft Corp., with 4.1% of the total, followed by Douglas Aircraft Co., Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corp., General Electric Co. and Republican Aviation Corp., each with contracts ranging between 2 and 2.5% of the total.

Of the first 19 companies, 10 are aircraft manufacturers, five are producers of tanks and automobiles, and four supply electronic and other equipment for tive production.

The revelation of these figures indicating the unprecedented big business grab of defense contracts was made shortly after the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee warned that production of armaments is lagging dangerously behind schedule.

The subcommittee cited the failure to channel to small business "a fair and equitable share" of defense orders and said:

"Failure to utilize adequately the facilities of small business is disadvantageous to our economy. Heavy reliance upon the productive facilities of only a few prime contractors is dangerous in a number of important respects."

Text Of Rieve Statement On Lags, Confusion In Defense Production

Text in large part of a statement issued last week by Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy and Textile Workers president:

THE publicly acknowledged failures in meeting defense production schedules and the resulting confusion in the manpower and materials markets are the most striking features in the current mobilization picture.

Despite some optimistic statements about the increasing flow of military output, it is clear from published figures that our arms build-up is far behind schedule. The recent cutback in the aircraft program is just a symptom of these developments.

We are faced with no more slippages, but wholesale gaps and holes in the delivery of defense material.

These same gaps and holes are simultaneously causing disruption elsewhere in the economy, as well. Critical materials have been allocated faster than the present military-producing plants can chew them up. The result is large inventories of raw materials or half-finished military goods on the one hand, and unemployment or short work in scores of civilian plants on the other.

It is deplorable that responsible officials are attempting to pin the blame for this state of affairs on strikes by labor unions. Statistics of the U. S. Department of Labor indicate that the country has enjoyed an unusual era of industrial peace, despite the fact that workers have, by and large, been subjected to terribly inquitable treatment in the current inflation.

Much of the present confusion can be attributed to lack of vigorous and competent programming and planning in the conduct of the mobilization — something the CIO has pleaded for since the outset of the Korean emergency.

Too many officials have been dodging the tough decisions. Over six months ago, for example, it was clear that machine tools would be a great bottleneck in defense production. Yet responsible officials delayed month after month in ordering a freeze order on the production of new models for major consumer appliances.

Similar confusion exists in the field of new plant construction and the granting of tax amortization for such construction.

The very manufacturing companies which each day announce that they are breaking ground for new plants are operating many of their other plants at 40%, 50% or 60% of normal capacity. Some of these plants are completely shut down. They could once again be so converted, in or in part, to defense production as many of them were in World War II.

Unemployment is a critical fact in the soft goods industries; it should not be compounded by needless layoffs in the heavy goods plants.

If the armed services really want quicker deliveries of the items they are ordering, they should take steps to bring about the rapid conversion to defense production of existing plant capacity.

The same lack of resolution and clarity of purpose characterizes other phases of the defense effort. For instance, the re-control of rents and the institution of new housing construction in so-called critical areas has been badly mishandled.

Thousands of American civilians and military personnel have been caught in the housing squeeze in these critical areas and they are vainly seeking relief while confused committees continue to shadow box with the problem. We need firm decisions by responsible officials here in Washington to cut through the red tape by re-controlling rents and getting defense housing on the way where it is needed.

Next Step, Mr. President!

There was grousing as usual from the Dixiecrats, but we say President Truman is to be commended for his latest action—as far as it went—against racial discrimination.

For a good many years, U. S. contracts with private business firms have contained a clause banning bias—but too often the clause has been "one for the books."

Now the President has set up a compliance committee to give some meaning to the non-discrimination clause.

So far, so good, and we hope the committee works with vigor. But however vigorous and capable its members, its powers are severely limited.

We still need a Fair Employment Practices Commission with effective enforcement powers—and we think either the President or the Congress has the power to establish it!

Brickbats And Bouquets

Tossing brickbats is about the easiest thing some people do—particularly at the labor members of the Wage Stabilization Board.

It's too easy to forget that the unionists on the WSB are representing the interests not only of organized workers but also the interests of the thousands of workers without union contracts.

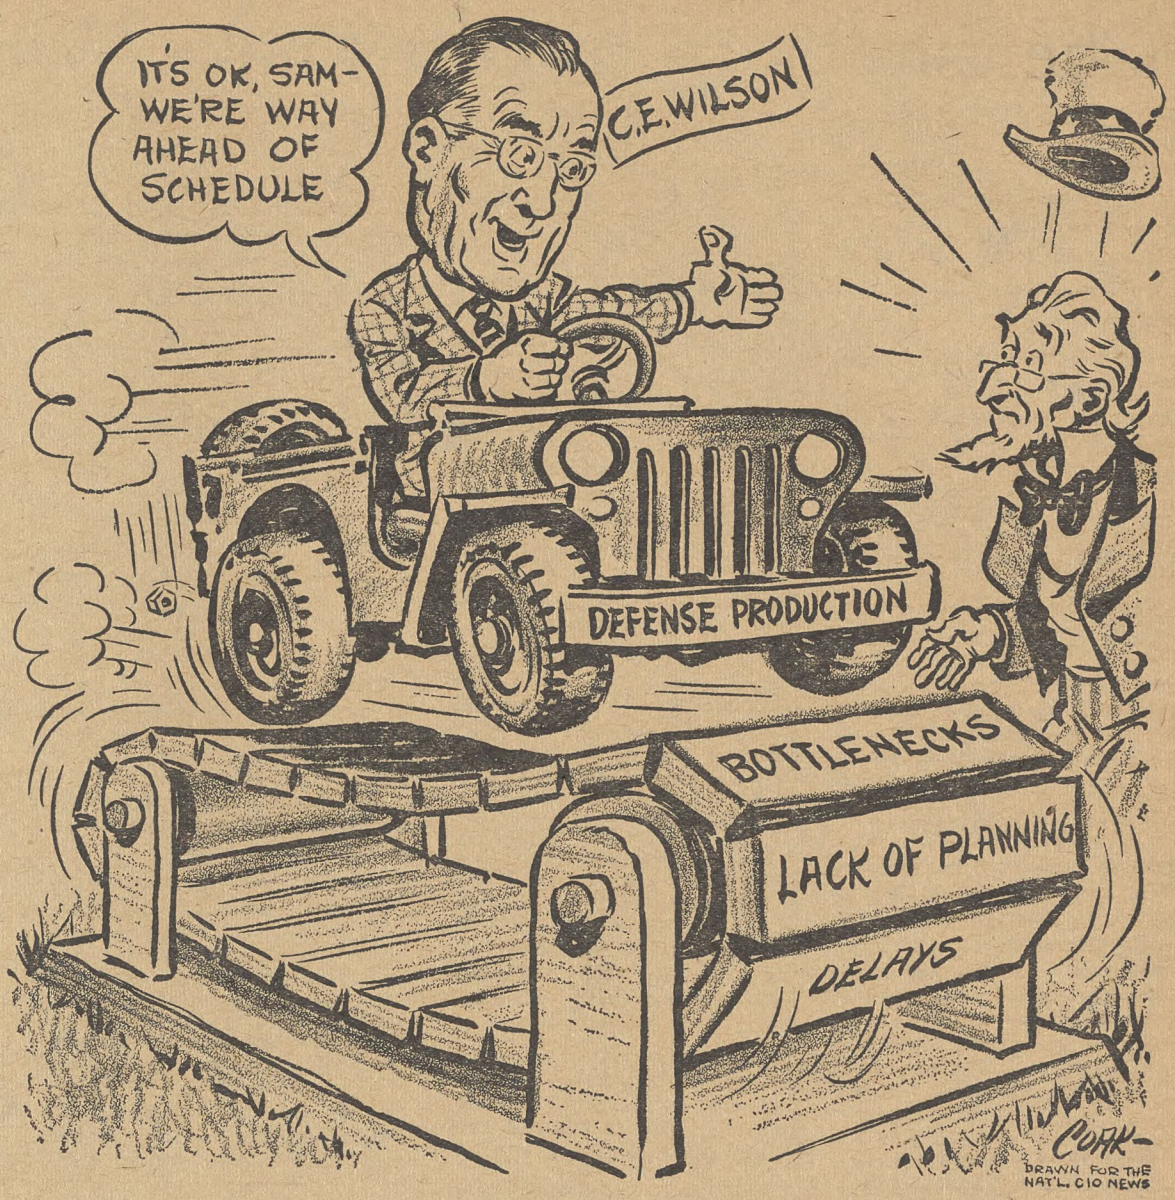
Here's a case in point:

The three CIO members on the wage board have called on that agency, in effect, to lift the wage freeze on workers getting substandard wages in sweatshop, unorganized industries.

The WSB, the CIO members say, should not concern itself with such workers. They propose that wage increases bringing rates up to $1.25 an hour or less should be exempted from WSB controls.

No increase in those very lowest wage brackets can conceivably contribute to the inflationary process, which in fact hits hardest at the people in those low brackets. Certainly the public and industry members of the WSB should be able quickly to concede that point and adopt the CIO proposal as national policy.

Getting There Fast?



Welcome, Brother

Time was, not so many years ago, when the publications of most AFL international unions were about as dull as publications could get.

The CIO, among its many other contributions to the American scene, brought into being a host of new labor papers—most of them sprightly and readable.

Recognizing our own shortcomings, we know there's plenty of room for improvement and for greater influence on the part of the labor press. Recognizing that a little competition never did anybody any harm, we offer—as a veteran 14-year-old publication—our fraternal greetings to the national AFL's first weekly labor paper, the new AFL News-Reporter.

We hope it contributes to the status and the effectiveness of labor papers and labor unions generally. It's quite possible we'll disagree with some of its editorial positions; but we hope it will consistently help the workers' fight against political and economic reaction in our America.

How To Stop Communism

Stopping communism requires giving Western European workers a stake worth fighting for, more than 275 industrialists from those nations were warned recently by Clinton S. Golden, consultant to the Office of Labor Advisers of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Golden issued the warning at an ECA meeting at Washington. A former vice president of the CIO Steelworkers, Golden said in part:

IF WE ARE to make our free world secure, the principle and fact of partnership must be fully applied not only to relations between nations, but also to relations among the individual human beings that make up nations—among the people who must work, and produce, and if need be, fight, to defend their way of life, and who must have the will to do these things to the limit of their strength.

Communism is not just the Red Army at our borders in the service of self-seeking dictators. It is also an insidious, pervasive siren-song directed at men and women who are in want, who despair of the future, and who derive no satisfying sense of self-fulfillment, either material or spiritual, from their daily lives.

Unless owners, and managers, and labor leaders, and political leaders, and governments—unless all come to a full realization of the dimensions of this problem and make the most vigorous efforts, individually and collectively, to bring about an effective partnership that will give the individual worker in each country a sense of participation in activity that will assure him a good life, the armies at our borders will not save us from destruction.

At a time when production is a vital necessity for the common security, there are thousands of European factories producing far less than they could produce.

At a time when high morale and great worker effort is most needed, there are millions of workers receiving far less in real wages, and, even more important, far less in job satisfaction, than is necessary if they are to be self-confident and contented free men, willing and able to defend their way of life.

That we in the United States have achieved a higher overall rate of productivity than has Europe is a statistical fact . . .

It is important to note that our great advances in productivity in the United States—during the past 20 years—have coincided with a phenomenal growth of the labor movement and a political environment that has by and large been friendly to its aims and has aided it with legislation of various kinds . . .

With success in establishing its basic collective bargaining rights, organized labor in the United States has acquired confidence and self-respect. Out of confidence and self-respect has grown, and is still growing, an increasing sense of responsibility, in its partnership with capital, that is leading to increasing concentration on how to help owners and managers increase productivity . . .

I have yet to mention what is absolutely required as the foundation of high productivity. That, I am convinced, is a firm belief, a faith, in the possibility of achieving a continually expanding economy through increasing its depth. I believe strongly in a wide and unrestricted market . . .

IN THE FIRST place, production must be progressively more efficient. There must be no waste, either of materials or of human resources and mechanical energy . . .

But equally important to an expanding economy is the division and the distribution of the benefits of production and of increasing productivity.

It is absolutely essential that these benefits—all of them—be passed on: to the workers in the form of higher wages; to the consumers in the form of lower prices; and to the owners in the form of profits, which must be then reinvested in the productive process in a never-ending cycle.

This brings me to the third essential requirement of high productivity and an expanding economy . . .

I refer to the necessity of approaching production as a voluntary partnership between capital and labor carried on primarily with a view to their joint welfare in terms of production, profit, wages and working conditions, but also with a view to the benefits of society as a whole.

'Cherish The Union'—That's What Oil Workers Do!

By WILLIAM WEISS

"CHERISH THE UNION, for it teaches you how to live; have faith in the union and it will comfort you in need; have zeal in the union for in its growth you will find happiness for yourselves and your fellow men."

The above obligation was contained in the original constitution of the Intl. Association of Oil Field, Gas Well & Refinery Workers of America when it was chartered by the AFL in 1918.

The 25 delegates who attended that first convention lived up to the obligation to the letter. And it was well that they did for in the years to come, the belief of the founders in that statement of principles was probably the only thing that kept the union—which today is the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union—from being destroyed both from within and without.

Few unions in the country have a history to compare with that of the Oil Workers. The wonder is that the union was able to exist at all in the face of company unionism drives and paternalistic feudalism of the oil industry.

BEFORE 1900 there had been oil workers' unions in Pennsylvania but they never lasted long in the face of anti-union drives by the Standard Oil Co.

The first real organization of oil workers was formed in Ohio in 1899 and that group, the Intl. Brotherhood of Oil & Gas Well Workers, quickly spread to fields in western Pennsylvania and as far west as California.

The year 1905 is a historic date in the history of the nation's oil workers for two reasons. That year the first big strike occurred in the industry. It was brought on by the attempt of a Pittsburgh producer, J. M. Guffey, to cut daily wages from $3 to $2.50 for the 12-hour day. The strike saved the $3 scale.

The second important event that year was the chartering by the AFL of Local 11998 for the Guffey Oil & Gas Well workers. This was in the nature of a "federal charter" as there was no international union for oil workers at the time.

Oil workers waited until 1917 until they were able to wring the eight hour day from an industry which was making fabulous profits. Previous to that time, 12 hours was the accepted length of the work day. The revolt began in the upper San Joaquin Valley in California, where there had never been an effective union because of the open opposition of the Standard Oil Co. of California.

The winning of the eight hour day and the going wage scale of $4 daily, proved to be a much needed shot in the arm to the organizational activities of the oil workers.

In order to hold the new unionists together, the California union's executive board authorized the publishing of the newspaper, the California Oil Worker, which remained the official oil workers organ until 1941. It was a powerful force in educating and unifying oil workers scattered throughout the state.

THE YEAR 1919 saw the union register its greatest strides in recruiting new members. At the year's end, more than 85% of the Gulf Coast had been organized and there were more than 30,000 members in 101 locals.

One year later, however, the unions, torn by internal squabbles and weakened financially by aimless organizing efforts, was in desperate circumstances.

The oil companies were quick to take advantage of the demoralization of the union. Some Gulf producers forced their employes to sign yellow dog contracts as a condition of employment. The worker bound himself not to join a union in the future and waived any rights under the law to which he was entitled.

Under the most unfavorable circumstances, workers in the San Joaquin Valley voted to strike that fall and the fields there came down in a struggle magnificient for its solidarity and spirit.

A month after the strike began, it ended in a complete victory for the entrenched companies, as usual led by Standard Oil. Wages were cut $1 a day and a vicious blacklisting system set up which denied employment to union members who had engaged in the strike.

The problem now was to keep the international alive and functioning despite the opposition of the companies. By 1926, the entire membership was down to 700 and seven years later it reached rock bottom at 300, mostly in one or two locals in California.

It took a lot of guts and an unshakeable faith in unionism for a man to belong to the Oil Workers in those dark days of the early 1930s. Fortunately the union had men with those qualifications who bided their time until the industry was ready for organization on an industrial scale.

After President Roosevelt was elected and Congress had passed the National Industrial Recovery Act, requests for organization began pouring into Oil Workers headquarters. Workers clamored for admission as word spread through the oil fields that at last men would be able to join the union without fear of company reprisals.

Sturdy new locals organized themselves. Among them were Hammond, the first great refinery local; Houston, strongest on the Gulf Coast; Chester, largest on the East Coast; and Port Neches, leader in Texas' famed Jefferson county.

In the spring of 1934, the industry was literally engulfed by a fervor of organizing activity. In March alone, 19 charters were granted and in April 14 more. At the 1934 Oil Workers convention it was announced that the union had signed a national agreement with Shell Oil, the first such contract negotiated in a basic industry with a major company.

THE OIL Workers came into the CIO in 1941, when Pres- Philip Murray set up the Oil Workers Organizing Committee. The first big victory came the next year at Standard Oil of Indiana in Texas City, Tex., followed shortly by a win at the mighty Texas Co. refinery at Port Arthur.

Forced into the great strike of 1945, OWIU was more than a match for the companies and came out of the struggle with the highest post-war wage increase of any CIO union. The victory broke Standard Oil's dictatorship over the industry.

Through the OWIU, the oil worker has become a citizen in an industrial democracy. In the old days, workers were known as "wage slaves." Today an OWIU member is nobody's slave. He has a voice as to the conditions under which he works and the wages he receives. He has rights that no boss can ride over roughsod. He is proud of his union—the Oil Workers Intl. Union, CIO.

Glorified Press Agents 'In The Jack' As Business Puts Best Foot Forward

Campus conversation:
Bill: "What are you going to do after you finish college?"
Jack: "I'm going to be a public relations counselor. That's where the big money is."

A recent story in that paper indicated that public relations counseling is rapidly becoming big business — particularly press agents for big business.

The larger public relations counseling outfits charge annual retainer fees of $250,000 a year and up, and have staffs numbering from 30 to 200.

Fees are going up, but how much a counselor charges depends on how good a public relations job he can do on selling his services to his client.

The Wall Street Journal said that reporters were barred from a recent meeting of the Public Relations Society of America in Chicago when fees were discussed.

"Reports filtering out indicated the meeting stressed the importance of counselor's charging enough to face clients on an equal economic footing. A leading firm said that it charges $40 a day for its staff writers alone, plus secretarial help, office overhead and management brains."

Big spenders are national trade associations such as the American Medical Association, the Iron & Steel Institute, the American Meat Institute, the Association of American Railroads and the National Cotton Council.

How the spending of these groups is increased is illustrated by the latter association. This year the cotton outfit budgeted $1.5 million for its regular promotions, plus additional sums for special programs, in contrast to $9000 in 1939.

One counselor was quoted as saying that nine out of ten "news releases" are never used.

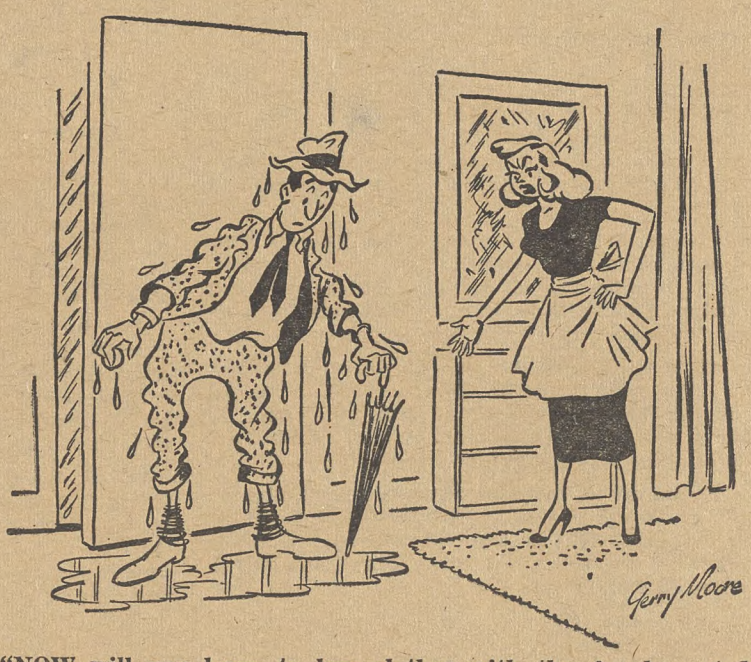
But new fields such as television have opened up. On TV, the Journal reported, company movies are widely used without charge.

The Journal gave two reasons for the mushrooming of public relations counseling.

One is that money spent for publicity and advertising can be deducted from profits reported for income tax purposes.

(The excess profit tax particularly spurs corporations to spend more money for advertising and publicity. The CIO is seeking to have the excess profit tax legislation amended to prohibit excessive expenditures for these purposes.)

The other is that so-called public scandals are spurring corporations, individuals and government to hire public relations men to present them in the most favorable light.



"NOW will you learn to buy clothes with the Amalgamated union label?"

Where Does Money Go?

Lop-Sided Income Split Told In U. S. Report

WHAT FIFTH of the population do you belong to? That's no idle question—in light of Census Bureau figures on the distribution of the nation's money income in 1949.

The upper fifth got almost half of the income—47%.

The second highest fifth received 24%.

To put it another way, two-fifths of the population got 71% of the nation's money income.

The third fifth got 17%.

The fourth fifth received 9%.

The poorest fifth had only 3% to show for its efforts.

In other words, three-fifths of the population got only 29%.

"Incomes are somewhat more unequally distributed in the South than in other regions," the Census Bureau said.

"In the Northeast, East and North Central regions the wealthiest 20% received between 45 and 47% of the income, whereas the upper fifth in the South received about 50%.

The Census Bureau gave one reason and one likely cause for the disparity of incomes in the South. It explained that there is in that section a much larger proportion of farm residents "who usually receive part of their income in the form of goods produced and consumed on the farm rather than in cash."

The bureau also pointed out that the South "contained about three-fifths of the non-white families and unrelated individuals, who are concentrated in the lower income groups.

"There was a greater variation in the distribution of income among the 10 largest states than in the regions," the bureau continued.

"Although the share of income received by the poorest 20% varied little from one state to another (about 3%), the share received by the highest fifth ranged from 44% in Massachusetts, Michigan and Ohio to 49% in Missouri, New York and Texas.

A Message Edged In Black

Consider the plight of the poor, rich man—and then get out the crying towel.

Take the case of Alfred E. Sloan, Jr., chairman of the board of directors of General Motors, who said last week that an executive who was paid $50,000 in 1939 must receive a cool $365,000 this year to enjoy equal purchasing power.

For this sad state of affairs, he blamed inflation and "a confiscatory tax structure."

The question, Sloan seems to be saying, is:

How the hell can a rich man eat?

An American Tragedy: War Against The Schools

(Last of two articles.)

By MILTON PLUMB

AMERICAN EDUCATION—the life blood of democracy's future—today is under the most vicious attack in history.

Some of the groups behind that assault are named in the adjoining story. These organizations, working out of many different motives, have already done considerable harm to the nation's educational system.

Analysis of the current war against the schools reveals a definite pattern of attack. Tying it together are well-establish links with native American fascists, arch reactionaries and professional smear mongers.

Some of the organizations listed are, in fact, obvious "fronts" through which the nightshirt brigade is now spreading its racist, bigoted and anti-democratic propaganda. Despite this, ties can also be found between most of the different organizations, either through their members, guest speakers or publications.

Drawn into the over-all pattern of subversion and reaction are groups and individuals who act out of other motives and are unaware of the underlying purposes of the men directing the attack.

These include those acting out of shortsighted opposition to higher taxes, others who out of their fear of Communism have developed an unfounded fear of what are called "Communist" influences in our schools, and others who fail to understand the modern concepts of education and demand an end to what they call "fads and frills" and a return to the "3 R's."

The professional hate mongers—directing the attack behind the scenes—are quick to seize upon such motives and divert them to their own ends.

LOCAL smear campaigns against public schools, fitting the general pattern used by these groups, begin in many communities just before a vote on a new bond issue for school developments.

Likewise, nearly all such organized attacks on the schools bring in charges of "Communism" against teachers or textbooks. Nearly all also attack "progressive" education.

Excepting the native fascist outfits, the groups joining in the attack represent the same elements who fought the establishment of free, popular, tax-supported public schools in this country more than 100 years ago.

The perilous world situation today, however, makes the mounting attacks on our democratic educational system far more dangerous than they ever were in the past.

Such unthinking criticism and restrictions on teaching, the National Education Association recently pointed out, will aid rather than retard the spread of Communistic ideas. They also will destroy academic freedom and bring down with it the basis of intellectual and scientific knowledge.

For example, German scientists, after the Nazis had crushed Germany's freedom, lagged far behind free American colleagues in the race to release atomic energy.

WHILE the motives and degrees of reaction of the organizations listed vary from group to group, all have demonstrated a bigotry that is inimical to the best educational standards.

Not all of the groups named, nor all of their members, are crackpots of the fascist type. Nevertheless, all of these organizations have launched damaging attacks on our public educational system, and all seek to limit and hamper it in some way.

All want to have education conform to their own theories and ends.

Since most of these organizations profess to be attacking alleged "Communistic" influences in the schools, it is important to distinguish what they mean by this term. Usually, they do not mean the real Communist influences which are opposed by democratic labor unions.

Rather, they apply the adjective loosely to (1) nearly all social welfare legislation of the New and Fair Deals, (2) organized labor, and (3) most progressive and democratic reforms of the last two decades.

SEVERAL local groups particularly active in the attack on schools are included in the list to indicate how the strategy of the national organizations is applied at the grass-roots level.

The danger that similar groups may spring up in other communities is evident from the fact that Allen Zoll, head of the National Council for American Education, announced that one of his 1951 goals was "to increase to 600" the number of such local school "improvement" groups working with the NCAE.

A Case In Point . . .

Los Angeles is a city where the current anti-democratic drive on the public schools has made considerable headway.

The result is appalling, according to an information test given 11,000 LA high school juniors.

18% of the students tested don't know how many months there are in a year, 16% don't know why the Fourth of July is a national holiday, and 50% couldn't tell how many Senators are permitted from each State.

Education Parley Held At Lansing

The Michigan CIO's first statewide education conference was held at the Kellogg Center, new million dollar establishment at Michigan State College, East Lansing.

Some 325 CIO members attended the two-day meeting and took part in panel discussions on such subjects as teaching collective bargaining and steward training; reaching the rank and file, dealing with the public; teamwork among union committees and other topics.

Main speaker at the first session was Michigan CIO Pres. August Scholle who talked on building the union through education and political action. George Guernsey, CIO associate education director, spoke on educating for the union's future.

'Respectable' And 'Hate Groups' Join In Anti-Education Drive

The following list of a score of organizations, which responsible educational authorities have described as "enemies" of democratic public schools, has been compiled by The CIO News after careful investigation.

Through the inclusion of detailed references to known connections of officials and members with other groups, as well as with known native fascists and reactionaries this summary makes clear for the first time the thread of un-American intrigue that ties together nearly all of the current attack on our public schools.

American Education Association, New York. Headed by Milo F. McDonald, the AEA slogan is "Keep American Schools American." Its publication Educational Signposts says it is dedicated to "preventing America being sabotaged by radicals and their dupes in the name of education."

Despite its professed patriotism, the group has welcomed such speakers as Upton Close and Allen Zoll. It also applauded as "a modern American heroine," May Quinn. She had been found guilty of conduct unbecoming a teacher and fined by the New York Board of Education following a hearing on charges of classroom bigotry against Jews and Negroes.

American Medical Association, Chicago. The AMA's campaign against aid to medical education as a part of progressive health programs, extends back many years. Last year the doctors' group went so far as to adopt a resolution calling for an investigation "of our entire school system."

Committee for Constitutional Government, New York. This big business-financed darling of the reactionaries was recently named by the National Education Association as involved in the attack on the public schools. The CCG was founded in 1937 by newspaper publisher Frank E. Gannett.

Its executive secretary, Edward A. Rumely, last May was fined $1000 and given a suspended sentence of six months for contempt of Congress as a result of his refusal to answer questions about his organization.

American Parents Committee on Education, New York. This group was organized in 1940 by the friend of Franco, Merwin K. Hart, who also is head of the National Economic Council. Branded as an "anti-Semite" by the Americanism Committee of the Illinois American Legion, which included the NEC on its list of "Subversive Activities of Hate Groups," Hart has been linked to Zoll, Close, Joseph P. Kamp, Jane Anderson and other ultra-reactionaries.

Anti-Communist League, Englewood, N. J. Organized in 1950 by Frederick G. Cartwright for the announced purpose of combatting "Communism" in the local public schools, the group uses methods advocated by Zoll and quotes from materials distributed by him.

Last March the ACL charged that five Englewood teachers were "sympathetic toward Communism" and that school books used locally contained "Communist" ideologies. After holding extensive hearings, the local Board of Education fully exonerated the accused teachers.

Church League of America, Chicago. George Washington Robnett is CLA executive secretary and editor of its News and Views. Robnett has been backed by important industrialists and he is known as a friend of Rumely, Kamp, Hart, Colonel Santuary, Harry A. Jung, and Elizabeth Dilling.

Citizens School Committee of Los Angeles. This group, admittedly in touch with similar committees in other cities, maligns modern teaching methods, and attacks what it calls over-emphasis in the classroom of the "contemporary scene."

In keeping with the over-all pattern of attack on the schools, it falsely charges that "social studies in the curriculum have swallowed up language studies, grammar, composition, history, geography and literature."

Committee of Interested Parents, Santa Monica, Calif. Formed in 1949, the CIP extended "heartiest congratulations" to the Los Angeles Citizens School Committee when it was formed and offered to work with it.

Conference of American Small Business Organizations, Committee on Education, New York. Investigated and declared unreliable by the House of Representatives Committee on Lobbying, the CASBO publishes Educational Reviewer which professes to "evaluate" textbooks used in the public schools. Mrs. Lucille Cardin Crain is secretary and editor.

Constitutional Educational League, New York. Founded in 1937, the CEL is led by the smearmonger, Joseph P. Kamp. Kamp edited the scurrilous fascist sheet The Awakener when the Nazi government endorsed it in 1935.

Employers' Association of Chicago. One of this group's publications is the fantastic "How Red Is the Little Red Schoolhouse?", widely distributed by other groups listed. A sample of the superheated tone of this booklet: "Those thousands of Reds among the educators of our land—how many of them write the textbooks your children study?" Gordon L. Hostetter is executive vice president.

Foundation for Economic Education, Irvington-on-the-Hudson, N. Y. Primarily a publishing house advocating the unrestrained "free enterprise" philosophy of its big-business backers, the FEE was recently named as part of the campaign against the public schools by Glenn Snow, assistant secretary of the National Education Association.

Friends of the Public Schools of America, Inc., Washington, D. C. Founded several years ago "to counteract the Catholic influence" in Chicago public schools, the group later broadened its scope to a nationwide basis.

Its publication Friends of the Public Schools is edited by Amos A. Fries, who has been paid a fat salary by American taxpayers each year since 1929 when, at the age of only 56, he retired as a major general in the U. S. Army.

Guardians of American Education, Inc., New York. The GAE has this declared purpose: "To protect public school education against current inroads of propaganda designed to discredit patriotic Americanism and bring about radical changes in our form of society."

The GAE was founded by Major Augustin G. Rudd, its national chairman, to fight the progressive educator, Harold J. Rugg.

National Association of Manufacturers, New York. The oldest organization seeking to peddle the line of big business reaction to the young, the NAM sends representatives to nearly all conferences of teachers and its expenditures for school propaganda have been reported to total nearly $5 million a year.

Many millions of pieces of free NAM literature, as well as films, slides, charts and similar materials, have been distributed, all of which are slanted to the organization's reactionary views.

National Association of Pro-America, Seattle, Wash. Formed as a Republican women's organization, made up of conservative women opposing the New Deal, the group has many local chapters throughout the country known simply as Pro-America.

While several local Republican "women's clubs" have also taken part in the drive against the schools and have sponsored talks by discredited persons named here, Pro-America has recently been definitely labeled one of the enemies of public education by the National Commission for the Defense of Democracy through Education.

National Council for American Education, New York. Founded in 1948 and claiming to be "devoted to the stimulation of sound education and the eradication of Marxism and collectivism from our schools and national life," the NCAE has been described by the Anti-Defamation League as one of the "most dangerous" of the educational reactionaries.

Run by Allen Zoll, whose former American Patriots, Inc. has been listed as "Fascist" by the attorney general, the group was cited as a primary example of anti-Communist "fakers and frauds" by the American Legion's National Americanism Commission on Subversive Activities.

School Development Council, Pasadena, Calif. The attack of this group upon Dr. Willard Goslin, characterized by "Time" magazine as "one of the nation's ablest educators" led to his ouster as Pasadena school superintendent. The group denied any tie-up with Zoll's organization, but admitted that it had studied "with great care" one of his pamphlets. Zoll, however, claims credit for the "success."

Men Of Steel: Now They Push For The Guaranteed Annual Wage

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A FEW YEARS AGO a lot of people in the CIO were talking about pension and insurance programs.

They talked for a long time. Now so many millions of CIO members are covered by pension plans they virtually are taken for granted in many basic industries.

The same with insurance—life, sickness and accident, hospitalization and the rest of the program; millions of CIO members who once talked about it now are protected.

There has been a lot of talk, too, in the CIO about the guaranteed annual wage. It has gone on for a long time. Next year—1952—is the year it will be talked up more than ever before in collective bargaining.

Guaranteed annual wages are a major item of discussion in current negotiations between the CIO Steelworkers and the big employers.

A STRONGLY-WORDED resolution passed at the recent CIO convention recalled that the guaranteed annual wage has been a collective bargaining demand for many years. It recalled, too, that the report of the Advisory Committee named to study the problem by the late President Roosevelt, shortly before his death, "fully demonstrated the feasibility of guaranteed annual wage plans." The report was made nearly five years ago.

The resolution also quoted a paragraph from the report:

"'The board believes that the study shows clearly that plans guaranteeing wages or employment, when suitably adapted to the needs and conditions of the industry or establishment, are valuable to the entire nation and afford a wholesome and desirable means for improving both worker and employer security.'"

"No subsequent studies or experience have produced any evidence to challenge this conclusion . . . CIO affiliated unions have repeatedly urged employers to bargain out with them a fair and practical approach to this problem.

"Unfortunately, industry has not met this challenge to back up its professed faith in free enterprise with a practical, collectively bargained approach to worker security.

"Faced by union demands for a wage guarantee, it has almost invariably sought to stall bargaining on this issue by asking for additional opportunity to make cost studies. Needless to say these promised cost studies either were never made at all or were never made available to the unions involved.

"Industry's response to the workers' need for wage security has been almost identical with the unwillingness of most companies until recently to meet their moral obligations to provide pensions and insurance for their employes . . .

"Industry cannot hope forever to dodge its responsibility for guaranteeing some modicum of security to its workers. A wage or employment guarantee is a legitimate charge against the cost of running a business just as surely as are the costs of materials, the depreciation of plants and machines, or the payment of wages or pensions."

The resolution also deplored and condemned industry's "continued evasion of its responsibility to provide steady incomes for its workers," and pledged CIO support for affiliates trying to negotiate guaranteed annual wage plans, or as a partial step, weekly plans.

The reasons behind the CIO demand for a guaranteed annual wage are many. Most of them are pretty obvious. The basic reason is security — not alone of worker and employer, but of the country as well.

"WE DO NOT regard guaranteed minimum annual wages as the solution for all of the problems of full employment, as some of our critics seem to feel." Philip Murray, who heads both the CIO and the CIO Steelworkers, reported to his union's convention in 1948.

"But this proposal can be an important contribution, if achieved through collective bargaining, both through what it can accomplish in direct stabilization of incomes and production and through forcing employers to face up to their responsibilities and to basic economic problems."

Murray W. Latimer, chairman of the advisory board which prepared the report at the late President Roosevelt's behest, was a speaker at the Steelworkers' 1950 convention. A former chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board and now an independent consultant in Washington, he was the USA adviser when the union went to bat with the steel producers for pensions. He told the convention how a guarantee of annual wages would increase the value of the pension plan and strengthen other security measures.

"The heart of security in all its aspects," he said, "is continuity of employment.

"For that reason this resolution may be said to be the very heart of the entire security program which the Steelworkers have negotiated."

President Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers also spoke at the USA convention.

"There is another double standard that we are worried about," he said, "and which President Murray has done a lot of fighting for. That's the question of the guaranteed annual wage.

"Here again you see the double standard. C. E. Wilson (president of General Motors) gets $600,000 a year. His kids eat by the year and live by the year. He gets paid by the year, and that's a good arrangement.

"But the General Motors' workers, like the Steelworkers, their kids eat by the year, they pay rent by the year. But they get paid by the hour—and that creates a problem.

"When the good Lord made us, He made us all alike, and we thank Him for that. He made our kids just as He made the kids of the highly paid corporation executives. And He made them all so that they could eat every day in the year and grow strong physically, spiritually and mentally.

"If He intended that only the children of the corporation executives would eat by the year and live by the year, He would have made the children of the workers with a switch on the side, so that when you get laid off in Steel, in General Motors or in Bethlehem, there is no problem.

"YOU TURN off the switch, and it stops the little stomachs from working until you get back to work.

"It would be a convenient arrangement, but the good Lord made them all the same. We are going to fight for the kind of America that will give them a decent chance on the basis of their being the same."

Reuther told the CIO Oil Workers' convention in Denver, Col., last September, that the UAW will submit its guaranteed annual wage demands to the employers a full year before present contracts expire.

If the auto employers turn them down, he said—

"A lot of people will be riding around in jalopies, because UAW members won't be producing new cars until their demands are met."

Practical Gains Of Hormel Plan Demonstrated

SOME OF THE strongest arguments for the guaran-annual wage have come from the executives of firms where they have been tried and found eminently workable.

Perhaps the best of the plans, from the employes' point of view, is that of the Hormel Packing Co., with headquarters at Austin, Minn. The company's policy, developed in part with the help of Local 9, CIO Packinghouse Workers, which represents the workers, calls for "dependable employment at the highest possible rate."

In the words of Pres. Jay C. Hormel this means that security of employment comes first. This, in turn, means that when the company hires a new employe, it irrevocably commits itself to keep him unless there is some cause for discharge.

"Well," Hormel has asked, "how about the commitment to invest about $7000 per employe on plant, machinery and equipment? That isn't a reversible decision.

"Is it not inconsistent to make an irrevocable commitment on the capital equipment for a worker to use and then balk at making any substantial commitment to the worker himself?"

The most complete by far is the Hormel plan. The company started to develop it in 1927 and first put it into effect in 1933. There was no union in the Austin plant then and the workers soon proved they didn't want the plan. It was later reinstated. Since 1940 it has been covered by the contract with Local 9, and Hormel has said that he did not think it could be administered without a strong union to help.

The plan covers 4000 Austin workers and about 1000 others in small plants in Mitchell, S. D.; Atlanta, Ga.; East St. Louis, Ill.; Dallas, Tex., and Los Angeles, Cal.

Its simplicity has gone a long way in making it acceptable to the workers. It provides, flatly, for 52 weeks of full pay at the base rate for the number of hours a department regularly works (this varies from 34 to 40 a week, averages 38).

It ties in with an incentive plan that enables the employe to earn substantially above their base rates with a profit-sharing plan and also with a requirement that the company give 52 weeks' notice in case of discharge. The contract with Local 9 provides that it be subject to negotiation, and that it may be cancelled 90 days prior to the end of the contract, effective at termination of the agreement.

Practically everybody in Austin works at Hormel's. In 1950 the average wage was more than $4000. Employment has been practically stabilized at around 4000.

Austin has become one of the most attractive cities of its size—23,000—in the country. Three-quarters of the workers own their own homes. The city has no slums. The merchants, assured of a permanent reservoir of purchasing power, have invested money in making their places of business attractive.

The members of Local 9 are so enthusiastic about their union that on their own time and voluntarily they have organized most of the other workers in the city—into CIO unions, naturally. That helps business, too.

'Better Than Selling Apples,'

"There is nothing socialistic or revolutionary in the idea of a guaranteed annual wage," CIO Pres. Philip Murray once wrote in the New York Times Sunday Magazine.

"The idea would amount to nothing if it was a selfish plan, designed to help only a few people. It must be accepted by industry on the basis of its being helpful to the national well-being, to the interests of the nation — to all of the people throughout the nation.

"The idea should take precedence over industrial disruptions growing out of mass unemployment. The idea must take precedence over selling apples on street corners."

Cotterill Resigns

Murray Cotterill has resigned as national director of the Political Action Committee of the Canadian Congress of Labour, Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald announced last week.

UPWA Calls Strike Vote On Annual Wage

CIO PACKINGHOUSE Workers locals throughout the nation will hold strike votes this week on demands for a $3000 guaranteed annual wage.

The vote, called last week by UPWA Pres. Ralph Helstein, will involve some 80,000 employes of the "Big Four" packing firms and a number of independents.

Helstein said the union has been negotiating with the big four and other companies on its demands since last July, but the companies "have flatly turned down our demands."

The companies also have "consistently refused to offer any counter-proposals," Helstein said.

Other union demands are for a cost of living bonus, a social service fund, a union shop and time-and-a-half pay for Saturday work.

'There Oughta Be A Law'

Taft's Treasurer Admits $140,000 Never Reported

AFTER LISTENING to a week of disclosures of the huge sums of money and many questionable practices behind the 1950 re-election of Sen. Taft (R. O.), members of the Senate Election Subcommittee are convinced that "there oughta be a law." They began last week to try to draft improvements to the Federal Corrupt Practices Act which would make such abuses impossible in Federal elections of the future.

In addition, the committee's lawyers are reported to be investigating provisions of Ohio and federal election laws to determine if Taft's campaign treasurer broke them when he failed to report some $140,000 in contributions.

The treasurer, Ben E. Tate, a coal operator of Cincinnati, testified that although he raised about $300,000 for Taft's campaign, he had officially reported only $163,000. He said he paid the remainder to other Taft committees and assumed that they included these sums in their report.

Tate now is treasurer of the organization supporting Taft in his campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination next year. He was sharply criticized by members of the subcommittee for his loose bookkeeping. Chairman Gillette (D. Ia.) told him.

"It was your obligation to report the sums of money that came into your hands."

Under questioning, Tate also disclosed:

1. He had personally ordered the destruction of correspondence pertaining to campaign receipts, although Congress at the time was considering an investigation.

2. He kept some contributions in his personal safe deposit box and, at times, paid campaign expenses with personal checks drawn on the secreted funds, but he kept no records of how much campaign monies he had on deposit from time to time.

3. He solicited large out-of-state contributions for Taft on trips to Detroit and Chicago.

4. About $70,000 had been raised for Taft's campaign by means of a chain letter circulated in Ohio.

Committee lawyers will recommend action against Tate by either the U. S. or the Ohio State attorney general, if their study of the elections laws indicates that he violated them.

Taft's charges that a "Communist blueprint" was behind labor's campaign against him were completely discredited during the last day of testimony. The discrediting came, under prodding by the committee, from Taft's own 1950 campaign manager.

After Willis D. Gradison, former chairman of the Taft-for-Senate Committee, had repeated Taft's charge that Communist Gus Hall had provided the "blueprint" for the anti-Taft campaign, Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) deplored the remark.

"We're going to tear up our democracy if we don't adopt some Marquis of Queensbury rules" to govern campaign arguments, Monroney declared.

Gradison then admitted that "maybe blueprint was an unfortunate choice of words. It just should have said opposition."

But even Taft's Republican colleague, Sen. Chase Smith (Me.), didn't let Taft's accusation that the CIO-PAC was of Communist origin and nurture go unchallenged. On the last day of the hearing—after she had let Taft make his long presentation in peace but had heckled both AFL and CIO witnesses—Sen. Smith quoted Taft's charge and asked Gradison:

"Wouldn't you say that was a pretty extravagent statement that couldn't be backed up by facts?"

Gradison said he hadn't made the statement and didn't know, but that Sen. Taft had "at least attempted" to back it up.

Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) pressed him further. He wanted to know if Gradison really believed that the CIO-PAC was "dominated, controlled or infiltrated" by Communists.

"As to 'dominated,' my answer is no," Gradison repiled. "As to 'controlled' my answer is no. As to 'infiltrated,' my answer is partially."

'Jim Crow' In Dayton Exposed At CIO-Sponsored Community Meet

By AL ZACK

CIO IN OHIO is continuing to turn the community spotlight on discrimination and to seek out on-the-spot means for eliminating "Jim Crow" in all forms.

Latest such civil rights conference was held in Dayton, under the co-sponsorship of the Ohio State and Montgomery County CIO Councils.

Representatives of all religious groups, the NAACP, Urban League, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, schools, newspapers and other civic groups joined with delegates from all major CIO local unions in the Dayton meeting.

The conference was hailed as "the first and most important meeting of its kind in the history of Dayton" and won high praise.

IMMEDIATE outcome was a recommendation that continuing agencies be set up to carry on the unceasing fight against prejudice and discrimination.

Keynote of the meeting was sounded by Rev. George S. Lackland, Toledo Methodist minister, who warned:

"The greatest problem in America and the world is to solve the riddle of how to take the vast and unprecedented amount of production now going into war, and utilize it for peace time production so that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness will be a reality to all of the families of America and the world, regardless of their race, religion, color or place of abode."

He reminded the delegates that Russia makes a habit of pointing up American shortcomings in race relations.

"The need for Americans," he said, "is to tell the world that we're not proud of such incidents —that we're ashamed of them.

"Our task is to keep Ohio and America progressing until every American liberty is the right of every American individual, regardless of his race, religion, color or creed."

In panel discussions aimed at pinpointing "Jim Crow" patterns in the Dayton area, delegates heard from experts in several fields.

For example, Mrs. Miley O. Williamson, executive secretary of the Dayton branch of the NAACP, revealed that it was not uncommon in Dayton for public restaurants and other eateries to attempt discouragement of Negro patronage by over-salting of foods, forcing Negroes to wait unnecessarily for service and by charging exorbitant prices.

ON EMPLOYMENT, W. Richard Carter, Fair Practices Committee secretary of the Electrical Workers, cited many instances of job denial or discrimination due to race, color or religion. He expressed little hope for the enactment of FEPC at the national level in the near future.

Conference workshops covered FEPC and discrimination in recreation, schools, places of public accommodations, and housing.

Each workshop suggested steps to eliminate evils in the fields studied. For example, the panel on housing recommended a continuing agency to push for more public housing, more construction and more integration in the Dayton area.

Jacob Clayman, Ohio CIO secretary-treasurer, in answering the question of "where do we go from here," said that there are three major approaches for the wiping out of Jim Crow.

The individual approach: fighting Jim Crow by word of mouth.

The political approach: on which he said "The only way I know to get FEPC laws at the city, state or national level, is through the elected personnel that makes up those groups."

And finally, through institutions, of which schools are the most important. The job of all these institutions, he concluded, should be to teach that real democracy can only be achieved through working and living together.

Point Four Book Distributed By CIO Affiliates

With 1900 copies of "The Only War We Seek" distributed at the CIO convention, affiliated CIO unions are purchasing additional copies of the book by Arthur Goodfriend.

Published by Americans for Democratic Action, the book says the U.S. wants to battle only "poverty, disease, hunger and illiteracy." It stressed the positive achievements possible through the CIO-supported Point Four program.

CIO Textile, Clothing, Auto and Communication Workers and the Massachusetts State CIO Council have aided in distribution of the book.

Copies of "The Only War We Seek" are available through the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, with two or more copies priced at 70c per copy.

Westinghouse Shuts Down At Bowling Green

THE WESTINGHOUSE Corp. on Nov. 4, permanently closed its photoflash plant at Bowling Green, Ky., last week despite an offer of the CIO Electrical Workers to submit a dispute to arbitration.

One hundred and 80 members of the union were permanently deprived of a livelihood at the plant. As a matter of fact, they had not worked since Aug. 15, when the company locked them out in violation of the national contract.

Ralph C. Stuart, Westinghouse vice president in charge of the lamp (photoflash) division, announced the closing of the plant at a meeting in Washington called by the Federal Mediation Service in an attempt to end the dispute.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey told the panel of mediators that as a price for settlement Westinghouse had demanded that the union renounce its right to strike under provisions of the national contract.

Westinghouse broke its agreement by paying substandard wages at Bowling Green.

Carey's offer to submit the dispute to one or all of a panel of 11 prominent Kentuckians was rejected by the company. The panel included Vice President Barkley and the congressman from the area, Rep. Whitaker.

Civil Liberties Union Hails CIO Stand On Smith Act

CIO'S STRONG convention action calling for a halt in "the roll call of retreat on civil rights" has been praised by the American Civil Liberties Union.

The ACLU is a long-established, non-partisan national agency devoted to defense of the U. S. Bill of Rights.

Singled out by ACLU for praise were CIO convention actions urging all affiliates to set up human rights committees, condemning the U. S. Supreme Court decision upholding the Smith Act, and demanding repeal of the Senate's filibustering Rule 22 which blocks enactment of Fair Employment Practices and other civil rights bills.

In a wire to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the ACLU's executive director, Patrick Murphy Malin, said of the Smith Act convictions of 11 Communist leaders:

"We share with you vehement opposition to the philosophy of Communist totalitarianism and agree with you that conviction under the act for conspiring to 'teach and advocate' violent overthrow of the government is a threat to free speech and freedom of all men and must be vigorously opposed.

"We intend to emphasize this basic principle of civil liberties in all future cases brought under the Smith Act, no matter who the defendant is. We look forward to your cooperation . . ."

New Manpower Needs Told At Labor Law Meet

A PREDICTION was made last week by one of the nation's top manpower officials that 4.5 million more workers will be needed in defense production by the end of 1952.

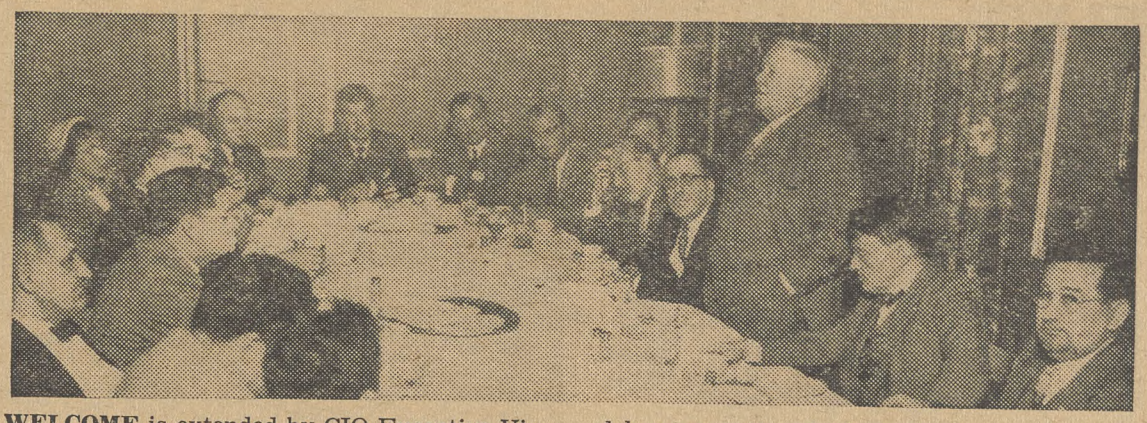
Robert C. Goodwin, executive director of the Defense Manpower Administration, made the statement at the 18th National Conference on Labor Legislation at Washington.

He said that 2.5 million of this number will have to be shifted from civilian production, a million more will be women workers and unemployed, and another million will come from the natural expansion of the labor force.

DMA—a part of the Dept. of Labor—cooperates with the Office of Defense Mobilization's Manpower Policy Committee and the Labor-Management Policy Committee in working out defense labor policies.

The manpower needs of the defense program also was emphasized by Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin; Mary Norton, former Democratic congressman from New Jersey and now womanpower consultant to the DMA, and Charles Stewart, assistant commissioner of labor statistics.

More than 300 persons, including many CIO officials, attended the conference. The conference, held under the auspices of the Labor Dept., was attended by state labor officials and labor representatives designated by governors.



WELCOME is extended by CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood to the CIO delegates to the 18th National Conference on Labor Legislation at Washington Haywood urged the delegates, most of whom were council officers "to keep on building our movement"—a job for which he pledged the National CIO's cooperation with affiliated organizations.

Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils, served notice at the opening session that the CIO would not be bound by conference decisions, particularly concerning national labor policies.

SMITH pointed out that one labor commissioner had brought along delegates who did not represent labor organizations, and that one state delegate had 13 members from one branch of the labor movement.

He said that under such circumstances decisions would not represent the entire labor movement.

CIO delegates held a luncheon meeting following the opening session at which Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood said that the CIO "must keep on building."

Haywood, who is also head of the Councils Dept. as well as director of organization, said that he was pleased to see so many delegates belonging to the Textile Workers and the Communications Workers. The latter, he said, were a real asset in the South because in many cases they are the only CIO members in many communities.

Haywood pledged closer cooperation with the delegates, many of whom are state council officials.

Tobin said that his promise to sustain basic labor laws and to uphold state standards—which he gave to the conference last year—was not a "vain" one.

"Not only has national policy statement on hours been worked out but on overtime and the relaxation of State labor standards also," Tobin said.

HE ADDED that the policy on work hours states "that generally a maximum eight-hour day and 40-hour week has been found best in terms of efficiency of production, whereas, 48 hours is generally regarded at the maximum for sustained efficiency. . . .

"The policy statement on premium pay takes into consideration the fact that workers morale can be hurt by suspension of overtime pay with adverse effects upon productivity."

Tobin said that the policy on state labor standards recommends that there be no relaxation on the rules governing hours, health and safety, child labor, industrial home work and the minimum wage.

He said that before "a request for relaxation of state labor standards is granted, employers should be urged to consider alternate methods of operation that might eliminate the need for relaxation."

Mrs. Norton said that the $60 million appropriated by Congress for schools, housing and child care centers in defense plant areas was a "very meager sum."

MRS. NORTON predicted there would have to be a fight in Congress to get more money for these purposes. Inadequate facilities in defense production areas, she said, caused absenteeism and quitting by women defense workers during the last war.

The responsibility of the delegates to maintain labor standards while aiding defense production was the theme of President Truman's message to the conference.

"You have had a large share in the past," President Truman said, "in creating the labor standards which have made this great work force of 62 million adequate to the job ahead.

"Your clear thinking, wisdom and counsel are needed now more than ever. As leaders in your states you will continue to make sure that labor standards are kept sound and that labor problems in a defense economy are solved in a cooperative spirit."

Yule Bonuses Are Subject To Bargaining

CHRISTMAS bonuses are subject to collective bargaining—if a firm has been handing them out for a dozen years—the National Labor Relations Board ruled last week.

The ruling was issued in the case of the CIO Auto Workers and the Niles-Bemont-Pond Co., West Hartford, Conn., makers of machine tools and aircraft engine accessories.

After giving a week's pay or a percentage of the workers yearly earnings every year—except 1946 when there was a strike—the company announced on Dec. 11, 1950, that each worker would get a Christmas check for $1 for each year's service with a minimum of $5.

The union asked to negotiate the 1950 bonus; the company refused, and the case went to the NLRB.

"The Christmas spirit, as we conceive it." the majority ruling said," does not stop short of the bargaining table, for bargaining in good faith is in itself a continuing effort to achieve good will between an employer and his employes."

In another case brought by the CIO Furniture Workers, the NLRB ruled that the Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Asheville, N. C., should pay to the estate of Joseph W. Bolch $2000 insurance and back pay until his death. Bolch was fired for union activity Nov. 15, 1950. He died July 15, 1951.

Prior to his death, a NLRB examiner had ordered the firm to reinstate Bolch with back pay. The case was reopened after his death.

'Stop Profiteering,' Haywood Tells Maryland CIO Parley

A DEMAND that the Wage Stabilization Board relax wage controls because of "mounting profits and the rising cost of living" was voiced last week by Allan S. Haywood.

Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, addressed the Maryland State CIO Council's 13th annual convention in Baltimore.

He warned:

"Either stop profiteering or we are going to demand more wages.

"I say to you, watch the steel battle."

Full support of Maryland CIO members to the CIO Steelworkers in their present negotiations was pledged by Ernest J. Moran, council president.

The political situation in Maryland also figured in convention proceedings.

Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director, said "politics in Maryland stink to high heaven." He was referring to last year's election, in which Sen. Tydings (D.) was defeated by John Butler (R.) after a smear campaign featuring composite photographs.

The record of Sen. O'Connor (D.), who is up for re-election next year, was termed by Moran as "not satisfactory as far as this organization is concerned."

A legislative program in line with that of National CIO Convention action was adopted by the Maryland cenvention. It was highlighted by a call for stronger price controls under the Defense Production Act, and a use of government food price subsidies if necessary.

Moran was re-elected council president without opposition by the 200 convention delegates.

Charles A. Della, also of Baltimore, was named secretary-treasurer, while new council vice presidents are: Harry Castle, Cumberland; Nettie Mehaffey, Salisbury; E. T. Michels, Hagerstown; and Audrey Smid, Baltimore.

Steel Union Gains Told

Are union dues worth while? Ask the CIO Steelworkers.

The semi-annual audit of the USA books has just been mailed to each of the organization's approximately 1,045,000 members.

With it went a letter from the union's officers reporting on the first year's operation of the insurance and pension plans won through contract negotiations.

From this social insurance program alone, the total benefits paid to members and their dependants totaled $59,495,000. Most of this represents free hospital care and other medical expenses that otherwise would have been the obligation of individuals.

Income to the union during the first six months of 1951 was $12,309,524 representing all collections from initiation fees, dues and miscellaneous sources. Of this amount $6,091,188 was refunded to local unions.

The auditors found that the total net worth of the Steelworkers, as of June 30, 1951, was $9,405,972, a gain of $676,005 since Jan. 1.

Kentucky Council—

Business Corruption Of Politics Denounced

"IT IS CORRUPT business that is corrupting American politics," a PAC official told the 12th Constitutional Convention of the Kentucky CIO Council.

Despite this fact, Darrel Smith, assistant to PAC Director Jack Kroll, said PAC was accused of exerting an evil influence on politics by a good part of the press, which ignored connections between business and current political scandals.

"Have you ever heard of any CIO official bribing income tax officers, or spreading deep freezes or mink coats?" Smith asked.

He said that CIO members would either have to support PAC financially or forsake part of the organization's legislative program.

Smith pointed out that electing Congressmen is expensive business, that it costs $100,000 to $500,000 "for an honest man" to run for the U.S. Senate, and at least $25,000 to run for House of Representatives.

More than 100 delegates to the convention, which was held in Ashland, unanimously adopted state legislative proposals made by Pres. Al Whitehouse in his report.

These included a little Wagner act and more powers for the State industrial relations commissioner.

In his report Whitehouse said that if the 1952 General Assembly does not pass a little Wagner Act, it should at least empower the industrial relations commissioner to order, conduct and enforce union representation elections in intra-state business.

The Kentucky Federation of Labor at its September convention called for a three-man board with power to order representation elections. Kentucky CIO Sec.-Treas. Fred Foss said he had reason to believe the CIO and the AFL "could get together on a reasonable labor-relations bill."

Other state legislative proposals adopted by the convention called for:

Increases on the minimum wage, unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation. An improved safety and health law.

A Fair Employment Practices law.

A stronger law covering employment of women and children.

A law curbing the power of the courts to issue injunctions against striking unions.

The delegates also asked for a law to keep State liquor and beer taxes from being allocated to dry counties—a measure which has been advocated by the CIO Brewery Workers.

Slight Strike Increase Reported By U.S.

A slight increase in management-labor disputes developed in October, according to the latest report of the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

During the month 440 strikes, involving 240,000 workers, began. That was an increase from 400 new strikes in September, but below the October, 1950 figure of 550 new stoppages.

ETHUSIASM marked the first CIO School for Oklahoma, Arkansas and Kansas held at the Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman. Giving with song are, left to right: Pres. Clyde Coates of Steelworkers Local 3076, Tulsa, Okla.; Philip Weightman, PAC representative; Joseph Glazer, Rubber Workers education director; Nat Goldfinger, associate director of the CIO Education and Research Dept., and Pres. Marzette Frye of Communications Workers Local 6003, Norman.

UPWA Forces Swift To Hire Negro Workers

CIO PACKINGHOUSE Workers have won an important arbitration decision against Swift & Co. which gives more meat and muscle to strong fair employment practices clauses in UPWA's contracts.

Swift, the nation's largest meat packer, was found guilty "beyond question" of violating its contract with UPWA by discriminating against Negro women workers.

And he ordered the packing firm to hire, with back pay running to November, 1950, 12 Negro women who had been refused jobs.

The arbitration decision was hailed by Russell R. Lasley, UPWA vice president, as a "forward step in the union's program to combat race discrimination."

He pointed out the Packinghouse Workers have a strong policy to include "our own fair employment practices safeguards in all contracts with the packers."

The anti-discrimination challenge to Swift was initiated by UPWA Local 28 in Chicago. A year ago, two white women, without any experience in the industry, were sent to Swift's—and hired immediately.

At the same time the company employment office was crowded daily with Negro women, many of them experienced, whom the company refused to hire.

UPWA disclosed that a janitor was stationed by the company in the outer employment office where he screened applicants and allowed only white persons to enter the inner office to be hired.

One of the white women involved in the test case said a company official asked her to help recruit more white women to work for Swift "because we had so many colored people during the war and now we can't get rid of them."

"It seems a fair conclusion from the evidence," arbiter Seward found, "that the . . . company was not only failing to give female applicants 'fair and reasonable consideration,' it was failing to give them any consideration whatsoever."

IUE Wins Vote In Ohio GE Plants

THE CIO Electrical Workers recently defeated the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in two National Labor Board elections, including one at the Bucyrus, O., General Electric plant.

IUE won the GE election despite the company's discharge of 84 employes just before the voting. IUE got 180 votes, UE 132 and no union 11.

IUE won a larger election at Becton and Dickinson's plant at Rutherford, N. J. The count was IUE 844, UE 592. UE in September, 1950, retained control of this plant by a 67-vote margin.

In addition to the election victories, the CIO union recently was certified by NLRB as the bargaining agent for more than 300 employes at Dumont Electric Corp, New York City. IUE defeated UE 166 to 120, but UE raised objections, which the board ruled were without merit.

Radio Bias Case Dropped By FCC

The long-pending Richards case, involving charges of news distortion in radio broadcasts, has been killed by the Federal Communications Commission.

FCC has renewed the licenses of radio stations in Los Angeles, Detroit and Cleveland owned by the late G. A. Richards. Transfer of control of the stations to his widow was authorized.

In lengthy hearings some months ago, charges were aired that Richards had ordered his news broadcasters to "slant" reports against labor, the late President Roosevelt, Jews and others.

If You're In Fur Coat Market, Here's Some Timely Advice

THINKING OF buying the little lady a fur coat for Christmas? Unless you can spot the difference between the pelt of a genuine seal and a Hudson seal. you may wind up paying $500 or more for a coat made of dyed muskrat, which is the fur dealer's name for Hudson seal.

Siberian Sable may be just another name for Manchurian Wolf or even Chinese Dog, an article in the current issue of the magazine Consumer Reports points out. It lists a number of unethical practices engaged in by furriers, more interested in selling fur coats than in correctly identifying the animals from which they are made.

New Zealand seal, for example, is an imposing and expensive-sounding term but in the furry language of some fur dealers, it actually is rabbit. Even more appealing is Australian chinchilla or Russian marten, as it is also called. The latter is more apt to be made up of the hides of a number of American born and bred opossums, the article declares.

There is relief in sight however, for the thousands of persons who are victimized yearly by the double-talking fur merchants.

Slated to take effect in August, 1952, is a law intended to end the gobbledygook and outright deception so often attendant on the purchase of a fur coat.

The law represents the first real effort made by Congress to make illegal the misbranding of any fur product, by manufacturer or retailer, in anything from an advertisement to a sales invoice.

Under provisions of the Act, the Federal Trade Commission is directed to draw up by next February a Fur Products Name Guide.

The guide will list the "true English names" of fur bearing animals. Thereafter no merchant may any longer pass off the common rabbit as sable-dyed coney, Shamokin sable, New Zealand seal, or some other legendary animal.

Until the Fur Products Labeling Act goes into effect, consumers are warned to read fur advertisements with a wary eye. If the wife still insists on a fur coat this Christmas, be sure you get a receipt stating the exact kind of fur used in the garment and whether or not the furs are natural, blended or dyed.

A receipt which states laconically "one fur coat" is, from a legal point of view, useless as evidence of fraud.

UFW Fights 3 Years, Gains Jobs Of 6, $40,000 In Pay

A THREE-YEAR fight by CIO Furniture Workers has paid off for six Connecticut workers.

They've regained their jobs and back pay amounting to some $40,000 as result of a long battle by the UFWA-CIO in proceedings before the National Labor Relations Board and the courts.

Victory for the six workers at the Pratt-Read plant at Deep River, Conn., came after the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in the Second District unanimously upheld an NLRB decision ordering their reinstatement.

All six were fired following the expiration of their union contract in October 1948. Their discharge was one of a series of incidents which began in 1947 when the company raised its work speed norms.

Fourteen women workers were fired for falling below the standard. They took their case to the state labor board and seven of the fourteen received cash allotments of $1,780 each.

In the midst of appealing the case to the U. S. Circuit Court, the company offered the six discharged workers a cash settlement without reinstatement. The offer was rejected and the case was fought through to its present conclusion.

The six workers, who have returned to their jobs, are David Peterson, Elmer Joy, Susan Bishop, Olinto Mencucini, Lucille Smith and Katherine Fosque.

Report Hits Metal Deal For Anaconda

PLANS OF THE Defense Materials Procurement Agency to set up Anaconda Copper Co., already one of the world's biggest monopolies, as part of the monopoly controlling critically short supplies of aluminum were blasted by the Justice Dept. last week.

The understaffed but hard-hitting Antitrust Division informed the Defense Production Administration that Anaconda is "not a proper company" to participate in the aluminum expansion program.

It pointed out that Anaconda holds a dominant position in copper, and that copper and aluminum are competitive metals.

Hence, Acting Assistant Attorney General Newell A. Clapp informed DPA, "Anaconda would be interested in preserving its position in copper rather than in furnishing the competition which is badly needed in the present three-producer, extremely concentrated aluminum industry."

The DMPA had proposed to let Anaconda participate with the Harvey Machine Co. in a joint expansion of aluminum facilities in Montana. Cheap water power from the Hungry Horse Dam, built by the government at taxpayers' expense, would have been made available to run the project.

Jouhaux Thanks CIO On Award

Leon Jouhaux has sent a message of "deep thanks" to CIO for congratulations extended to the French labor leader on his receipt of the Nobel World Peace Prize.

In a letter to Jacob Potofsky, CIO Clothing Workers president and head of the CIO International Relations Committee, Jouhaux said:

"I associate with the honor which I have received all the comrades in the international trade union movement who share my ideal of justice, liberty and independence . . ."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE INSURANCE and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, has again taken a tremendous step forward in organizing the insurance workers of this country.

This past week the IAWOC-CIO won representation elections in New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania among the agents of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., by the following vote: New York, eligible 1,785, voting 1,723, IAWOC 1,213, no union 507, challenged 3, void 5; New Jersey, eligible 1,230, voting 1,197, IAWOC 820, no union 377, challenged 0, void 0; Pennsylvania, eligible 1,850, voting 1,729, IAWOC 1,023, no union 702, challenged 4, void 7.

This vote, affecting some 5,000 agents in the three states, was carried by the IAWOC by an overall majority of 2 to 1, with a total of 3,056 votes for IAWOC against only 1,586 for no union.

Paving the way for further gains in Metropolitan, these agents showed their complete determination to make IAWOC the one big insurance union by joining hand-in-hand with their fellow agents of John Hancock and other companies already under IAWOC contract. This overwhelming victory also gives the company its answer to its effort to stop CIO from bringing the union to these workers of this important industry. Only by united action of all agents in one big union can they hope to combat the financial giants of the insurance industry.

I want to take this opportunity to extend my congratulations and thanks to all those officers, representatives, and agents who made this victory possible.

SUB-REG. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports two election victories in Memphis, Tenn. The first election, among the office workers at International Harvester, gave the UAW a clear-cut win with 150 votes against 100 for no union. The UAW already has the 2,200 man production unit under contract. In the second election, the United Paperworkers won a representation victory at the Bruce Carton Co., by a 42 to 6 vote.

Reg. Dr. F. J. Michel reports an election victory for the Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers, CIO, at the J. W. Speaker Corp., Milwaukee, Wisc. The ballot shows: eligible, 112; PJNWIU, 79; no union, 26; void, 1.

Reg. Dir. George Di Nucci reports a representation win at the Irwon-Meadow Gold Dairy, Zanesville, O. Under the direction of State Dir. Gerald Hughes, the Dairy Workers, affiliated with the Retail, Wholesale Workers, CIO, defeated the AFL, 22 to 10.

Reg. Dir. Di Nucci also reports an IUE victory at the General Electric Co., Bucyrus, O. The results give the IUE 180 votes and the UE, 132.

OTHER IUE GAINS, noted by Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, are: at the American Radiator, Bayonne, N. J., IUE, 659; no union, 27; challenged, 1; and at Becton & Dickinson, Rutherford, N. J., IUE, 844; UE, 592; and no union, 17.

Pres.-elect A. F. Hartung, of the International Woodwokers, reports two representation wins. They are: at the A. F. Lowes Lumber Co., Molalla, Ore., IWA, 57; no union, 47; and challenged, 4; at the Morning Lumber Co., Superior, Mont., IWA, 7; AFL, 5; challenged, 1.

Reg. Dir. E. D. Hodson reports a representation win for the Steelworkers at the Eastern Malleable Iron Co., Wilmington, Del. The count: Steelworkers, 312; no union, 56.

OTHER STEELWORKERS victories, as reported by Reg. Dir. Michael Mann, are: at the Ziv Assembly Service, Inc., Chicago, Ill., eligible, 77; USA, 37; no union, 32; and for the professional and technical group of the Crane Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible, 268; USA, 186, No union 81.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports a representation victory for the UAW at the Arizona Buick Co., Phoenix, Ariz. The results: UAW, 21; no union, 18. UAW Int'l. Rep. Ros Althof, assisted by Ann Tinnon, was in charge.

Potofsky Sees No Reason To Look At Spanish Unions

CHAIRMAN Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Affairs Committee—in reply to a news report that American unions had been invited to visit Spain—said last week that the CIO has received no formal invitation from the Spanish unions.

A news report quoted Pres. Jose Solis Ruiz of the Spanish syndicates, representing both labor and management, as inviting delegates representing the CIO, AFL and other U. S. unions to study the Spanish labor system.

Potofsky, who is also president of the CIO Clothing Workers, said that if such an invitation were received, the committee "would be guided by the facts concerning Spain."

He pointed to the position taken by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions—with which the CIO is affiliated—at its Milan Congress last July.

Potofsky said that ICFTU "made it abundantly clear . . . that it regards the Spanish trade unions . . . captives of the Spanish State and incapable of exercising any real functions on behalf of their members, or freely collaborating with the free trade unions of the world.

"The CIO sees no reason for a change in this position."

Union Tasks Reviewed By GCEOC

They are not the easiest people in the world to organize, for their boss is the government—federal, state or city—and it is often hard to pin down someone to bargain with when they try to improve their pay and working conditions, or get grievances settled.

Government officials have even more ways of passing the buck than private management.

What then are the best ways to develop strong union solidarity among public employes? How can union programs that will bring them benefits be best promoted?

THESE are some of the basic problems taken up at the first "Build the Union" conference held by the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee at Pendle Hill, Quaker educational center just outside Philadelphia, Pa.

The American Labor Education Service and the National CIO's Dept. of Education and Research cooperated with the GCEOC in running the conference, which was attended by nearly 50 officers and members from locals in New Pork, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia. Charles Federoff, GCEOC chairman, was unable to be present.

Secy.-Treas. Milton Murray of the union told the delegates that the No. 1 responsibility of organizing a strong union belonged to the locals, and urged them to develop their own leadership and have confidence in their own ability, rather than relying upon professional staff assistance to do the job for them.

HIGHLIGHT of the conference was a forceful talk by CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood who told the Government Workers that without inspiration and a militant spirit no union could succeed. He called upon the local officers and members to help provide that inspiration to their union so that "the labor movement can continue in its job of bringing the good things of life to the people."

How to stimulate activity and delegate responsibility in the union, led by Ruth Wiencek of the union's education staff.

The role of government unions in legislation, led by Ben Segal of the National CIO Education Dept., and Richard Shoemaker, GCEOC legislative representative.

Use of publicity, led by Larry Rogin, publicity director, CIO Textile Workers and Pres. Henry Shipperd of the Philadelphia CIO Council.

Earl Sandefur Dies In South

Earl L. Sandefur, CIO Representative in North Carolina, died Dec. 4 at Winston-Salem after a month's illness. He was 52.

Beginning his long career of service to organized labor in the AFL Typograhpical Union, Sandefur was a member of the CIO Steelworkers at the time of his death. He was secretary-treasurer of the North Carolina State Federation of Labor prior to the formation of the CIO.

A DAY WITH A DOCTOR.—Evansville, Ind., CIO members (who have some pretty strong ideas about adequate medical care at moderate cost for all of the people) got a first hand glimpse recently when their CIO County Council's welfare committee spent a day on the go with a doctor. TWUA Mourns Herbert Payne, Union Founder And Leader

FUNERAL SERVICES were held last week in New York for Herbert W. Payne, a founder and a vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, who began his career in the labor movement by leading a strike at a Philadelphia hosiery plant partly owned by his father.

Payne was a member of American Federation of Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers, which was part of the United Textile Workers. He was shop chairman of the plant where his father also was superintendent when a city-wide strike of hosiery workers was called in the 1930's. Young Payne lead the strike at his plant.

THE STRIKE was lost. Payne went to work in another plant. But his interest in the labor movement was kindled and he soon joined the Amalagamated Clothing Workers staff.

His next union post was with the United Textile Workers, one of the founding unions of the Committee for Industrial Organization, which later became the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

With John W. Edelmen, now Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, Payne directed a strike at the big Berkshire Hosiery Mill, near Reading, Pa. This plant was widely known for its anti-union attitude. The strike broke into the news when workers who lay down in front of the plant were beaten by police. The strike was lost, but the CIO union had gained its stature as a militant organization.

Payne joined the CIO Textile Workers Organizing Committee when it was set up in 1937 and was a founder in 1939 of TWUA. He was elected a TWUA vice president the same year. In 1948 he became director of the dyeing and rayon divisions.

He was active in early textile organizational strikes in the South in the 1930's. A skillful negotiator, he obtained many agreements in the rayon industry. A noteable achievement was credited to Payne when, with the Labor Dept. he worked out regulations to eliminate occupational disease in the synthetic industry.

In a message of sympathy to his widow, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Sec-Treas. James B. Carey, and Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood declared Payne had been "an outstanding leader of labor" and "the men and women, not only of the Textile Workers Union, but of the entire CIO recognized his many great contributions and mourn his loss."

The services for Payne were attended by the TWUA executive board and many other union officials.

Alien Workers Warned Annual Registration Due

All aliens residing in the United States were advised last week that they must register between Jan. 1-10 with the U. S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Such registration is required annually under the Internal Security (McCarran) Act, announced A. R. Mackey, immigration commissioner.

Registration forms are available at any post office, and when filled out, must be turned in at a post office, it was announced.

'Slave Labor'—

Army Prison Contracts Curbed After 2 CIO Unions Protest

STRONG PROTESTS by two CIO unions have forced federal prison officials to call a halt in issuing new contracts for use of prison "slave labor" on Army goods.

The protests came from the CIO Shoe Workers and Textile Workers.

Both unions are confronted with serious unemployment in their industries.

Nevertheless, large Army contracts for shoes and woolen blankets recently have been awarded to federal prisons.

Because of the CIO unions' protests, backed up by congressional and community action, prison officials have announced that no more such contracts for shoes or textiles will be issued until June of next year.

At that time, said James V. Bennett, Bureau of Prisons director, he will "sit down with representatives of management and labor and decide what will be done about the awarding of such contracts in the future."

Following disclosure that government contracts for the construction of 185,000 pair of low cut men's tan shoes had been awarded the convict shoe plant in Leavenworth, Kan., federal penitentiary, officials of the CIO Shoe Workers joined New England Congressmen and civic leaders in condemning the order.

Telegrams of protest were sent to President Truman, Sec. of Defense Robert A. Lovett, Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin and Major General George A. Horkans, Chief of the Army Quartermaster Corps.

USWA Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell pointed out that the award was made "while large numbers of our members are out of work or are working only part time."

The contract, which calls for manufacture of 60,000 pairs of shoes a month for three months starting in January, was termed "not unusual" by James V. Bennett, director of the Bureau of Prisons in Washington. He said the prison's shoes factory has been in business for nearly 25 years.

Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.) called on President Truman to "investigate prison production built up for months anticipating awards to private industry and free labor." He asked Truman to "stop convict-labor preference."

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers previously protested the awarding of a $2½ million contract for the manufacture of woolen blankets to the federal prison at Terre Haute, Ind.

He called the prison contract an "outrage" and a "flagrant violation of the national interest."

He pointed out that in the woolen and worsted centers in New England and the Middle Atlantic states "thousands of textile workers are unemployed and thousands of others are working only part time."

Rieve said it is "bad enough that textile workers should be suffering hardships in an inflationary period. It is intolerable for the government to deny them the work which normally would be theirs."

A TELEVISION SET keeps up morale of the CIO Textile Workers pickets outside the J. Sullivan & Son plant, Philadelphia, where the union has been on strike since July 17 in an effort to get a new contract.

CIO Fur Local Gains $4 Boost

CIO Local Industrial Union 1777, organized only a few months ago, has negotiated a contract giving a $4 weekly increase—their first pay boost since 1948—and the union shop to employes of 11 fur manufacturing and repair shops in Duluth, Minn.

The workers formerly were members of the Fur & Leather Workers, which was expelled from CIO because of Communist domination.

Negotiations began in August, after a National Labor Relations Board representation election. The agreement was not reached until the union served a strike notice on the employers.

WSB Okehs 13c Rubber Wage Boost

THE SLOW-MOVING wheels of the Wage Stabilization Board last week finally approved wage boosts totalling 13c an hour which were negotiated last summer by the CIO Rubber Workers with the nation's "Big Four" rubber manufacturers.

More than 100,000 URW members now will receive the wage boosts negotiated through collective bargaining.

Although employers joined the URW in asking that the entire 13c increase be retroactive to about last Aug. 1, the wage board split the increase. Seven cents was made retroactive to August and the other six cents to Oct. 16.

The increase was largely based on living costs increases, with 1c going to a higher night shift differential.

Tossed out by the board was an improvement in holiday pay from double to triple time. The WSB rejected this negotiated gain by an 8 to 4 vote, with labor members dissenting.

The WSB decision specifically covered URW contracts with U.S. Rubber, Firestone, B. F. Goodrich and Goodyear. Other contract settlements in the industry were similar.

5000 Agents Pick CIO In Metropolitan Vote

THE CIO Insuarance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee last week won bargaining rights for 5000 agents of the titan of the life insurance field—the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.

IAWOC scored a two to one victory in National Labor Relations Board elections in New York City, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

The committee, which was formed only about 18 months ago, is confident of winning bargaining rights with Metropolitan in Ohio, where an election was scheduled for Dec. 7, and in Connecticut, where the agents will go to the polls Dec. 14.

The elections were held in New York City, New Jersey and Pennsylvania Nov. 30, but the votes were not counted until Dec. 5 when the ballot boxes were opened at the NLRB regional office in New York City.

News of the victory was jubilantly greeted at the offices of CIO Executive Vice President Allan S. Haywood and of the IAWOC.

Impromtu celebrations were held by officers of the 25 local unions in the area covered by the elections. The victory followed a campaign in which 100 local officers and 15 IAWOC representatives participated.

The victory was forecast by Haywood, who is also IAWOC chairman. When the company on the eve of the election granted increases to those not participating in the voting, he said that the agents would not be prevented from voting for IAWOC.

With this victory, IAWOC is well launched in the insurance field. It now has won elections and holds contracts with the John Hancock Insurance Co., covering 6000 agents over the country, and a half-dozen smaller companies.

The overall vote in the Metropolitan election was: IAWOC 3056, no union 1586. By areas the vote was: New York City, IAWOC 1213, no union 507; New Jersey, IAWOC 820, no union 377; Pennsylvania, IAWOC 1023, no union 702.

Pickets In 3 Cities Support Florsheim Shoe Strikers

TRANSCONTINENTAL picketing of retail stores of Florsheim Shoe Co. was extended by CIO Shoe Workers last week, in support of 2400 Florsheim workers who have been on strike for six weeks.

USWA members picketed Florsheim outlets in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and other cities, a spokesman for the international union said in Washington.

Shoe manufacturing workers at Florsheim's Chicago and Danville, Ill., plants are on strike.

The union is fighting a wage cut proposal of as much as 60c an hour through reduction of piece rates, and seeks a general wage increase and incorporation into piece rates of 32c in hourly increases won in recent years.

Other bargaining issues include vacations, social insurance, job timing and vacation pay.

Picketing of Florsheim stores in Los Angeles was effective in reducing sales and informing the public on strike issues, according to Ernest Tutt, USWA international representative.

The Florsheim workers have been pledged full suport by the CIO Executive Board, and several CIO unions have assisted the shoe workers.

Auto Union Calls Parley On Layoffs

A SPECIAL conference of presidents of CIO Auto Workers locals will be held in Washington next month, to demand correction of mounting unemployment in the auto industry.

The UAW-CIO has been hit by layoffs resulting from curtailment of civilian auto production due to demands of the defense mobilization program—and more firings are in sight.

Plans for the Washington conference, of some 800 UAW officials, were announced last week by Pres. Walter P. Reuther. The meeting will be held when Congress reconvenes next month.

Meantime, the U.S. Commerce Dept. reported that 500,000 fewer persons had jobs last month than in October. The drop was due, it said, to seasonal curtailment of farm work and in the construction industry. However, factory employment gained.

Big Steel Stalls Wage Talks

'A 100% UNION STATE.'—That's CIO's goal in Ohio, Jack Kroll (left), State Council president, tells Allan S. Haywood. Scroll honoring the CIO executive vice president's 50 years in the labor movement was presented at the big Ohio CIO convention in Cleveland.

State Councils Act To Halt Layoffs, Speed PAC In '52

CIO Councils in five industrial states of the East and Middle West met last week, acted on these problems they have in common:

1. Growing unemployment in civilian industries—particularly auto and textiles—where production has been cut back and thousands of workers fired. This is a direct result of big business mismanagement of the defense production program.

2. Support for the CIO Steelworkers in their present wage negotiations.

3. Preparations and organization to "do a job" of political action in the 1952 campaigns.

Auto Workers Present 6-Point Plan To End Job Layoffs

MOVES UP—A. F. Hartung is the new president of the CIO Woodworkers, defeating J. E. Fadling in a close race. Hartung formerly was IWA vice president.

CIO AUTO WORKERS last week placed "full responsibility" on both the federal government and business for developing "mass unemployment" in the auto industry and announced a six-point program to halt widespread job layoffs.

Strong criticism of government policies—and particularly of Congress' failure to act despite past warnings—was voiced by Walter P. Reuther, UAW-CIO president.

The auto workers will tell congressmen and government officials about the layoff crisis first hand, when presidents from nearly 800 UAW-CIO locals—each suffering or facing unemployment problems meet in Washington.

Dates for the Washington meeting, called previously by the UAW-CIO international executive board, last week were announced for Jan. 15 and 16. That is a week after Congress returns.

In announcing conference details, Reuther said:

"Mass unemployment is costing the defense program the loss of hundreds of millions of production man hours and is costing workers and their families hundreds of millions of dollars in lost wages and hardship.

"BOTH government and industry must accept full responsibility for the failure to coordinate the curtailment of civilian production with the stepping up of defense production . . .

"The UAW-CIO began developing a constructive program to meet the defense unemployment problem two days after the Communists invaded South Korea and President Truman called for partial defense mobilization," Reuther recalled.

"The failure of Congress and government mobilization agencies to implement these, or any equally effective proposals, has resulted in our present and pending loss of millions of precious and irrecoverable man-hours in defense or essential civilian production.

"Our present problems grow out of the failure of most of government and most of industry to act aggressively and courageously to meet and overcome the obstacles and break the bottlenecks in the way of gearing the decline in civilian production in with the increase in defense production."

This UAW-CIO program will be emphasized at the Washington conference:

- That present civilian output be continued "until defense work is available to take up the slack in unemployment."
- That Congress immediately vote supplementary unemployment benefits, to provide 40 hours' pay per week to workers laid off "as a result of defense mobilization policies."
- That more civilian plants be used for defense work, making possible "the re-employment of thousands of workers who are currently laid off."
- That steel scrap collection be speeded.
- That a "technical task force" find satisfactory substitutes for copper and other scarce materials—lack of which is slowing industry.
- That machine tool contracts be awarded to the auto and related industries.

Along with Detroit, auto industry centers affected by present layoffs include Flint, Grand Rapids, Saginaw, Jackson, Bay City and Lansing, Mich., Kansas City, Mo., Anderson and South Bend, Ind., Linden, N. J., Kenosha and Milwaukee, Wis., Buffalo, Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles.

Big Firms Get 11½ Billions In Tax Bonanza

(Reports elsewhere on this page detail growing unemployment in several industrial areas, direct result of big business control and "inequality of sacrifice" in the defense program. In contrast here's how business is faring.)

THE BIG corporations which cry "creeping socialism" in attacking all welfare programs proposed by the Democratic Administration aren't hesitant about taking government aid for their own special benefits.

They've already made American taxpayers foot the bill for rapid tax write-off benefits on about $11.5 billion dollars worth of new facilities under the government's "certificate of necessity" program.

This new total was disclosed Dec. 10, when the Defense Production Administration announced that it had awarded 162 additional certificates during the week ended Nov. 23.

SUPPOSEDLY there had been a "tightening" of requirements for the special benefits. Under them firms may write off most of the cost of their new plants and equipment from excess profits in five years instead of over a 25-year period.

But the new DPA grants included awards to five firms for more than $5 million each. Ten other firms on the list got benefits of more than $1 million each.

The biggest award went to Caterpillar Tractor Co. for $59,693,126 worth of new facilities to make bulldozers, shovels and other military earth moving equipment. Next highest on the list was the Copper Range Co., which will be allowed to write-off $40,812,000 out of $57 million of copper mining facilities in Michigan.

Extra U. S. Unemployment Pay Urged

ADDITIONAL federal jobless pay has been proposed for workers laid off by cutbacks in civilian industry resulting from conversion to defense work.

The proposal was adopted by 200 delegates, including union and state labor department representatives, at the 18th National Labor Law Conference in Washington.

The conference proposed federal aid to be granted so long as laid-off workers are "available and willing to work." The extra U. S. benefits would be used to increase the weekly jobless pay, and extend the period of presently "inadequate" state unemployment compensation.

Rhode Island CIO Sets Drive For $10 Jobless Pay Hike

THE RHODE ISLAND State CIO will begin a vigorous drive next year for General Assembly action to raise unemployment compensation benefits from $25 to $35 weekly.

Delegates to the 14th annual CIO convention at Providence unanimously backed the proposal and laid plans for insuring the solvency of the unemployment compensation fund when the weekly benefits are stepped up to $35.

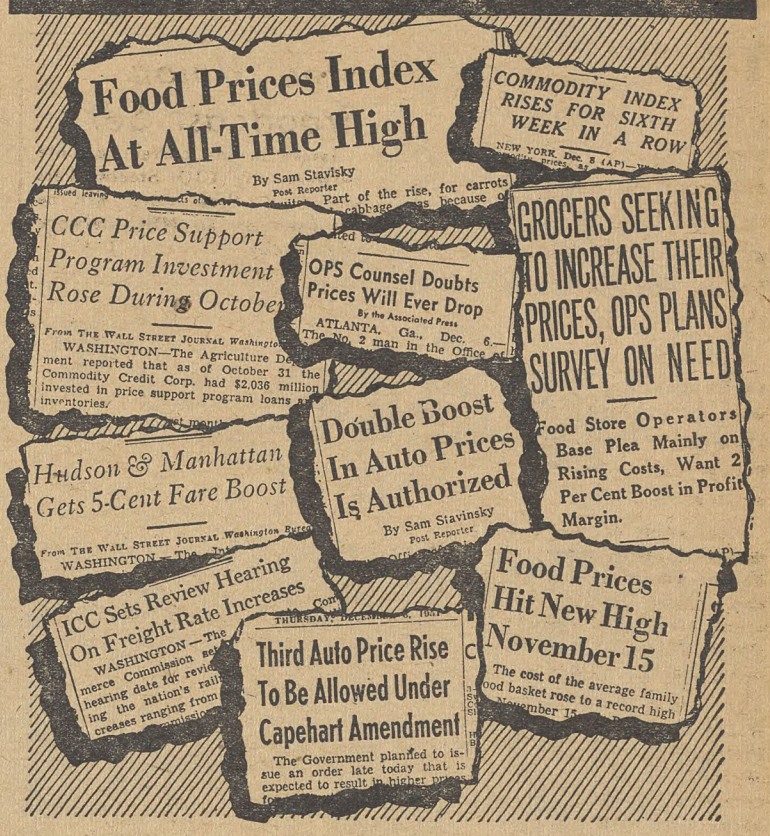
Joseph C. Novo, manager of the CIO Textile Workers Northern Rhode Island Joint Board, declared "it is the obligation of the federal government to provide funds for states that cannot carry their unemployment compensation program."

Pres. Frank J. Benti of the State CIO Council called upon all labor organizations in the state to join with the CIO for united labor political action. He called such an organization necessary to combat increased telephone, gas and electric railway rates.

George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, lashed at business corporations which he said "are making tremendous profits while workers have to hobble along with a withered wage dollar."

Benti, Executive Vice Pres. Arthur Gourd and Secy.-Treas. William McKeever were re-elected without opposition.

The Price Parade



Job Crisis 'Like Smog' At Boston CIO Meet

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

UNEMPLOYMENT in key New England cities hung over the annual convention of the Massachusetts CIO Council last week like an industrial smog.

Almost every speaker at the three-day session — held in Boston's Copley-Plaza Hotel—offered suggestions for remedying a situation in which thousands of New England workers find themselves out of work.

Some of the suggestions:

1. Development of new supplies of hydro-electric power — strongly recommended by Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin, a former Bay State governor.

Tobin, charging that power supplies barely meet present demands in the area, pleaded for development of river valleys, in order that cheap and abundant electricity may be available to new industry.

2. Changes in government financial policies—recommended by liberal Rep. John Kennedy (D.M.), who was introduced to the convention by Pres. William Belanger as a "probability" to be Senator in 1953.

Kennedy complained that the government is taking far more out of New England than it is spending there in its various welfare and aid programs.

The young Congressman also berated members of the conservative coalition in Congress for failure to adopt higher minimum wage standards and effective price controls—both, he said, are hurting New England's competitive position.

3. "Genuine long-range planning by the government to prevent unnecessary disruption in industry," suggested by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers.

Rieve, speaking for the largest union in New England, proposed government aid to channel new plants into the area.

"It is plain common sense," he said, "to use the plants and the workers who are left idle" for defense production in other industries.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, in a message to the delegates, said the "runaway" plant, whose owners move to low-wage areas, is creating problems in the south just as it did in New England.

"EVEN IN non-industrial areas, workers will suffer exploitation only for a short period of time," Carey declared in a statement read by IUE Sec. Treas. Al Hartnett.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice-president, told the delegates that CIO organizing activities are helping people throughout the entire nation. He pledged full support to efforts of the Steelworkers to win substantial wage increases, and said their victory would benefit workers in other industries.

Belanger was re-elected for his fourth term, and Sec.-Treas. Salvatore Camelio and Vice Pres. Guy Campobasso were returned to office. Two vice presidents are Roy Stevens, Steelworkers and H. H. Lussier, IUE.

Labor, Industry In New York Hit Job Cutbacks

New York is the latest industrial area in which unemployment and other "serious economic difficulties" are resulting from cutbacks in civilian production without matching contracts under the defense program.

The regional labor-management defense manpower committee for New York and New Jersey, including CIO representatives, has called for an overhaul of the federal government's defense contract procedure.

The committee demanded "relief to surplus labor areas where economic hardships are imminent."

Steelworkers Meet As Talks Stalled

THE STEEL negotiations are on "dead center," stalled by refusal of U. S. Steel Corp. to "give" on wage and contract demands of the CIO Steelworkers, and the union's top officials and negotiators are meeting to decide their next action.

Called to meetings at Pittsburgh on Monday, Dec. 17, are the Steelworkers' Executive Board and the 170-member International Wage Policy Committee, directly representing the men in the mills.

Expiration of the steel union's contracts with basic steel producers, a host of fabricating plants and related industries is a fortnight away—on New Year's Eve. These USA-CIO contracts cover more than 1.1 million workers.

In calling the USA's Executive Board and wage policy group to Pittsburgh, Pres. Philip Murray said on Dec. 12 only that they will receive a "report on the status" of bargaining with Big Steel.

That status, earlier newspaper reports made plain, is one of no progress and no appreciable concessions by steel management in some weeks of negotiations.

There is considerable speculation in the daily press that the steel union meetings today may authorize strike action.

But that, so far, is only speculation, and has been given no support by an announcement from the union.

While in the past, steel bargaining parleys often have been broken off when the union has called its wage policy committee together, in this case negotiations continued with Big Steel.

In an effort to keep the talks going, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service stepped into the negotiations on the day after the two USA groups were summoned to Pittsburgh.

Assigned by Cyrus S. Ching, conciliation service director, to the case were Mediators Clyde M. Mills and Walter A. Maggiolo. They were scheduled to meet with union and management representatives, a spokesman said, "to decide the extent of our participation at this point."

THE Steelworkers' goal is "22 in '52"—referring to the score of wage and contract demands presented to the industry. They are highlighted by a "substantial" wage increase, a guaranteed annual wage program, paid holidays, elimination of area wage differentials, elimination of wage inequities, increased shift premiums, severance pay, and higher vacation benefits.

In the opinion of the union, according to a dispatch from Pittsburgh, the steel companies have been "dragging their feet" and declining to make any effort to settle the crucial basic steel negotiations in direct bargaining.

Union irritation over the management attitude was revealed—before Murray called the board and wage policy meetings—in reports earlier last week in the New Times and the Wall Street Journal.

According to the Times report, the Steelworkers had accused U. S. Steel Corp. "of failing to make any genuine effort to work out an agreement with the union."

"Negotiations were begun on Nov. 26 and the company has not yet made any counterproposal to the union demands," the report continued.

"It was understood that the company had made some proposals for tightening up the contract clauses safeguarding the prerogatives of management, but that the union regarded these proposals as 'turning the clock backward, instead of forward.'"

The report in the Times, as well as accounts in such management organs as Business Week, made plain that the union's guaranteed annual wage proposal is of considerable importance.

On this demand, the Times said, "the union was reported seeking assurance that all workers with three or more years of employment would be paid for at least 32 hours of work every week of the year." It added:

"THE 32-hour standard was put forward because the union now has an understanding with most steel producers that work will be shared among all employes as long as a mill has orders enough to keep shifts operating on a 32-hour basis."

A dispatch in the Wall Street Journal, said the Steelworkers "think the companies are filibustering in current negotiations. Recent bargaining sessions have been nothing more than 'perfunctory,' union chiefs are said to complain, because the companies won't talk business."

Behind the deadlock in the steel negotiations stands Benjamin Fairless, president of Big Steel. And it was Fairless who said—even before the talks began—that:

"Whether our workers are to get a raise, and how much it will be if they do, is a matter which probably cannot be determined by collective bargaining and apparently will have to be decided in Washington."

Steel Union Broadcast Set

Issues in the current dispute between the CIO Steelworkers and U. S. Steel Corp. will be discussed on an NBC network this Friday by Arthur J. Goldberg, the union's general counsel.

The speech will be heard on stations of the NBC network at 10:45 p.m., E.S.T., on Friday, Dec. 21.

Watch your local papers for local broadcast time.

It's official now. For what consolation it's worth, official government figures now prove what every consumer has known for a long time: the purchasing power of the dollar is at an all-time low.

Last month, a buck bought only 42.6c worth of the food it would have been exchanged for before the war.

In November the Bureau of Labor Statistics Retail Food Price Index jumped 2½% to 234.4% of the 1935-39 average. Fruits and vegetables alone soared 10% between Nov. 15 and 26.

7 Officials Indicted In Cicero Riots

A FEDERAL grand jury which investigated anti-Negro riots last July in Cicero, Ill., last week indicted seven city officials and policemen on charges of violating civil rights.

The trouble started when Harvey E. Clark, Negro bus driver, moved with his family into an apartment building previously housing only whites. A Cook County (Ill.) grand jury returned several indictments a few weeks ago—against the wrong people.

The federal grand jury was impaneled Oct. 22. Leo F. Tierney was named special prosecutor by Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath.

The indictments included one against Police Chief Erwin Konovsky for failing to disperse mobs that gathered at the apartment and wrecked it, and named other policemen as having been present. Thirty-six additional policemen were named co-conspirators along with "diverse other town officials and other persons not known," but were not indicted.

The federal jury investigation of the Cicero riots came on demands initiated by the Chicago CIO Council.

With the indictments, said Michael Mann, council secretary and CIO regional director, "justice is back on the track again."

Mann wired President Truman commendation for ordering the federal government to intervene in the Cicero case after local authorities attempted to whitewash the anti-Negro outbreak.

UAW Demands U.S. Arrest Cops In Negro Slayings

DENOUNCING "terroristic aggression" against Negroes by Southern police officers, the CIO Auto Workers last week demanded that the federal government indict and arrest officials involved in the slaying of Negro prisoners.

Three such recent cases were condemned by Walter P. Reuther, UAW-CIO president, in a wire to Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath. He said:

"The killing of Samuel Shepherd and the shooting of Walter Irvin by Sheriff Willis McCall of Florida, the killing of John Lester Mitchell by special deputy sheriff David Lanclos in Louisiana, and the killing at sea of crewmen William Harvey by Capt. Franklin B. Weaver clearly indicates an intensification of terroristic aggression against Negroes by officers charged with the upholding and enforcement of the law.

"Shepherd, Irvin, and Harvey were handcuffed and in custody at the time they were shot. These murders have been broadcast throughout the world to the impairment of our national prestige and to the glee of our Communist foes. Meanwhile no action against these slayers has been taken by any constituted authority within the United States."

Illinois CIO Supports Steel Wage Campaign, Hits At Old Parties

By BOB SENSER

THE CIO'S battle for the guaranteed annual wage will also help millions of American workers who aren't CIO members, Pres. Joseph Germano told the eighth convention of the Illinois CIO Council.

"Every activity that this organization engages in benefits not only our own people but all of the people of the U. S." Germano said.

"Did just CIO members benefit by pensions and social insurance? Hundreds of thousands of unorganized workers today are enjoying these benefits, thanks to the CIO's battle."

The 600 delegates voted that the guaranteed annual wage be included as "a standard provision in our collective bargaining agreements." The convention was held in Chicago Dec. 7-9..

David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Steelworkers, and Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers, both urged the annual wage as practical goals for labor.

"I am not talking in the field of theory or future speculation." said McDonald. "At this very moment we are negotiating with U. S. Steel and other corporations for the guaranteed annual wage."

The Illinois convention also girded for the 1952 elections. A resolution stated: "Failing to obtain candidates acceptable to CIO from either major party we should consider the possibility of running independent candidates."

Germano said he was disappointed in both major parties for not picking candidates who would work "not only for the best interests of labor but for the best interests of all the people." Democrats in Chicago, he added, seem to take CIO support too much for granted.

"I owe allegiance to my God, then to my country, then to my union," Germano emphasized. "I owe no allegiance to any political party."

Reuther told delegates that the 1952 presidential election "will be the most important political fight in the history of the labor movement."

He predicted that a victory for the reactionaries "will mean the White House will be moved to Wall St. and communism will progress here and in other parts of the world."

ALLAN S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, blasted Sen. Taft (R. O.) for his pro-segregation and anti-labor stand.

Referring to Taft's recent approval of segregation in Southern schools, Haywood said: "We do not believe in the segregation of people—you, Mr. Taft, may be for that, but we are not."

The convention urged city, state, and national governments to hurry up and get busy on safeguarding civil rights. But Germano warned that it isn't sufficient to dump the problem into the lap of government.

"The question is, 'What can WE do about wiping out discrimination in our own locals?' We've got to clean up our own house first. I know the sins that exist within our own organizations, and I say we should cut them out."

Germano (Steelworkers), Vice President Duane Greathouse (Auto Workers), and Sec.-Treas. Maurice F. McElligott (Clothing Workers) were reelected to the council's top offices.

Ask And Be Given . . .

"Ask and ye shall be given"—said Ben Fairless, head of U. S. Steel, in a recent speech at Wooster College in Ohio.

These are the words of charity and good will. They are particularly appropriate during this holiday season. Mr. Fairless' ghost writers are to be complimented for weaving them into the boss' speech.

Unfortunately, Ben Fairless' associates at the top level of U. S. Steel didn't seem to be listening to his Wooster speech—or perhaps they were tipped off that it was just "public relations" to which they need pay no attention.

At any rate, the Big Steel negotiators—according to reliable newspaper reports—have so far turned a deaf ear to the requests of CIO Steelworkers for a "substantial" wage increase. Wage negotiations, one gathers from these reports, are moving with the speed of a paralyzed snail. In less than two weeks, the union's contract with the company will expire.

Big Steel, whose profits have been riding a record-breaking crest throughout the defense program, has made it fairly clear that it wants an ironclad commitment from Uncle Sam for a rise in prices before the company will get down to serious business at the collective bargaining table. This, despite a mass of statistics proving that U. S. Steel could pay out a substantial wage increase without causing any great crimp in its profit figures.

There is a well-founded suspicion that the steel industry, like many other industries, wants to pin the blame for every profiteering price increase on to our unions and the workers in the plant. There are a host of newspaper columnists and radio commentators eager to preach this anti-labor line.

Trouble is, the facts just don't bear out the big business propaganda.

Money Well Spent

In giving $100,000 to help build democratic unions in under-developed countries of the world, the CIO was making an investment in the future of democracy—including American democracy.

Our experience here at home has shown that free trade unions are—and must be—a bulwark of liberty and an essential for making life better. There's just no substitute for strong, intelligent unions.

Building strong and free trade unions is a job that no government can do regardless of its good intentions. Free, effective unions can be built only by the workers themselves.

That has been recognized by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which is setting up a special $700,000 fund to provide training, encouragement, know-how and fundamental supplies to workers' leaders in the Middle East, Asia, Africa and Latin America. It will be a union project, from top to bottom.

The obstacles to the growth of unionism in those regions are big. But the stakes are big, too. For continued poverty and oppression will play directly into the hands of the enemies of freedom, who promise much and deliver only the stronger chains of totalitarianism.

So, in making this gift to the workers of backward areas, the CIO is proud to help labor's "own point four program"—a program that points towards progress and a better life for millions of people, in Kokomo and Kalamazoo as well as in Cairo and Calcutta.

Baby, It's Cold Outside!

'On The Side Of Common Man!'

Excerpts follow from a speech by Robert Oliver, labor advisor to the Economic Cooperation Administration and former CIO regional director in Texas, before the American Farm Bureau Federation in Chicago on Dec. 12.

MY STORY is that the United States must make a major shift in its policies and relations with the free countries of the world.

I think we are doing many wonderful things in the world. I am proud of my association with the ECA. The measure of its success is that Western Europe is today free and not under Communist domination. That is quite eonugh to ask.

But it could have done more. It could have done more to insure that its present success would stand and endure and meet the test of time. In a world of flux and change such as we live in today, situations can change overnight. The bulwark that has been erected under the Marshall Plan must be strengthened so that whenever history chooses to judge the success or failure of our efforts it will find Western Europe still free of Communist domination.

If after one year, or two or three, the Communists were able to take over, then our success would turn to failure; our labor would have been in vain; we would merely have postponed disaster, not averted it.

I believe that ECA could have done more if its imaginative, progressive leadership had not at times been hampered by outmoded policies and restrictions. To be blunt and explicit about it, for that's my CIO training and I think farmers like plain speaking too, the policy of so-called non-intervention that is so dear to the hearts of the striped pants boys won't work in today's world.

We have got to junk it as a policy and procedure. We have got to recognize that today's critical times call for real leadership, for a total foreign policy, even though that leadership may carry with it the implication of intervention.

The challenge of our time is a proper production and distribution of goods and services. Today the challenge comes partly from Asia, where much the largest proportion of the population of the world lives in a squalor difficult for us to imagine. And these peoples see our representatives, our diplomats, men of impeccably good manners, who will cheerfully arrange for the shipment of relief wheat or rice to a famine-ridden area—and at the same time talk about non-intervention. This they cannot understand.

What we need in Asia are stable, satisfied allies. We have to tell them plainly that we are taking leadership in trying to reconstruct a true and beneficial new order in the world and that we want them not as serfs, colonials or wards, but as full partners in a free world. We have got to speak out.

There can never be political stability as long as the economic system does not produce an acceptable standard of living.

It is within this framework and against this backdrop that some of us in ECA introduced a bold new program that has been called by some of its enthusiastic supporters "The Miracle That Can Save Europe."

IT IS BASED upon the conviction that the cartelized, restrictive economy that has grown so deep-rooted in Europe must be uprooted and thrown out. It must be replaced by a vigorous, expanding economy that will not, day in and day out, year in and year out, be vulnerable to Communist agitation because it stifles progress and stands between the people and the opportunity to achieve an acceptable standard of living.

This I believe I know about some of the countries of Western Europe—they are not going to produce at a rate that will give them an acceptable standard of living and an adequate defense just because we tell them to.

They are going to do it only if the incentives are there. They are going to do it only if the forces exist within their economies and their society that operate to force this result, not by governmental fiat, but by the natural development of democratic evolution.

That is the reason that we insist that there must be strong, democratic trade unions, powerful enough to obtain a just share of the production of industry. They must organize at the plant level.

We must intervene to save the world from the Communist barbarism which threatens it. And if our opponents call such action imperialistic we must on our part have the courage to frankly assert that we have adopted a TOTAL American foreign policy of intervention on the side of the common man.

The Senate's Voting Record

Here's an explanation of each of the 10 important votes on the opposite page. Read the description of the issues—then see how your Senator voted.

1. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT— DOUGLAS AMENDMENT

(Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Rollback of prices on meats and other commodities was a crucial issue in the 1951 fight for effective inflation control. Senator Douglas' (D., Ill.) amendment would have stricken from the new Defense Production Act the prohibition against price rollbacks written into the bill by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The amendment was defeated.

VOTE: To permit price rollbacks.....26 (R)
To prohibit price rollbacks.....61 (W)

DATE: June 27, 1951

RESULT: Defeat of this amendment will cost consumers billions of dollars in increased prices.

2. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT— BUTLER AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Fair distribution of meat and effective control of meat prices require the use of slaughter quotas. Senator Butler's (R., Nebr.) amendment to the Defense Production Act prohibits OPS from placing quotas on livestock slaughtering. In preventing the government from channelling livestock at a normal rate to slaughterers, packers and processors the Butler amendment gives encouragement to black markets in meat. The amendment was adopted.

VOTE: To prohibit use of slaughter quotas.....47 (W)
To permit use of slaughter quotas.....33 (R)

DATE: June 27, 1951

RESULT: Spiraling increases in cost of meat.

3. TAXES—LEHMAN AMENDMENT

(Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: The 1951 tax bill originally passed by the House made new tax rates on corporations effective January 1, 1951. Senate Finance Committee changed the bill to make the new rates for corporations effective April 1, 1951. Senator Lehman's (D., N.Y.) amendment would have restored the January 1 date provided in the House bill. The amendment was defeated.

VOTE: To make new tax rates on corporations effective Jan. 1, 1951.....33 (R)
To make new tax rates on corporations effective April 1, 1951.....54 (W)

DATE: Sept. 26, 1951

RESULT: Defeat of the Lehman amendment decreased Federal revenues from corporation taxes by about $500 million.

4. JENNER AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: This amendment—sponsored by Senator Jenner (R., Ind.)—was vigorously opposed by labor and welfare groups. It lifted the ban imposed by the Federal Government on publication of the names of persons receiving public relief. The amendment subjects needy people to needless humiliation and exploitation by politicians. It was adopted.

VOTE: To publish the names of those on relief.....38 (W)
Against publication of relief rolls.....30 (R)

DATE: July 19, 1951

RESULT: Although the Jenner amendment was eliminated in conference from this particular bill (H.R. 2416), the way was paved for its adoption later as a rider to the 1951 tax bill.

5. HOUSING—DIRKSEN AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Senate Appropriations Committee had provided for construction of 50,000 Public Housing units in 1952. Senator Dirksen (R., Ill.) offered an amendment to limit Public Housing construction to 5000 units. It would have destroyed the Public Housing program. Amendment was defeated.

VOTE: To limit Public Housing to 5000 units.....25 (W)
To provide for 50,000 units.....47 (R)

DATE: June 20, 1951

RESULT: Congress finally provided for construction of 50,000 Public Housing units in 1952.

6. AID TO MEDICAL EDUCATION

(Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Bill provided federal grants-in-aid to help train additional doctors, dentists and nurses urgently needed by the armed forces and on the home front. After originally supporting measure Senator Taft reversed his position and led the opposition to it. Key vote came on amendment offered by Senator Pastore (D., R.I.) to encourage expanded enrollment in medical training schools. Amendment was defeated.

VOTE: For the Pastore amendment.....23 (R)
Against the Pastore amendment.....42 (W)

DATE: Oct. 4, 1951

RESULT: Sent back to Committee by voice vote, the bill has again been reported out by the Senate Labor Committee. Further action on it will be possible during the 2nd session.

7. AID TO LOCAL PUBLIC HEALTH UNITS

(Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: This bill authorized federal aid to local communities to initiate and expand public health units. Strengthening of local health services through such aid is encouragement to the establishment of full health departments. Bill was passed.

VOTE: For aid to local public health units.....38 (R)
Against aid to local public health units.....35 (W)

DATE: March 16, 1951

RESULT: Passage of bill by Senate was a forward step, but bill has been stymied for months in House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

8. FARM LABOR—CHAVEZ AMENDMENT

(Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Senator Chavez' (D., N. Mex.) amendment to the Ellender Farm Labor bill proposed to utilize fully the available supply of American farm workers before recruiting farm workers from foreign countries. The amendment was designed to encourage a national farm labor recruitment program with decent wage and working standards.

VOTE: For the Chavez amendment.....12 (R)
Agaist the Chavez amendment.....59 (W)

DATE: May 1, 1951

RESULT: Congress went on to pass a completely unsatisfactory Farm Labor bill which permits the importation of thousands of poverty-stricken Mexicans for exploitation in industrial agriculture.

9. EUROPEAN AID—DIRKSEN AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Senator Dirksen's (R., Ill.) amendment proposed to slash $500 million from authorization of ECA funds for European Recovery Program. Such a cut would have seriously crippled effectiveness of entire program. Amendment was defeated.

VOTE: For the Dirksen fund-slashing amendment....31 (W)
Against the Dirksen amendment.....41 (R)

DATE: August 31, 1951

RESULT: Senate later cut authorization for European economic aid by $250 million. This was only partially restored by final action on bill.

10. EUROPEAN AID—BENTON AMENDMENT

(Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Amendment offered by Senator Benton (D., Conn.) proposed that European aid be provided in a way to discourage cartels and monopoly and to encourage development of the free trade union movements of Europe. Amendment was adopted.

VOTE: For the Benton amendment.....36 (R)
Against the Benton amendment.....31 (W)

DATE: August 31, 1951

RESULT: Passage of amendment struck a terrific blow at European monopolies and gave a tremendous boost to European free trade union movements.

Send A Better Congress To Washington!

The House Voting Record...

Here's a short description of each of the 10 key votes in the House of Representatives which are recorded on the next three pages. Read the description of these issues, then see how your Congressman voted on them.

1. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT— POAGE-COLE AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: One of the greatest roadblocks to effective price control was provided in the Poage (D., Texas)—Cole (R., Kansas) amendment. It established cost-plus pricing on every product at every stage of production and distribution. The system means billions of dollars in increased prices to consumers. The amendment was defeated.

VOTE: For cost-plus pricing ..... 181 (W)
Against cost-plus pricing ..... 233 (R)

DATE: July 20, 1951

RESULT: Although the Poage-Cole amendment was defeated in the House, the cost-plus procedure was later included in the Defense Production Act.

2. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT— HOPE AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Slaughter quotas are necessary to assure fair distribution of meat and keep available supplies out of the "black market." The Hope (R., Kansas) amendment prohibits OPS from placing quotas on livestock slaughtering and thereby removes the only effective device for maintaining a fair supply of meat to all. The amendment was adopted.

VOTE: Opposed use of slaughter quotas ..... 249 (W)
Favored use of slaughter quotas ..... 167 (R)

DATE: July 20, 1951

RESULT: Encouragement given to black market in meat and ever-increasing meat prices.

3. DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT—COMMODITY SPECULATION CONTROL

(Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Control of speculation on commodity markets is essential to keep raw material prices from skyrocketing. Vote came on Committee amendment eliminating from bill power to control such speculation. Amendment was adopted.

VOTE: To control commodity speculation ..... 172 (R)
Opposed to control of commodity speculation ..... 242 (W)

DATE: July 20, 1951

RESULT: Congress failed to utilize effective weapon against inflation.

4. RULES COMMITTEE CHANGES— COX RESOLUTION

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: The Cox (D., Ga.) resolution repealed reforms in House parliamentary procedures adopted in 1949 and restored to the House Rules Committee dictatorial control over legislation. The resolution ended the practice by which Committee Chairman could bypass opposition in Rules Committee and get bills directly before House for vote. Resolution was adopted.

VOTE: To repeal House rules reforms ..... 243 (W)
To keep House rules reforms ..... 180 (R)

RESULT: House Rules Committee again has bottleneck power over all House legislation and can pigeonhole urgently needed bills.

5. HOUSING—RECOMMITTAL OF CONFERENCE REPORT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Senate-House Conference Report had provided for construction of 50,000 Public Housing units in 1952. Representative Phillips (R., Cal.) moved to recommit the Report back to Conference with instructions to insist that the new construction be limited to only 5,000 units. The motion to recommit was defeated.

VOTE: To limit Public Housing to 5,000 units ..... 169 (W)
To provide for 50,000 units ..... 206 (R)

DATE: August 15, 1951

RESULT: Final action by Congress provided for construction of 50,000 Public Housing units in 1952.

6. SEGREGATED HOSPITAL FOR NEGRO VETERANS

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Bill authorized construction of a segregated hospital for Negro veterans. It was properly opposed on the House floor as class legislation designed to place the stamp of Federal approval on a policy of segregation based on race or color. Vote occurred on a motion by Representative Powell (D., N. Y.) to strike the enacting clause. Motion was adopted.

VOTE: To construct a Jim Crow hospital ..... 117 (W)
Against segregation ..... 223 (R)

DATE: June 6, 1951

RESULT: Attempt to advance program of segregation by Federal government was beaten.

7. TIDELANDS OIL BILL

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: This measure forfeits federal public ownership of offshore oil resources valued at $40 billion by turning over title to the states. It opens the door to exploitation of these essential resources for the benefit of private oil interests. The bill passed.

VOTE: To give away vitally needed oil resources.... 265 (W)
To keep federal ownership of this National asset ..... 109 (R)

DATE: July 30, 1951

RESULT: Bill is still pending before the Senate Interior Committee.

8. FARM LABOR—POAGE BILL

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: The Poage (D., Texas) bill provides for the importation of Mexican farm labor. It does nothing to improve the wage and working standards of American farm workers; it exposes the imported workers to ruthless exploitation; it ignores completely the constructive program for providing an adequate supply of farm labor under decent conditions recommended by the President's Commission on Migratory Labor. The bill passed.

VOTE: For the Poage bill ..... 240 (W)
Against the Poage bill ..... 139 (R)

DATE: June 27, 1951

RESULT: Passage of the Ellender-Poage Farm Labor bill led President Truman to send a special message to Congress asking for corrective legislation. No action has yet been taken on the President's request.

9. EUROPEAN AID—REECE AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: The Reece (R., Tenn.) amendment cut $350 million from the authorization for economic aid to Europe. It was a crippling blow to the entire European Recovery Program. The amendment passed.

VOTE: For the Reese amendment ..... 186 (W)
Against the Reece amendment ..... 177 (R)

DATE: August 17, 1951

RESULT: In butchering the economic aid program, Congress ignored the advice of the nation's top military experts who warned that the aid was necessary in terms of America's security.

10. PUBLIC POWER FUNDS— KEATING AMENDMENT

(Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: This amendment to the Interior Department appropriation bill proposed by Representative Keating (R., N. Y.) prohibited use of funds to build public power lines in certain areas. Obvious purpose of the amendment was to block advance of the government's program for cheap power. The amendment was adopted.

VOTE: Against construction of public power lines 226 (W)

DATE: May 2, 1951

RESULT: Although later modified in the Senate, the amendment remains as an obstacle in the operation of public power projects.

In '52 We Face A Stern Test

By PHILIP MURRAY
President, CIO

IN THE Presidential, Congressional, state and local elections of 1952, our political action machinery will be put to a stern test. The forces of reaction, not satisfied with sabotaging the Administration's progressive legislative program, are hell-bent to achieve complete control of every branch of this government.

Such a victory for reaction would be a major calamity not only for the people of America but for the entire free world.

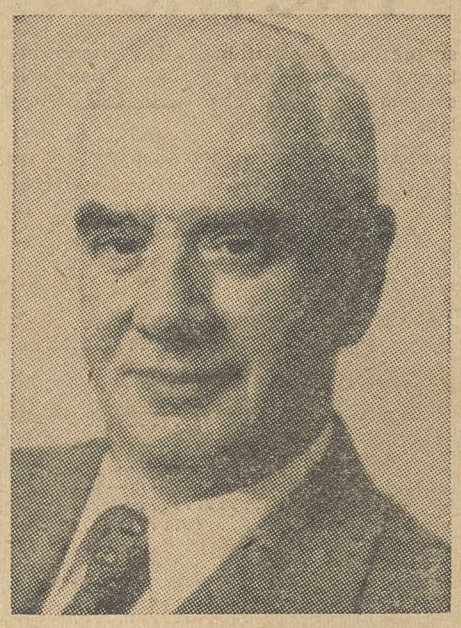
The CIO is committed without reservation to a program of liberal, forward-looking, non-partisan political action. We have supported, and we will continue to support, effective political programs and candidates who have, on the record, shown their fundamental sympathy with our hopes for a better, more prosperous nation.

In 1952, we will boldly meet the issues of what will be a vitally important political campaign. We will publicize our viewpoints and our attitudes and we will be ready to debate them publicly and fairly with our adversaries.

The issue in 1952 will be the issue of the general public against the reactionary program sponsored by a privileged, wealthy minority.

In such a campaign, the CIO will, of course, mobilize its resources to combat this attempt to stifle the hopes of the average citizen for better, more liberal government.

In the 1952 election campaign, we can anticipate that our CIO will be attacked and maligned by those who recognize and fear the vitalty and progressive attitude of our organization.



But we will not be misled by false issues nor by inflammatory smear campaigns.

The CIO will not be isolated from the main currents of American thought and action; our program is neither narrow nor isolated. Our program—political, legislative, social, economic—is framed to advance not merely the interests of American labor but of all the people in our democracy.

We will fight down the line to defeat reactionaries and to elect alert, liberal-minded men and women to public office with a program that will benefit the national welfare.

There will be no CIO "purge list." Each of our local organizations will make known to the people of the community their attitudes and endorsements in the 1952 elections. Political action is community action, and our CIO Political Action Committee is a vehicle for improving conditions in every community of this country.

By JACK KROLL
Director, CIO-PAC

LABOR'S increasing political influence and power has produced a stepping up of the tempo of reactionary attacks upon the CIO Political Action Committee.

These attacks are part of the pattern of "gutter politics" which has unfortunately been introduced into the American political scene.

This pattern has for its objective the obscuring of the real economic and social issues which confront the American people. It proposes to substitute for genuine democratic discussion of the nation's problems, appeals to racial prejudice, groundless fears and suspicions of the nation's highest officials, and personal slander on a scale seldom before seen in American history.

We are unafraid of the attacks by Sen. Robert A. Taft and his cohorts and the minions of Joseph Stalin; and we solemnly pledge that they will both fail equally in their evil attempts to destroy the free American labor movement.

The CIO-PAC believes that the unprincipled attacks upon it can only be met by a firm, continual restatement of the principles of CIO and by constant demonstrations of our interest in candidates and programs, regardless of party affiliation, that will advance the public welfare.

Next year's elections will be a time of trial for democracy all over the world. Victory for reaction will bring joy to the Kremlin and gloom to the hearts of men everywhere who fight for freedom.

Reaffirmation of America's determination to achieve social justice at home and to continue to lend her great strength to those striving for social justice abroad will, on the other hand, bring rejoicing to the down-trodden and misery to Moscow.

In this great democratic battle the CIO-PAC will continue to present the facts without favoritism to party or candidate. It will continue to bring without partisanship to our members the issues of importance and, in the free American tradition, it will seek to advance the cause of liberalism and progressive idealism which have so well served our country.

We will mobilize our forces even more effectively. We will labor unceasingly in every ward and precinct of the land. We will make clear to every citizen the unshaken determination of our organization to protect and improve the great democratic principles which have brought our country to its present heights, and which promise still greater glories for its citizens.

They Don't 'Stand Up To Be Counted'

ALTHOUGH the 82nd Congress took more time to do its work in the first session than almost any Congress in recent years, the honest practice of voting "On the Record" was not one of its strong points.

Despite its lean record of accomplishments, Congress during 1951 had fewer roll call votes than in prior years. There were only 202 in the Senate and 109 in the House during the first session.

These contrast with totals of 227 and 229 in the Senate, and 121 and 154 in the House, in 1949 and 1950, respectively.

This reluctance to "stand up and be counted" is not surprising in a Congress that departed so far from observance of the popular will.

The "Horsemeat Congress" of 1951 won the name by which it will go down in history because of its excessive readiness to push aside the national interest at almost every urging by big business and other special interest lobbies.

It's much more convenient for the members of this kind of Congress, when election year rolls around, not to have their votes down in black and white in the Congressional Record, where they can't be changed or covered up.

Nevertheless, the Dixiegop coalition that controlled the Congress which wrote "cost-plus" inflation into the law and straddled poor and middle income families with an unfair "rich man's" tax law was forced to go on record often enough so that a fairly clear appraisal of how each member stood in regard to the general welfare can readily be made.

One such appraisal is the CIO Voting Record published in this issue. It pinpoints how each member of the Senate and House stood on 10 legislative proposals which serve as "keys" to his general position during the first session.

The CIO Voting Record is not a "blacklist," on the one hand, nor a series of endoresments for re-election on the other. It tells only part of the story.

But it is an accurate representation of how each Congressman went on record concerning the issues involved.

The key issues were carefully selected by The CIO News, the CIO Legislative Dept. and the CIO Political Action Committee in the belief that these record votes most fairly tested each member's fundamental concern for the nation's general welfare.

Such other factors as how each Congressman or Senator acted behind the scenes and in carrying out committee and other duties are important considerations not touched upon here.

The old trick of being frequently "right" on the comparatively few issues on which record votes are cast and at the same time actually being close to 100% wrong on most of the crucial issues was certainly practiced in the last session by at least as high a percentage of Congressmen as in the past.

Unlike the AFL and some other labor groups, the CIO will not issue a "blacklist" of members of of Congress whose actions are directed against organized labor and the American people. Endorsements in the Congressional elections in 1952, as in the past, will be made by CIO Councils and Political Action Committees in each State and Congressional District.

The CIO Voting Record will help members of the CIO throughout the nation to understand better how their Congressmen stood on a number of important key issues. Hence, it undoubtedly will be a factor in making their decisions.

But it is only one factor. Perhaps even more important will be the actions which each of the 96 Senators and 435 Representatives take during the coming second session on the mass of important unfinished business Congress left behind when it adjourned last October.

Never-Never Land—

'East Of The Sun, West Of The Moon' With NAM!

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE NATIONAL Association of Manufacturers held its annual excursion to Never-Never Land Dec. 5-7.

They located it, some 3000 of them, in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York, where the NAM had its 56th Congress of American Industry.

It was a world as airy as the speeches they heard—or made—and which apparently had the curious dual purposes of building up their egos and tearing them down.

They were told, variously, that the world is ag'in 'em, and waiting for their leadership.

They were told they are being held to the grindstone by the "socialists" (the word was used rather blithely) who control the government, and that they are doing all right.

They were told their fellow-Americans have been poisoned against them by all sorts of uncouth persons, including labor leaders, and that the same Americans have nobody left to trust.

Some speakers talked very highly of private enterprise and its sturdiness; others left the impression it isn't worth fighting for.

It was slightly confusing.

NAM delegates were treated to a number of other paradoxes, too.

There was Sen. McCellan (D. Ark.), who delivered a ringing denunciation of "current scandals involving graft, corruption, job selling, influence peddling, and gross improprieties in government."

This is the same Sen. McCellan whose wife got a fur coat at wholesale through former Asst. Atty. Gen. Lamar Caudle, according to testimony before the House Ways and Means subcommittee investigating graft. Caudle, in charge of the Dept. of Justice's Tax Div., was fired by President Truman.

Lady With A Strong Voice

Dr. Ruth Alexander, a lady economist with a strong voice, went a lot further than male speakers at the NAM Congress in tearing to pieces what was variously referred to as the "welfare" state and "socialism."

"The tragedy of it all," she said after several thousand resounding words of denunication, "is that when asked 'What part of the American Welfare State would you abolish?'—'What functions of government would you restore to their rightful owners,' few people, and fewer politicians, have the courage to answer, 'ALL.' Yet there can be no compromise. Compromise is the road to Chaos."

There was Dean Clarence E. Manion, of Notre Dame Univ. College of Law. He delivered an equally ringing denunciation of "unlimited and concentrated governmental power" — socialism, although he didn't use the word.

This is the same Dean Manion who last month participated in a forum on "Christian Principles in Civic Life" in Chicago. As he left the platform—according to Work, the paper of the Chicago Catholic Labor Alliance—he agreed with a woman who asked him "were all the others on the speakers' platform with you socialists?"

THE OTHER "SOCIALISTS" were Archbishop Robert E. Lucey, San Antonio, Tex.; Prof. Jerome Kerwin, Univ. of Chicago; Exec. Sec. Martin Work of the National Council of Catholic Men, and Mrs. Lois Higgins, director of the former Crime Prevention Bureau and a former instructor at Loyola Univ.

The distaff side got some of it, too, from the NAM. At a session especially for wives of members, Ginger Rogers, a movie actress, told them with a straight face that more and more women must go into business if our economy is to be kept strong and unbeatable. The manpower barrel, she solemnly avowed, "has been scraped clean and still industrial output lags behind."

What she forgot to mention, or perhaps overlooked, is that employment has been slowing down steadily and that hundreds of thousands of men and women trained and experienced in industry—a large number of them right in New York—are out of work and can't find jobs of any kind.

The NAM program each day included a general session in the morning, with speeches; a luncheon, with speeches, and three panel sessions, each with speeches, in the afternoon.

With so many millions of words poured out, some were bound to make sense. As, for instance, Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle, who started out his address thus:

KNOWING well the public position of the National Association of Manufacturers on the subject of price controls generally and specifically on the program as it is being administered, I should have been reluctant to accept the invitation to address this gathering.

"I must say frankly and at once that I do not agree with the position of the National Association of Manufacturers. I am not convinced that spokesmen for the NAM speak for the majority of American businessmen.

"I believe the majority of American businessmen—having gone through the period from Korea to February of 1951 — know that unrestrained operation of supply and demand in these abnormal times would endanger our free enterprise system to its very foundations."

DiSalle claimed that because of price boosts since war began in Korea, "there are few so irresponsible as to say that no controls are needed." He conceded there could be honest disagreement as to the kind of controls, but made no further concession.

At a panel on labor-management relations, W. G. Caples, president of the Inland Steel Container Co., Chicago, warned that collective bargaining is here to stay. The groans were rather poorly restrained.

Caples made some observations of interest to union members. In discussing the goals of labor, he said that in the plant "there is a desire to get as high a wage as possible." In our kind of economy, he hastened to explain, "it would seem odd if any of us did not attempt to do the same things."

Pronunciation

NAM's new president is William J. Grede (pronounced "Grady," not "Greedy"). He is president of Grede Foundries, Inc., Milwaukee, Wis., and a former NAM director and regional vice president.

"I suppose," he went on, "that if we accept that the real cause of high prices or inflation is the increase of the money supply of the nation due to the policy of deficit spending and deficit financing of the federal government, this desire of the unions for economic gain and whatever reaction management may have to it will not have any great effect on the economy.

"The basic economic forces are stronger than what labor or management will do."

AT THE same session, Dr. Leo Wolman, professor of economics at Columbia Univ. and a director of the National Bureau of Economic Research, Inc., called for an end to wage controls.

"Abolish the whole business!" he said. "There's no point to it—wages will go up anyhow. Let 'em go up without all this fiction. These formulas come and go."

The only indication that any of the participants regarded wages and working conditions of their employes as a factor in selling either industry generally or a particular industry to the public came from James Gerity, Jr., president of the Gerity-Michigan Corp., Adrian, Mich.

"You've got to keep your eggs fresh," he observed.

'Boss Gotta Listen When The Union Talks'—That's What Bosses Did!

NAM MEMBERS who crowded the room for the Congress of Industry's panel session on in-plant employe communications hunched forward on their folding chairs as a deep-voiced hillbilly singer spoke—from a record-player—to the strumming of a guitar.

"If you wait for the boss to raise your pay
"We're all gonna wait 'till Judgment Day . . . "

There was a little laughter, rather weak.

"Boss won't listen when one guy talks,
"Gotta listen when the union talks . . . "

More laughter. Some talking, too, with a trace of envy in the voices. The record concluded:

"Take it easy—but take it!"

"That's a CIO record," said the speaker, Daniel Rochford, director of manager-employe communications for the non-union Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey.

"Can we do as well in OUR communications?"

It wasn't a CIO record, although plenty of CIO unions have used it in organizing campaigns and at meetings. It was "Talking Union," from the labor record album of the same name—now virtually unobtainable—and the singer was Earl Robinson. The reaction was about the same as Rochford's—

"Why can't WE do that well?"

Good employe communications, Rochford said, not only will take care of good labor relations "but will lead to handsome monetary returns."

He indicated that the things employes want to know, but often haven't the nerve to ask about, are sometimes puzzling to a management perfectly willing to tell them.

"If people feel you're on the level," he added, "they don't want so much information. If they don't feel you're on the level, no amount of information will do any good."

ROCHMAN slapped at William H. Ruffin, retiring NAM president, and also president and treasurer of the Erwin Mills, Inc., Durham, N. C.

The Erwin Mills was one of those struck last spring in the southern walkout of the CIO Textile Workers for higher wages. Rochford said he asked a plant official if they had an employe newspaper and was answered in the affirmative. But nothing was printed in it, Rochford said he was told, about management's side of the dispute that lead to the strike.

"If they had done that," he declared, "the strike might well have been avoided."

John J. Evans, Jr., general personnel manager of the Armstrong Cork Co., Lancaster, Pa., another speaker, complained that management has been "a public whipping boy on a national basis for the last 20 years," and that many people 40 years old or younger have rarely heard a kind word about it.

THIS MEANS, he indicated, that management faces one of its biggest jobs in building up employe relations.

"If you talk to people at arm's length—as strangers—they will react as strangers," he said. "Respect, confidence and a sympathetic understanding must be gained. It won't happen as a result of wishful thinking."

To show how badly management can fall down on the job, he cited the case of Joseph Zipotas, who was given a service pin after working 25 years for the same company. The company, Evans said, called him in to find out what he thought about it. (Evans explained the name is fictitious, but the facts are true.)

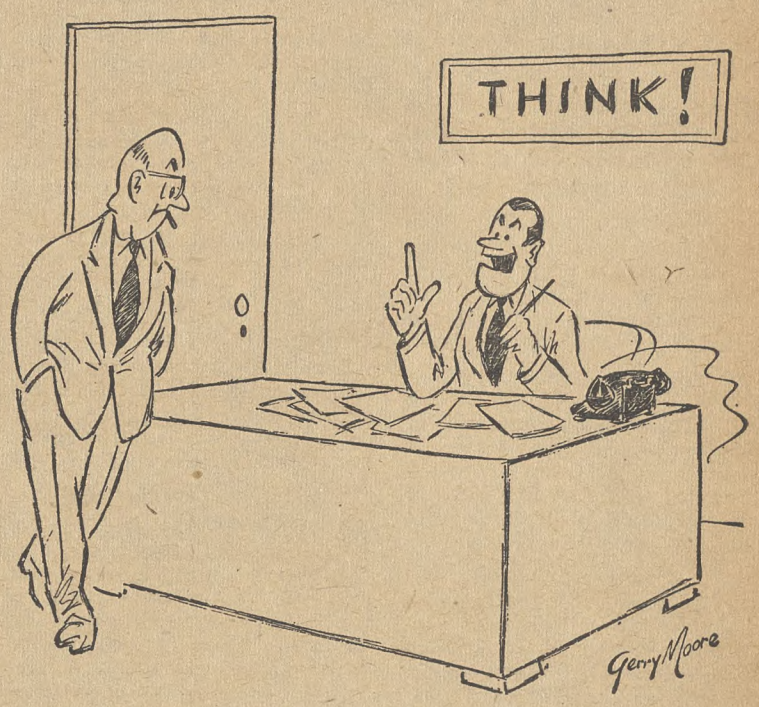
"This," he said, "is what Joseph Zipotas DOES NOT know:

"The year his company was founded; the number of plants in the company; more than two of the company's products, which exceed 200; the name of the president (he has been president three years); the location of his company's headquarters; the source of a single raw material; either the operation which preceded his own or which followed it (except in very general terms); what free enterprise is. (He did not even recognize the phrase.)

"But this is what Joseph Zipotas DOES know: The name of his union and the number of his local; names of two columnists on his union paper; names of three out of five of his union officers; four direct benefits which the union has secured for him (actually the union had secured only two of them); a reasonably acceptable definition of collective bargaining. (His definition: 'It's what the union uses to get things for the working man.')"

The CIO Rubber Workers represent most Armstrong Cork employes.

Evans said employers should tell their employes everything they want to know except certain details which may help a competitor or be harmful in a competitor's possession.



"Just had a tremendous idea, boss . . . But I forgot it!"

Ohio CIO Vows Stronger PAC Campaign In '52

By ED LASHMAN

IN AN ATMOSPHERE of thoughtful self-evaluation, delegates to the 13th convention of the Ohio CIO Council rededicated themselves to increased participation in the work of their union so that the militant spirit of CIO in Ohio will make 1952 a triumphant year for liberal and progressive forces.

Political action came in for a lion's share of attention as three CIO international union officers urged greater participation by union members in the affairs of their nation. The speakers were Walter P. Reuther, CIO Auto Workers president, Joseph A. Beirne, CIO Communications Workers president, and David J. McDonald, CIO Steelworkers secretary-treasurer.

The convention was held in Cleveland Dec. 6-9.

The call to increased political action came with the expose by the Ohio CIO-PAC of the "Ohio Plan" which big business is inaugurating in the state.

I. W. Abel, Canton district director for the Steelworkers, called the plan a "$15 million slush fund created for a brazen and deliberate attempt to buy the presidential election."

CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood was honored at the convention banquet by the presentation of a scroll in testimonial to his 50 years in the labor movement.

"I didn't used to care beans about price controls. but it's certainly being brought home to me now!"

Jack Kroll, Ohio CIO president, pledged devoted effort on the part of every CIO member in the State "so that next year when Allan Haywood comes to our convention, we can tell him we've got a 100% union state."

Almost the first action of the convention was a call upon Gov. Frank J. Lausche to direct the current special session of the Legislature to consider increased benefits for permanently injured victims of industrial accidents.

The challenge came because of the fact that many permanently disabled workers currently receive no more than $8 or $10 a week. The Governor, who had asked for such a measure, vetoed a bill increasing the weekly payments to $25 in the past legislative session. The nearly 1000 convention delegates called upon management representatives, who had joined with labor in supporting the vetoed bill, to urge Lausche to include the matter in the session.

The mood of the convention was set when Kroll, in his keynote speech, reviewed the work of the past year and warned that even greater efforts will be needed in the legislative, political and economic fields in 1952.

"Today, in a period when prices outrace wages by wide margins," Kroll said, "there are 20 million families the heads of which do not have the protection of union organization. It is up to us in the Ohio Council to do everything we can to assist the international unions in our State to organize the unorganized."

He called upon the people of Ohio to "produce the kinds of ideas which will make the free world strong" in addition to producing "the weapons to make the free world strong."

CALLING the "steady upward spiral of prices" the most pressing domestic problem, he urged political action to replace "those members of the infamous Dixiecrat-Republican coalition in Congress responsible for the kind of controls law we now have" by senators and congressmen "devoted to the welfare of the people."

He warned that 1952 will be a bitter year when "we're going to see the most desperate effort ever made by as bloodthirsty a gang of political cut-throats as ever tried to buy an election."

"The real issue," Kroll said, "is progress against reaction, special interests against the public interest, the welfare of all against special privileges for the few."

Reuther warned industry that it might as well resign itself to the guaranteed annual wage demand currently under discussion in the steel negotiations.

"AS LONG as the workers of America pay for unemployment," Reuther said, "you're going to continue to have unemployment in this country.

"But once you make the employer pay for unemployment through a guaranteed annual wage, then unemployment will disappear because industry will find the means of rejiggering its production schedule so as to provide work for employes instead of paying them for idle time."

Beirne told the convention that wage stabilization is a "hollow mockery when prices continue to rise unabated." Emphasizing the CIO call for "equality of sacrifice," he said that workers could not and would not bear the full brunt of inflationary pressures and that strong, workable price controls are a minimum demand from them as a condition for wage stabilization.

Beirne is a member of the Wage Stabilization Board.

McDonald called on the delegates to find "the new techniques and the new ideas which characterized CIO's founding days" so that 1952 can "be a year of rededication and a year of new strides of progress for working men and women the world over."

The convention passed resolutions for guidance and action in the coming year on such diverse subjects as foreign policy, the guaranteed annual wage, the Ohio State Univ. gag rule, political action, public assistance, State election laws, unemployment compensation and civilian defense.

It closed with a blistering resolution denouncing big business for its refusal to agree to realistic workmen's compensation benefits.

"The entire benefit structure is totally inadequate and has not kept pace with either wages or the cost of living." the resolution said.

Reciting the horrible toll of suffering and death in Ohio, which showed nearly 300,000 industrial accident claims filed in 1950—a year in which 1123 workers were killed and 2564 lost arms, legs, hands or fingers—the resolution served a sharp warning upon management.

IN EFFECT delegates said, there will be no agreement on workmen's compensation legislation if management maintains its present attitude. Instead, the delegates voted unanimously, the CIO in Ohio will take the fight directly to the Legislature and to the people by petition if necessary.

If those means prove unsatisfactory, the delegates warned, "we will utilize every means at our command, including collective bargaining," to achieve this goal.

By acclamation, Kroll was re-elected to his 12th term as president. Exec. Sec. Jacob Clayman was re-elected to his fourth term.

Jersey CIO To Drive For Million More Voters

AN INTENSIFIED political action program was laid out for the coming year by the 600 delegates attending the 13th annual New Jersey CIO Convention at Asbury Park.

Council Pres. Carl Holderman spearheaded the action by urging adoption of a PAC program for 1952 which includes raising of funds, registration of voters and endorsement of liberal candidates.

"Despite our past registration drives." he declared, "there are still more than one million New Jersey men and women over 21 years of age who are not registered to vote. Recent checks of our membership indicate that fully 40% are still unregistered.

"During the coming year, we hope both major political parties will join with us in a giant nonpartisan, year-round registration drive to insure that every eligible citizen is an eligible voter."

Holderman also backed a move to set up a permanent state investigating committee which will probe charges against state CIO officials accused of activities of a questionable nature.

Such action, he said, "will be serving notice on both the public and our membership that within the CIO we shall take every step necessary to protect our good name and insure that the CIO is not used by any individual or group for private exploitation, political gain, or other corrupt purposes."

He said the CIO has taken on "some very powerful foes," is proud of the enemies it has made, has been the victim of "the vilest smear tactics," and expects more in the future.

He listed among the foes of the CIO the New Jersey Manufacturers Association, the State Chamber of Commerce, the Public Service Corp. of New Jersey, the forces of Frank Hague, former state Democratic political boss, "reactionary caucus rule Senators" and "influence-peddling county prosecutors."

Deputy Atty. Gen. Nelson Stamler praised the CIO for its cooperation given him in running down phases of organized gambling and racketeering in the state as affecting labor.

HE WARNED that in placing a "simple little two dollar bet," the average working man was supporting a "vicious system" in which the money eventually winds up in the hands of such professional racketeers and strike breakers as Anthony Anastasia to finance scabbing activities against CIO members.

Roy Reuther, PAC director of the CIO Auto Workers, warned the delegates that anti-labor employers have shifted the battle against unions from the collective bargaining table to the ballot box and called for increased PAC activity to combat the move.

Delegates reelected Holderman by a roll call vote of 1140½ to 112½ for Richard P. Ryan of the Auto Workers. Victor D. Leonardis of the Electrical Workers was named secretary-treasurer and Charles Serrano of the Textile Workers, vice president.

Jenner Amendment—

'Spotlight Of Misery' On Welfare Recipients Hit By CIO Outlook

THE JENNER rider to the new tax law—which opens welfare rolls to the publicity. "spotlight of misery"—is "a moral defeat for America."

That's what CIO's Economic Outlook says in its current issue.

The Outlook is published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

The Jenner Amendment, sponsored by the Indiana Republican Senator after a welfare deadlock in the Hoosier Legislature, is part of a developing national campaign to cripple welfare programs for the aged, disabled and children.

But poverty, the CIO Outlook says, "cannot be shamed out of existence."

One effect of the Jenner Amendment, and related campaigns in state legislatures, is to avoid corrective action on the nation's present "inadequate" social insurance program.

Another consequence, the Outlook says, is to put "a cruel and unjustifiable stigma" on recipients of public welfare. These include 2.7 million abed, more than 2.1 million dependent children and adults who live with them, about 100,000 blind, and more than 110,000 permanently and totally disabled. Together they make up more than 90% of public assistance rolls.

"Only those with a dulled sense of decency and justice would put the spotlight on misery in this manner," the Outlook says. It declares that the answer to the problem of keeping the unworthy off relief rolls "lies in wise administration of welfare services by an adequate staff of competent and trained persons who are concerned about human welfare and who understand the circumstances under which help is needed."

The Outlook cites Federal Reserve Board and U. S. Dept. of Labor studies showing that more than half of America's families received less income during 1950 than the amount necessary to maintain an "adequate, but modest" standard of living, with no provision for savings.

"Ten years of war and postwar high employment have shielded the social insurance system from an extreme test," the Outlook declares. "But the fact that 5½ million people are still on relief rolls 16 years after the (Federal Social Security) Act became law, while millions more live in circumstances far below minimum standards of health and decency, reflects the inadequacy of the social insurance program of the United States."

THE STUDY says that while 3.25 million persons over 65 are drawing benefits under the federal old-age and survivors' insurance program, payments are so low that about 350,000 insurance beneficiaries are also on the relief. Average monthly payments are now $43 for an aged individual and $67 for both a man and his wife.

The Outlook charges that "friends of reaction" are using the national defense emergency as an excuse to undermine the social security system of the United States, and adds:

"Their attacks must not only be repulsed; the movement to extend family security must gain momentum. Its success is vital to the defense of America."

U.S. Checks On Hiring

NOW THE FEDERAL government is going to take a close look at its own record as an employer, to check any discriminatory hiring practices.

The Civil Service Commission's fair employment board has ordered every federal agency to report on what it is doing to give Negroes and workers from other minority groups an even break on job hirings and promotions.

Each agency must report on "affirmative steps" taken to prevent discrimination.

The Civil Service Commission's action follows President Truman's recent establishment of a Committee on Government Contract Compliance which is supposed to perk up enforcement of non-discrimination clauses in government contracts.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CIO in a representation election ousted the Communist-led Distributive, Processing and Office Workers of America as bargaining agency at the Consolidated Cigar Corp. in Lancaster, Pa.

CIO Field Rep. Ben Stahl in a report shows that CIO won this election by a substantial majority. The vote was as follows: Eligible 476, CIO 237, DPO 186, no union 12, challenged 1, void 2. The CIO is continuing its fight to oust all communist influences from our Labor Movement and establish free, democratic trade unionism. Congratulations to CIO Reps. Ben Stahl, Victor Ulivitch and Mary Montanaro for their part in bringing about this splendid victory. I want to also sincerely thank the workers themselves upon whom rested the verdict that favored the CIO.

The United Railroad Workers are continuing in their victory march with another win. This time it was a representation election victory over the AFL among the workers on the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad. The count was as follows: Eligible 1382, URRWA-CIO 783, AFL 451, void 17, not voting 131. Rep. Stanley Petrosky and the officers of the URRWA did a splendid job in getting this victory.

THE WRITER this past week attended CIO State Conventions in Cleveland, O., Chicago, Ill., and Boston, Mass. Brothers Jack Kroll and Jacob Clayman in Ohio, Joe Germano and Maurice McElligott in Illinois and Bill Belanger and Sal Camelio in Massachusetts have done an outstanding job in bringing about a continued growth of our movement.

These conventions were each larger than they had been in past years and demonstrated a unity of effort. I dealt in the high cost of living, the excess profits of big business and the need for equality of sacrifice by business as well as labor to help in the defense of our country.

DIR. JOHN RIFFE of the CIO Organizing Committee reports that some 17 elections were won in the South, covering 1402 eligible employes. The election covered the following international unions: Transport Service, Woodworkers, Textile Workers, Packinghouse, Steel and Retail & Wholesale. These elections were as follows:

Santa Oak Flooring Co., Atlanta, Ga., IWA 153, no union 11; Hillsboro Cotton Mill, Hillsboro, Tex., TWUA 121, no union 73; Itasca Cotton Mfg. Co., Itasca, Tex., TWUA 151, no union 83; Mexia Cotton Mills, Mexia, Tex., TWUA 203, no union 21.

Wilson & Co., Inc., Memphis, Tenn., consent agreement UPWA; Oil Well Supply Co., Garland, Tex., USA 34, no union 4; Margolin Brothers, Memphis, Tenn., IWA 32, no union 9; Armour Packing Co., Greenville, S. C., UPWA 9, no union 4; Robertson Chemical Corp., Wilmington, N. C., eligible 19; UTSE 19.

Bellhaven Lumber Industries, Bellhaven, N.C. IWA 48, no union 20; Ramsey Lumber Co., Suffolk, Va., IWA 19, no union 7; Miller Brothers Co., Johnson City, Tenn., IWA 175, no union 80; Enterprise Lumber Co., Columbia, N. C., IWA 31, no union 12; Gadsden Motor Co., Gadsden, Ala., eligible 9, RWDSU 9; Cargo Nash Motor Co., Gadsden, Ala., RWDSU 8, no union 1; Service Cab Co., Gadsden, Ala., eligible 7, RWDSU 7.

PRES. MORRIS PIZER, CIO Furniture Workers, reports that the UFWA-CIO is rolling on with more and more organization. The following are recent representation elections won by UFWA:

Gardner-Bassinet, Gardner, Mass., UFWA 13, no union 3; International Furniture Co., Dyersburg, Tenn., UFWA 46, no union 4; Association Shops (8 shops), Los Angeles, Calif., UFWA 305, Independent 113; Coleman Furniture Co., Pulaski, Va., UFWA 169, no union 145.

Southwoods, Ft. Worth, Tex., UFWA 5, no union 2; Branco, Ft. Worth, Tex., UFWA 10, no union 2; Hampshire Sales, Burlington, Vt., UFWA 26, no union 5; Rodgers-Wade, Paris, Tex., UFWA 78, no union 9; Northern Chair, Leominster, Mass., UFWA 18, no union 4.

In a representation election conducted by the Michigan State Labor Mediation Board at Oglesby Mfg. Co., Petoskey, Mich., the vote was: UFWA 11, UIU-AFL 7.

CIO REG. DIR. George Craig reports that the H. B. Robinson Motors, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa., signed a stipulation recognizing the CIO Auto Workers, Local 585, as the collective bargaining agency for all garage and maintenance employes.

CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson reports that in a representation election at the Dusing and Hunt Co., Buffalo, N. Y., the UFWA won by a vote of 48 to 10 against. Field Rep. Samuel Olfano handled the organizing.

CIO Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that the Memphis Sales Co., made a vicious but fruitless attempt to eliminate the UFWA from its plant in Memphis, Tenn. In a decertification election after the management pulled every trick in the book to get the workers to vote for no union, UFWA won 35 to 14. UFWA Reps. Doyle Dorsey and Walter Carson handled this situation.

Funds Sought For Textile Workers

Charging the Beemis Bag Co. with trying "to squeeze the life out of labor and labor unions," the Indiana CIO Council has asked affiliated locals to contribute strike relief funds for two CIO Textile Workers locals.

TWUA Local 116 and 790 have been on strike at Indianapolis and Cannelton, Ind., since mid-November.

The Council charged Beemis Bag, aided by the National Cotton Association, is seeking to destroy TWUA organization in the two plants.

UAW Clamps Down On Grievance Action In Racketeering Cases

THE CIO AUTO Workers have clamped down on use of grievance machinery to protect members disciplined for organized racketeering or gambling where their guilt has been clearly established.

Notification went out to the locals after a special meeting of the international executive board at which the following policy statement was adopted:

"It is the policy of the international union not to process grievances for members of our union who have been disciplined or discharged by their employers for engaging in organized rackets and organized gambling, where guilt has been clearly established.

"In cases where guilt is not firmly established, the grievance procedure shall be used to determine the guilt or innocence of the worker disciplined by the employer for alleged participation in organized rackets or gambling. If during the processing of the grievance the guilt of the workers is clearly established, the grievance is to be closed. If guilt is not established, the grievance is to be processed to completion under the provisions of contract grievance procedure."

IN AN ACCOMPANYING letter, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey told the union the policy statement follows the "intent and spirit" of a resolution adopted at the last UAW convention. This resolution barred from union office members "engaged in the promotion, implementation, furtherance or support of organized in-plant rackets, such as numbers, bookmaking, etc."

It also is in keeping with the intent and spirit of the statement on ethical practices adopted at the National CIO Convention in New York last month.

"There is no place in the CIO for racketeers, for agents of racketerring interests, or for any criminal elements," said that resolution.

"It is the policy of the CIO that every affiliate act with dispatch to stamp out any infiltration whatsoever that may develop from criminal or racketeering elements anxious to prey upon our members."

The UAW statement is binding on both locals and the international. In his letter Mazey said that the grievance machinery was established to protect members in relation to their wages, hours, working conditions and other conditions of employment.

"OUR UNION was not organized and our grievance procedure was not established," he wrote, "to protect individuals who use their employment inside our plants for the purpose of pursuing, affirmatively engaging in and promoting organized in-plant rackets.

"It should be remembered that such individuals, sponsored and paid by their racketeering bosses, tried their best to wreck our efforts to organize at a time when we were engaged in our struggle for existence."

Mazey made it clear that the policy statement does not apply to benefit raffles or games,

Furniture Profits Up, Wages Down

THE FURNITURE industry has never been better upholstered in profits than it is at the present time but the wages of furniture workers "have remained at the lowest level of the wage structure in the country."

In a report to the general executive board of the CIO Furniture Workers, Pres. Morris Pizer declared the furniture and bedding industry has come through the recent slump with a higher profit level in 1951 than at any other time in history.

Backing up the report with statistics, Pizer pointed out that profits before taxes this year will total around $201 million, compared with $187 million last year. The total increase in profits over 1949 was 230% he said.

BASED on a recent study by the UFWA Research Dept., the report emphasizes that while output per manhour and profits have continously increased, wages have remained at the lowest level.

Results of the study show that 70 workers in furniture and bedding today turn out as much production as 100 workers did back in 1939.

"But workers in the two industries have not benefited from the continuous increase in their productivity . . . the steady rise in output per manhour has been converted almost entirely into increased profits," Pizer said.

Not only have workers not fared as well as the employers, but some 45,000 production employes were laid off as the result of the slump last summer. The total employment level is 14% below the 1950 level.

Pizer said that with the prospects for the industry being so favorable, UFWA can be expected to press for increased wages in 1952 to eliminate the inequality that now exists between wages paid in furniture and bedding and those in other major durable goods industries.

Hungarian Reds Turn Screws On Workers For 'Peace Loan'

THE COMMUNIST bosses of Hungary, no doubt prodded by their Soviet masters, are trying to float a "Peace Loan."

So unsuccessful has it been that their efforts are now approaching the stage of desperation, according to Spotlight, a digest of uncensored news from dictatorship countries compiled by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Everybody, it seems, is supposed to kick in with a month's salary or wages. Coercion has been widely used, says Spotlight. This includes threats of discharge, which under the Communist system means a long time before the victim gets another job.

Spotlight cites a report as to what went on when the loan was broached at a factory in Pest:

"The workers were called together for a snap meeting at 7:30 a.m., and were harangued for some 10 minutes by the party secretary. The gist of his speech was that each worker was expected to contribute, with a song in his heart, one full month's salary.

"A deathly silence fell. After an uncomfortable pause, comments were asked for. The silence became, if anything, more intense.

"After a short time the men were dismissed to their jobs and filed out without a word.

"The 'brigades' of men were then called in one by one to the party secretary's office, where the lists awaited them. As our correspondent's group was called his foreman, who is a decent fellow, whispered 'Sign for 500 forints—I'll see that it gets made up somehow.' (A forint is worth about 8c.)

"AS HE entered the room, another foreman clapped him on the shoulder, announced loudly that Comrade X was contributing 500, and he set pen to paper.

"After all, if one is a known 'reactionary' and burdened with a family, discretion is the better part of valor.

"Not so with one of the other brigades. Four tough fellows asserted loudly that not a 'filler' over 100 a head would they sign. 'Not enough,' said the party boys, 'think it over.' 'Two hundred or nothing,' said these stout citizens, and nothing it turned out to be.

"Their fate is awaited with interest."

Anaconda Copper Gets O.K. For Another Monopoly Deal

DESPITE STRONG objections by Sec. of Interior Oscar Chapman and the Justice Dept., Anaconda Copper Co. has won all necessary government approval for its plan to become part of the aluminum monopoly.

This expansion—to be financed largely by American taxpayers—will make Anaconda an even bigger monopoly firm.

Acting only a week after the Anti-Trust Division had informed him that Anaconda is "not a proper company" to participate in the government's aluminum expansion program, Defense Production Administrator Manly Fleischmann on Dec. 13 approved the firm's plans to build a big new aluminum plant in Montana.

Fleischmann, who has the authority under the Defense Production Act, ordered Chapman "promptly to enter" into negotiations to supply Anaconda and the Harvey Machine Co.—a junior partner in the deal—with a long-term contract for cheap public power. This will come from the Hungry Horse Dam, which was built by the government at the taxpayers' expense.

Labor's Own 'Point Four'—

$100,000 Given By CIO To Help Build Unions Overseas

AMERICAN LABOR'S long and growing tradition of friendly bonds with working people around the world was given new—and concrete—meaning by CIO last week.

Announced by Pres. Philip Murray was a CIO contribution of $100,000 to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. It will be CIO's own "Point Four" program. And it will go to help the ICFTU's long-term program of building strong, democratic trade unions in the so-called under-developed areas of the world—particularly in Asia and Africa.

By assisting workers of those nations in union organization, Murray said, the CIO hopes to help "to achieve a permanent rise in living standards in these areas."

CIO's contribution of $100,000 has been presented by Victor Reuther, CIO European representative, to ICFTU Pres. Vincent Tewson and General Sec. H. H. Oldenbroek in Brussels. The funds will be used for organization, bargaining and education.

The contribution was made on the recommendation of the CIO International Committee headed by Jacob S. Potofsky.

ICFTU, with which both CIO and AFL are affiliated, has proposed a three-year program of union-building activities in the under-developed areas. The program will be financed by $700,000 in special contributions from the national labor federations affiliated with the world body.

In announcing CIO's initial contribution, Murray said grants for subsequent years will be decided later.

THE IMPORTANCE to American labor of strengthening free unions overseas was emphasized by Murray in announcing the donation. He said:

"Free institutions and free governments are being challenged in many areas of the world. As Americans and as trade unionists, we in the CIO are dedicated to the strengthening of democratic institutions and improvement in the lives of working people and farmers not only in America but throughout the rest of the world.

"The reports brought back to the CIO by our own representatives who have visited the underdeveloped areas of Asia, Africa and the Middle East, coincide completely with the views of other experts outside the labor movement: the situation is critical and in urgent need of improvement.

"It is clear that trade unionism is weak in many of these areas. It is equally true that without free and democratic trade unions responsible to the needs of working people, it will be extremely difficult to achieve a permanent rise in living standards in these areas.

"TO MEET this obvious need, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has wisely set up a special program of regional activities in under-developed areas, and the CIO International Committee, after closely studying the proposal, has warmly endorsed the program. We in the CIO are glad to be able to help."

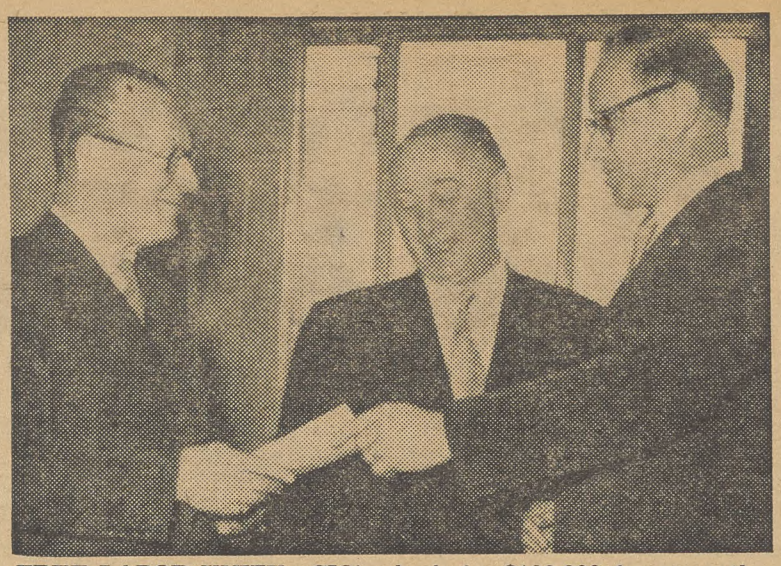
Potofsky commented, in part:

"'Organizing the unorganized' has always been a basic part of CIO's philosophy. Trade union organization has improved the lives of workers in America, and it has a great potentiality for improving the lives of hundreds of millions of working people in other lands.

"In addition, the CIO recognizes that our own welfare in this country is related, over the long run, to improvement of the living standards of peoples in other free nations.

"The special fund of $700,000 for labor's 'own Point Four' proposed by the ICFTU to finance these necessary trade union organization and education functions, is, of course, very small compared to the size of the problems that face us. Nevertheless, it represents a heartwarming and positive step toward recognition of the problem and action to meet it.

"We in the CIO consider this donation less as a gift than as an investment in democracy and a symbol of our faith in the future of free trade unionism, which should play a leading role in helping to provide constructive solutions to the problems of insecurity, hunger and distress which daily face hundreds of millions of people throughout the world."



FREE LABOR UNITY—CIO's check for $100,000 for strengthening of democratic trade unions is presented to officials of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions by Victor Reuther, CIO European representative. Receiving the contribution are Sir Vincent Tewson (left) and H. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU president and general secretary.

Some Bosses Using Workers' Tax Payments For 'Capital'

SOME business firms have found a source of ready capital to finance their operations—their employes' tax.

This situation came to light when the Bureau of Internal Revenue disclosed that the more than $363 million in delinquent taxes outstanding as of last Oct. 31 included $96 million in payroll taxes deducted from workers' paychecks by employers, but not turned over to the government.

This represents an increase of almost $37 million in payroll tax delinquencies over a year ago. A total of 197,000 firms behind in these payments.

The money involved is actually a part of each workers' pay that is to be held in escrow for him to apply to his income tax obligations to the government.

A bureau official said investigation has disclosed that an important reason for this delinquency is that employers were using money withheld from pay checks as part of their own business working capital.

Wage-earners involved are protected against loss, according to another BIR official, because they are given credit by the government for any money deducted.

However, by using this money as working capital, employers can escape high bank interest rates usually charged on short term loans made without security, provided they do not allow their delinquency to run too long.

It works this way:

EMPLOYERS are required by law to file returns and turn over pay roll withholding taxes every three months. Within this period, they can use any money withheld for their own use without paying any interest whatever.

However, if they are late in filing their returns and making payments, they are charged a 5% penalty for each month they are delinquent, but the total penalty does not exceed 25% in any instance.

Failure to turn over the money when due is a clear violation of the law. However, in most cases, the only action the BIR can take against such firms is to try to persuade them to pay up, plus a penalty. If persuasion fails, the

Garst Named To WSB Appeals Unit

Delmond Garst, CIO regional director in St. Louis, last week was appointed a member of the Wage Stabilization Board's Reviews and Appeals Committee in Washington.

He replaces John Brophy, former director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, who is an alternate WSB member.

Rent Boosters Still Having A Field Day

A "DEAD HEAT" has developed in the rent control situation. For almost every defense-crowded community in which ceilings have been reimposed or ordered into effect for the first time by the U. S. Office of Rent Stabilization there is another city or town in which full decontrol has been won by organized landlord lobbies.

This was revealed by a check of Office of Rent Stabilization announcements in the past fortnight.

In that period, rent controls were placed in effect in 18 communities, and wiped out in 17 others, including seven in the Chicago area.

Oak Ridge, Tenn., the atomic energy center where hundreds of CIO members live, was among the cities where controls were reimposed. Others included Joliet, Ill., Colorado Springs, Colo., and Marietta, Ga.

Decontrolled by action of city governing bodies (a loophole kept in the rent law by the present Congress) were El Cerrito, industrial city in the San Francisco Bay area, seven suburbs of Chicago, and two suburbs of Detroit.

IN CHICAGO, the CIO Council announced it is conducting a door-to-door survey in sample rent areas to uncover rent chislers.

Some 500 CIO members will take part in the survey, and give federal rent officials information on violations.

"Our investigators," said Michael Mann, CIO regional director, "will check into all kinds of violations, including illegal conversions, overceiling rents and service reductions. They'll also inspect firetraps and alley shacks for city building ordinance violations."

What the nation's present on-again, off-again rent control law is costing large numbers of American families is indicated by the runaway rent increases in Wichita, Kans.

Wichita decontrolled almost two years ago. Promptly rents jumped an average of $12 or 27% in a third of all rental housing units, according to Labor Press Associated. As in most cities, the greatest rent increases were in the lower-rental housing units.

Sugar Union Joins UPWA

THE BIGGEST union in Puerto Rico's No. One industry—the Federation of Sugar Workers—has added substantially to CIO strength on the island by voting to affiliate with the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

The sugar union has some 70,000 members.

Action to affiliate with the UPWA-CIO, which has widespread organization in the sugar industry in the continental United States, was taken at a recent convention of 500 delegates in Guyama, P. R.

Armando Sanchez was elected president of the sugar workers federation.

CIO and UPWA were represented at the convention by Ernst Schwarz, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Latin-American Affairs, while greetings were sent by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president; Ralph Helstein, UPWA president; and Jacob Potofsky, Latin-American Affairs Committee chairman.

Hillman Awards Presented To 4 Writers

SIDNEY HILLMAN Foundation awards for outstanding work in newspaper and magazine reporting during 1950 and the outstanding novel of the year were presented to four winners at a ceremony in New York on Dec. 15.

In the field of labor reporting, awards of $500 each went to A. H. Raskin, of the New York Times, and Murray Kempton, of the New York Post.

Similar awards were presented Dr. James H. Means, Massachusetts Institute of Technology staff physician, for magazine reporting, and to John Hersey for his novel, "The Wall."

Raskin was honored for several series of articles on the factors that make for industrial peace in the men's and women's clothing industries, unemployment and manpower problems, and industrial pensions. Kempton's winning columns were concerned with labor relations in the South, and particularly with the strike of the CIO Textile Workers against the American Enka Mills at Morristown, Tenn. Both men are members of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

DR. MEANS was professor of medicine at Harvard Medical School and head of the Dept. of Medicine at Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, when he wrote his winning article. He has since retired. The award was given him for a report on England's public medicine program and another on the American Medical Association lobby, both of which appeared in the Atlantic Monthly.

Hersey's novel deals with the uprisings in the Jewish ghettoes of Poland against the Nazis.

The Sidney Hillman Foundation was established in 1947 in honor of the founder and first president of the CIO Clothing Workers. Its purpose is to keep alive his ideals of enlightened labor-management relations, race relations, world peace and related interests. In 1951 it has made awards and grants totalling $90,000.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the foundation and Hillman's successor as head of the Clothing Workers, presented the awards at a luncheon.

Murray's Statement

The Steelworkers' Case For A Wage Increase

Here is the text of a statement issued by CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray issued after the USA Wage-Policy Committee authorized strike action in the basic steel industry and called a special union convention:

THE MEMBERS of the International Policy Committee of the United Steelworkers, CIO, have directed me to call a special international convention of the organization on January 3, 1952, because of the seriousness of the situation which confronts the union. The Policy Committee has also reiterated the fundamental position of the union against working in the absence of a contract.

Unfortunately, due to the industry's refusal to bargain with us in good faith, it now appears that a strike at midnight on December 31, 1951, will be unavoidable. We still hope and believe that such a strike can be averted if, even at this late date, the industry will get down to business and bargain out a reasonable settlement with us.

The prospect of a strike is unfortunate because the workers in the steel industry, proud of their tremendous production achievements, would prefer no interruption; and because a truly sincere effort by the executives of U. S. Steel and other major producers in the basic steel industry to conclude agreements with our Union, would result in uninterrupted production during this great national emergency.

But it takes two parties to make a bargain. The Steelworkers Union cannot sign a contract alone. The United Steelworkers of America has been trying to engage in collective bargaining with U. S. Steel Corporation and other companies since November 27.

During these past three weeks, the steel industry has made no constructive, realistic effort to talk with us concerning the very real economic problems of the seven hundred thousand members of our Union who are employed in that great industry.

There has been no honest bargaining by the companies. Rather, they have been engaged in our joint conferences in a callous filibuster and a stubborn refusal to engage in the give-and-take which would result in a solution of our common problems—a solution that would benefit the nation, the industry and the welfare of the members of this Union.

The time is overdue for more frank and honest discussion at the collective bargaining table and less circulation by the industry of preposterous rumors about our demands.

For example, an industry spokesman has maintained that it would take six months to negotiate merely the non-economic aspects of our expiring contracts. This statement is nonsensical. From our past experience the industry well knows that if its representatives were ready to reach agreement on the economic issues, we could wrap up our agreement on the other matters well before the expiration of our present contracts.

STEELWORKERS are very conscious of the importance of these negotiations. Steel is the basic product of our industrial economy and of the defense effort. The American public deserves, and should know at first hand, the demands we have raised and the reason we believe they are fully justified in this year of international crisis.

The steelworkers need a wage increase. We are asking for a reasonable increase. Like every other American, the steelworkers have been hard hit by the ravages of inflation. Like every other American, steelworkers hate inflation and want it controlled. Our demands for higher wages are designed to provide overdue protection against the effects of past inflation.

On the fight against inflation, the record of the steelworkers union is open and clear. Our position cannot honestly be misinterpreted. In 1950, the USA-CIO, together with almost every other union in this country, sought a strong, firm Defense Production Act that would hold prices down.

IN 1951, when the Defense Production Act came up for extension, the USA-CIO pleaded for a strengthening of our anti-inflation weapons, which had been clearly proven inadequate to meet the needs of our economy.

On both occasions, large segments of American industry—including the manufacturers of steel—argued and lobbied against firm price controls and effective anti-inflation legislation. In both 1950 and 1951, the industry was largely successful in preventing the writing of a law that would have prevented the steady rise in prices.

The buying power of the steelworkers' dollar has steadily decreased. In addition, his wages do not adequately reflect the great rise in the productivity and progress of the steel industry in which steel workers have played so primary a role.

The steel corporations with which we have been negotiating unsuccessfully during the past three weeks are affluent and prosperous corporations. Their profits are most substantial. Their plants are being expanded, in virtually every case through special tax advantages from the government and the taxpayers of the United States. Their production of steel products is at a record peak—above, in fact, the rated capacity of the industry.

The members of the Steelworkers Union are proud of that productive achievement, which has contributed so much to the strength of the world's democratic forces in the struggle against Communism and Soviet-inspired aggression.

We believe we are entitled on these merits to a square deal on wages from the companies. We ask for no more; we will take no less.

JUST AS the machinery and equipment of the steel industry must be, and constantly is being, modernized, so we are also asking that conditions under which our members work be likewise brought up to date. The industry is operating under 1947 working conditions; our present contracts have not been re-negotiated with respect to non-wage matters for nearly five years.

Many of these working practices are obsolete and their modernization is necessary if the workers and the industry are to continue to keep setting production records. We refer, in this connection, to such matters as safety conditions; protection for the older and more experienced workers; safeguards against discrimination; improved fringe benefits; appropriate overtime compensation; and proper planning for the most efficient scheduling of work to alleviate the dangers of future unnecessary and unavoidable unemployment. In asking for these things, the workers in steel are merely requesting that they be accorded substantially the same protections that are generally prevalent throughout American industry.

Our dispute cannot be settled by continued company filibustering or by off-the-cuff statements made by persons who are not fully acquainted with the facts.

Our dispute can be settled before the end of the year by down-to-business collective bargaining. Speaking on behalf of the Union, we stand ready to meet in continuous sessions with the steel companies in order to conclude agreements.

On January 3, 1952, in accordance with the directive of the International Policy Committee, a special international convention of the Union will be convened to consider the facts as they then exist.

No Real Bargaining By The Steel Companies; Here's Case In Point

When CIO Steelworkers charge steel management with "a callous filibuster" and refusal to engage in honest bargaining, here's what they are talking about:

Last week E. T. Weir, chairman of National Steel Corp., declared flatly "there is nothing at all we can afford to give" to steelworkers in wage increases.

He claimed that there has been a "serious" drop in steel industry earnings.

Note: U. S. Steel Corp earnings before taxes were up 18.6% in the first nine months of this year, and at an annual rate of $572 million. After taxes, Big Steel's profit rate in the third quarter still was running ahead of the first half of the year.

WSB Relaxes Rules On Health, Welfare Plans

THE WAGE Stabilization Board last week opened the way for thousands of workers to be eligible for negotiated health and welfare benefits.

The board voted to permit employers to put such programs into effect, providing the benefits involved do not exceed certain dollars-and-cents limits spelled out by the board.

The plan is now awaiting the approval of Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putman.

WSB Chairman Nathan Feinsinger said approval by Putman would allow disposition of more than 600 pending cases.

Cost-of-living wage increases are now permitted by WSB up to 13% over January 1950 level. Certain "fringe" benefits, such as paid vacations, and shift differentials have been permitted without offsetting the allowable wage adjustments.

Health and welfare benefits, as well as pensions, previously have been considered inside the wage adjustment formula. The WSB has not as yet taken action on pending pension regulations.

Feinsinger said health and welfare benefits exceeding the wage ceiling must be won by the union in collective bargaining and must meet certain WSB standards outlined in the new plan. The standards were not disclosed by the WSB chairman.

UAW Gets 15c In Canada

A WAGE INCREASE of 15c hourly has been approved by 4500 members of the CIO Auto Workers employed by Chrysler Corp. of Canada.

At the Ford Motor Co. of Canada plant, also in Windsor, 9000 other UAW-CIO members have returned to work after an 11-day strike. Settlement is pending on demands for a new contract and reinstatement of 26 discharged workers.

Furniture Union Plans Fight On 'Unjust' Wage Controls

THE CIO FURNITURE Workers want no part of the current controls on wages and are determined to "fight against its unjust restrictions."

UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer and the union's executive board went on record in opposition to such regulations at a recent two-day meeting in New York.

Pizer said the union would carry the fight against wage controls "so furniture and bedding workers can climb out of the cellar of substandard wage levels which now exist."

The UFWA executive board voted full support to the CIO members on the Wage Stabilization Board in their efforts to have wage controls on workers earning less than $1.25 an hour removed.

"Adoption of this proposal would enable workers earning such substandard wages to win much needed wage boosts," Pizer declared.

Pizer reported that the union won 84 NLRB elections during 1951, involving more than 8000 workers. He called for an intensive organizing drive on the open shops in the industry, with particular attention to the furniture centers of the South.

Ship Union Asks For 20c

A WAGE increase of 20c hourly has been asked by CIO Shipbuilding Workers for 32,000 shipyard employes of Bethlehem Steel Co.

Contract negotiations began last week in New York, after proposals were drafted by the IUMSWA-CIO's 30-member Bethlehem Atlantic Coast Committee.

The contract covers eight Bethlehem yards and will expire Dec. 31.

Andrew A. Pettis, union vice president, said the shipbuilders want a $2 hourly base pay for all first class mechanics, which would be a 20c increase. Other major proposals include a union shop, paid holidays, a guaranteed annual wage, improved vacations, and correction of existing job inequities.

CIO Defeats AFL In New Rail Election

CIO RAILROAD Workers have added to their recent string of victories on eastern lines.

By almost a 2-to-1 margin, the URRWA-CIO defeated the AFL Railroad Employees Dept. in a bargaining election for carmen on the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie line.

With the ballots counted recently, the CIO union (which is organizing in the railroad non-operating field) won by a vote of 783 to 451 for the AFL, announced Eugene Attreed, URRWA-CIO vice chairman and director of organization.

All but 131 of the 1882 eligible workers voted.

The CIO victory on the P.&L.E. followed a recent vote on the Pennsylvania, which the URRWA won by a vote of 18,671 to 10,321.

Rent Lids Set

Rent ceilings were reimposed by the Office of Rent Stabilization in Wichita, Kans., and Tucson, Ariz. Both are important aircraft manufacturing centers.

Steelworkers Set Strike For 15c Boost

Special Convention Called; Government Enters Parleys

BULLETIN

Federal mediation sessions in the steel wage dispute were broken off in Washington on Dec. 21, with steel management making no wage offer. Cyrus Ching, U. S. Conciliation Service chief, said further talks would be "fruitless" and that he was turning the case over to President Truman.

STEELWORKERS of the CIO are preparing to strike the nation's basic steel industry on New Year's Day.

Faced with "callous filibustering" by steel management and its arrogant and adamant refusal to make any proposal for a wage increase, the CIO Steelworkers Executive Board and Wage Policy Committee last week:

- Authorized a national strike by more than 700,000 steelworkers employed by 40 basic steel companies for a 15c hourly wage increase and a score of contract improvements.
- Reaffirmed "the fundamental policy of the United Steelworkers of America against working in the absence of mutually satisfactory contracts."
- Called an emergency, special international convention of the steel union for Jan. 3-4—"to consider the facts as they then exist." The convention will be held at Atlantic City, N. J., with more than 3000 delegates present.

The call for a steel strike came after a month of fruitless negotiations in which—as the USA Wage-Policy Committee said in a resolution—"the companies uniformly have made no genuine effort to conclude mutually satisfactory agreements with the union on any of the union's proposals and, in fact, the companies have not engaged in genuine collective bargaining . . ."

SIMILARLY, USA Pres. Philip Murray charged the steel employers—led by U. S. Steel Corp.—with making "no constructive, realistic effort to talk with us."

Murray said that "it now appears that a strike at midnight on Dec. 31 will be unavoidable." But he added:

"We still hope and believe that such a strike can be averted if, even at this late date, the industry will get down to business and bargain out a reasonable settlement with us."

Toward that end, Federal Conciliation Chief Cyrus Ching called Murray and other representatives of the Steelworkers and officials of 10 largest basic steel firms to Washington for a conference on Dec. 20. Bargaining with U. S. Steel in Pittsburgh was interrupted for the Washington meeting.

Along with his twin announcement on Dec. 17 of the Steelworkers' strike authorization and special convention call, Murray also spelled out in dollars-and-cents for the first time the "substantial" wage increase demand which had been presented to the industry.

The union, Murray said, seeks a general wage increase of 15c hourly, plus an additional half-cent hourly spread for each of 31 job classifications. On the average he said, this would amount to about 18½c hourly.

THE OTHER contract goals of the USA-CIO, previously announced, include eight paid holidays, up to four weeks of vacations, eliminating wage inequities, increase of night shift differentials, improved severance pay, overtime for weekend work, and a guaranteed annual wage program.

Not a "single, solitary counter-proposal to the union's economic demands" has come from the companies, Murray said, in charging them with refusing to bargain in good faith.

Murray, at a press conference in Pittsburgh, said U. S. Steel Pres. Benjamin F. Fairless had closed the door on collective bargaining by saying a steel agreement could not be reached without government intervention.

And he was critical of three Administration defense officials—Mobilization Dir. Charles E. Wilson, Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam, and Price Stabilizer Michael V. DiSalle.

Murray charged these officials with "deciding the steelworkers' case before the merits of our position have been presented."

His comment followed a recent caustic attack on the USA wage goals by Wilson in a Washington address.

WITH STEEL management (which has had several fat price increases in recent years and now is operating at above-capacity production) making much of claims that it wants to "hold the line" against inflation, the Steelworkers said:

"On the fight against inflation . . . our position cannot honestly be misinterpreted. In 1950, the USA-CIO, together with almost every other union in this country, sought a strong, firm Defense Production Act that would hold prices down.

"In 1951, when the Defense Production Act came up for extension, the USA-CIO pleaded for a strengthening of our anti-inflation weapons . . .

"On both occasions, large segments of American industry—including the manufacturers of steel—argued and lobbied against firm price controls and effective anti-inflation legislation."

Then the steel union statement (text on opposite page) brought the case home:

"Like every other American, steelworkers hate inflation and want it controlled. Our demands for higher wages are designed to provide overdue protection against the effects of past inflation.

"The buying power of the steelworkers' dollar has steadily decreased. In addition, his wages do not adequately reflect the great rise in the productivity and progress of the steel industry in which steel workers have played so primary a role.

"We believe we are entitled . . . to a square deal on wages from the companies. We ask for no more; we will take no less."

THE BATTLE IN STEEL.—Holding copy of union's statement, CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray tells reporters in Pittsburgh that USA's Wage-Policy Committee has authorized basic steel strike for Jan. 1 and called special union convention for Jan. 3. "We will not work without a contract," he said.

'No Deal' For Price Increase

No "deal" will be made with steel employers for price increases in return for wage increases, two government officials said last week.

Roger L. Putnam, recently-named economic stabilization administrator, said the employers "are bargaining with their own money." He explained that higher costs would have to be paid from income at current prices, and not by charging more for steel.

Both Putnam and Michael V. DiSalle, price stabilization chief, indicated that the only "out" for the steel companies would be a price rise under the Capehart Amendment to the Defense Production Act. That would apply only to higher costs up to last July 26. DiSalle added:

"I have not been a party to any deal, nor will I be a party to any deal."

CIO Seamen In Wage Talks; 40-Hour Week Takes Effect

THE 40-HOUR work week at sea, long the goal of maritime unions, became a reality Dec. 15 for 55,000 members of three CIO affiliates.

The three unions, the CIO Maritime Union, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association and the American Radio Association, won the 40-hour week in negotiations last summer but it was not scheduled to go into effect until Dec. 15. The men have been working a 44-hour week in the meantime.

The three unions are currently engaged in wage reviews with the member companies which are expected to result in a 1.4% cost-of-living wage increase. Tacit approval has already been given by company representatives.

The three CIO unions are also leading the fight for a 1.8% pay increase denied them by the Wage Stabilization Board last summer when only 6.2% of their negotiated increase was approved by the government agency.

Under terms of the agreement signed with the Committee for the Companies and Agents, Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, members of the three unions will not stop work while at sea at the end of 40 hours. They will, however, be paid an additional eight hours at overtime rates for all work performed in excess of the 40-hour figure.

Advisory Unit On Migrants Urged

Creation by President Truman of a joint-labor-management committee on migrant labor has been proposed by Nick Dragon, CIO regional director for Arizona and New Mexico.

Such a committee, he said, would participate in negotiations with Mexico for revising or redrafting of the existing migrant labor agreement.

Dragon has sought endorsement by the U. S. Labor-Management Committee for Defense Manpower in the six Far Western states for his proposal.

Steel's Refusal To Bargain Hit

THE STEEL industry's double standard — of refusing to talk wages until guaranteed price increases—was condemned by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO Steelworkers general counsel, last week.

Goldberg, in a nationwide radio broadcast, declared:

"The steel industry wants a different standard for prices than exists for wages. It wants a guarantee of higher prices before it even talks about wages.

"We have not asked for advance approval from the Wage Stabilization Board for any wage increase which we can negotiate.

"The steel corporation should not ask for advance approval of any price increase which it deems necessary. The law does not provide for such special treatment."

Then the USA-CIO counsel emphasized:

"We do not, in short, propose to permit the Steelworkers union to be used as a cat's paw for the granting of unjustified price increases to the detriment of consumers and of the defense program."

HE POINTED OUT "the steel industry can well afford to pay the 15c wage increase and other benefits asked by the union. The industry's gross profits are the highest in history. Even after the recent tax increase, the industry's net profits are substantially above any recent year except the record-breaking 1950."

Goldberg assailed steel management's refusal to bargain as "making a strike unavoidable," but he added:

"The Steelworkers union . . . is ready even at this late date to sit down in continuous negotiations to work out a mutual agreement."

'Let 'Em Eat Cake!'—That's The Steel Barons' Idea

Like the proverbial leopard, some of the leading management spokesmen in the steel industry never change their spots.

Just the other day, E. T. Weir, one of the nation's most notorious foes of unions, proclaimed that "there is nothing at all we can afford to give" to steel workers in the way of wage increases or better working conditions in the mills.

Weir's "let 'em eat cake" remarks are part and parcel with some of the statements of steel management two years and more ago when the CIO Steelworkers suggested that the steel industry has a responsibility to its workers in the form of pensions and health and welfare protection.

In 1949 the CIO Steelworkers—on picket lines across the nation—won their goals of pensions and social insurance.

As 1951 comes to an end, the Steelworkers are preparing to strike on New Year's Day.

Their goals—a "substantial" wage increase of 15c hourly, paid holidays, longer vacations, improved overtime, and better conditions in the mills—command and have the support of the working people of this nation.

The steel union—like all of us—wants "overdue protection against the effects of past inflation."

But even beyond the USA's wage and other economic goals, the union is engaged in an even more important task. That is to defeat the "callous filibuster" of steel management and win a contract settlement through honest collective bargaining.

In that regard, the strength and determination of the Steelworkers will adequately convince the steel industry—and employers all over America—that collective bargaining has not been repealed by existing government regulations and that they must deal with the unions of their workers.

'Coming Out Of The Funk'

(Jittery fears of big advertising agencies, and the business firms they represent, have given rein in recent months to unjustified accusations and organized blacklist campaigns against a number of radio entertainers. Now the tide is turning the other way, as described in this recent editorial in the Washington Post.)

THERE ARE heartening signs that the advertising and radio trades are coming out of the funk into which they were plunged by the blackmail tactics of the magazine Counterattack and its illegitimate offspring, Red Channels.

Sponsor, a fortnightly magazine which designates itself as "for the buyers of broadcast advertising," has lately completed a three-part dissection of the anti-Communist newsletter and guidebook. It has rendered a service alike to its readers and to the general public. Its three articles provide not only a factual disclosure of Counterattack's operations but a revelation, besides, of the pusillanimity and gullibility in the advertising trade on which Counterattack has capitalized.

Red Channels, put out by the publishers of Counterattack, contains a helter-skelter list of radio actors, writers and producers who, according to the sources employed by the editors of the publication, belonged at one time or another to organizations, which those editors consider subversive.

Red Channels achieved its first notoriety over the dismissal of Jean Muir as a result of its inclusion of her name. Other radio personalities rendered "controversial" by being similarly listed were dropped from their jobs more quietly. "The list of radio and TV artists who have suffered merely as a result of their names being listed in Red Channels or Counterattack," says Sponsor, "reads like some roll-call of show business."

Red Channels' listings were made effective by organized campaigns of phone-calling and letter-writing. And the advertising trade to a large extent fell for this pressure. Nobody liked it; nobody expressed any confidence in the publication's charges or information. The company that fired Miss Muir passed no judgment on her guilt or innocence; it was merely concerned lest her presence on the program affect sales adversely.

Radio Columnist John Crosby was quite right, we think, in calling this "appalling moral cowardice." "The livelihoods of a great many people," he went on to say, "are being destroyed by a cynical disregard of fair play."

That disregard of fair play has not been wholly overcome in the entertainment industry. Only recently Elmer Rice, a Pulitzer Prize playwright and member of the board of the American Civil Liberties Union, ended his association with one of TV's major drama programs on the ground that its casting was being determined under pressure from Red Channels.

It is clear from the articles in Sponsor, nevertheless, that leaders in the radio and advertising trades are beginning to wake up to the fact that they have been bamboozled. A spokesman for the company that discharged Miss Muir is quoted, for example as observing: "We don't recognize Red Channels in any way. In fact, we think it's a terrible menace. It's an improper attempt to conduct a kangaroo court on questions of loyalty."

THIS MUST certainly be hailed as progress and education. Other radio and advertising magnates are quoted as similarly opposed to any further knuckling under to the publication's planned coercion.

Irwin Shaw's recently published novel. "The Troubled Air," has no doubt contributed to the awakening. Letters from the public— which in the case of Miss Muir ran 3 to 1 in favor of her reinstatement on the program from which she was discharged—helped to bring the industry to its senses.

Advertising agencies have indubitable obligations to their clients; but they also have certain inescapable responsibilities to respect human rights.

'Double Standard' On Wages Hit

The "double standard" in wages—the practice of paying women less than men for equal work—was blasted as hampering the defense mobilization program by Frieda S. Miller, director of the Women's Bureau in the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Women, she pointed out in an address before the Lucy Stone League Forum in New York, constitute the nation's largest reserve. Many more must be recruited during coming months to fill essential jobs in defense industries.

Changes In The South!

A Lot Of Folks Got The Surprise Of Their Lives

By RICHARD CONN

ITS EASY to live off misery, and in many parts of the Southland there's an over abundance of human misery for unscrupulous persons.

Beneath the Mason-Dixon Line, folks are used to tough foremen, domineering bosses and local officials with dollar signs for eyes.

Southern folks aren't too shocked when confronted with such people. But the ones who really do shock, and play havoc with our faith in human nature, are the so-called ministers of the Gospel who have been purchased body and soul by reaction.

In practically every Southern community you'll find at least one or two ministers who preach that organized labor sports the mark of the beast. And the only true friend of the workingman, they add, is his boss.

These are invariably the ministers who depend on the mill and factory owners for their existence.

A good example of this species is "Parson Jack" Johnston, publisher of the Trumpet, a viciously anti-union, anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic paper.

Therefore, one of the most pleasant, refreshing things a union man in the South can run up against is a minister who sincerely thinks of the rights and welfare of the people above his own material gains.

It is the job of John G. Ramsay, Community Relations director for the CIO Organizing Committee in the South, to talk to both kinds of ministers.

Some John Ramsay hopes to enlighten; others he hopes to encourage.

John, himself, was tremendously encouraged by many of the ministers with whom he met in Longview, Texas, recently.

The CIO Steelworkers had invited Longview ministers of the various faiths to a luncheon with leaders from all unions.

Between 25 to 30 attended the luncheon, and all were local people with the exception of John Ramsay and USA representative Martin Burns, from Houston.

THE MINISTERS and labor people attending the meeting voted unanimously to establish a Religion and Labor Foundation group in hopes that both parties could better come to know and understand the other.

Immediately, the local Longview press emerged with screaming black headlines, decrying the fact that some of their most prominent ministers had attended the meeting with the CIO.

"It is shameful, a reddish blot on the pages of progress," roared the Longview Daily News.

The paper moaned that "the CIO gang is among us."

And then the next logical thing of course, happened.

The board of directors of a couple of the churches asked for the resignations of two of the ministers who had attended the meeting.

A minister who had declined a luncheon invitation crowed self-righteously about his refusal to attend.

The Longview paper came out with three, bold-faced, double column front page editorials—screaming for blood.

FINALLY the fate of the two ministers was left up to their individual congregations.

And it was then that a lot of folks in Longview, Texas, received the surprise of their lives.

The two congregations gave overwhelming support to the two ministers, and declared that it was completely within the ministers' rights to attend such a luncheon.

Oh, yes! One minister did get into some hot water over the affair.

It was reported that the chuchman who was so proud that he hadn't attended the meeting was roundly reprimanded by his flock.

"Yes," said John Ramsay, "the spirit of fair play still lives in Longview"!

And of course it is ministers and church people like these who will one day make the South into a better land of fairness, decency, prosperity and love for all.

'Health Is Inalienable Right,' Hillman Award Winner Says

"HEALTH is everybody's business," Dr. James H. Means of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology said as he accepted a Sidney Hillman award.

"The pursuit of health," Dr. Means continued," is part of the pursuit of happiness which we have been told is one of our inalienable rights."

Dr. Means received the $500 award for Atlantic Monthly articles on England's public medicine program and on the American Medical Association's lobby.

Until his retirement earlier this year Dr. Means was director of the department of medicine of Massachusetts General Hospital and Jackson Professor of Medicine at Harvard Medical School.

In accepting the award, he said that nationwide medical care will have to be undertaken by the government, if private endeavor fails.

"In the pursuit of health," the physician said, "the Amalagamated Clothing Workers of America, jointly with the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange, have set up the Sidney Hillman Health Center, which I have had the pleasure of visiting this morning."

Dr. Means said that "organization for medical care is essential," and that the Hillman Center is "an experiment in the humanistic areas of medicine."

Protests Force Ohio State To Ease Campus Gag Rule

WIDESPREAD condemnation has finally forced the Ohio State Univ. Board of Trustees into somewhat easing the "gag rule" it imposed Sept. 14 with the help of Sen. Bricker (R. O.), one of its members.

The attack on academic freedom at the University was severely criticized by the press, educators, labor, church and civic groups. The Ohio CIO Council, in a new pamphlet, charged that the gag is part of the nationwide "alarming and growing" attack on the public schools masterminded by Allen Zoll and other ultra-reactionaries.

Under the trustees' original order, no outside speaker was to be allowed to appear on the campus unless first approved by Dr. Howard L. Bevis, university president. No yardstick was given, and the fiirst speaker Bevis barred was a well-known anti-Communist Quaker, because he is a pacifist.

Under new procedures adopted by the board, the faculty hereafter will be responsible for outside speakers. In cases of doubt, the question of their appearance will be referred higher up, through steps, to Bevis "for advice and action." A nine-member faculty committee will help Bevis set a speaker policy.

The CIO booklet, entitled "Keep Them Free," shows the outside influences behind the trustees' action and describes the Ohio State incident as "More than a local spasm."

"It is symptomatic of an educational disease growing in alarming proportions over the entire nation," the pamphlet declares. It describes similar attacks on schools in other sections of the country and shows that they were led by "political opportunities who would capture our schools and dictate what should and should not be taught."

Recalling the labor movement's traditional support of a free and equal system of public education, the CIO publication said that "we hold it as a self-evident truth that freedom must be retained in our schools."

The publication concludes with appeals for higher pay for teachers and more adequate school buildings as "urgent necessities."

Labor Should Get Ready For Docs' Political Bazooka In '52 Election

SOME DOCTORS "have deep misgivings about the means" being used by fellow medicos in their efforts to defeat health insurance, according to Editor R. M. Cunningham, Jr., of the Modern Hospital magazine.

The criticism is particularly timely because Cunningham's article in the December issue of his magazine is based on an unsigned and confidential report which "is said to be the blueprint for political organization of the medical, nursing and hospital professions in the 1952 presidential campaign."

He says that the report is being circulated among medical society officials and "suggests the fine California hand of Whitaker and Baxter, the American Medical Association's politically wise public relations virtuosos."

Cunningham—whose magazine is conservative and is highly regarded in the hospital, medical and medical school fields—takes apart the doctors' political weapon and finds that it is a blunderbuss that may explode in their faces.

"During the years ahead," he writes, doctors and hospital people all over the country must decide whether they wish to take the place that is planned for them in this blueprint for political thought control.

"For most of them the decision will be as easy as it was for the doctors of Pennsylvania and New York: 'Socialized medicine is bad. Whatever opposes it is good. Count me in.'

"Others, however, equally devoted to the end, have deep misgivings about the means."

Cunningham demolishes the argument that socialized medicine in Britain ruined the country, pointing out that even Churchill explained the nation's plight was due to loss of colonial wealth and world markets.

The editor added that, anyhow, "nothing even remotely resembling Britain's form of socialized medicine has been seriously proposed in the United States. Fighting fire with fire does not make untruths into truths."

The doctors' political bazooka, however, was tried and tested.

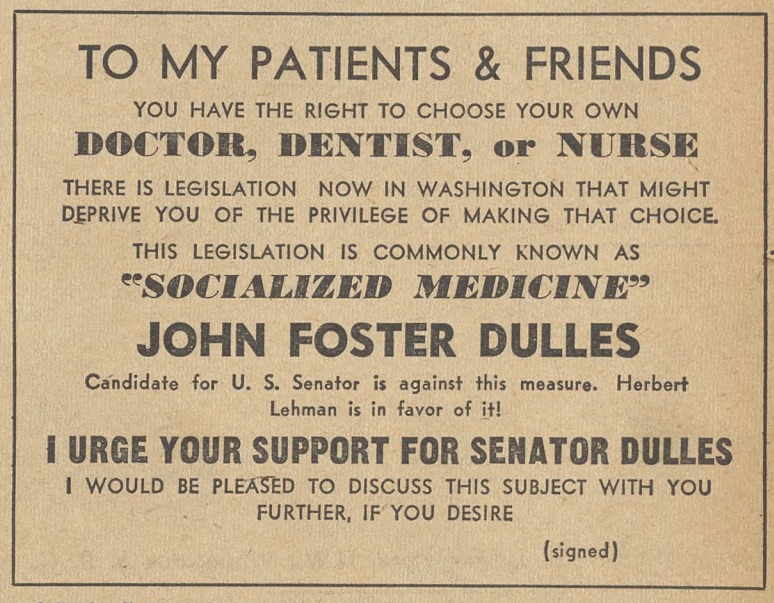
The 26th District consists of Armstrong, Cambria and Indiana Counties. It is a predominantly rural district, but there are many union members, particularly in Johnstown, where Bethlehem Steel has a large plant whose employes belong to the CIO Steelworkers.

"THE PROGRAM was a near miracle in lightning organization efficiency," Cunningham says. "In two days, doctors, dentists, and druggists in each of the district's three counties had organized county meetings of their groups, received endorsements from state and county professional associations, distributed memoranda of instructions to workers, and raised several hundred dollars for advertising purposes.

"'Letters were written and supplied to doctors, dentists and druggists for mailing to their patients or customers, asking support for Mr. Saylor,' it was reported.

"'Approximately 190,000 of these letters went into the mail. Another series of general meetings was held in each county within the next 10 days at which auxiliaries of the Health Arts group were organized to conduct both house-to-house and telephone calls in support of nonpolitical medicine and the Republican candidate. Approximately 120,000 such personal calls were made and proved most effective.

"'A series of 12 newspaper advertisements, signed by the doctors and druggists, was scheduled in all daily newspapers in the three counties,' the report continues'. There were 265 spot announcements and six five-minute talks made by well-known doctors over local stations. Doctors and dentists were supplied with a poster soliciting support from patients and friends. Nearly 500 of these cards were posted in reception rooms.'"



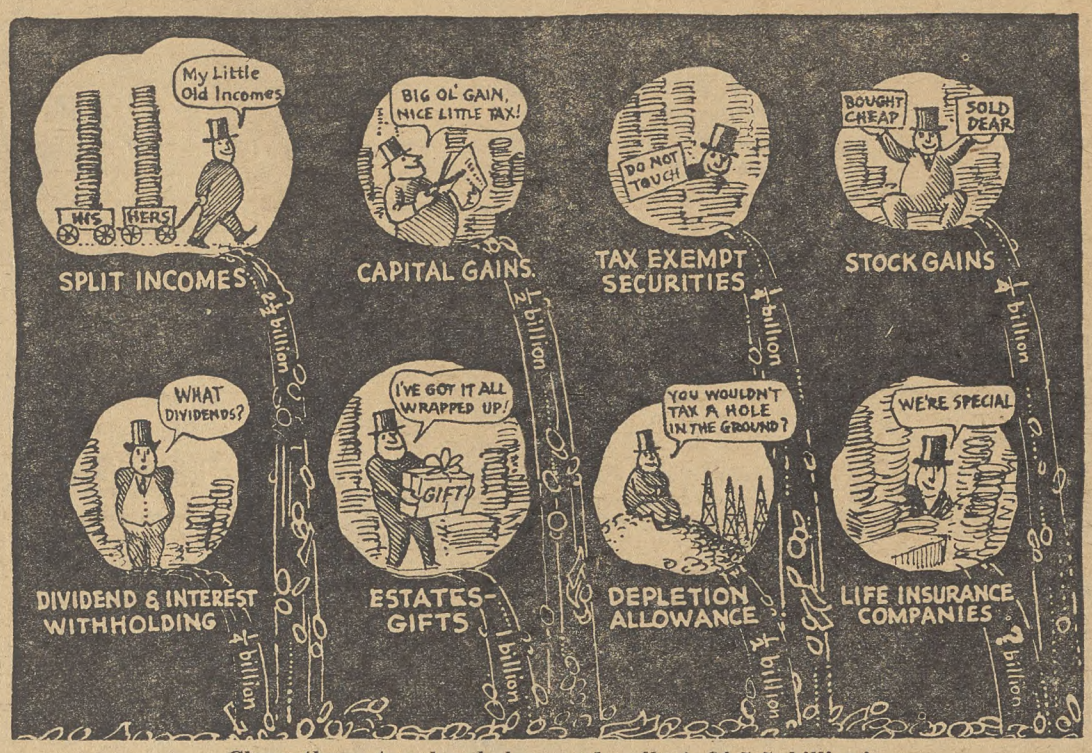
DOCTORS IN POLITICS—This poster was displayed by a New York doctor as part of all-out political campaign of "doctor's lobby," tested in recent years and expected to reach full force in coming '52 election campaign.

Tax Loopholes By Millions—

How Dixiegops Helped 'Everybody But Public'

(When Congress returns to Washington, one major problem will be a new tax bill to increase government revenues, which are $6 billion short of present expenditures because of the loophole-ridden bill enacted in 1951. The following article, excerpted from The Reporter, fortnightly magazine of national and international affairs, tells how the present tax law and some of its loopholes "benefit almost everybody but the public."—The Editor.)

By PHILIP M. STERN



Close these tax loopholes—and collect $4.5-5 billion!

"EXTRANEOUS and inedible materials" helped make the 1951 tax bill one of the most controversial in recent times—rejected once by House and reluctantly signed by a President faced with a multi-billion-dollar deficit.

These "materials" are the so-called tax loopholes, provisions, which give special tax treatment to special groups. They go under such names as "the two-for-one offset," "corporate spin-offs," "percentage depletion," and "collapsible corporations."

They are little known to the average taxpayer, who is unable to avail himself of their advantages, and who takes on the burden of the hundreds of millions of dollars that slip through the loopholes, either in the form of higher taxes or in the form of an inflationary deficit.

Let us consider percentage depletion. This is a meaningless term to most taxpayers, but one which is expected to cost the Treasury over $750 million in revenue in 1951.

Applicable to industries which involve exhaustible resources, such as oil, gas, or coal, depletion allowances are roughly comparable to "depreciation allowances," whereby ordinary companies are given tax-free allowances for the wearing out of plant and equipment.

Plenty Of Gravy In Fine Print Of Tax Measure!

"Just technicalities"!

That's what the "experts" say about the fine print in Dixiegop-enacted tax laws—but what a difference those "technicalities" make for particular business firms!

For example, the "Armour & Co. amendment"—as it was called during congressional debate—has given the big meat packer a $3 million saving.

For another example, the effective date of the present law was so jiggled around that U. S. Steel Corp. has had a saving of $23 million.

Percentage depletion is different, however, in two vital respects. First, depletion allowances, say for oil, are a percentage not of the value of the oil well, but of the income from the well. If an oil well costing a million dollars earns $5 million in the first year, the 27.5% tax-free depletion allowance would come to $1.375 million—over twenty times the ordinary depreciation allowance and more than the total cost of the well—in the first year alone.

Second, depletion allowances do not stop: They go on as long as the well does. Treasury Department figures show that at the rates of depletion allowances taken in 1947 by the oil industry its companies could have "depreciated" their properties sixteen times.

Percentage depletion also has huge tax advantages for individuals who are fortunate enough to earn most of their income from oil and gas.

TEN SUCH individuals, according to a Treasury Department study, earned a total of $62 million over a five-year period. But after taking depletion and other special deductions, which left about three-fourths of their incomes tax-free, these millionaires paid the same tax rate as a person then earning about seven thousand dollars a year.

One gas-and-oil operator, who would ordinarily have had to pay eighty-five per cent of his $14.3 million income, actually paid taxes amounting to only 0.6 per cent.

Percentage depletion illustrates two characteristics of tax loopholes that give them an importance more enduring than the annual revenue losses involved.

One is that the process of creating a tax loophole is an irreversible one. Once the benefits of a loophole have been enjoyed, it is too financially painful for the beneficiaries and too politically painful for the legislators who write tax laws to abolish or even to reduce the loophole. A proposal to reduce the depletion allowance for oil and gas from 27.5% to fifteen was smothered in the Senate, 71-9.

Secondly, a tax loophole is, in a sense, like a malignant tumor: It spreads itself through the system. Once a tax benefit has been granted one group, there is no reason for denying it to all comparable groups. On the contrary, it is positively discriminatory to do so—a rationalization for chipping away at the edges of existing loopholes.

Percentage depletion, for example, started with oil and gas in 1926 and was extended to metals, sulphur, and coal in 1932. Many nonmetals which were added in 1942, supposedly as a temporary wartime incentive, were made permanent members of the depletion family in 1947.

The 1951 tax bill adds over 20 nonmetallic minerals, only five of which have sufficient strategic importance to warrant special government exploration incentives. Even oyster and clam shells are included this year.

Another loophole considerably widened by the 1951 tax bill is one treating coal income as "capital gains," so as to make it taxable up to a special maximum rate of 26% rather than at the usual income tax rates of up to 92% for individuals and 82% for corporations.

In 1943, Congress opened a small crack in the tax law by declaring that all profits from timber sales should be considered capital gains. An attempt to grant capital-gains treatment to certain oil royalties failed in 1950, but the loophole was attacked from a different angle in 1951—with royalty payments to coal owners.

BUT THE procession of candidates for capital-gains treatment did not stop with the coal men. Sales of livestock were added by the House Ways and Means Committee. The Senate Finance Committee allowed turkeys to join the livestock.

The 1951 tax bill reopens a tax loophole in the capital-gains family which was closed in 1934, called "corporation spin-offs." It illustrates the intricacies of some tax-avoidance devices, although the revenue loss here is small.

If Corporation A earns $1,000,000 and distributes this to 100,000 stockholders in the form of $10 dividends, these stockholders must pay regular income taxes on the amounts they receive. If, however, Corporation A wishes its stockholders to pay the special 25% capital-gains rate, it "spins off" the $1,000,000 earnings into a new Corporation B, and distributes the stock of the new corporation to its own shareholders.

The 1951 tax law says that this new stock cannot be counted as income, and no tax is paid when it is received. But if, after six months, A's stockholders sell their new stock at $10 a share, they net the same $10 they would have had if the $1,000,000 had been distributed as ordinary dividends, except that the $10 is now a capital gain, taxed $2.6 instead of the $9.20 that might have been paid by a top-bracket stockholder.

An additional $100 million of revenues is expected to slip each year through a new loophole in the 1951 tax bill having to do with 'family partnerships.'

The courts have sanctioned family partnerships as long as they are formed in good faith and for a business rather than a tax-avoidance purpose. The House version of the 1951 tax bill legalized virtually all family partnerships, even with six-month-old children.

The Senate Finance Committee went one step further. It gave a retroactive approval to all family partnerships formed as early as January 1939, relieving the courts of many contested wartime cases which have clogged their calendars.

But while perfectly willing to give this twelve-year retroactive blessing to a tax privilege, the Senate Finance Committee refused to go back even ten months to make the new corporation tax rates effective January 1, 1951, though the House wanted to do so.

By making the new rates effective April 1 instead, thus exempting the record-high profits of 1951's first quarter, the Senate Finance Committee saved the corporations $500 million.

These are only some of the loopholes in existing tax legislation. Others, which CIO says should be closed, include the split income provisions and failure to withhold taxes on dividend payments.

Final outcome of the 1951 tax bill—after two conference committee reports—was some whittling away of Senate concessions on family partnerships, and a concession by the House of $1.5 billion in additional tax revenues. And Stern concludes:

"The unawareness and apathy of the average taxpayer—who cares only about the broadest strokes in the tax picture, and is easily misled even as to those—are reflected in Senators and Congressmen, who are inclined to leave to their tax-writing committees the task of drafting laws in which the change of a single word can affect the lives of 10,000 families . . ."

Tax Law Hits Workers Most, Wall St. Journal Now Agrees

What labor pointed out repeatedly during debate over the present tax law is now admitted openly by the Wall Street Journal, which says:

"Low income individuals get the stiffest percentage boosts in their 1951 federal income taxes.

"A single person with no dependents and a net income of $800 for 1951 will pay Uncle Sam $41 in taxes thereon, 17.1% more than he paid for 1950. A similar individual with a net income of $10,000 will pay $2486 for this year, only 12.9% more than he paid for 1950, while an individual who earns $1 million will pay $872,000 in taxes, 9% more than he paid for 1950.

"Next year the full force of both the 1950 and 1951 Revenue Acts will hit all individuals, and low income taxpayers still will get the hardest blow, percantagewise—in comparison with 1950. A single person with no dependents will pay 25.7% more for next year than he paid for 1950. A similar individual with a $10,000 net income will pay only 23.9% more for 1952 than he paid for 1950, while an individual who earns $1 million will pay 10% more." (LPA)

Humphrey Plans Hearing On Stronger Migrant Labor Bill

A STRONG MOVE to draft legislation implementing the recommendations made by the President's Commission on Migratory Labor will get under way early in the next session of Congress.

Hearings on migrant labor problems in American agriculture will be held in January by the Senate Labor and Labor-Management Relations subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

"The problem of migratory labor is basically a manpower problem," Humphrey said. "If we are having difficulty attracting sufficient American workers to seasonal employment in agriculture, we need to look at the jobs which are being offered and see whether they are able to compete with other employment in our economy."

Humphrey pointed out that seasonal agriculture employment represents "the most serious manpower problem in our economy to date." Referring to the much-criticized recent legislation authorizing importation of Mexican farm hands, he said that in no other instance has the nation resorted to such a drastic method of meeting its manpower needs.

Child Labor-The Sore At Our Democracy's Roots

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A SHAMEFUL scandal is festering at the roots of our American democracy. Unlike the tax scandals, it has received no headlines in the press.

It has dragged no big names in the dirt. No government officials have been forced to resign because of it.

Laws have been boldly violated, but no offenders have been sent to prison. Minor fines for a few of the lesser lawbreakers directly involved have been the only penalties exacted.

Prejudice and indifference often cause many people to approve tacitly of acts that violate the law. If such people were included among those implicated in this particular scandal, the guilty would be legion.

Numbered among them would be some of our most respected citizens—school officials, ministers, businessmen, legislators, farmers —and yes, workers, too, but mostly non-union workers who aren't aware of the fight organized labor has carried on against this blot on our most cherished democratic beliefs.

WHAT IS this scandal? Briefly it is this: A lot of the food that makes us the best-fed nation in the world is produced with the help of skinny, under-fed children —some of them as young as four to nine years of age—many of whom have never had a really decent meal in their lives.

And next time you light up a cigarette, or put on a cotton shirt or dress, give a thought to the kids, some as young as five to ten years of age, who toil in tobacco or cotton fields from dawn to dark.

Or have you been thinking that we don't have child labor any longer in this country? Wasn't it abolished by law?

Yes, the worst forms of it are prohibited by the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act (Wage-Hour law) and most states have their own laws regulating child labor —some of them pretty weak. But there are big loop-holes in all of them.

And to be effective they have to be enforced. This is difficult, for it takes a lot of field investigators to do a real job and neither Congress nor state legislatures consider it worthwhile to appropriate enough money for effective enforcement.

LACK OF enforcement, however, is not the main reason for the evil of child labor.

"We have found from experience," said a spokesman for the National Child Labor Committee, "that we can't get rid of child labor as long as economic circumstances create the pressure which force children to work."

Or as a Texan told the President's Commission on Migratory Labor: "The wages which are paid to a migrant laborer are such that the entire family must work in the fields to sustain life."

Just how many working children are there in democratic America today who are being deprived of their rightful chance to grow up to be healthy, intelligent citizens? Actually we don't know exactly. Some thorough investigations of particular places have been made in the last few years, but these give only samplings of the evils of child labor that exist. Its full extent has to be estimated. It's quite likely that we really don't know the half of it, and that estimates are below the actual figures.

The Neediest But Unhonored Cases

Many of us become suddenly aware, at this time of year, that all children have a right to happiness —at least on Christmas. We read with compassion the stories of "the neediest cases" about children who will spend a bleak joyless Christmas unless some kind citizens come to the rescue.

But when the holidays are over, we promptly forget them. Yet there are hundreds of thousands of unhappy children living in squalor and misery—not only at Christmas but through all the years of their childhood. The terrible contrast between what we sentimental Americans say about children and what we allow to go on through indifference and ignorance stands out starkly at Christmas.

The Report of the President's Commission on Migratory Labor issued earlier this year states that "comprehensive statistics on the magnitude of the child labor problem in agriculture are unobtainable." It notes, however, that the Census Bureau estimated that in August 1950 190,000 children, 10 through 13 years of age, and 205,000 others 14 and 15 years old, were working in agriculture for pay.

In October 1950, when schools were in session, the Bureau estimated that 150,000 of the younger group and 165,000 of the 14 and 15 year group were working.

MORE THAN 300,000 children 10 to 15, according to this official estimate were illegally employed in America to help produce food and other crops.

These figures give some idea of the extent of the violations of the child labor provisions contained in the amended Fair Labor Standards (Wage-Hour) Act which since Jan. 25, 1950, have prohibited employment in agriculture of children under 16 years of age during school hours.

A report issued recently on investigations covering 598 farms gives some specific facts and figures that reveal a bleak and terrible picture of more than 1500 children working in agriculture.

The investigations were made by the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Wage and Hour and Public Contracts divisions, the agencies that administer the child labor regulations of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Here are some of the things the investigators reported:

- They found 1529 children working at "stoop" labor, such as the harvesting of cotton, potatoes, sugar beets, tomatoes, onions and strawberries. About 75% of the children working in cotton and onions were under 14 years of age.
- Sixteen per cent of these children were four to nine years old—the largest proportion of them employed "in onions."
- Fifty per cent of them were between the ages of 10 and 13. More than a thousand (66%) were 13 years old or younger. The remaining 34% were 14 or 15.
- Most of these 1529 children were working in the fields during hours when the law required that they attend school.
- The great part of them had to do such jobs as lifting and dragging baskets, bags, hampers, or boxes of vegetables, fruit or cotton.
- Children as young as 9, 11, and 13 years of age were seen using sharp implements to top sugar beets and onions.
- Some youngsters who were hauled long distances by truck to their work in the fields, often left home as early as 6 a.m. and returned at sunset. A 9½ hour day was not uncommon in the cotton fields, even for children 8 to 12 years old.
- More than a half of the children on the farms investigated were members of migratory families who had come from states other than the one where they found work.

And The 'Good People' Sneered!

"I DON'T WANT my kids going to school and getting contaminated by those dirty, lousy Mexican kids," said a respectable citizen.

"Give 'em a little education and you ruin 'em as good farm hands," said a grower.

"Neither communities nor farmers feel any great responsibility to see that the kids of migrants are in school," said a truant officer. "In fact many people in the district would not appreciate our making those kids attend school. There is some feeling against the migrants."

Another school superintendent said "children of these Mexican beet workers are not the mental equals of our children."

"More problems are created by bringing these migrants into school than by leaving them out. The tendency is to leave them out and to maintain the status quo. It is difficult in rural areas to do otherwise, as the whole community is against the man who tries to do something more for his migrants' kids than others are doing," said a school official.

THESE ARE A few of the comments expressed by "nice" people in various Colorado communities when questioned by field representatives for the Natl. Child Labor Committee on discrimination against migrant children in education.

The committee made a comprehensive first-hand study of migrant farm labor in Colorado during the 1950 harvesting. It was based on a sampling of 262 seasonal agricultural families.

Not all the persons interviewed in the course of the study exhibited the prejudice and opposition expressed by those quoted above, but they were representative of a sizable group. The report states that "plenty of evidence was found in Colorado of the prejudice against Spanish-Americans which prevents integration and of the discriminatory practices which build resentment."

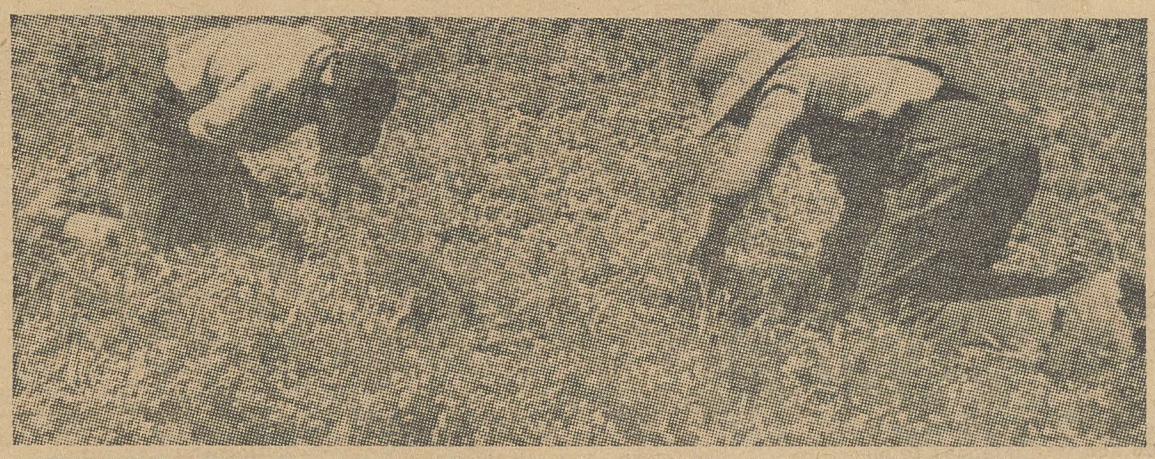
A part of the report deals separately with the children of migrant families, taking up such problems as child care, child labor, school attendance and education and community attitudes toward them. The report as a whole also concerns the lot of the children for most of the migrants are family groups, the average size being 5.7 persons in a range of 2 to 14 persons in the family.

LOW INCOMES, bad housing and sanitation, lack of medical care, poor food and social discrimination from which migrants suffer go particularly hard on young, growing children.

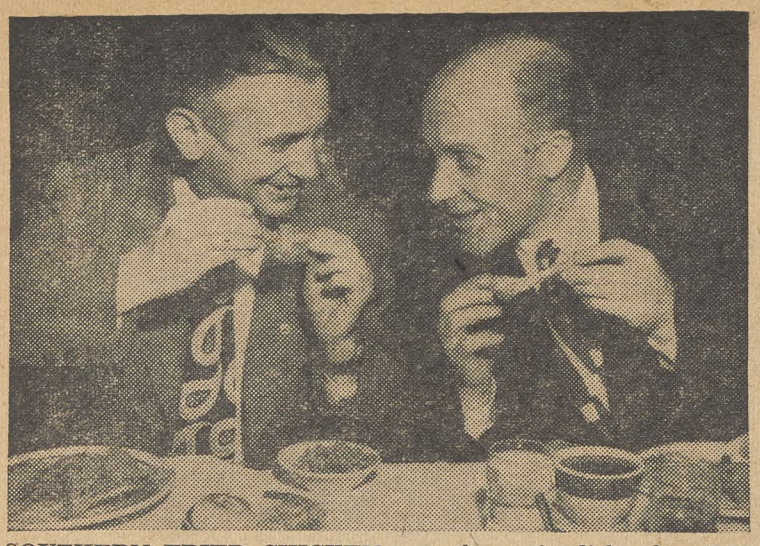
"The pattern of migrant family life — poverty, malnutrition, disease and lack of education," states the report, "will be perpetuated as long as the children continue to grow up under conditions which leave them no better equipped than their parents to attain a regular and stable way of life in this 'land of opportunity'."

The fact that a chance to go to school regularly is rare for migrant children is generally considered by those concerned with child labor in agriculture to be one of the major evils.

Findings of the Colorado study, which the report states could be applied with few exception to virtually every state using migrant labor, indicate that with a few exceptions, little has been done to extend school opportunities to migrant child workers.



WORK LIKE THIS—Stoop labor all day in hot fields is the childhood of these young Americans, two of the nation's million migratory workers. Because of reactionary Congress, these children and thousands of other youngsters are not protected by the Fair Labor Standards Act. (Photo courtesy National Child Labor Committee.)



SOUTHERN FRIED CHICKEN was the main dish when CIO unionists in Birmingham were hosts at a dinner for a visiting German trade union delegation. IMPRESSED: A delegation of Norwegian government, industry and union leaders was impressed by the efficiency of the Northwest lumber industry. Here they are at the Portland, Ore., headquarters of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers. Left to right, around the table, E. Wisth, A. Ljoner, S. Ericksen, A. Rostad, O. Hoff of Washington State College, the interpreter; S. Anderson, A. Saether, A. Werp, I. Aavatsmark, C. J. Sommerfelt. Ljoner is president of the Norwegian Union of Woodworkers. Standing, left to right, Virgil Burtz, IWA research director; Al Hartung, newly elected IWA president, and Manley Wilson, editor of the IWA newspaper, the Woodworker. IWA safety work attracted the delegates' attention.

Australians Head New Affiliates Of ICFTU

THE CONSTANTLY swelling ranks of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions notched another increase recently when the executive board, at a meeting in Brussels, Belgium, accepted the membership applications of several groups.

The largest of the newcomers was the Australian Council of Trade Unions, with about 700,000 members. The others were the Unione Italiana del Lavoro, Singapore Trades Union Congress, British Guiana Trade Union Council, Turks Islands Workers Union, Paranam Miners' Union, Guayas (Ecuador) Workers' Confederation and the following Trinidad groups: West Indian Tobacco Workers' Trade Union, Teachers' Union, Union of Commercial & Industrial Workers, and Customs Clerks & Customs Brokers Association.

The board also voted to start a worldwide campaign for labor unity. The hope is to bring together all democratic labor organizations, regardless of their other connections and their affiliation with the ICFTU, so long as they are not controlled by a government.

To assist in organization work where legitimate unions are weak, the board approved a proposal for roving representatives. The representatives will travel from country to country, or within countries, and help where their services can be utilized.

A REPORT on donations to the $700,000 regional activities fund noted that the $100,000 appropriated by the CIO had been received, and that the 100,000 pounds ($280,000) contribution of the British Trades Union Congress had been exceeded. The Canadian Congress of Labor, which has pledged $50,000, has paid in $17,000, while the Austrian Trade Union Federation was transferring $30,000.

Additional payments have been made or definitely pledged from Denmark, Germany, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, the Saar and Switzerland.

The board allocated nearly $280,000 from the funds for expenditures in the next year on organization and education. Included were grants to run the Asian regional office, for the foundation and operation of a residential training college in Asia, for sending organizers to Japan, Korea and Indonesia, for West African educational activities and establishment of a West Africa office at Accra, for education and organization in North and East Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean area, and for special organizing missions.

THE ASIAN college was given top priority in the education field. In addition, a school for the training of trade union specialists in the international field was approved. It will be set up near ICFTU headquarters in Brussels, and will concentrate on training for day to day work.

The board also accepted its Education and Publicity Committee's proposal that correspondence courses be established to complement regional educational training in English-speaking countries. The courses will be developed in collaboration with Ruskin College of Oxford (England) Univ.

CIO Gives $500 For Flood Aid In Northern Italy

A contribution of $500 has been made by the CIO for help to Italian workers who were victims of the large-scale floods in the Po Valley of Northern Italy.

The contribution, by CIO's Community Services Committee, will go to purchase of 50 CARE food packages, announced Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC national director.

The contribution was made after Victor Reuther, CIO representative in Europe, reported 150,000 were left homeless by the Po Valley floods.

Additional contributions have been sought from CIO affiliates, and one of the first such donations came from CIO members in Kansas City—who were flood victims themselves only six months ago.

Contributions should be sent to the CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 18.

Czech Unionists Come Above Ground In Opposition To Communist Rulers

By ROBERT LOUKOTA

THE MONTH of November 1951 marked a turning point in the under-cover fight of the Czech workers against their Stalinist rulers.

Until very recently, Czech labor's resistance has been mainly of the passive kind. This was enough to cause the Communists great worry, as witnessed by the newspapers and by official speeches.

Passive resistance meant, for example, that the introduction of Saturday and Sunday shifts was answered by widespread absenteeism; the speed-up ordered by the party turned into a slow-down in the plants; illegal "black" wages were wheedled out of the foremen (by putting work into a higher-paid category, blaming machines for lost time, etc.) in response to the wage freeze.

Now, however, there is an indication that this sort of passive opposition to the regime's demands will become vocal and better organized.

EVER SINCE the Stalinists conquered the free trade unions in the spring of 1948, all officers, from the president of the national federation to the shop stewards, have been elected "unanimously" from lists handed down by the authorities. These officers act as watchdogs for the Communists, their job being to insure the greatest amount of work for the least pay on the part of the workers.

An almost revolutionary change in this system occurred when the trade union organization recently decided that, on the shop level, elections of union officers were to be free. Balloting was to be secret, and the lists of candidates could be changed to include men the workers themselves will choose.

Compared to the rights enjoyed by a free labor movement, this limited privilege seems small. But in a Stalinist country of one-party rule and police terror, such a concession to pressure and dissatisfaction from "below" is quite unprecedented.

It is possible that the regime will try to use this concession politically, as a "gift" to the workers. It may also attempt to divert the workers' attention from the important problem of their working conditions and living standards to relatively minor grievances on the plant level.

Unrest among workers in Czechoslovakia, most highly industrialized of the European countries where power was seized by Russians in the guise of native Communists, has been reflected in many ways. One was the arrest of Rudolf Slansky, the vice premier and former Communist Party secretary general, late last month on the usual charges of conspiring against the people and the state. Another was the party's decision to permit the workers to elect their own shop stewards—a major reversal in the past practice of imposing them from the top. The following article on the significance of the elections was written by a young Czech refugee in Western Europe.

But it is more likely that the workers will use their chance to put their men into the lowest-level union organizations and thus gain a voice for their grievances.

In any case, the very granting of the free vote, in a spot that may affect the entire Czech economy, must be viewed as an enormous victory in the workers' stubborn battle against the oppressors of their country.

The particular significance of these union elections was recognized by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. It issued an appeal to the workers urging them to use the elections to their advantage, to eliminate the agents of Stalinism from the lists of candidates, and to replace them with men they can trust to represent their own interests.

THIS APPEAL was broadcast to Czechoslovakia. It is known that it reached its destination. It represented the first concrete step toward an active link between free labor, represented by the ICFTU, and the Czech workers.

In Czechoslovakia itself, the press has been strangely reluctant to mention the elections, apparently fearing to draw too much attention to them. Only one editorial in the leading party organ, Rude Pravo, referred to them, asking workers to vote for the Communist candidates. Members of the party, too, seem to be shirking their duty to answer anti-Stalinist arguments.

"The comrades are helpless," wrote Funkcionar, the party officials' weekly, "in the face of the enemy's dirty and false agitation."

A high official of the party recently complained about an incident in the mining district of Moravska Ostrava:

"In one shaft, a miner was making an absolutely reactionary (read anti-Communist) speech. He was surrounded by approximately 50 men, of whom 30 were Communists. There were only two men who argued with the speaker."

CIO Supports Venezuelan Plea To UN

AN APPEAL for help from organized Venezuelan workers against the brutalities visited upon them by the military junta controlling that country has been forwarded by the CIO to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, chairman of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

The plea was signed by Augusto Malave Villaba, general secretary of the Venezuelan Confederation of Labor, and Francisco Olivo, its secretary-treasurer.

It was sent to CIO Pres. Philip Murray and listed among labor leaders jailed by the military junta, the president of their organization, P. B. Perez Salinas.

"We could practically say," they wrote, "that these men are being held as hostages of the military junta, and that their lives are kept in constant danger by the threat of the dictators against them the moment the opposition forces of democracy stage acts of protest against the barbarism now reigning in our country."

Their memorandum was forwarded to Mrs. Roosevelt by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee and president of the CIO Clothing Workers. He wrote that the committee members know Malave as a "sound, democratic trade unionist," and noted that the CTV is affiliated with the ORIT, the American regional organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

A COLD PICKET LINE—Bundled up against mid-winter cold, members of Air Transport Div., CIO Transport Workers, picket the Pan American Airways office at New York's Idlewild Airport. TWA members went back to work after three-day strike, when President Truman named emergency fact-finding board. The strike crippled the Airlines' operations.

TWU Ends Pan Am Strike As Truman Names Board

AIR TRANSPORT members of the CIO Transport Workers returned to work at Pan American World Airways last week following establishment by President Truman of an emergency fact - finding board.

The strike which had crippled the operations of the giant airline, was called for Dec. 15 following breakdown of negotiations.

The union asks for $40 monthly increases for flight stewardesses and pursers and an 18c an hour boost for port stewards and mechanics. The union also asks a reduction from 85 to 70 hours a month for flight service personnel.

The fact finding board was established by executive order under provisions of the Railway Labor Act, governing collective bargaining in the railroad and air transport industries.

The act provides that the union and the company shall continue operations for 30 days while the board considers the dispute and for 30 days more while the President considers the recommendations. The recommendations however are not legally binding on either management or the union.

Union officials had termed the three-day strike "100% effective" at Pan American bases in New York, Miami, Brownsville, Tex.; San Juan, Porto Rico; San Francisco, Seattle and Honolulu.

'Backdoor' To Decontrol Fought In S. F.

"BACKDOOR" approaches to rent decontrol are being fought for the second time in a year by CIO and other labor organizations in San Francisco.

Once again organized landlords are seeking to remove existing ceilings on so-called "luxury apartments." These they define as units renting for $104 or more a month, which is twice the average rental.

They carried their case recently to San Francisco's six local rent advisory boards, meeting jointly, which last year turned down a similar proposal.

Labor spokesmen told the rent boards that "piecemeal" decontrol on top would be just a first step, if approved, toward total decontrol.

"So-called luxury units," said Frank E. White, CIO Council secretary, "are not luxury units at all. Landlords have seized upon that phrase in an immediate attempt toward eventual decontrol of all units."

The proposal also was opposed by George Johns, San Francisco AFL council secretary, and representatives of several veteran organizations. A decision on the top-bracket decontrol move is expected shortly.

'Roberts Rules' Told In Pictures In CIO Booklet

"Roberts Rules of Order"—the guide to parliamentary procedure which has confounded many a union member—now is digested in pictorial form in a new CIO publication.

Newly issued by CIO's Dept. of Education and Research, the eight-page folder explains all rules on conducting meetings in pictures, symbols, charts and a minimum of easily-understood text.

The parliamentary guide was drafted by the University of Denver.

Prices are 35c a copy from the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington.

Wood Union Thanks CIO For Help

TOP OFFICIALS of the CIO Woodworkers have formally thanked Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization, "for the magnificent contribution" made by the CIO in appointing the union's director of organization for the last 10 years.

"This helpfulness and special consideration is deeply appreciated by all of us," they said.

"Especially, we want to express our appreciation to you for assigning Adolph Germer to be our Director of Organization for most of these 10 years.

"All know and acknowledge that he has done far more than his duties required. We appreciate, more than this note can express, his excellent work, his cooperation, and his diligence has been one of the main factors in building a strong and successful union."

The letter was signed by Pres. J. E. Fadling, Vice Presidents A. F. Hartung and John Hawkins, and Sec.-Treas. Carl Winn.

Germer, a veteran union member, stepped out of the IWA post at the union's convention in September. A national CIO representative, he is now visiting councils in the Central Mountain States.

Rail Union Gains

About 500,000 members of British railway unions obtained an 8% wage increase after labor and management accepted recommendations of an independent tribunal.

McCarthy Fails To Produce Evidence On Alleged Reds

THE JUSTICE DEPT. has revealed that Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) "did not turn over his files on cases" of alleged Communists.

The department also said "it certainly is the duty" of McCarthy to turn over to the U. S. Attorney in Washington any evidence he claims to have of 205 "card-carrying Communists" in the State Dept.

Sen. Benton (D. Conn.), who has demanded the ouster of the Wisconsin smear-monger from the Senate, released a long letter he received from Asst. Attorney General James M. McInerney answering six questions the Connecticut Senator had asked.

McInerney said that any "card carrying Communists" in the government, or "members of a spy ring" or "conspirators to turn the world over to Communism" were "subject to prosecution" as felons, if there was valid evidence against them.

He added: "If an individual within the District of Columbia believes he has evidence involving breaches of Federal Law in the District of Columbia, then—as I stated above—it is his duty to report same to the proper authorities."

Referring to McCarthy's "cases" of alleged Communists, McInerney said that "most of these were old cases already investigated by the government."

Rieve Raps Okeh For New Plants

GOVERNMENT approval for the construction of new textile mills at this time, when the industry already has a serious unemployment problem because of over-production, has been criticized as "wasteful duplication" by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers.

Such a move, Rieve told Defense Production Administrator Manly Fleischmann, "would impose intolerable burdens upon workers and communities where adequate facilities are in place and fully operative."

In a telegram to Fleischmann, Rieve referred to newspaper reports that Mississippi officials are pressing for approval of allocations of critically scarce steel to permit them to build a mill for Texton, Inc., at Meridian, Miss. The city has sold $6.5 million in bonds to finance the project.

An appeal for approval of the mill was delivered to Fleischmann by Mississippi Gov. Fielding M. Wright and Meridian Mayor Laurence Paine. They reportedly claimed that the new plant was necessary "to relieve unemployment."

INSISTING upon a chance to be heard before action is taken on the request, Rieve told Fleischmann that "construction of this plant will produce further unemployment in already distressed areas such as Nashua, Manchester and Suncook, N. H., where Textron plans to abandon operations in order to move into city-built, tax-free southern mills."

He added:

"In view of critical steel shortages and painful economic dislocations, now existing, approval of new textile mills in remote areas would be wasteful duplication of productive capacity."

Earlier, the TWUA successfully protested steel allocations requested for several other new textile mills, including a Textron unit in Elizabethtown, Tenn. The union explained at the time that it favors southern industrialization, but it is opposed to new textile construction during the emergency because present capacity is more than enough to meet all possible demands.

Under present circumstances, TWUA contends, the steel required for new mills is better used for schools and construction necessary to house expanded defense production. Available supplies fall far short of meeting the latter, more urgent needs.

Tom Burke Plans To Run Again

Thomas H. Burke, the CIO Auto Worker leader who served one term in Congress, plans to run for re-election in Toledo, Ohio.

Burke, a charter member and long a leader in UAW-CIO Local 12 in Toledo, served one term in Congress from 1949-51.

Subsequently, he has served as a labor specialist in the National Production Administration, a post which he plans to resign early next month. Shortly thereafter, Burke is expected to begin his congressional campaign.

Last week Burke was honored by NPA associates at a farewell party.

Give A Buck To PAC

European Edition Begun By CIO News

THE EUROPEAN edition of the CIO News is making its bow this month in the growing field of international labor journalism.

Prepared under the direction of Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative, the new publication is printed in Paris in English, French, German and Italian. Consisting of four tabloid pages, it will appear monthly and will be distributed to trade union leaders of a dozen countries and to workers and others who request it.

The first edition is distinguished by a statement by CIO Pres. Philip Murray greeting the free workers of Europe and praising the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions as "an instrument of solidarity" that binds working men and women together in the fight for freedom and democracy.

"THROUGH that great organization of labor," he said, "the six million members of CIO have joined in fraternal union with the workers of other lands, for the defense of the basic rights of all who toil, for resistance to the blandishments of Communist totalitarianism, and for a determined advance toward the better life.

"This bulletin, which will come to you regularly from the European Office of CIO, will bring you news of the actions of our six million members in the never-ending task of enriching democracy's substance.

"We of CIO want you to know more about the great American labor movement. That movement stands four-square with you, militant unionists of western Europe, in the determination to liberate men from dictatorship and the appeal of dictatorship by fulfilling democracy's promise in every domain of our daily lives."

Wood Union Gains 20c In Canada

Members of the CIO Woodworkers employed on lumbering operations in the interior of British Columbia, Canada, have won a 20c an hour wage increase for all job catagories, according to the negotiating committee of the IWA British Columbia District Council.

The negotiations also resulted in rate adjustments in 11 wage brackets, a 4½c an hour night differential, two weeks' vacations after five years of continuous service and a strengthened union security clause.

In addition, the settlement made the grievance procedure more workable and set the rate for board and room at the camps at $2.15 a day. The pay boost raised the base rate to $1.30 an hour.

IUE Keeps Seniority Rights, Ends Strike At Westinghouse

SIX THOUSAND CIO Electrical Workers at the big Buffalo plant of Westinghouse Electric Corp. started back to work, victorious in their 11-week strike.

Settlement of the long walkout, with IUE-CIO defeating company attempts to "fragmentize" seniority and winning other gains, was unanimously approved at a Local 1581 membership meeting.

The agreement was reached after eight days of almost continuous bargaining in Washington between union and management representatives, with federal mediators participating.

A major issue in the strike was Westinghouse's demand to end plant-wide seniority, in existence for five years at the Buffalo plant, and to institute more than 50 seniority units.

The strike settlement provided for a combination of plant-wide and occupational seniority, and IUE said the agreement is "a victory for the union's demand."

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey said terms of the agreement are "very workable." Along with Carey, the union was represented in the negotiations by Benjamin Sigal, IUE general counsel, Pres. Stanley Pawlak of Local 1581, and Bill Wisniewski and John Stephens, local members.

Along with the seniority clause, under terms of the agreement are:

Grievance procedure. Satisfactory grievance machinery is now adopted after more than a year of negotiations.

Discharges. Jules Terranova, Local 1581 executive board member and member of the negotiating committee, who had been fired by management during the strike, will be reinstated immediately.

The case of Arthur Klipstein, a line steward fired before the strike, will be submitted to arbitration.

Office. The company repeated its offer to build a union office adjacent to the plant. The present union office is five miles from the plant and the company expressed the opinion that a nearby office will facilitate relationships between Westinghouse management and IUE-CIO Local 1581.

$100 A Plate For Good Cause

The first $100 a plate dinner for the labor movement—for a good cause, and with frankfurters and beans as the main dish—was held last week in Buffalo.

Originally, it was a strike relief dinner for the CIO Electrical Workers at Buffalo's Westinghouse plant, but the strike settlement turned it into a victory celebration. But the original purpose still could be carried out—to raise funds for a Christmas basket for each Westinghouse worker's family.

More than 200 Buffalo local unions, including both CIO and AFL affiliates, contributed "at least $100" for dinner tickets.

PROBLEMS confronting trade unionists of the Western Hemisphere were discussed at a board meeting of the Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) in Washington last week. ORIT is an affiliate of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, who is also chairman of the CIO Intl. Committee (second from left, sitting) led the discussion. Shown in the picture are (sitting) L. to R. Louis Martinez, Cuba; Potofsky; Auture Sabreso, ORIT chairman, Peru; Ernst Schwarz, secretary, CIO Latin American Affairs Committee; and Francisco Aguirre, ORIT general secretary, Cuba. Standing, L. to R., S. M. Shakoor, British Guiana; S. Romualdi, AFL representative; A. F. Bravo, executive assistant, ORIT, Venezuela; Dr. Orlando Gomez, Havana, Cuba, and Bernardo Ibanez, Chile. Another meeting will be held shortly.

UE Huffs, Puffs, Signs At GE For 'Famous Victory'

AT ANY RATE, "it was a famous victory"—as the old saying goes—but a few more such victories and the United Electrical Workers will be clean out of business!

A few days ago, UE quietly and without fanfare signed with General Electric Corp. for a 2.5% wage increase plus a cost of living escalator bonus.

This was the same settlement first won by the CIO Electrical Workers, which represents a majority of GE workers, back in October. It was the latest in a series of IUE-CIO gains which have brought wage boosts of from 25c to 33c an hour in the past year.

But the UE—which took a walk from CIO rather than face the music—proclaimed it would have none of it.

Loudly the UE officials denounced the IUE settlement. Loudly they talked of a strike vote. Loudly they organized demonstrations "against the wage freeze."

But General Electric workers still represented by UE remained "frozen" and turned down the strike authorization vote in a majority of locals, including Schenectady, the big GE plant.

Twice before, pointed out IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey, UE has agreed to gains won by the CIO Electrical Union in GE plants. The same development has happened at Westinghouse and Sylvania. Carey added:

"Since UE has not the brains, know-how or strength to win approval of this wage increase before the Wage Stabilization Board, IUE-CIO pledges to the rank and file in UE GE bargaining units that we will leave no stone unturned to get your wages approved."

Gas, Coke Backs IUE Strikers

The 15,000-member Union Carbide-Carbon Council of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers gave full support to CIO Electrical Workers in the recent Westinghouse strike at Buffalo, N. Y.

Action was taken at a Gas, Coke Council meeting before the strike settlement.

UAW Gains Increase In Maytag Plants

CIO Auto Workers have gained approval of the ninth regional Wage Stabilization Board for wage increases for 3500 workers in three Maytag Co. plants in Newton, Iowa. The increases will average 7c hourly.

Wood, Phone Unions Help Guild Local

THE SMALLEST local of the CIO Newspaper Guild—at Oroville in California's Sierra Nevada foothills—has won support of other CIO, AFL and independent locals in a wage showdown with a local publisher.

The Guild local, with some 10 members, recently staged a protest picket line demonstration outside the Oroville Mercury-Register plant.

Giving the Guild a hand were some 50 Oroville members of the CIO Woodworkers and the CIO Communications Workers, AFL cannery workers, and independent railroad brotherhoods.

Full thanks for such assistance was voiced by Wallace Kunkel, local Guild president.

The ANG local is deadlocked in negotiations with Publisher Dan Beebe over improving substandard wages and working conditions. The contract expired some weeks ago.

UAW Toledo Plan Okehed

MORE THAN A year after being negotiated, the Toledo Area Pension Plan won by CIO Auto Workers is now going into operation.

Functioning of the program was held up until recently, when the U. S. Treasury Dept. ruled that employer contributions to the plan are deductible for tax purposes.

U. S. approval released $162,000, which had been held in escrow, for payments to eligible retired workers.

Some 1200 workers in 19 different manufacturing firms, all represented by UAW-CIO Local 12, are covered by the program. It guarantees beneficiaries a maximum pension of $117.50 at 65 after 30 years' service, with lesser amounts for less service.

A worker can shift from one firm to another under the area pension plan and retain his benefits. Employers pay 7c hourly for the program.

William Thornton, President Of Shoe Workers, Dies

WILLIAM E. THORNTON

WILLIAM E. THORNTON, president of the CIO Shoe Workers since 1949, died at Bridgeport, Conn., last Tuesday after several months' illness. He was 59 years old.

A native of Lynn, Mass., Thornton came into the union movement from the ranks of the workers in the shoe industry. He had been employed many years in various plants in the Lynn area as a cutter, a skilled trade.

He succeeded Rocco Francescini as USWA president after the latter's death in 1948. Thornton was re-elected to the presidency last year for a two-year term.

Thornton served in various union posts before he became USWA head. During 1934 and 1935 he was president of the union's Lynn Joint Council, while USWA Sec.-Treas. James Mitchell was secretary.

He first became an official of the international when he was elected vice president. Then he was elected USWA's territorial representative for Massachusetts, one of the large centers of the shoe industry. He served in that post about 10 years.

IN AN effort to help the ECA drive for higher production and living standards, Thornton went to Paris last July. While in Europe, he served as an alternate CIO delegate to the Milan Congress of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey wired condolences to Thornton's brother, Millyde, at Lynn.

"He made a great contribution to the welfare of the shoe workers throughout America, and, as a member of the Executive Board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, did much to advance the cause of American democracy."

Besides his brother, Thornton is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Edward Murphy, at whose home he died.

USWA leaders and other officials attended funeral services at Lynn last Friday.

UPA Hails 4 As Union Builders

FOUR members of the CIO Paperworkers have been named as first winners of the Annual United Paperworkers of America Awards, given for outstanding service to the union.

Named were Clyde H. Wright, education director of Local 414, Downingtown, Pa., for "outstanding service and loyalty"; Clement A. Nitka, chairman of the organization committee of Local 1049, Elkhart, Ind., and prominent in many other local and international activities, for "outstanding service and effort"; Leroy L. Brown, editor of the Local 1208 News, Chicago, for "best news story and/or reporting to UPA-CIO News," and Toney R. Humphries, president of Local 675, Covington, Va., for "best news or publicity action on the local level."

The winners were selected from several scores of nominations sent to the union's general executive board. Each of those selected was given a $100 U. S. savings bond and a plaque.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE ISSUES in the steel situation are looming up big. Certain people in government have failed to hold the line. Some bureaucrats are of the opinion that the workers' wages can be controlled while the steel industry, as well as others, continue to get increased profits. They want to freeze labor alone, while at the same time leaving big business' price and profit structures free.

The time is here to face pertinent issues realistically. It has been pointed out time and again that steel can grant increased wages without increasing prices and still maintain a tremendous profit.

The CIO Steelworkers in their fight with the steel corporations are secure in the fact that the workers in the CIO are 100% behind them and will unite with them in this fight.

THE CIO was pleased to have as visitors and guests a delegation of trade unionists from Ireland as well as a representative of the Miners' Union in New Zealand. They are all leaving soon for their respective countries. They were greatly impressed with the accomplishments of the CIO, its great unity and strength. I wish them God's speed and every success in bringing greater benefits and security to their own union people.

I hope that by the time you read this article that each and every one of you has had a very Merry Christmas and are looking forward to a bigger and better year for yourself, your family and your union.

Protestants Get Warning On Failure In Labor Field

THE PROTESTANT churches in America have fallen down on the job of championing the rights of organized labor and minority groups, Dr. Walter G. Muelder, dean of the Boston University School of Theology, said last week.

Dr. Muelder told the Division of Home Missions of the National Council of Churches in Christ that in the southeastern states particularly, Protestantism is letting a "historic opportunity" in the field of labor relations "slip through its fingers."

In their attitude toward organized labor, said Dr. Muelder, too many Protestant leaders are "essentially blind and self-defeating."

The rapid growth in population and increasing industrialization of the South, he said, places a responsibility on the church "to assist in the constructive integration of organized labor in the whole community regardless of racial or class or religious distinction."

He also criticized the church for its failure to "implement the obvious truth" in the race relations field. "We know that ministers and laymen alike," he said, have not made realistic efforts to eliminate racial prejudice and segregation.

"While we fail in community strategy and federal policy," he added, "the whole world takes note and intensifies its distrust of our nation."

Reynolds Resigns From Labor Board

James J. Reynolds, Jr., a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the past six years, has resigned effective Jan. 1.

Gain In South By GCEOC Is Reported

THE CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee has registered important gains on the Alabama organizational and economic fronts during the past year.

Delegates to the recent first annual GCEOC state conference at Birmingham heard Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray declare that GCEOC has "the largest potential membership of any union now in existence."

Murray pointed out that since the first local was established at Bryce Institute and Partlow School for Boys in Tuscaloosa, Ala., late in 1950, "the growth of our union in Alabama has been phenomenal."

He said eight locals are now functioning, covering state hospital employes, city and county workers, county school board employes and non-teaching workers at the Univ. of Alabama.

TOPPING the list of economic gains, Murray declared, is the fact that wages at Bryce Institute have risen in the past year from starting rates of $90 and $125 to $130 and $185.

Murray said this and other gains were registered despite the fact that GCEOC locals in the state are limited to informal bargaining due to a joint resolution passed by the Alabama Legislature. The resolution prohibits recognition of unions by state, county and city governing bodies, thus banning direct collective bargaining.

The conference listed withdrawal by the Legislature of the 1939 resolution as the Number One 1952 legislative goal.

Textile Workers Star In Film For World Showing

Workers throughout the free world soon will have the opportunity to see a movie made in Hoboken, N. J., which stars union members.

The film, "Working Together," tells the relations of CIO Textile Workers Local 77A with the American Pencil Co. from the days it was forced to strike for a contract to the present period of amicable labor-management relations.

All parts were played by union members and company officials.

Starring were John Lombardo, shop steward, and Irving Zeichner, local president, who have held office since 1940.

Prints have been acquired by the Economic Cooperation Administration for showing in Europe, and its sound track is being translated into Japanese for Asian distribution.

Health Plan Expanded By ACWA In New York

Services of the Sidney Hilman Health Center will be expanded next month to cover wives of workers in the men's clothing industry, it was announced by Louis Hollander, center president and New York Joint Board manager of the CIO Clothing Workers.

In 1953, Hollander added, the ACWA-operated center will further enlarge its operations to cover children of ACWA members.

GEORGIA CIO members, attending a recent four-day PAC Institute in Atlanta, listen as Dan Powell, PAC southern representative, outlines plans for getting out the CIO vote next year. The institute was attended by 70 delegates from CIO locals throughout the state.

CIO Urges 'Strong, Bold' Leadership By Truman

THE CIO'S BROAD economic program for the crucial years immediately ahead was outlined to President Truman last week in a lengthy memorandum submitted by Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy.

Rieve, who also is president of the CIO Textile Workers and a labor member of the Wage Stabilization Board, urged the President to "continue to advocate and support good, sound domestic legislation designed to aid and strengthen our own country and our democratic institutions."

Taking note of increasing distress among lowest-income families, Rieve called upon the President to ask Congress for a rise in minimum pay rates under the Fair Labor Standards Act from 75c to $1.25 an hour.

"Just because the Congress may not be sympathetic to this type of bold program is no reason why it should be shied away from by those who are interested in the welfare of our people," Rieve said.

"During these trying times when the Congress is acting in a purely negative fashion and refuses to move forward, it is essential and necessary that strong, bold and forthright leadership be exhibited.

"If the present Congress does not go along with this bold type of leadership, the country may suffer temporarily. But I have great confidence in the way the American people will respond to forthright leadership when they are given the opportunity to pass upon it at the polls."

Rieve's call for legislative action covered unemployment, price control, wage policy, taxes, rent control and housing, tax amortization policy, social security, civil rights and minimum wages.

Taking note of widespread unemployment in such areas as Detroit, Michigan, and a number of New England industrial areas, the CIO official voiced hope the President would ask Congress for "supplementary" unemployment insurance benefits.

The needs of workers in these hard-hit areas, Rieve commented, "require immediate action, and must be handled separate and distinct from the general problem of improvements in our over-all unemployment compensation system." He also urged federalization of the present state control of unemployment insurance, or at least a set of minimum federal standards covering jobless benefits.

RIEVE reiterated previous CIO charges that the Defense Production Act is inadequate as a barrier to inflation. He urged the President to "renew your efforts" to repeal the Capehart, Herlong and Butler-Hope amendments to the law, as well as the establishment of "standby authority to deal with the problem of serious inflationary pressures in all the price fields when and if they develop."

In this connection, Rieve called for the use of subsidies, when necessary, to control retail food prices. He added that "this is the only practical means of controlling the prices of the major items which go to make up the consumers' budget."

The CIO official predicted that "if we get a successful and adequate price control program, developing wage policies would be stabilized." U. S. wage policy, he said, "must permit wages to reflect rises in the cost of living. However, the applicability of this type of policy is academic if the government, with the aid of Congress, is able to hold rises in the cost of living in check."

Rieve also called upon President Truman to seek more equitable tax policies, to close loopholes, and to "exert strong opposition to any type of federal sales or manufacturing tax, whether disguised in higher excise taxes or in the extension of excise taxes to new and additional items . . ."

STRONG and effective rent control and a large-scale defense housing program were also advocated by the CIO leader. In addition, he said the program for tax amortization certificates should be "reviewed, revised and tightened."

Rieve commented that the developing mobilization program "should not permit us to ignore the whole status of labor relations. Labor cooperation is made exceedingly difficult by the continuance of the Taft-Hartley Act. I urge you to continue to call for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and for the enactment of an equitable labor relations law based upon the policies of the Wagner Act."

2 Locals Go 100% For PAC

At opposite ends of the nation, two CIO local unions have gone over the top in PAC Voluntary Dollar Drives, it was reported last week.

Out in Oregon, a 100% PAC Dollar contribution was scored by CIO Steelworkers Local 3103, reported Joe Fedoris, local PAC chairman.

At Washington, N. C., Local 2027 of the CIO Transport Service Employees, with just 63 members, has contributed $63 in PAC dollars.

Congratulating the local, Franz E. Daniel, North Carolina State CIO-PAC chairman, said:

"If all other CIO locals did as you have done—collect a dollar from every single member—we would not now be cursed with the kind of political representation we have."

CIO Comfort Gifts For GIs Praised By Korean Chaplain

WHEN Capt. Eugene L. Lavery, a Catholic Chaplain on duty in Korea, distributes CIO Comfort Packages to the troops in his company, his heart is really in his work.

Handing the packages out brings a little touch of home to Father Lavery as he reads the enclosed card which states that they come "with the appreciation of the National CIO Community Services Committee and 6 million CIO members."

The CIO is a very familar subject to the Chaplain. His father Charles L. Lavery, 77, is a member of Local 2215 of the CIO Steelworkers in Bridgeport, Conn. and his brother Ed, is a USA representative and a former president of the Connecticut CIO Council.

Recently Father Lavery enjoyed a short visit with his parents in Bridgeport. Commenting on the CIO-CSC Comfort Packages sent to Korea, he declared:

"The packages were very well put together and were gratefully received by the servicemen to whom they were distributed. The boys appreciate the gesture of thoughtfulness very much."

Each package contains playing cards, chocolate bars, cigarettes, and a pocket sized book.

Textile Gains 5c In Viscose Plants

A one-year contract covering 15,000 employes in seven plants of the American Viscose Corp. has been approved by members of the CIO Textile Workers.

The pact brings a 5c general increase, other gains amounting to 4½c, three weeks' vacation after 15 years, and additional insurance and pension benefits.

U.S. Contracts Asked In 'Labor Surplus Areas'

A TEN-POINT program to eliminate "pools of idle manpower and facilities in the midst of generally high levels of production and employment" has been unanimously recommended by the National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee.

The committee, appointed by Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson to advise on manpower problems, has adopted a resolution calling for a greater utilization of industrial resources in "labor surplus areas" in connection with government defense contracts. It also set up a subcommittee to follow up its recommendations and press for their adoption as the government's policy.

The committee advised Wilson to direct the Labor and Defense Depts. and the Defense Manpower and Defense Production Administrations to cooperate with other interested agencies in determining the capacities of such areas and to establish procurement programs "designed to utilize these idle resources in defense production."

IT URGED that Wilson "direct the procurement agencies to utilize these pools of idle manpower and facilities to the greatest extent possible."

Before additional new defense plants or expansions are authorized, the committee said, production should be directed "to the fullest extent possible" into existing facilities with available manpower.

The committee told Wilson that whenever work under any defense contract would best utilize manpower by being performed in an area of labor surplus, he should direct the contractor to carry out the work in the designated locality.

CIO members of the National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee are Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union and CIO Director of Education and Research Stanley Ruttenberg. Katherine Ellickson of the CIO Education and Research Dept. is an alternate member.

ADA Urges Repeal Of Smith Act

AMERICANS FOR Democratic Action, anti-Communist liberal organization, has joined the CIO, American Civil Liberties Union and other non-Communist organizations in the fight for repeal of the Smith Act.

The 1940 law, under which 11 top Communist leaders were convicted last year, makes it unlawful for persons to advocate or teach overthrow of the United States government by force or violence.

"We oppose the Smith Act because it proposes to prosecute people for what they think and say rather than what they do," "ADA National Chairman Francis Biddle, former attorney general, declared.

The ADA warned that "in our concern with the immediate dangers of Communist subversion" the great danger is that the American people will adopt the methods of the Communists.

The organization said it recognized the need "for drastic protection against acts of sabotage and espionage," but pointed out that "the American Communist Party is the feeblest Communist Party in any major country."

NOV. 4 IS THE DAY! Here's a drawing, and typical registration table, from CIO-PAC's 1952 Voters' Calendar. (See Page 2.)

'Hold The Line'—How About It?

PRICES . . .

Prices? They aren't just going up; they aren't just jumping over the moon. They're headed for the faintest constellation in outer space!

That's indicated by the latest cost-of-living estimate in the monthly consumer price index of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

For nearly every month for a year, the BLS index has hit a new record.

And the latest period, from Oct. 15 to Nov. 15, was no exception. During that month, the BLS index climbed .6%.

The new BLS index—based on revised consumer buying habits—hit a new peak of 188.6.

The old BLS index—on which many union escalator clauses are based—went even higher to 189.3% of the 1935-39 living cost level. That was a climb of .8%.

Since war began in Korea, the BLS index has climbed 10.8%—and each one-point rise in that figure, it has been estimated, costs U. S. consumers $2 billion in higher living costs.

Cumulative figures on the new BLS index:

Period	Index	Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4	1950: Jan. 15	166.9
1943 monthly average	123.6	Feb. 15	167.9

LAYOFFS . .

Prices are going up. Dividends are going up.

So is unemployment — and the work week of factory workers is going down.

Two reports of the U. S. Dept. of Labor last week told the story.

One said that the work week dropped to an average of 40.3 hours in November. That was a drop of nearly one hour over the previous month.

Major cause was a sharp decline in consumer goods industries, particularly textiles, clothing and leather. There employment has dropped by 225,000 worker in the past year.

The second report said that non-farm employment has declined by 100,000 in the month to mid-November. Layoffs in consumer goods production again were cited, particularly in the auto industry.

PROFITS . . .

By Labor Press Associated

Controls and high taxes are "ruining" business so terribly that cash dividend payments by corporations in October averaged 7% higher than in October, 1950, the Dept. of Commerce has announced. announced.

This October's total was $533 million; last year's, $496 million. Dividends in the finance group were up almost 20%; in communications, almost 24%.

For the first 10 months of 1951, cash dividends were 9% higher as a whole than for the same period in 1950, or $6.024 billion against $5.543 billion.

The railroads, which keep demanding rate increases, increased dividends 31% in the first 10 months over 1950; mining dividends went up 21%; oil refining went up 22%; non ferrous metals 21%; transportation equipment 15%.

Following table shows publicly-reported cash dividend payments by industry groups (in millions of dollars):

CIO Donates $10,000 To Miners' Kin

WHILE federal and state officials were seeking the cause of the explosion that killed 119 coal miners at West Frankford, Ill., CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week announced the contribution of $10,000 to the victims' families.

The money was given to Local 1265 of the United Mine Workers for distribution.

Murray said that through this $10,000 contribution the members of the CIO wished "to express their deep sense of sympathy and fraternity with the families of the victims of this disaster." He added that although "nothing can replace the lives" of the miners, CIO members trusted that "our gift will help to lessen, in some small degree the suffering that this accident has created."

Murray said that he hoped that the latest—and one of the most deadly—explosions in a long series of mine disasters "will now shock the Congress into passage of an adequate federal mine safety law."

"Such a law," he added, "is overdue; it is necessary to stop, once and for all, needless deaths in the coal mines of this country. If a federal mine safety law is now written on the statute books, the families of the West Frankford miners will at least have the comfort that fathers and husbands have not died in vain."

Reuther Asks Michigan Act On Auto Layoffs

PRES. WALTER P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers last week urged Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan to call a statewide conference of all groups directly or indirectly affected by the spreading problem of unemployment.

At the same time Williams, with Sen. Moody (D. Mich.) met in a series of conferences with President Truman, Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson and others in Washington, and pleaded that a rumored further sharp cut in auto production be held up until a "showdown meeting" with labor and management in the industry.

Already, they said, there are 130,000 jobless in Detroit. The prospect of further cuts in auto production may send the figure above the 200,000 mark, they stressed.

Reuther's proposal was made in "the interest of minimizing the economic hardship faced by thousands of Michigan families and also to minimize the economic loss to our mobilization effort."

He suggested that invitations be extended to representatives of management, labor and retail industry; mayors of all Michigan cities with unemployment problems; Moody and Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.); the Michigan congressional delegation; the leaders of both parties in both houses of the State Legislature, and defense mobilizaton officials from Washington.

"The economic dislocation and mass unemployment we face," Reuther wrote Williams, "is a challenge to all the people in our State and I am sure you agree that it transcends the interests of partisan politics.

"The unemployment crisis in Michigan has been made serious and will continue for a longer period because corporations and companies having their major civilian operations in Michigan have placed a disproportionate share of their defense work in plants outside Michigan.

"DESPITE reasons that may have motivated these companies to place a disproportionate share of their defense work outside the areas in which their major civilian operations are located and in which thousands of workers are being laid off, there can be no economic or moral justification for continuing this policy in the face of the castastrophic unemployment and loss of productive man-hours that face us."

Williams and Moody already had laid plans to tackle the issue, respectively, in the Legislature and in Congress.

Williams intends to ask for higher jobless benefits and extension of the period of coverage. Present maximum is $27 a week for the worker and $2 each for up to four dependents.

Moody plans to introduce an amendment to the Social Security Act providing for additional benefits for workers made jobless because of the mobilization program.

PAC Issues '52 Voter Calendar

Electioneering is made easy—almost—in the 1952 Voters' Calendar newly-issued by the CIO Political Action Committee.

Illustrated by Leo Hershfield, the calendar, on each of its six sheets, gives state-by-state registration dates and other election deadlines for each two-month period of the year.

Copies of the calendar, at 15c each, may be ordered from CIO-PAC, 1346 Connecticut Ave. N.W., Washington, D. C.

UPWA Pushes Demands As AFL Butchers Sign

CIO PACKINGHOUSE Workers officials continued negotiations with representatives of the Big Four meat packers last week despite acceptance by the AFL Meat Cutters and Butchers of a 6c an hour wage boost offered by Swift & Co.

The increase is expected to set the pattern for AFL agreements with Armour & Co., Cudahy Packing Co., and Wilson, the other members of the Big Four.

PRES. RALPH Helstein of the CIO union greeted the announcement of the settlement by charging that the AFL union "has sold at bargain prices the UPWA demands for a guaranteed annual $3000 wage and other benefits.

"The packers have made themselves a good deal," he said. "The AFL union has wilted before the company's demands at the expense of their members."

The AFL increase covers 5000 Swift packing house workers in 12 plants including 1200 in the company's St. Louis stockyards. It was made retroactive to Dec. 17 and is subject to ratification by local unions.

UPWA has an industry-wide membership of more than 150,000, including workers in allied industries. Approximately 80,000 are involved in current negotiations with the Big Four and leading independents, including about 25,000 in Chicago.

Shortly before the Swift settlement was made known, Helstein had revealed the results of a strike vote taken of UPWA members. He said the vote was "better than 2 to 1" in favor of a strike to enforce the CIO union's demands.

UPWA proposals, in addition to a guaranteed $3000 minimum annual wage, call for time and one half for Saturday work, elimination of geographical wage differentials, correction of job inequities and elimination of wage differentials based on sex.

Helstein pointed out that in 1949, one third of the union's members received an average of $2500. "We want to get a guaranteed year-round income for our members," he said.

The last country-wide packing house strike was called by UPWA on Mar. 16, 1948. The 10 week walkout was broken when the AFL Meat Cutters agreed to settle on terms generally unacceptable to the CIO union.

Steel Union Meets; Strike Postponed

CIO STEELWORKERS late last week called off a New Year's Day deadline for a national strike of 700,000 steel workers—but postponed until a special union convention decision on settling the bargaining deadlock through the Wage Stabilization Board.

The USA-CIO's special convention, with 3000 delegates participating, will be held as scheduled on Jan. 3-4 in Atlantic City.

Decision to call off the Jan. 1 strike date was announced by USA Pres. Philip Murray after meetings of the steel union's Executive Board and Intl. Wage-Policy Committee. The meetings were held in Pittsburgh on Dec. 27.

In agreeing to stay on the job—as requested earlier by President Truman—the Steelworkers struck out at steel industry management for its flat refusal to bargain directly.

The policy committee charged the industry with relying "on the country's need for steel in order to undermine the very principles of freedom which we are seeking to defend."

Then the union declared:

"Notwithstanding the industry's strike against collective bargaining which is now going on, the President's request to the union to continue at work and to submit the case on its merits to the Wage Stabilization Board is entitled to and will receive from our great organization every full measure of consideration."

Convention Decides

Specific action of the policy committee was to authorize and direct the 700,000 workers in the basic steel industry "to continue at work under the terms and conditions of the contracts which expire on Dec. 31 until a special international convention has made an appropriate answer and that answer has been communicated to the President of the United States."

The statement by the USA-CIO Wage-Policy Committee, issued after the Dec. 27 meeting, reviewed the previous call for the special convention and subsequent developments. It said:

"Because of the seriousness of the situation we directed Pres. Philip Murray to call a special international convention of the union on Jan. 3, 1952, the earliest possible date a convention could be called.

"We deemed it essential that the membership of the organization should have a final voice in determining the course our union should pursue."

The committee related how the steel companies refused to make any offer at a meeting of the union and the companies called in Washington by Federal Mediator Cyrus Ching.

On the evening of the second and final day of the mediation sessions, the committee related, "Benjamin Fairless, president of the United States Steel Corp., who had not seen fit to participate either in the conferences or the mediation sessions, did make what he termed to be an 'offer'."

"This despite Mr. Fairless's assertion to the contrary, had never been made to the union. We first saw it in Mr. Fairless' press release.

"In his statement, Mr. Fairless said that U. S. Steel would forego a price increase for steel if the union would give up wage and other economic demands. Mr. Fairless' 'offer' was a fraud."

The union committee also said that U. S. Steel and the rest of the industry "have been desperately seeking to obtain price increases."

"The government's stabilizers have turned them down because of the steel industry's tremendous profits," the committee continued.

"Government economists estimate the industry's 1951 earnings at $2.6 billion. This is $1.2 billion more than the fair profit level used by the government to determine whether any price increase is warranted.

"At the same time it is clear (and begrudgingly recognized in Mr. Fairless' statement) that Steelworkers' real wages have declined during the past year and that a wage increase is justified under existing stabilization regulations.

"Mr. Fairless, in short, proposed that the steel industry give up nothing in prices if the Steelworkers would give up the something in wages to which they clearly are entitled."

The committee described as "phony" the "alleged concern of the U. S. Steel about inflation. The industry did not show this concern until the government turned down its request for a price increase. The industry did not show this concern when Congress was considering genuine control over prices. . . .

"The Steelworkers' union on the contrary was really concerned with inflation throughout this emergency. . . .

"The Steelworkers' union will not permit itself to be used as a cat's paw so that the industry may obtain unjustified price increases to the detriment of the consumers and the defense program. . . .

"The only way open to the union to meet this flagrant disregard by the industry of its legal and contractural obligations was for this Intl. Wage-Policy Committee to direct that a special convention of the union be convened on Jan. 3 to take appropriate action, and pending the convention, to reaffirm the union's traditional policy of not working in the absence of a contract."

The committee pointed out that—subsequent to its Dec. 17 meeting—President Truman, in his appeal to the union to remain at work pending a Wage Stabilization Board hearing, "recognized that the companies in fact had refused to bargain with the union on its wage and other economic demands, and that the industry was insisting upon prior price guarantees before even talking wages. . . .

Truman Appeals

"Nevertheless, the President appealed for uninterrupted production of steel by the union 'in order to meet urgent demands for steel—steel for weapons, for factories, for highways and hospitals and schools'."

The committee said that because the "United Steelworkers' is a responsible and patriotic organization," it decided to direct union members to continue to work under the old contract until the special convention meets.

President Truman's request that the steel union call off the strike deadline in "the national interest" was made Dec. 22 after brief federal mediation efforts broke down.

Representatives of U.S. Steel Corp., Bethlehem and other big producers had nothing more to say when called in by federal officials than they did when meeting directly with the Steelworkers in the past month.

And that was a flat "no" to the USA's proposals for "22 in '52"— a score of improvements headed by a 15c hourly general wage increase, the union shop, elimination of wage inequities, and better shift, holiday and vacation benefits.

Warning that the deadlock "gravely threatens the progress of national defense," Mr. Truman referred the steel contract situation to the Wage Stabilization Board. While a special panel of the WSB would have the power to recommend a settlement, it would not be binding on either the union or steel management.

In sending the dispute to the WSB, Mr. Truman said:

"It is of the utmost importance to prevent an interruption in the production of steel. Steel is a key material in our entire defense effort.

"Every day of steel production lost is a day lost forever in the achievement of our production schedules . . .

For the first time, Mr. Truman raised the possibility of a steel price increase—for which steel management had demanded an iron clad guarantee before it would even bargain with the USA-CIO. He said:

"After the decision is reached (by the WSB) as to wages, the Office of Price Stabilization will be responsible for determining whether or not any wage increase justifies a price increase."

Mr. Truman said "the steel companies will get price increases if they are entitled to them" but he added "no other advance assurances are necessary."

OPS has set up profits standards to judge price boost requests. Under the Defense Production Act, price increases supposedly are to be denied if the dollar profits of the steel industry are 85% of the average earnings from 1947-49.

According to daily press quotation of a report by Price Administrator Michael DiSalle, "steel industry profits are running far above the industry earnings standard. . . . The excess over that standard is so large that the industry clearly can absorb any reasonable probable wage increase with a substantial margin left over for other cost increases."

Fairless Invited As Parley Speaker

Benjamin F. Fairless, president of the U. S. Steel Corp., may be a speaker at the CIO Steelworkers' special convention in Atlantic City, N. J., this week.

Philip Murray, USA-CIO president, invited him to address the convention after the union's Wage-Policy Committee called off the strike scheduled for New Year's Day.

"Following your address," Murray said in a telegram, "we hope that you will be able to remain for the entire convention and participate in the discussions. You can be assured that every courtesy will be accorded you at the convention."

Action On Strike Hailed By Truman

Decision of the Wage-Policy Committee of the CIO Steelworkers to call off the strike scheduled for Jan. 1 was made known to President Truman at Independence, Mo., by USA Pres. Philip Murray.

"I am happy," said Mr. Truman, "there will be no steel strike on Jan. 1 and I am hopeful there will be no steel strike at all."

Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam characterized the committee's decision as "a wonderful New Year's gift to the American people and to the cause of world freedom."

Take A Look At The Figures—Then Judge Steel Union's Case

ANYBODY who thinks U. S. Steel can't afford to give the CIO Steelworkers a thumping good pay increase can easily prove himself mistaken.

All he has to do is take figures from the company's financial reports, strip them of the flapdoodle corporations use to conceal their true status from everybody but the Internal Revenue Bureau, buy himself a lead pencil and do a little elementary figuring.

He should also remember that when he's talking about wage increases, it's the employer's profit before taxes—not after taxes—that's important. Because wages, like other costs of operating, are deducted before taxes are computed.

U. S. Steel's profit before taxes for the first nine months of this year was $429,733,557. That's at the rate of $572,978,076 for the full year if the pace set in the first nine months is maintained. The figure compares to a total of $483,159,584 profit before taxes earned in all of 1950. The difference is about 18.6%. In other words, business is booming.

Those aren't the figures U. S. Steel tells to the stockholders and the public. They have been deflated of the flapdoodle.

IT SEEMS there's a gimmick accountants use called the accelerated depreciation charge. They use it to boost the depreciation item in the breakdown of operating expenses, and it's perfectly legal so long as they don't use it on the tax collector.

The rate of depreciation is the rate at which new facilities become theoretically obsolete. The tax laws allow a 4 to 5% rate. U. S. Steel, by use of a complicated formula, has been allowing 14 to 15% in its reports for public consumption. The tax laws allow the cost of a plant or facility to be written off in about 20 years. U.S. Steel's method writes off the cost in about seven years.

(This, incidentally, has nothing to do with the rapid amortization permitted under current tax legislation.)

Thus the figures the public gets as profits—either before or after taxes—are too low. And the figure before taxes is not the one on which taxes are actually paid.

It isn't impossible roughly to estimate how much a substantial wage increase would cost the company and to see what it would do to the profit figures.

In 1950, U. S. Steel employes covered by the USA contract worked 568.1 million manhours. They averaged in number 288,265 over the year. Employment has since grown to 307,678 workers in the third quarter of 1951.

So an estimate of 625 million manhours for all of 1951 is not unreasonable. A little pencil and paper work (or, rather, a lot of it), shows that each 1c per hour increase would cut profits before taxes by about $6.25 million.

Thus an increase of 20c an hour would cost the company about $125 million. Subtracting this from the anticipated $572.9 million in profits before taxes, based on earnings during the first nine months of 1951, would leave about $448 million.

The net — after taxes — profit figures show a relatively lighter tap, although it is impossible to wring out all the flapdoodle from 1951 reports because of the increase in corporation taxes.

But the published figures for the first three quarters of 1951 show net earnings at the annual rate of $179,644,744 for the full year. This compares with published profits of $215,464,142 in 1950 and de-flapdoodled or actual profits of $249,159,584.

Each 1c increase in wages would cost about $2 million in net profits. Therefore a 20c increase, in effect for a full year, would cost about $40 million and would reduce the corporation's own profit figures to about $140 million for 1951.

This is more than the company's net earnings in any recent year except 1949 and 1950.

There is just one final thing to remember. These rough estimates assume U. S. Steel would absorb a wage increase out of profits instead of boosting prices.

It has never done this—and industry spokesmen this year have said they would again refuse to do it. So in case of a pay boost, profits both before and after taxes probably wouldn't drop appreciably.

The Public Interest

If anyone ever had any doubts about the accuracy of the United Labor Policy Committee's charges when it pulled its representatives out of the government's defense agencies last February, those doubts can now be completely dispelled.

At the time of its walkout, the ULPC charged that big business was running the defense program for its own ends, and that those ends were anti-labor. It pointed out that labor had no voice at all in drawing up the policies governing the defense production effort, and that under Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson's leadership only the big business viewpoint was being applied to mobilization problems.

In this issue, The CIO News tells how Wilson himself, just before he was appointed to the defense mobilization job, helped big business representatives draw up a plan to use the government's defense program for its own frankly anti-labor purposes.

By its own plan—and in its own words—big business convicts itself of labor's charges. As unemployment in key industrial centers continues to mount, the dangerous extent to which the big business plan "to offset the growing power of labor" has been adopted becomes all too obvious.

The business men who run the mobilization program should pay some attention to the broad public interest. Too many of them have used the defense crisis chiefly to further their own union-busting racket at the taxpayers' expense.

Death In The Mines

Periodically the nation is shocked by death and disaster in industry—and then forgets the matter.

Such was the situation, a few years ago, when smog suffocated Donora, Penn.

Such, last week, was the mine tragedy at West Frankfort, Illinois, where an explosion killed 119 members of the United Mine Workers.

The morgue that is Orient No. 2 mine shocked America at holidaytime.

But the question, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray suggested, is whether the shock of this latest in a long series of mine disasters will shock Congress into writing a strong federal mine safety law on to the books.

And this Congress—on any matter in the people's interests—appears to be almost shock proof. It's time that Congress changed.

Time To Stop It!

The Christmas Day murder of Harry T. Moore, Negro civic official in Florida, and the Christmas Eve slaying of Lowell Simmons, official of the CIO Textile Workers in Tennessee, made a mockery of the Christmas spirit in two southern states.

Moore had been seeking justice for Samuel Shepherd, a Negro prisoner slain by a Florida sheriff, and Simmons was shot by an non-union employe at a plant where a strike had been in progress about eight weeks.

This wave of violence must stop.

CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey, in protesting the Florida outrage, was right when he said:

"The failure of Congress to act on this whole question of civil rights . . . is a contributing cause to these outbursts of violence in Florida."

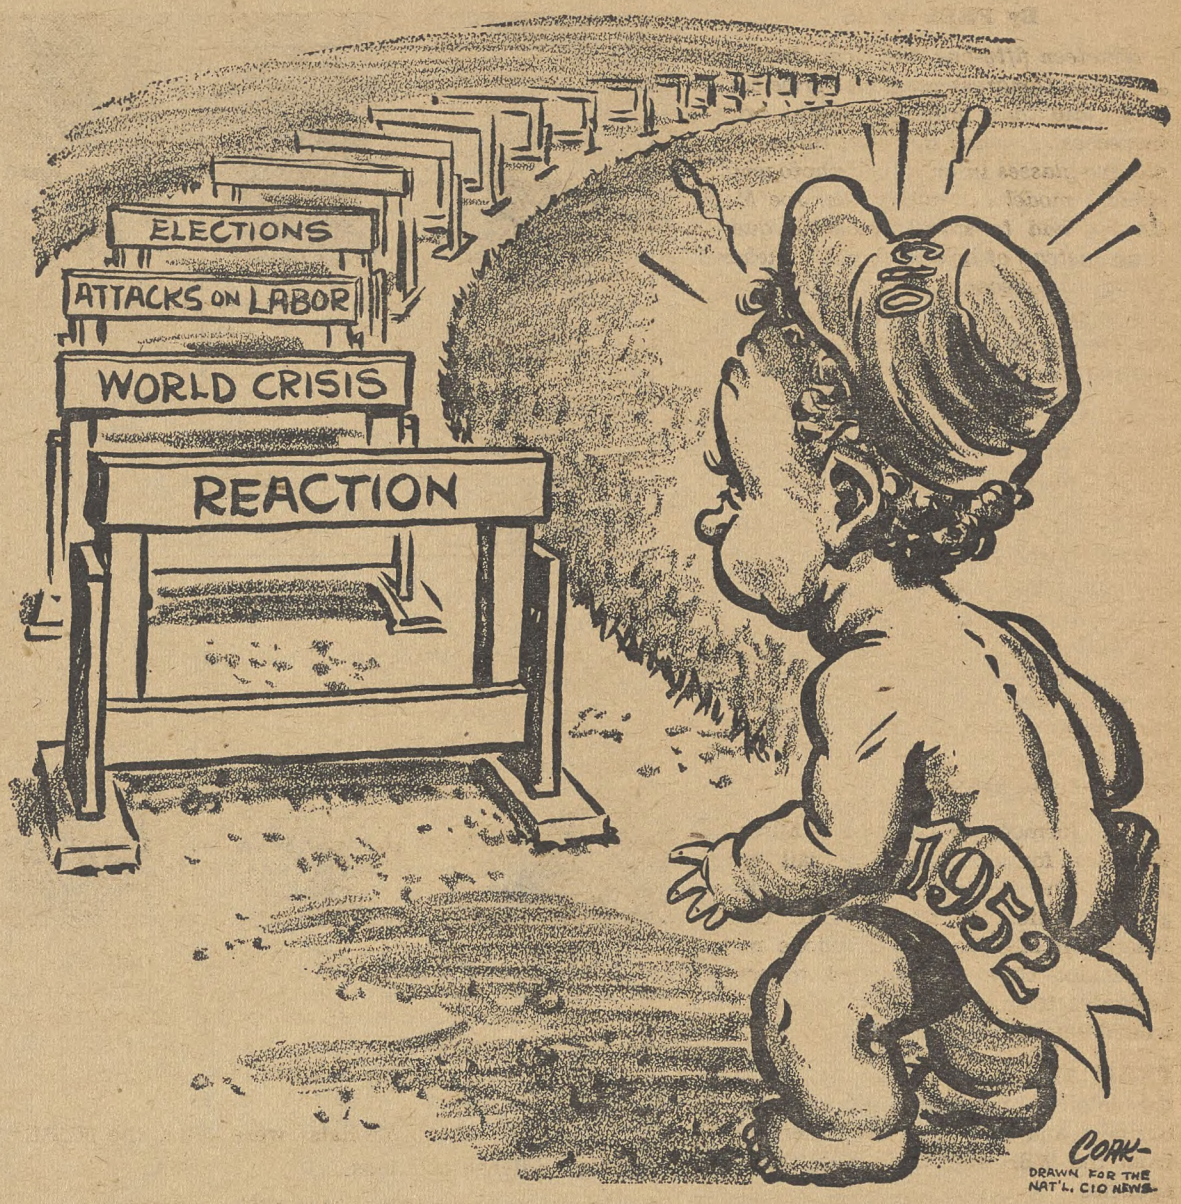
A Real Leap Year Ahead!



The Steel Myth Dissembled

Following are excerpts from "Steel: A Myth Exposed," an article in the New Republic written by Harry Conn, a member of the staff of the Public Affairs Institute and formerly on the staff of the CIO Textile Workers. It shows how the steel industry can give the CIO Steelworkers a a substantial wage increase without being forced to raise prices, and how such an increase is approvable under existing Wage Stabilization Board regulations.

THE CIO UNITED Steelworkers are entitled to receive a 15c-an-hour wage increase as the result of the critical negotiations now in progress regarding basic steel. The steel industry can absorb such an increase without raising prices, and approval of the increase is fully justifiable within the prevailing anti-inflation policies of the Wage Stabilization Board.

These conclusions were reached after discussions with outstanding economists of varying shades of economic service. This is not a prophecy; it is an estimate of a fair and just settlement.

The nation's press and radio have been telling a vastly different story on the wage rights of the Steelworkers and the absorption power of the industry. By strait-jacketing the WSB with the strictest possible interpretation of its policy, they have calculated that the maximum which can be approved is in the neighborhood of 4 to 6c an hour.

If one applies the most generous interpretation to WSB policy, it is possible to arrive at an 18.5c-an-hour increase. Such a figure, however, falls as far short of a just settlement on one side as the 6c proposal does on the other. And a 15c increase is simply an accumulation which the WSB yardstick indicates belongs rightfully to the Steelworkers.

All that the hard-pressed consumer would ask of the steel industry is that its prices be "generally fair and equitable" and that it not impede production. This principle is set forth in the Defense Production Act and has been translated into a guide for the Price Stabilizer by the Economic Stabilization Administrator. Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson detailed this guide in his "Second Quarterly Report to the President" last July 1:

"The level of price ceilings for an industry shall normally be considered 'generally fair and equitable' under the Defense Production Act if the dollar profits of the industry amount to 85% of the average for the industry's best three years during the period 1946-49 inclusive. The profits should be figured before federal income and excess-profits taxes and after normal depreciation only, with adjustments made for any changes in net worth."

With figures supplied by the annual statistical reports of the American Iron & Steel Institute, we followed this guide. Based on reports of 49 major companies which produce 85% of U. S. finished-steel tonnage, we took 1947-49 as the best years.

Conservatively, and considering possible increased costs and contingencies for error, these 49 major steel companies could give their workers a 35c hourly increase without being entitled to a price increase under the above guide. A 35c figure (also) is conservatively acceptable based on anticipated 1951 earnings.

MANY OBSERVERS feel that a peaceful settlement of the steel negotiations hinges on acceptance of the improvement factor in production by the companies. At the presently agreed upon rate of a 2.5% increase per annum for the economy as a whole, and with the present hourly pay for steel in the neighborhood of $1.88, this would mean a 4.5c-an-hour increase.

This is not all. Also within the framework of WSB policy, the Steelworkers could conceivably justify an additional 14c an hour based on the 10% "catch-up" provision and the cost of living formula laid down by the WSB.

Another section of this same regulation carries a provision which permits a readjustment of the base date where there is plainly an "abnormal pay level." Since the base date is January and the union contract was not signed until the following December, the union has a case. It is aided by the fact that the 1949 contract contained no actual wage increase. A readjustment is fully merited. This could mean 9c an hour to the workers by reverting back to the BLS Index, or a total increase of 14c to compensate for the rise in the cost of living.

So, under a policy designed to facilitate the stability and growth of the economy, it is possible for the Steelworkers to obtain an increase of 18½c in their hourly wage rate next year.

The 15c raise would be a compromise answer during an emergency in a give-and-take economy.

1951 — The Year Of The Horsemeat Congress

By FRED ROSS

Nineteen fifty-one, that was the year . . . when Congress passed a "price control" law that brought mainly price increases . . . when Bob Taft turned his old eye-glasses in on a new photogenic, rimless model . . . when Sen. Joe McCarthy had to start answering questions instead of asking them . . . when mink coats became an article of faith. All in all, it wasn't a very good year for labor. Here are some of the things that happened:

JANUARY had a major problem inherited from 1950—rising prices because effective price regulation was impossible under the 1950 control law.

The United Labor Policy Committee —which represented 16 million members of the CIO, AFL and the railroad brotherhoods — said that if workers' wages are to be stabilized, there must be adequate price control. ULPC threatened to withdraw labor members from the Wage Stabilization Board and other defense agencies.

CIO formed the United Railroad Workers for non-operating rail employes. The first Inter-American Regional Conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions met in Mexico City and refused to seat delegates from Argentina's Peron-controlled unions.

FEBRUARY: The ULPC charged that the defense program was run by big business and withdrew labor members from the WSB and other mobilization agencies.

Labor dissatisfaction was brought to a head by a proposed "tough" wage formula. Seventy thousand CIO Textile Workers struck American Woolen Co. mills, which used the wage freeze as an excuse to stall negotiations. Two CIO unions—the Auto Workers and the Electrical Workers—threatened to strike to protect wage escalator clauses in their contracts.

A Senate Elections subcommittee opened hearings on the Maryland Senatorial campaign in which Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), Fulton Lewis, Jr., and Hearst and McCormick newspapers teamed up to defeat Sen. Tydings by using such devices as a phony composite picture of Tydings and Communist Earl Browder.

MARCH saw almost 1000 local CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhood leaders meet in Washington to map labor's campaign for a new more effective Defense Production Act. Economic Stabilizer Eric Johnston ruled escalator clauses negotiated before Jan. 25 could operate until June 30.

TWUA won a 12c hourly wage increase after a 30-day strike at American Woolen Co. plants, and the CIO Steelworkers gained a 16c hourly raise after a 38-day walkout at the Schenectady and the Auburn, N. Y., plants of the American Locomotive Co. A strike of 25,000 Rubber Workers was averted when Goodyear became the first of the "Big Four" in rubber to agree to a union shop.

Former Sen. Graham (D. N. C.) was named defense manpower administrator in the Labor Dept.

APRIL'S last day brought an end to ULPC's six-week boycott of defense agencies when labor officials were given high defense positions.

A PICTURE OF THE YEAR—Two Washingtonians, Bob King and Martha Willis, grin in appreciation as a Capital restaurant pokes some fun at "the horsemeat congress." Samuel Rosenberg, the restaurant manager in window beside sign, appropriately offers horsemeat steaks to lawmakers who voted price-boosting law in guise of anti-inflation measure.

Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers became special assistant to Economic Stabilizer Johnston, and Pres. George M. Harrison of the AFL Railway Clerks was made special deputy to Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson. Earlier labor agreed to serve on the Mobilization Advisory Board with CIO Pres. Philip Murray and UAW Pres. Walter Reuther among the labor members named.

Thirty-five national organizations, including CIO and AFL unions, asked the President to set up an FEPC to help fight discrimination.

The Federal Trade Commission put its foot down on the Acme Brewing Co., San Francisco, for advertising that its brew was "dietatically non-fattening" without qualification. FTC said that "beer has a tendency to stimulate the appetite of many customers."

MAY found three CIO leaders—TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers and UAW Vice Pres. John Livingston—serving on the new 18-member Wage Board.

Dr. George W. Taylor, chairman of the new WSB, announced stabilization doesn't mean an "absolute freeze" of wages. The board approved a 9c an hour raise for CIO and AFL packinghouse workers, and a million UAW members got a 3c hourly increase under escalator clauses in their contracts.

The National Association of Broadcast Engineers and Technicians affiliated with the CIO. The Supreme Court ruled that top CIO and AFL officers must sign non-Communist affidavits to enable affiliated unions to use the NLRB under the Taft-Hartley Act.

JUNE'S hot weather did not prevent Congress from turning a deaf ear to pleas of the President, defense officials and labor for stronger controls and from extending the old Defense Production Act for 30 days with a prohibition against further price rollbacks.

The CIO put on the heat for stronger controls by holding an anti-inflation conference in Washington attended by 250 state and local CIO leaders from all parts of the country.

WSB approved for 25,000 members of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers a 15% raise which had been negotiated in February. A 10-day strike of 80,000 CIO merchant seamen, engineers and radiomen on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts won a 40-hour week and pay raises.

JULY'S heat did not deter Congress from passing a weakened version of the Defense Production Act, containing a series of price-raising amendments. But the anti-labor Lucas Amendment was defeated.

ICFTU at its Milan meeting turned down a bid for cooperation from the Communist-dominated World Federation of Free Trade Unions, and mapped new plans for helping unions in underdeveloped areas.

AUGUST was a black month for labor because of the breakup of the ULPC, precipitated by the withdrawal of the AFL. A million UAW members got another 1c raise under the escalator clauses in their contracts.

The CIO Rubber Workers won a 12c hourly wage boost from U. S. Rubber and Firestone. WSB approved continuance of escalator clauses in union contracts and a 9c an hour increase for CIO Textile Workers in woolen mills.

The CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee negotiated its first big pact—an agreement which made John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co.'s industrial insurance agents the highest paid in the business.

SEPTEMBER was marked by the convention of the fast-growing CIO Electrical Workers at Buffalo, where CIO Pres. Murray asserted that Congress was sending the nation's economy "to hell on roller skates." The CIO charged the new tax bill was a pay cut and asked six major improvements.

Defense officials—after a 43-day delay—finally put the new rent control law into effect, by beginning to certify "critical" defense areas for rent control.

OCTOBER brought the adjournment of the "Horsemeat Congress" after it rushed through a tax bill which placed the burden of increased taxation on lower income groups.

President Truman signed a bill which validated some 4600 union shop contracts signed by CIO unions before national CIO officers swore to non-Communist affidavits. The bill also abolished the union shop elections required under T-H.

NOVEMBER: CIO's 13th annual convention was held in New York—and observers noted the organization was keeping up its old crusading spirit and practical idealism.

Convention approved a unique plan for avoiding jurisdictional disputes, to which affiliates gave full blessing. Convention also adopted a statement on ethical standards, which warned that CIO would move firmly against any attempted infiltration by racketeering elements.

CIO national officers were re-elected, and Allan S. Haywod, director of organization, was named to new post of executive vice-president.

DECEMBER found CIO Steelworkers opening a bitter battle to win substantial wage increases, guaranteed annual wage and other improvements from steel industry. Pres. Murray accused steel firms of failing to engage in "honest collective bargaining"—and union warned that in absence of contract after midnight Dec. 31, steelworkers would leave their jobs. But on Dec. 27 strike action was held up so a special union convention could decide the next move.

At year's end, unions protested growing unemployment in many large industrial areas, while firms with tax rebates built new plants in rural, non-union areas.

And, in the spirit of good will to men, CIO contributed $100,000 to a special international labor fund to help bring benefits of democratic unionism to areas of Asia, Middle East and Africa where crucial contest between democracy and Soviet communism affects the future destiny of every human being.

Such were some of the highlights of 1951. Here's hoping '52 will be better! But meantime—

Happy New Year!

Story Of A Secret Meeting And

Charles Wilson Joined With Tycoons To Seek Curb On 'Growing Power' Of Trade Unions

By MILTON PLUMB

JUST THREE months before he became Director of Defense Mobilization, Charles E. Wilson actively helped—at a "closed" meeting of big business tycoons—draw up a detailed blueprint of openly anti-labor plans and strategy to be followed by industry in the mobilization program.

The policies developed by these leading big business spokesmen have since been clearly reflected in the national policies which Wilson's government agencies have followed in connection with the defense effort.

Among the announced ends of the program—in the blueprint's own blunt words—are (1) "to make sure that the national defense crisis is met with a maximum preservation of individual initiative and business freedom" but (2) "to offset the growing power of labor."

Even the business men who called the meeting, and later published its recommendations, reports and a partial transcript of the discussions, refer to it as "highly revealing" and "extraordinary."

They call the industry bigwigs who took part in the "round table" which shaped the plan, "the most distinguished group ever assembled to consider industry's part in a national emergency."

The meeting took place—more than a year ago—on Sept. 20, 1950. This was just before the government's defense mobilization program got under way. It was sponsored by multi-millionaire Publisher Henry R. Luce's magazine for the building industry, "Architectural Forum."

The industrialists, bankers, contractors, material dealers and producers, home builders and others who attended are a leading cross-section of big business spokesmen. Labor, small business and consumers' organizations—since kicked around in the big business administration of the mobilization effort—of course, were not represented.

Oak-Paneled Luxury

According to the "Report on the Round Table," the 14 men who shaped the plan "assembled at New York City's stately University Club and for 12 hours closeted themselves in one of the Club's oak-paneled conference rooms.

"Only for lunch and dinner (which were served in an adjoining room) did the industry's conferees take time from their discussions around the green-topped work table," the description read.

Especially interesting in the light of what has happened (see adjoining story) was the round table's conclusions about new defense plants, which Wilson has since had a major hand in authorizing.

"Unanimity" of agreement was reported that "the new industrial plants recently built and to be built will save manpower, and therefore money, through increased mechanization of materials handling. They will be smaller plants to further increase efficiency and to offset the growing power of labor."

Exactly what is meant by this recommendation is made clear in the published portions of the transcript. These indicate, despite careful editing before publication, that Wilson took a leading part in developing this strongly anti-labor idea.

Wilson pointed out that military production was to be done in new plants, being set up specifically for the purpose, and that "the only thing required is to get the labor to staff them."

He said that he thought labor would be available and pointed out that "we still have a lot of latitude as far as hours of work are concerned."

"After they have exhausted the opportunity to get in more labor . . . many industries can go over to a 48-hour week," he said. "I can tell you one that is already beginning to do it in order to speed up production."

CHARLES E. WILSON
Among those present.

George A. Bryant, president of the Austin Co., commented that "we certainly should" use the extra hours of work and added:

"I feel there should be and there will be more decentralization of industry. It seems to me that is proper and right and helpful."

And, as an afterthought in the way of increased business for the builders present, he continued:

"That is going to present some housing problems in some locations."

Wilson then reported that his company, the General Electric Co., was putting five idle plants used during World War II back to work.

"In those five plants," he explained, "there are 3000 or 3500 people. They are not major plants. In fact, we are all through with those big plants requiring 20,000—40,000 employes."

The president of the American Institute of Architects, Ralph T. Walker, exclaimed:

"That is an interesting point!—he is all through with big plants for 20,000 or 40,000 people."

"That has been in effect since 1940," Wilson replied.

'Eliminate Labor'

Later Bryant remarked that in laying out a plant, contractors were frequently asked to make production "straight-line."

"That means," he explained, "they want all machines closely coupled, to eliminate unnecessary labor."

Wilson explained further:

"In other words, the cost of the building doesn't make a bit of difference. The biggest proposition we have to think about today is the cost of labor."

Bryant: "That's right."

Wilson: "That is really the answer."

The movement of industry to places of cheap labor was again referred to by Walker, who commented:

"I think it is very significant that since 1945 in our office we have not done any real urban building. All our practice has been devoted to building laboratories (for General Electric and Ford), office buildings and other projects out in the country—because it is cheaper . . . I would say there is definitely this movement for getting out of the city."

Among other cardinal principles agreed upon, according to the report, were the following:

- As far as possible rearmament requirements should be met by increased production (additions to the general economy) rather than diversion (subtractions from the civilian economy). [In other words, "business as usual" with continued production of consumer goods despite acknowledged shortages of some critical materials.]

- Although "the greatest danger to our economy and to our rearmament is inflation," there should be no controls "on the rising prices which are its symptoms." Instead, the plan called for "higher taxes and the control of credit" to reduce demand, along with "stopping all unnecessary government spending."

- "When civilian use of materials must be reduced, management should be given full opportunity to use its ingenuity to accomplish more with less, and government . . . should cooperate by easing nonessential restrictions, including specifically some of the more wasteful and obsolete code requirements."

- ". . . until the military demand for steel becomes far greater than the contemplated six million product tons, the price of steel . . . should be allowed to rise naturally."

So impressed by the results were the editors that they rushed out an "extra issue" of their magazine, dated Sept. 30 and devoted entirely to the meeting and the plan. They called it "A United Front for the Industry for the Long Pull of Rearmament."

Example Set

In no uncertain terms, the editors emphasized that the business men who drew up the plan were not thinking of the building industry alone, but "have set an example for every other industry." However, since the price of each copy of the document was set at $2, its circulation was practically limited to a specialized audience.

The report noted that the meeting was "marked by high enthusiasm and spirited discussion from beginning to end."

It added that "the tempo of the meeting reached a crescendo at its close, when the conferees spontaneously and unanimously suggested a permanent committee be formed to make sure that the important thoughts expressed at the Round Table receive the attention of appropriate officials in Washington."

Each trade association at the meeting promptly volunteered a representative to staff the committee, which was to be made up of the president of each association and his alternate. P. I. Prentice, editor and publisher of "Architectural Forum," was named chairman.

Some 15 months have elapsed since this plan "to offset the growing power of labor" was made "quickly available" to industrial leaders. Meanwhile, the government's defense mobilization program, under Wilson's leadership, has encouraged the location of new plants in out-of-the-way places, especially in the low-wage and non-union South.

And, through "certificates of necessity" with rapid tax writeoffs and other benefits, the cost of these plants is, in large part, being passed on to the taxpayers.

This is hardly surprising, however, when one recalls that the man who directs the program said, just three months ago before he took over:

". . . The cost of the building doesn't make a bit of difference. The biggest proposition we have to think about today is the cost of labor."

These Men Sought To Turn Defense Against Labor

Members of the round table which drew up the big industry plan to use the mobilization program against labor were:

Manufacturers

Charles E. Wilson, president, General Electric Co.
John D. Biggers, president, Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co.
Admiral Ben Moreel, chairman of the board and president, Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp.
Melvin H. Baker, president, National Gypsum Co.
Clifford J. Backstrand, president, Armstrong Cork Co.
Lewis H. Brown, chairman of board and chief executive officer, Johns Manville Corp.
J. Philip Weyerhaeuser, Jr., president, Weyerhaeuser Timber Co.

From the Associated General Contractors

Walter L. Couse, president.
H. C. Turner, Jr., president, Turner Construction Co.
George A. Bryant, president, The Austin Co.

From the Mortgage Bankers Association

Milton T. MacDonald, president.
L. Douglas Meredith, executive vice president, National Life Insurance Co.

From the National Association of Home Builders

Thomas P. Coogan, president.
William P. Atkinson, 1st vice president.
William J. Leavitt, president, Leavitt & Sons, Inc.

From the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association

Cyrus B. Sweet, president.
H. R. Northup, executive vice president.
Norman P. Mason, past president; chairman, Construction and Civic Development Committee of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

From the Producers Council

Charles M. Mortensen, managing director.

From the American Institute of Architects

Ralph T. Walker, president.

From the "Architectural Forum"

At GE's Carbol

DEFENSE MOBILIZER Charles E Wilson's firm, the General Electri Co., has applied the taxpayer-paid-fo "runaway shop" idea in a way that un derscores its evils.

Tungsten carbide, an extremely hard met used to edge cutting tools and dies, is a essential defense need that is in short su ply. Approximately 50% of the total amoun made in the United States is produced t the Detroit plant of GE's Carboloy depar ment.

Under the "certificate of necessity" pr gram, Carboloy obtained one of the rap tax write-offs for a new plant at Edmor Mich., about 130 miles from Detroit. It o tained this certificate on the basis that th new factory would be needed for the manu facture of new carbide products essenti to defense.

What It Means For U. S. Labor

'Runaway Shop' Drive Reborn With Tax Funds

(First of two articles.)

THE "RUNAWAY SHOP" movement of the 1920's, when anti-union employers tried to wreck labor organizations by moving their plants to new locations, has been reborn under the big business — infiltrated defense production program.

So far its effects have been limited and, except for a comparatively few serious instances, the day of final reckoning is being postponed by the huge volume of government defense orders. When the business boom from defense contracts is over, however, the results—unless corrective measures are taken—may be serious enough to bring on a nation-wide depression.

As revealed in the accompanying story, this movement is part of a definite plan drawn up by big business leaders, including Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson, for the express purpose of offsetting "the growing power of labor." It is being encouraged by the defense production policies which the big business men directing the government's rearmament program have dictated.

A New Wrinkle

And this time the union-busting technique has a new wrinkle:

The American public, not the employers involved, will pay most of the cost of the new plants through special tax write-offs given business men who want to re-locate in non-union, low-wage areas.

Two factors have contributed greatly to the success of the plan:

The general confusion and inefficiency that has resulted from the lack of adequate over-all planning of the mobilization effort has effectively obscured the runaway shop potential of many of the new defense plants being built with government funds at the taxpayers' expense.

The need for carefully planned industrial dispersion, both as defense against atomic attack and as part of the over-all economic and sociological development of the nation, has enabled employers seeking only to re-locate at labor's expense to hide their real motives.

As a matter of fact, President Truman's program of industrial dispersion, drawn up by the National Security Resources Board and still the official administration policy, states as its first principle:

"The program is designed to disperse new and expanding industry—not to move established industry."

And the second principle of that policy is that "No region of the country is to be built up at the expense of another." The NSRB experts firmly warn that "an industrial dispersion policy that would weaken any single region or section would weaken our over-all strength."

Moreover, at the very outset of the defense production program, on Jan. 17, 1951, the President issued a general manpower directive, in which he said:

"Whenever feasible from an economic and security standpoint, production facilities, contracts and significant subcontracts will be allocated at the sources of labor supply in preference to moving the labor supply."

Like other of the President's directives, this order was simply ignored by the businessmen staffing the mobilization and military procurement agencies.

It wasn't until August that Wilson got around to following up the President's directive with one of his own ordering all government agencies to give "adequate consideration" to the labor supply in locating new plants, placing defense orders and allocating scarce materials.

By that time, $9 billion of the $11 billion in "certificates of necessity" for new plant construction issued to date had already been approved. Wilson in the same month, incidentally, ordered the "moratorium" which closed the door on special tax benefits to the little firms whose applications had been shelved while requests of big business enterprises were being rushed through.

Wilson's tardy order, too, was largely ignored, and he hasn't pressed for its enforcement. It wasn't just coincidence that the mobilization production agencies of the government are staffed in most key positions by industry executives—and most of them are Republicans.

GE Among Worst

Thus, despite the President's contrary policies, a lot of firms are using the theory of plant dispersion for military purposes and the money gained from tax amortization certificates as part of a widespread plan to get away from paying union wage scales and other benefits.

Already, despite the defense boom and nationwide manpower shortages, many instances of defense firms using this racket have come to light.

One of the most flagrant offenders has been Wilson's own firm, the General Electric Co. GE is one of the eight companies which received more than 25% of the total of government defense orders in the last fiscal year.

GE's rival in the electrical industry, the Westinghouse Corp., also has used the runaway shop plan as part of the struggle it is waging against the CIO Electrical Workers.

Westinghouse has received more than $100 million in certificates of necessity, and allotments of scarce materials, to build new plants, many of them in the South. Such certificates and allotments, according to law, should only be awarded to firms needing additional facilities for the defense program, but Westinghouse has just shut down and is moving out of one of its modern plants at Bowling Green, Ohio.

The decision to close the Bowling Green plant followed the company's failure to break the IUE local there by a long lockout. It is an outstanding example of how the runaway shop idea can backfire against an employer, for Westinghouse moved into Bowling Green in the first place expecting to pay low wages because there was no union.

Instead, Westinghouse management learned the hard way what the clothing manufacturers who had tried to run away from unions in New England during the 20's and 30's could have told them from experience:

Labor unions will be organized by the workers in any region if wages and working conditions aren't adequate.

It happened at Bowling Green, and it will happen at the other new plants being built in low-wage, non-union areas.

The CIO, of course, has supported either sensibly planned industrial dispersal or the intelligent industrialization of the South and other economically backward areas.

The record shows that CIO leaders were among the first to advocate these measures. Dispersion of factories within the local marketing areas of cities or metropolitan districts—the kind of relocation of industry called for by the President's national defense policy—was called for by the CIO in the 30's as part of its housing programs and urban planning to relieve overcrowded cities.

Labor's objection to the present movement is not to a dispersion program, but to the efforts of anti-union employers to put a star-spangled label on their up-to-date "runway shop" drive.

Before World War II many Southern states tried to persuade Northern industries to move to Dixie.

Many firms did so—and soon regreted their action. The mortality rate of these newly located companies was terrific.

For in relocating, the run-away business men had made no attempt to plan their new operations on a rational basis. Often they found too late that they had not considered in time such factors as the availability of markets and raw materials.

As these earlier run-aways were forced to close down, the nation's economy took a double beating. First, there was the unemployment that resulted from the closing of the unionized, but profitable, old plants in the North; then there was the final tragedy of the forced closing of the non-profitable run-away plants.

When the latter happened, there not only was a second case of unemployment, but the nation's economy lost a previously profitable —and productive—business enterprise.

Already, the effects of the current big business planned run-aways have been felt in many industrial centers. Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin recently pointed out that "substantial levels" of unemployment have been felt in 22 areas despite defense production.

These result, in many instances, from the fact that the defense orders are being handled in new run-away plants, while the curtailment in civilian production has left old plants idle. After the boom is over, many other firms will close older Northern plants which they are still able to keep operating with defense work and will carry on the civilian production these plants previously performed in defense built plants in the South.

(Next: How the run-away shop movement is hurting the nation's economy.)

CLOSED DOWN for good, this efficient modern plant at Bowling Green, O., is a victim of the newest big business anti-union racket. Westinghouse Corp., which shut it down, has obtained more than $100 million worth of "certificates of necessity" for new plants to be built with rapid tax write-offs on the grounds that it needs additional production facilities for defense.

Consequences

Unequal burdens upon workers, resulting directly from business domination of the mobilization program, are reflected in these news developments this week:

2. The CIO Electrical Workers demanded an end to special tax benefits for Westinghouse since it closed down its Bowling Green, Ky., plant; see Page 12.

', Auto Local Fights For Its Life

GE afterwards, however, announced that would transfer the work presently being ne in Detroit to the new plant and that ly the temporary mobilization work would done in the old factory.

When the CIO Auto Workers local heard ree months ago that at least 100 jobs uld be eliminated by the shift, it went on ike for the first time in Carboloy history. e strike is still continuing.

AUSE of the walkout and the only issue is the obstinate refusal of GE to permit present employes at the Detroit plant transfer to Edmore. When the union ked that those employes willing to move the new factory be permitted to do so, company simply refused to negotiate. t still is refusing its employes this simple ht to their jobs.

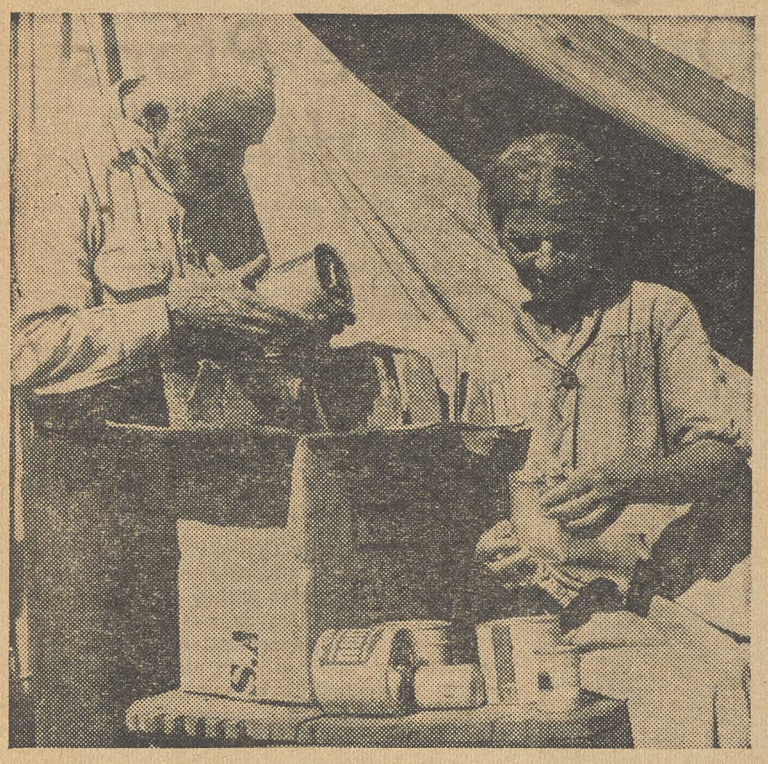
Meanwhile, UAW Local 771, which called walkout, points out that the total of employes at the new plant, plus the number that the company proposes to keep on at Detroit, is less than the total employed in Detroit alone during the war.

How, UAW spokesmen wonder, can GE explain this fact when it got the certificate of necessity, which enabled it to pass most of the cost of the new plant on to American taxpayers, only on the grounds that it needed the added factory space for defense work?

Even more important, however, the current UAW strike at Carboloy has at stake not only union security, and contract provisions, but also the individual security of each worker at the plant. Seniority rights have simply been flouted by the GE management.

And you can be sure that if GE gets away with these runaway shop tactics here, they will be used elsewhere.

'The Forgotten People' Are Remembered—By CARE



ISRAEL: Around the world, CARE food packages mean food and life to thousands. These two refugees in an Israeli immigrants' camp are typical of those aided by CARE.

GERMANY: This is Elfriede Zitzmann, age 6. Her father's dead. She looks to CARE.

GREECE: On spindly legs, in tattered clothes, young girl in Greece hauls big CARE package from truck. Greece knows well the value of CARE food packages.

By WILLIAM WEISS

THE "FORGOTTEN people" of the world have been remembered—by CARE, the Co-operative for American Remittances to Europe.

A thousand letters from a thousand of "the forgotten"—letters in the files of CARE—tell of the life, hope and faith that have come from CARE packages sent overseas by the American people.

One of the letters from an Iron Curtain refugee in a European camp said:

"I received your parcel and I shared with others who were in need. They all thank you from the bottom of their hearts . . . You were able to understand the tragedy of their lives, to understand their suffering and their sorrow and they wish to express their thanks . . ."

Another came from a hospital for Displaced Persons in Germany. The writer said he was speaking for 12 others who "were overjoyed to receive a CARE parcel of food. We have never before received anything from anyone . . . we felt completely forgotten.

"You probably cannot imagine what a parcel of food means to us . . . we do not like to think of receiving the parcel as an act of charity, even though we live in misery . . . rather we look upon it as an act of thoughtfulness from people who feel we may deserve it."

THE FILES of CARE in New York contain hundreds of similar messages from people in other lands who pour out their hearts in thanks for the packages of food sent by Americans.

Despite the gains of the Marshall Plan, human misery has continued its march through Europe and Asia.

Thousands of Europeans still suffer from malnutrition. High death rates are the result of tuberculosis, pellegra and the diseases that follow prolonged hunger.

So in steps CARE. It is a nonprofit, government-approved agency which assembles standard food and textile packages, transports them overseas and guarantees their delivery—all at one flat fee. ($10 for most of the CARE packages.)

CARE was organized at the end of World War II to serve as the agency by which thousands of Americans could send food, clothing, and other help to relatives in Europe. At the time there was no organization which could cope with the hectic transportation conditions overseas and provide for safe channels for sending person to person help.

VARIOUS welfare groups in this country wanted to help, but the job was too big to be handled individually. So a number of them, including the CIO Community Services Committee (then the CIO War Relief Committee) formed CARE.

Originally conceived as a specific service for relatives and friends, thousands of appeals for help led to the development of CARE's general relief program.

At the present time CARE is a cooperative agency of 27 major accredited American welfare agencies, many of which have made contributions matching that of the CIO's original $75,000 loan.

In order to keep costs down and operate in the most efficient manner, CARE uses a stockpile plan. Supplies are purchased in bulk and channeled to the main packaging plant at Philadelphia. There they are assembled in strong wire-bound cartons and then shipped overseas.

By agreement with the particular country, packages are admitted tax and duty free and the recipients have the full CARE package without losing any of their regular food rations.

IN ITS six years of operation CARE has shipped overseas 10 million packages valued at approximately $100 million. The great bulk of this, over 94%, has been in food.

The response of CIO members to the appeals for help from people in less fortunate countries is a record of which they may well be proud. In Kansas City, for example, CIO members who recently experienced disastrous floods themselves, were among the first to respond to an appeal by the CIO Community Services Committee for CARE aid to the victims of the late Po River floods in northern Italy.

At the last CIO convention, a member of the U. S. armed forces, Sgt. Ralph L. Juliet, fresh from the battle lines in Korea, told the delegates that a CARE package to any of the two million homeless refugees in Korea "who have no one to turn to for aid but the people of the U. S., may mean the difference between new hope and utter despair—literally the difference between life and death."

He said "my buddies and I are proud and thankful for the job CARE is doing in Korea."

In a holiday message, entitled "Remember the Children," CARE asks that the forgotten children of the world be remembered.

Despite cold wars and hot wars, inflation and rearmament which crowd the daily headlines, CARE reminds us that there are 250,000 orphans in France while Italy has three million homeless boys and girls. One child in every eight is an orphan in Greece.

PAUL Comly French, executive director of CARE, recently declared that "with a clear understanding that free and democratic trade unions are a bulwark of defense against aggression, the CIO Community Services Committee has continued its work to aid needy trade unionists since the war."

CARE packages may now be sent to the following countries: Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Germany (all four zones), Great Britain, Greece, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Japan, Korea, Okinawa, Pakistan and the Philippine Islands.

Packages may be addressed to relatives and friends or donors may designate the type of person or group they want to help—for example "a trade union school," "a trade union family," or a specialized trade union group, such as "steelworkers" or "auto workers."

CIO's Record

Since the end of World War II, CIO members and affiliates have sent—through the National CIO Community Services Committee—more than $1 million in CARE packages to trade unionists and their families abroad.

How To Help

Here's how you can help the CARE program:

Send orders for CARE packages or contributions to the Overseas Fund to the CIO representative at CARE, 20 Broad St., New York 5, N. Y., or to the CIO Community Services Overseas Fund, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

SOCIAL INSURANCE program of the CIO Clothing Workers pays off for Jean Bruno, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the 100,000th beneficiary, as she receives check for $345 for disability, surgery and hospitalization. Making the presentation is James J. Sheaff, executive director of the Amalgamated Life Insurance Co.

GCEOC Raps U.S. Policy In Pay Snafu

"EQUAL PAY for equal work" is a good trade union principle and CIO Government Workers think it's about time Congress and the federal government applied it for U. S. employes.

National officers of the Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee and GCEOC Local 1 in Washington are up in arms over the latest snafu affecting government workers.

Because of a ruling by Comptroller Gen. Lindsay Warren, some 70,000 U. S. employes unexpectedly were denied four months of retroactive pay when a 10% cost-of-living wage increase took effect shortly before the holidays.

Of the group, approximately 20,000 were in Washington.

Among them—ironically—were a group of government workers most directly concerned with the cost-of-living. These were some 250 employes of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the agency which drafts consumer price index figures.

The discriminatory aspect of the government's wage policy developed when Warren ruled that "ungraded" employes would be denied the retroactive pay. Some workers who had already received the boost by their agency were required to refund it.

STRONG protests against the policy were voiced by Richard Shoemaker, GCEOC-CIO legislative representative, in letters to the White House and to Congressional committee chairmen.

The GCEOC protests brought a ruling by the Civil Service Commission granting the retroactive increases to BLS employes.

Remedial legislation will be demanded when Congress returns in a fortnight.

And, meantime, GCEOC-CIO is moving ahead in organizational work among "ungraded" employes —particularly in such agencies as the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Wage Board Freeze On Welfare Plans Partially Lifted

ACCOMPANIED by howls of anguish from industry members, the Wage Stabilization Board has finally announced a policy of partially exempting health and welfare programs from government controls.

The decision, pending for the past 10 months, was written by the public members of the 18-man tripartite board and reluctantly accepted by the labor members as the lesser of two evils.

Economic Stabilizer Roger L. Putnam, in approving the policy decision, complimented the WSB for an "excellent job." He said the policy "will provide labor and management with the necessary degree of flexibility to establish reasonable plans for health and welfare."

Labor members in a dissenting opinion (although approving the majority report), said there was no need to control health and welfare plans at a time like the present mobilization. They pointed out that no such controls were needed during World War II.

The board's action, they said, will discriminate against non-contributory plans by giving automatic approval only to contributory ones.

The public member's report was accepted by the labor representatives only as a last resort to end the 10-month freeze on health and welfare plans, they said.

DURING that period several thousand plans were frozen In the Washington WSB office alone, some 600 cases—300 in the textile industry—were piled up. Hundreds of others were "on ice" in regional offices while many others have been held in abeyance.

With labor approval of the majority report, union representatives warned the WSB that the fight for eventual decontrol would be continued. Unions were urged not to permit themselves "to be herded" into contributory health and welfare plans.

Under terms of the new WSB policy, a health and welfare plan, new or modified, can be put into operation within 30 days, without prior board approval, if it falls within limits defined by the board and if specified procedures are followed.

Any plan covering other benefits, or falling outside the WSB standards of automatic approval, must be sent to a special tripartite WSB Health and Welfare Committee for review and action.

The policy declares that health and welfare benefits which are approved either automatically or individually, are not to be charged against the so-called 10% pay raise catch-up formula.

The new health and welfare policy deliberately bypassed the equally controversial issue of pensions. WSB Chairman Nathan P. Feinsinger said the board has been studying and discussing pensions for some time and would arrive at a policy decision early in 1952.

THE majority decision refuted claims of industry members that health and welfare were inflationary. It was pointed out that health and welfare plans would simply substitute in part for sums paid out by the Government for assistance of the sick and needy and would increase productivity by boosting worker morale and curtailing absenteeism.

"Beside," the majority added, "money invested in properly safeguarded industrial health and welfare plans constitutes a sound investment in the Nation's future."

In dissent, industry members termed the new regulation "inflationary," and said the increased cost of production would have to be passed on to the consumer in higher prices.

They said the move would stimulate a wave of demands for health and welfare plans and predicted "chaos" when the plans are cut back or abandoned after the defense production period is over.

"The board's responsibility to Congress is to combat inflation during the emergency, not to foster long-range social programs, desirable as they may be," the industry members asserted.

Tobin Finds 1951 Record Year, Sees New Marks In 1952

THE AMERICAN people worked more, produced more, earned more, owned more, spent more and added more to industrial plant and equipment in 1951 than in any other year in history, Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin said last week in his year-end report.

Most of these records, he added, are likely to be broken in 1952.

Some excerpts:

"At the end of 1950, raw material prices had risen 12% in six months and the Consumers' Price Index was rising at the rate of 1% a month. But at the end of 1951, raw material prices were the same or lower than at the beginning of the year, and the CPI had risen only about 3% since February."

"Despite their additional earnings, Americans showed considerable restraint and wisdom in their spending. There was little scare buying. Consumers saved $8 out of every $100 as against $5 out of every $100 in 1950."

"OUR progress toward our defense aims was made without undermining the American standards of living, but the rise in prices in the six months before the institution of price control made some of our accomplishments in 1951 less meaningful."

"Although Americans earned more dollars and cents, their real earnings—in terms of purchasing power—were only slightly if at all higher than in 1950."

"Less time was lost as a result of strikes in 1951 than in any previous postwar year . . . Strike idleness in the first 10 months of 1951 was 16 million working days less than in the same period of 1950."

"Although more Americans were at work than ever before, and still more were needed in some areas, there was serious employment in other areas."

"The year 1952 will bring us new difficulties and new problems, but none of them will be beyond our power to conquer. The need for greater production and productivity will be even greater than it was this year. And there will be equal need for caution and wisdom in the part of consumers, and for even greater savings."

UFW Win In Virginia To Spur Drive

AFTER A campaign lasting more than a year, the CIO Furniture Workers have won an important Southern organizing election.

UFWA-CIO won bargaining rights at the American Furniture Co. plant, at Martinsville, Va., by a close vote. The count was 533 for UFWA to 500 for "no union," with eight ballots challenged.

Pres. Morris Pizer of the Furniture Workers said "the victory is expected to spur UFWA organizational activity in the Virginia, North Carolina area."

E. E. Waller, UFWA Dist. 5 director, was in charge of the campaign, with Fred Fulford, the union's secretary-treasurer, participating in the final stages.

CIO Plans Voter Drive In California

THE CIO California Industrial Union Council executive board and Political Action Committee, at a year-end meeting in Oakland, drew up programs of objectives for 1952 and went on record in favor of an all-out registration drive.

The executive board adopted a policy statement on legislation paralleling the congressional program adopted by the National CIO Convention, supporting decent labor legislation in the State, and calling for election of candidates at all levels who will work for the interests of the great mass of Americans. It also adopted an anti-inflation program and called for an equable and effective defense mobilization plan.

The PAC Committee in a policy statement pledged a continuing fight against reaction, promised to make records of candidates for office available to all the people, and rededicated itself to the whole CIO program of political action.

'Humanitarian' Businessman Winds Up In Court Again As Wage Chiseler

MORRIS KLEINERMAN, who won himself a reputation as a humanitarian because he employed blind persons, has been convicted in Federal Court in New York for chiseling on the wages of the very people for whom he supposedly was a benefactor.

He was found guilty by a jury of filing false affidavits for overtime pay to the blind workers representing, according to the U. S. Wage-Hour Div., a total of $2038.96.

Kleinerman was fined $2500 and sentenced to a year in jail. The firm of which he is secretary, the Ideal Film & Supply Co., a film distributing and processing company, was fined $5000, of which $3000 was to be remitted if the unpaid overtime was paid in 10 days.

The chiseling was turned up by wage-hour investigators making routine inspections of books. The employes testified at the trial that Kleinerman secured receipts for the overtime by trickery. He did not advise them they were entitled to overtime, it was brought out, but had them sign receipts in blank. Then he filled in the amounts due before he submitted them to the Wage-Hour Div., according to testimony.

The employes also testified they had learned Kleinerman employed them, rather than workers with sight, because they could process up to 1600 rolls of film a day, compared to 1200 rolls processed by a normal worker. He also used them for dark room processing of obscene pictures until the law caught up with him in 1946 and fined him $350 for sending them through the mail.

Reg. Dir. Frank J. Muench of the Wage-Hour Div. said Kleinerman and his film firms have been found in violation of Wage-Hour laws four times since 1943. He "persistently" falsified records, Muench said, and refused to pay time and a half overtime.

Radich Honored By Jersey ACWA

More than 500 persons in Atlantic City, N. J., honored Philip Rudich, manager of the South Jersey Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers at a dinner marking 20 years of service in the post and his 65th birthday.

Steel Local Wins 18c Hike

LOCAL 4355 OF the CIO Steelworkers and the Phelps-Dodge Co., at Laurel Hill, L. I., have reached a supplemental agreement which yields union members a total package of 17.75c an hour.

The union negotiated a contract last June providing a 15% wage increase plus a proviso that if higher increases were negotiated elsewhere in the non-ferrous metals industry, the company would consider a reopening. The local asked for the reopening when the Wage Stabilization Board approved 18½c in Garfield, Utah, and obtained the additional increase, which amounted to 7c.

The membership, which for years had been represented unsatisfactorily by the Communist-dominated Mine Mill & Smelter Workers, enthusiastically approved the settlement even though it meant extending the contract to two years, with a reopening at the end of the first year.

Union Shop 'Escape' Rule Curbed By NLRB

THE NATIONAL Labor Relation Board has upset unanimously a previous ruling which held that under a union shop agreement, union members get a 30-day free ride.

In the new ruling, the NLRB held that the 30-day "escape clause" applied only to employes who are not members of the union when the pact goes into effect and to new employes hired after that date.

The board held that the legislative history of the Taft-Hartley Act showed that Congress intended the grace period to apply to these two categories of workers.

The NLRB said that it did "perceive no rational purpose, nor do we find support for an interpretation which would permit union members to withdraw from the union during the brief 30-day period and which, in almost the same breath, would require them again to become members of the union at the close of the same 30-day period."

"That requirement of the board's earlier decision," the ruling continued, "might soon lead to results thoroughly incompatible with the labor stability sought to be achieved through collective bargaining."

THE board also pointed out that the same section of the act which covered the grace period also provided that "employment can be terminated only for failure to pay dues."

"The purpose of this proviso was to eliminate free riders," the NLRB said. "An interpretation of the 'union shop' proviso of Section 8 (a) (3) which would permit prior union members a brief 'free ride' for the first 30 days of a contract is therefore inconsistent . . ."

The ruling was issued in a case in which the Charles A. Krause Milling Co. of West Milwaukee, Wis., asked the board to reconsider its previous ruling which involved the Worthington Pump Co. and which was issued last Feb. 28.

In the Krause Co. case, the board ruled in favor of the CIO Brewery Workers, who were seeking a representation election. The employes will have a choice between the CIO union, an AFL union, and no union.

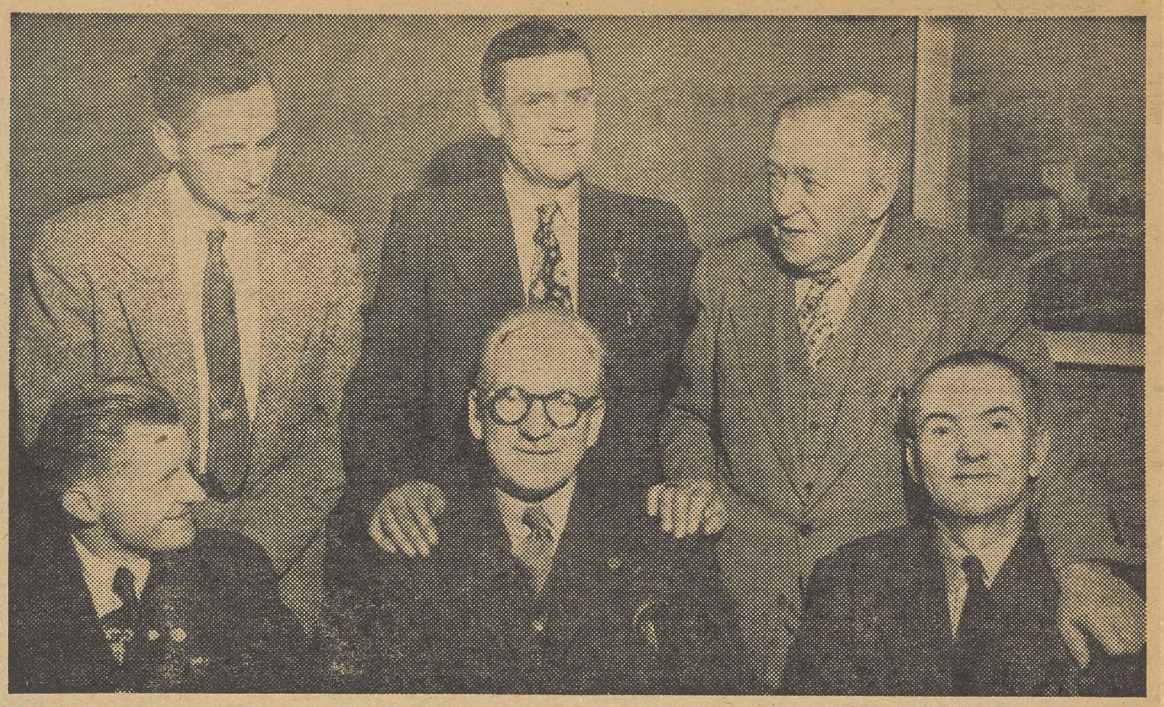
New CIO Series Starts On Networks

THE CIO WILL begin radio broadcasts on two different networks this weekend, bringing programs of interest to its members.

"The CIO and You," featuring talks by prominent CIO leaders and music by Joe Glazer and his guitar, will be herd on the American Broadcasting Co. network each Saturday at 7 p.m. EST, beginning Jan. 5. Sharing the spotlight on this series will be the nationally known economist, Robert R. Nathan.

The CIO will be the initial participant on Sunday, Jan. 6, of a brand new program, "Viewpoint USA," on the National Broadcasting Co. network. Time will be 12 noon. The program will be shared on successive weeks with the AFL, National Association of Manufacturers, National Grange, U. S. Chamber of Commerce and American Farm Bureau Federation. CIO speakers will be heard every sixth week.

The first ABC program on Jan. 5 will include a transcript of some of the proceedings at the CIO Steelworkers' special convention.



HOW ARE THINGS IN GLOCCAMORRA? 'Twas a great day for CIO when a group of Irish trade unionists, visiting the U. S. under the Technical Assistance Program of the Economic Cooperation Administration, were guests of CIO officials at a Washington luncheon. They were (seated from left) Sean Patrick Murphy, from Cork; William McMullen, from Dublin, president of the Irish Transport & General Workers' Union; John J. Cassidy, from Dublin; and (standing from left) James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer; James Joseph Doolan, from Cork; and Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president. Visitors represented the Congress of Irish Unions and are spending several weeks in this country.

German Unions Demand War On Neo-Nazis

THE GERMAN Federation of Trade Unions (DGB) has served a grimly - worded demand on federal and local governments to declare open war on the Nazi revival movement.

The neo-fascist groups, the statement said, by taking advantage of democracy, "are pouring scorn on the governmental system and the institutions of the State, insulting the colors of the republic, conducting anti-Semitic propaganda, and making it possible for generals turned politicians to do everything their predecessors did prior to 1933."

"The German trade unions observe with bitterness," it continued, "that those circles who bear the main guilt for the misery of our people are once again raising their heads.

"Democracy has already been destroyed once through the tolerance of democrats, a tolerance which its enemies despised as a sign of weakness or stupidity.

"The six million workers, employes and officials of the DGB who, though members of different denominations and political parties, proclaim their faith in the principles of democracy, call on the democratic parties and the governments of the Federal Republic and the lander to take immediately the strictest measures to eliminate once and for all the dangers of neo-fascism.

"THEY demand that the necessary laws be enacted and carried out ruthlessly. They expect that regard shall be had to the unfortunate experiences of the Weimar Republic, and that in future no law enacted to protect democracy shall be directed against democrats.

"The trade unions, however, are fully aware of the fact that democracy cannot be secured solely by legislation, by official action, or by political parties. Democracy can continue to exist only if its convinced exponents are at all times ready themselves to defend it.

"The DGB and its affiliated unions call on all democrats ruthlessly to nip in the bud all manifestations of fascist activities."

Church Meet Hits South's 'Cheap Labor

CATHOLIC priests of South Carolina, at recent institutes held in Greenville, Columbia and Charleston, drew up plans to educate their parishioners about the morality of social justice and the dangers of the Dixiecrats' distortion of the states' rights movement.

They laid out a program to acquaint Catholic employers and employes alike with the church's teachings on social matters, including the duty of paying annual living and saving family wages and the equal duty of recognizing and dealing fairly with unions.

They expressed dismay over the failure of Catholic laymen to familiarize themselves with the teachings of the popes and bishops on labor relations.

The three meetings were under the auspices of Bishop John J. Russell of Charleston and were conducted by the Catholic Committee of the South. Among the priests who spoke were Very Rev. Maurice V. Shean, Rock Hill, S. C., CCS general chairman, and Rev. George Higgins, assistant director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Father Shean called the growth of industry in the South "a backhanded slap in the face to those of us who live here" because it has been promoted by corporations seeking "what is commonly called cheap labor," that is, unorganized labor.

NAACP Calls Parley, Aims At End Of Filibuster Rule

A MEETING of national organizations—including the CIO and the AFL—will be held in Washington on Feb. 17-18 in an effort to have the Senate revise its rules to permit enactment of civil rights legislation.

"The importance of this coordinated drive for revision of the Senate rules is highlighted by the fact that 1952 is an election year," said Executive Secy. Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in announcing the February conference.

"It is essential that both parties realize that our demand for civil rights legislation is not an empty demand, that we intend to back it up at the ballot box . . . "

Under Rule 22 (the Wherry measure) a two-thirds vote of the entire Senate is necessary to stop unlimited filibusters, a requirement which is an effective stop to all civil rights legislation.

Both CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers testified at a Senate hearing last October against the rule. Reuther said:

"If under Rule 22, 33 Senators stand fast or absent themselves, they can have their way; they have the power to forestall any vote forever. This is rule by veto, the irresponsible veto of a minority."

Preliminary plans for the conference were made at a recent New York City meeting of representatives of national organizations including the CIO and its Steelworkers and Auto Workers. The group met at the call of the NAAPC, which at its Atlanta convention called for the civil rights mobilization.

Pre-conference registration and accreditation by the national parent body will be required of all delegates attending the meeting.

Secrecy On Redistricting Hit By CIO

THE GENERAL Assembly is playing politics with proposed legislation to reapportion State Congressional districts, the Pennsylvania CIO Council charged. It urged public hearings on the bill.

In a telegram to Republican Gov. John S. Fine and Assembly leaders, Council Pres. Harry Boyer said:

"Such an important matter should take into account the interest of all citizens and must not become political gerrymandering designed to eliminate present minority representation."

Boyer accused the assembly of "trying to rush through this important legislation without regard for the rights of all affected."

$4 Boost Won In Breweries

MORE THAN 6000 members of CIO Brewery Workers in the New York metropolitan area will receive a cost of living wage increase averaging $4.19 a week under an agreement reached last week between the union and the Brewers Board of Trade.

At the same time, the workers were promised a package of $8.38 when a new contract is signed next June. The package includes a $3.50 a week across the board wage boost and a cut in the work week from the present 37½ hours to 35 hours.

IUE Defeats UE At Waltham Plant

The CIO Electrical Workers defeated the United Electrical Workers in two NLRB elections at the Clifford Manufacturing Co. in Waltham, Mass. The vote among production workers was IUE 406, UE 104, no union 4; among clerical workers, IUE 19, UE 4, no union 5.

Canham Named As Broun Award Judge

The CIO Newspaper Guild has named Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, as one of the judges of the competition for the 1952 Heywood Broun Award.

Radiomen Urged To Ship Again

Qualified ship radio officers have been urged to return to sea by W. R. Steinberg, president of the CIO Radio Association.

Steinberg joined with Vice Admiral Edward L. Cochrane, federal maritime administrator, in a national broadcast. Because of the shortage of radio officers, they pointed out, 55 ships were delayed in sailing in a recent fortnight.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THIS PAST WEEK this great country of ours was shocked and stunned by the terrible mine disaster in West Frankfort, Ill., 119 lives lost. A black Christmas for the wives, children and relatives of 119 men. The loss is staggering.

This disaster is another in a series of tragedies such as the one in Cherry, Ill. in November, 1900, in which there were over 250 casualties.

Just four short years ago, this nation and the world were shocked when 111 lives were lost in the disaster in Centralia, Ill. Yes, we can go back through the years and find instance after instance of tragedy in the mining industry. The public is not aware of the day to day deaths that occur throughout the year that claim an average of 1000 lives or the untold number that are seriously injured annually.

Methods must be devised to prevent these so-called accidents. New methods of mining should and must be explored. More frequent and thorough inspections and new safety devices are a necessity.

We need mine safety laws that have some teeth in them, that can enforce penalties when safety codes are violated. It is up to the Congress of these United States to give us the kind of safety laws and enforcement that will see to it that mining families next year and in the years to come will not have to "enjoy" another black Christmas.

The Transport Service Employees' victory was at American Molasses Co., Wilmington, N. C. The vote was UTSE 10 and no union 2.

Pueblo Steel Bargaining Record Hailed

THE MINNEQUA plant of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Pueblo, Colo., scene of violent industrial conflict during the first quarter of the century, has been cited with two locals of the CIO Steelworkers as a model of good labor-management relations by the nonprofit National Planning Association.

At Minnequa, a 60-year-old history of violent anti-unionism and company unionism came to an end in 1942 when USA-SIO signed its first contract with the plant.

The nine-year relationship between the company and two USA locals "has been marked by a continuous and conscientious effort to improve the techniques of scientific and objective bargaining," NPA reported.

Productivity has increased steadily and the company has improved its competitive position in the industry. Industrial accidents have decreased markedly. The workers have improved their working conditions and living standards.

Conscientious and sincere efforts in handling problems have brought successful and practical results on the continuous questions of seniority, technological displacement, grievance handling, apprenticeship training, safety, and wages, the report said.

The survey of union-management relations at the Minnequa plant is NPA's ninth study in a series on "Causes of Industrial Peace Under Collective Bargaining." Other studies have been made in the pulp and paper, chemical, glass, clothing and aircraft industries. (LPA)

Aircraft Local Blocks Pay Cut

The 6000-member Local 887, CIO Auto Workers, has blocked a move by North America Aviation Corp. to eliminate premium pay for weekend work in the big Los Angeles aircraft plant.

The local unanimously supported its bargaining committee in rejecting the company's proposal, which would have ended premium pay for Saturday and Sunday work.

32c Package Won By Auto Workers

A 32c immediate package—including a pay increase of 20c an hour—has been won by the CIO Auto Workers in a contract with the Detroit Motor Products, Inc.

The package also contains a pension and welfare program worth 12c an hour. In addition, the contract provides a 9c hourly boost to become effective during 1952—4c payable June 1 and 5c Dec. 1.

Union Man Wins In Toronto Election

Supported by both CIO and AFL, Ford Brand has been elected to the Toronto, Ont., Board of Control. He placed second in a six-man race.

Labor Laws Are Explained Simply In Short Book

SINCE MOST laws are written by lawyers, and lawyers generally use obscure language, most people make no serious effort to improve their understanding of the laws by which they are governed.

This unfortunate situation has only been intensified by many of the books intended to "popularize" and "explain" law in laymen's terms.

Because nearly all of them are also written by lawyers, in the dull and uninteresting phraseology of the legal profession, they are seldom read except by other lawyers.

Democracy, which rests upon a fully informed citizenry, inevitably suffers as a result.

One lawyer who cuts through the "whereases" and "wherefores" of a major portion of the law, and makes it understandable to the average reader, is Reginald Parker, whose book, Labor Law, 300 Questions and Answers has just been issued in a second American edition. The first edition had also been published abroad in both Spanish and German.

PARKER, who has served many years as law professor, government lawyer and practicing attorney, performs an invaluable service to democratic government by making it possible for the first time for the average union member to acquire speedily and readily a basic understanding of the present labor laws.

This knowledge daily becomes increasingly necessary, for as Parker brings out, recent labor legislation has made "important inroads upon the individual employment contract." Everyone who works, in other words, is subject to labor law in some form, and a general understanding is essential to the individual worker who wants to protect his rights.

The Taft-Hartley Act, which Parker calls "the most complex and obscure piece of law on our statute books," is discussed fully, as are also the Wage and Hour Laws, Wagner Act and other recent legislation. Recent interpretations and changes which have occurred since the first edition have been incorporated.

Parker says that we are now in a "fifth era" of labor law in the U. S., which began in 1947 with the Taft-Hartley Act, marked by "setbacks for organized labor." This thesis is explained objectively and in detail.

Labor Law, 300 Questions and Answers may be purchased from the Claridge Publishing Corp., 622 Greenwich St., New York 14, N. Y., for $1 a copy. Discounts are given on bulk purchases. M.P.

Steelworker Is Head

Frank J. Connolly, a member of CIO Steelworkers Local 1459 at Phillipsburg, N. J., recently was elected president of the New Jersey State Firemen's Relief Association.

Dutch Unions Ask Voice On Productivity

COOPERATION between management and labor was held out as an essential to greater productivity in a speech by J. G. Suurhoff, of the Netherlands Trade Union Federation (NVV).

It would be a "foolish situation," he said at an NVV conference at Utrecht, Holland, if workers allowed their wages to be tied to productivity unless their unions have a voice in determing how productivity is to be increased. The unions cannot support a policy of "co-responsibility," he said, without "co-right of say."

"It is not sufficient to speak clear words about cooperation," he said, "or to give the workers an approving tap on the shoulder now and then because they strike so little nowadays.

"May all persons who have leading positions in political and industrial life and who are not prompted by selfish means be induced to give the workers their share of responsibility before it is too late."

Violence In Dixie—

Textile Aide Slain In Bemis Walkout; New Florida Killing

TWO MEN—one of them a CIO union official—were killed in a resurgence of violence in the South against labor, liberal and church organizations during the Christmas holidays.

Lowell Simmons, 41, Memphis Joint Board manager of the CIO Textile Workers, was slain, allegedly by Cecil Cooke, a non-union member employed at the Bemis Bag Co. plant at Bemis, Tenn., where TWUA members have been on strike about two months. His wife is a striker.

Harry T. Moore, 46, Florida coordinator for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was injured fatally in a bomb explosion Christmas night at his home at Mims, Fla., halfway between Jacksonville and Miami.

Mrs. Moore also was seriously injured in the blast which climaxed a series of bombings or attempted bombings of Catholic churches, Jewish synagogues and centers and Negro housing projects.

NAAPC officials in New York City were quoted in press reports as saying that the blast bore "the earmarks of Ku Klux Klan activities," but the slaying of Simmons was not directly connected with the KKK.

About 10 days ago a back-to-work movement had been started at the Bemis plant at Bemis, near Jackson and about 85 miles east of Memphis. As part of the effort to break the strike, Cooke, one of the few non-union members employed by the plant, was distributing leaflets.

Simmons and two other union members went to Cooke's home to protest the leaflet distribution. Cooke was standing behind a screen door during the quiet conversation when he suddenly whipped a 38 caliber pistol out of his pocket and shot Simmons, who was standing only inches away from him, in the face, according to TWUA officials.

Simmons, who lived near Bemis, was highly regarded in the TWUA and in CIO circles in the Memphis area. Married and the father of three children, he at one time was president of the TWUA local at the Bemis plant, where the union won an election in 1944. He was elected the local's business manager in 1946.

HIS ABILITY as a leader and organizer led TWUA to put Simmons on its staff in 1949. He was business manager for the Bemis local and two locals in Memphis and was Memphis Joint Board manager.

TWUA officials and Tennessee CIO leaders attended funeral services for Simmons at his home last Wednesday.

Bemis is a one-company town, the Bemis plant dominating the industrial scene and employing between 800 and 1000 persons. Local feeling against Cooke ran high. Simmons was popular in the community, having been elected a Jackson county school director, a member of the county beer board and a magistrate of the county court. He once served as a member of the Tennessee Legislature.

The ranks of the Bemis strikers remained strong. The dispute centered on the union's demand that pay be increased 6.5% to bring the rates up to those paid in the North and some other southern mills.

TWUA members also have been on strike since mid-November at Indianapolis and Cannelton, Ind., plants of the Bemis concern which specializes in burlap and large paper bags. (Fabric for the burlap bags were woven from raw cotton at the Bemis, Tenn. plant).

BEMIS, which has more than a dozen plants, refuses to bargain with the CIO on a company-wide basis, insisting that each factory is autonomous.

The blast that killed Moore and injured his wife ripped through the bedroom of their home. Moore's mother and daughter, who were sleeping in an adjoining room, were uninjured.

Mrs. Moore was quoted as saying "a county school official had warned Harry that he was 'trying to put things over too fast,' but I have no idea who could have done this thing."

The National NAAPC said that the murder was linked with Moore's protests against the slaying of Samuel Shepherd and the wounding of Walter Irwin, both Negro prisoners, by Sheriff M. V. McCall of Lake County, Fla.

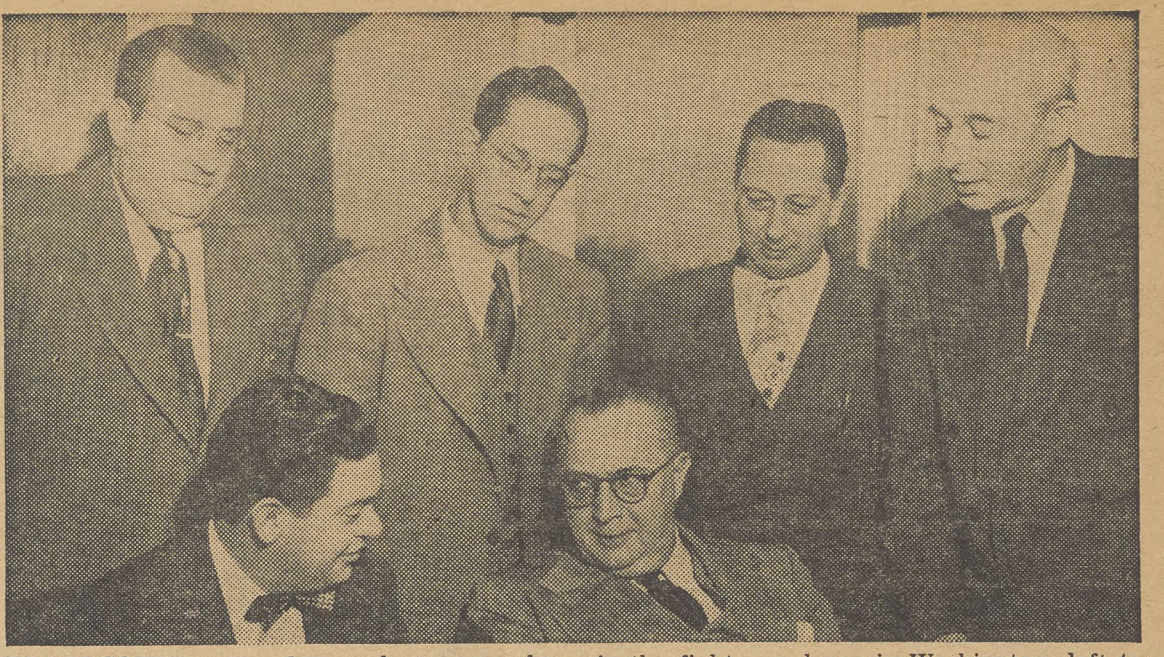
Following the fatal bombing, NAACP Executive Sec. Walter White wired both Attorney General J. Howard McGrath and Gov. Fuller Warren to "take immediate action." The FBI sent two agents to Daytona Beach for an inquiry with Brevard county officials.

Employers Hit For Violence By TWUA Chief

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers last week called the murder of Lowell Simmons evidence of intensified anti-union terror in the South.

He described the alleged action of Cecil Cooke, held in the slaying, "as the result of hysteria being stirred up all over the South as part of a large scale employer drive to destroy the confidence of organized workers from joining unions."

"It is tragic," Rieve added, "both for the community and unions when anti-labor emotionalism can get to such extreme as cold-blooded murder."



UNDERCOVER rent decontrol was nearly slipped over by real estate interest on Williamsport, Pa., where but one new rental property has been built in the last year, but CIO AFL, American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars blocked it at almost secret City Council meeting. Hearing was postponed until Mar. 3, with labor groups to ask federal census of available housing and needs. Here CIO leaders in the fight are shown in Washington: left to right (seated), Pres. Harvey Lemon of Lycoming County CIO Council, and Ivan Carson, chairman, Critical Areas Committee, Office of Defense Mobilization; (standing) Harrison C. Sortman, Steelworkers; Charles H. Snyder, Auto Workers; Charles Horton, Textile Workers, and John W. Edelman, TWUA Washington representative.

CIO Demands Prosecutions For Outrages

QUICK federal and state action against perpetrators of racial and religious violence in Florida was demanded by CIO last week.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, as chairman of CIO's Committee to Abolish Discrimination, demanded immediate investigation and prosecutions in the Florida outrages—climaxed last week by the murder of Harry T. Moore, state official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Carey urged President Truman to take all necessary action "to restore law and order in Florida." Another wire of protest was sent to Gov. Fuller Warren of Florida.

And to Democratic and Republican leaders of both houses of Congress, Carey said "the failure of Congress to act on this whole question of civil rights in this and other recent sessions is a contributing cause to these outbursts of violence . . ."

IUE Gains 5c To 10c In Westinghouse Chain

THE CIO ELECTRICAL Workers have won wage increases of 5c to 10c an hour for 43,000 workers in extended negotiations with the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

The pay boost is retroactive to Nov. 1. Employes now earning $1.40 an hour or less will get 5c, with graduated increases up to 10c. Salaried workers will get $2 to $4 weekly.

The agreement in addition provides for three-week vacations after 15 years instead of the present 20 years, beginning in 1952. Wages and salaries may be reopened at any time between Apr. 1 and Apr. 30, 1952.

The contract, however, did not settle the dispute between the IUE and the company over the plant at Bowling Green, Ky. Management locked out the employes on Aug. 15 rather than live up to its agreement to extend contract benefits to them, when they organized into IUE Local 740.

Westinghouse had announced it plans to close it down completely during an earlier meeting with the union arranged by the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation Service.

James B. Carey, president of the union and secretary-treasurer of the CIO, has asked President Truman and defense mobilization officials to stop granting the company stepped-up tax write-off certificates of necessity unless it reopen the Bowling Green plant.

CAREY made the union's position known in wires to the President; Manly Fleishmann, director of the Defense Production Authority; Joseph Keenan, DPA assistant administrator; Olaf Tackle, director of the DPA Facilities Review Board; John Small, chairman of the Munitions Board, and O. A. Knight, National Production Authority assistant administrator and also president of the CIO Oil Workers.

"We believe," the wire said, "that the U. S. government cannot in good conscience, nor in furtherance of the national defense program, countenance the shameful situation which would result with Westinghouse abandoning a perfectly productive plant and then using scarce materials, manpower and government tax privileges to build new facilities."

Carey also asked the DPA Facilities Review Board to locate a defense plant at the Bowling Green site "in terms of its value to national defense and in the light of the disemployed Westinghouse workers."

'52 March Of Dimes Endorsed By CIO

CIO has endorsed the 1952 March of Dimes campaign not only to aid polio victims but also to "perpetuate the memory of its great founder, our late President Roosevelt."

The endorsement was announced last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who is a trustee of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. In a statement, Murray said:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations and its membership are fully aware of the advances the National Foundation has made possible not only in the expanded services of your noted care and treatment program but also in the field of research into the cause and control of infantile paralysis.

"It is indeed an honor and a privilege to be associated with an organization such as the National Foundation that has earned worldwide recognition for its humanitarian endeavors. The March of Dimes with more than 70 million voluntary contributors is truly indicative of its acceptance as an American institution."

Contributions to the March of Dimes may be made locally or to the Labor Service Division, National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, 120 Broadway, New York.

Gas, Coke Gains $1 A Day Raise

CIO Chemical Workers have won a $1 a day wage boost for some 2600 workers at the St. Joseph Lead Co. in the "Lead Belt" of Missouri.

Another recent wage gain by the UGCCWA was an 8c hourly general boost for 2500 atomic energy workers at the Carbide & Carbon Chemicals Corp. plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn.
